THE spelling reform which seven against four Academicians have recommended, will be a necessary one if the youth of France, to qualify at military and naval examinations, must learn to speak several foreign tongues. No language, I suppose, unless it be English, has more arbitrary rules of orthography than the French. Many of them have come into existence since Bonaparte extended, through his lyceums, a classical education to middle-class boys all over France. Were Voltaire to come to life again, he would be plucked at any examination, for spelling as he did when he wrote the works he left us. In orthography as now practised lies the great line of demarcation between the millions and the educated classes, middle and aristocratic. The professional beauty who has come from below has to keep a secretary to write her notes. Any patois-speaking country-girl who comes to Paris to look for service will in a few years talk better colloquial French than an Academician; but she can never learn to spell. At the last distribution of High School prizes at the Sorbonne, M. Schweitzer, a professor at the Rollin College, assured his youthful hearers that they must give up the dream of a fusion of tongues in a universal Volapuk. They would have to learn, not only English and German, but Spanish, Dutch, Italian, Arabic, and possibly Chinese, to get to the front as commercial men. How, one asks, will they ever have the time? By, the answer is, simplifying spelling and making it more phonetic. It is proposed to drop the ph, making the f serve instead, in all cases. I must say that the former never puzzled me in my school-days. But I am told that the youthful descendants of illiterate forbears are driven wild with it, and that precious time is lost in consequence. M. Gréard, Director-General of Higher Public Instruction, is zealous for spelling reform, which is as zealously opposed by the Duc d'Aumale. The Duc can have no idea where the shoe pinches Board-school children and boys who have to cram for entrance into special schools, like the Polytechnique, Centrale (Engineering), Mines, and to pass for University degrees. He received, from the time he left the nursery until some time after he entered the Army, a most careful literary training. He has a retentive memory for words and objects that he sees, and an ear which would not be a guide to him in phonetic spelling. Insensibly from an early age he absorbed scholarship, and must have picked up foreign languages which were spoken all round him. From his mother and her old and confidential servants he learnt Viennese German and Neapolitan Italian. His elder brother and sister were Palermitans by birth, and at home in English, which they learned between 1815 and 1819 at Twickenham. There were English servants and teachers, and Louis Philippe, who had in his wanderings been a sort of husband of the English Princess Elizabeth (afterwards Landgravine of Hesse Homburg), was master of English, and at family gatherings at Neuilly used to read Shakespeare in that language. Every daughter-in-law of that King spoke French with a different foreign accent. That of the Duchesse d'Orléans, the most highly educated of them all, and a woman of a winged soul, was North-German. That of the Duchesse de Nemours was South-German, she being Viennese in breeding; of the Princesse de Joinville Brazilian-Portuguese; of the Duchesse d'Aumale Sicilian, and of the Duchesse de Montpensier, when she was a bride, Castilian, with a touch of Italian. With the exception of the Duchesse d'Orléans, who was a grand-daughter of Augustus of Saxe-Weimar, and in whose blood a taste for pure classical forms of speech ran, these Royal ladies mixed their native idioms with the French in which they chattered. All the sons-in-law had German accents—one that of Suabia, another of Vienna, and another of Thuringia. Nothing so much resembled the Babel of a first-class Continental table d'hôte as a family dinner-party at the Tuileries when Louis Philippe was King. It would have been impossible for a member of the inner circle not to pick up as many languages as a courier. I sympathise with the Duc d'Aumale in his desire to keep history alive in our forms of speech, and to show by the spelling the genesis of words. But life is not long enough, or the human brain big enough, to take in all that must now be learned, unless the superfluities are dropped. Nursery-maids and Anglo-Norman children were the creators of modern English. The servants spoke German, but, being unlearned, docked for our great benefit its bewildering inflexions. The children gabbled a sort of French, and both ended by sliding into the strong and composite yet simple tongue, which is conquering the world. Poets then came and beautified and fixed, without, however, casting the language in a rigid mould. They made it like shot silk, which changes its hues according to the light. One sometimes thinks it very German, but it struck Louis Blanc as corrupt French. I dare say there were purists who groaned over the disappearance of the inflexions and black-letter crabbedness, and others who were disgusted because it was not more Frenchy.

Outside the Academy, to which M. Gréard belongs, there are arrayed on the side of the reform he advocates some of the most brilliant Frenchmen of our time. Victor Hugo's son-in-law, Lockroy, Camille Pelletan, Dupuy, the Premier, who was formerly a professor, Leroy Beaulieu, and Bournouf, with many more persons of light and leading, are with him. They seriously object to children being tortured as they were by crabbed and pedantic rules of orthography, to the exclusion of more useful knowledge. Some of them propose that participles be declared invariable. They now vary in the most perplexing way, according in gender and number with the noun when it precedes the verb être, but not when it precedes the verb avoir. The exceptions are bewildering to a young brain. The cases of single and double letters also try the memory. Thus patronage comes from patron, maçonnage from maçon. Why one n in the former case and the double n in the latter? I don't see the harm of the y. Nevertheless, it is proposed to drop it, letting i invariably take its place. A knot of reformers have formed a Société de Filologue. If the French simplify their spelling, the Germans might try to make their genders less confusing, and to rid themselves of their Gothic characters in print and handwriting.

The denunciation mania still rages. M. Bourée, French Minister at Brussels, and whilom Minister at Pekin, is denounced for betraying the interests of his country to China for lucre when he was at the head of the French Mission to Pekin. We hear that the French Chamber of Commerce has been thrown into spasms of indignation by this libel. M. Bourée was an intimate friend of the late Baron de Billing, the most imaginative person that I ever knew, and the most pleasantly so when he romanced. Ferry, when Foreign Minister, took a dislike to Bourée, because Billing often took his part by getting himself interviewed about him. Bourée, I believe, did induce the Chinese Department for Foreign Affairs to accept a plan that he drew up for settling differences with China. If it had not been rejected, Admiral Courbet would not have lost his life prematurely, and the expense of the blockade and war he waged would have been saved.

I am often asked by English tourists what plays they had best see. "La Bouquetière des Innocents," which has been revived at the Châtelet, is a capital one. It is historical, melodramatic, spectacular, and exciting, and the action is supposed to go forward in the minority of Louis XIII. The flower-girl of the Innocents Church and Market is a Béarnaise, and god-daughter of the—in the first act recently murdered King Henri IV., and called after his first wife, Margot. Marie de Médicis, own grandmother of James II. of England, and an obstinate, infatuated dullard, is Regent. But Concini and his wife, Leonora Galigai, govern the Queen. As they wax rich and powerful the State grows weaker, and Paris is given over to their Italian "sbirri." Their plan is to get rid of Louis XIII., a sad, reserved youth, with a good deal of Italian penetration into character, and to set up his brother, Gaston, the darling son of Marie, in his stead. La Bouquetière was on familiar terms with the late King. She and one of his natural sons, Henriot, watch over Louis to defeat the incantations and the plots against him of Leonora and Concini. But Henriot is in love with the daughter of this criminal pair, who detest him for his devotion to the King. Meanwhile, a certain Jacques Bonhomme, a shoemaker, of the close of the Innocents Church, becomes enamoured of Margot and helps her and Henriot to baulk the Concinis. He is the pivot of the play, and becomes so in the following way. One night in the churchyard of the Innocents he overheard a gentleman of the Court—to judge from his habiliments and rapier—conspiring with Ravaillac to assassinate Henri IV. The crime was to be committed next day. Ravaillac had a religious medal which he broke in twain, giving one half to the nobleman. If one had a message to send to the other he was to entrust his half to the messenger as a sign that he really came from him. But the nobleman, who was Concini, dropped his half in the churchyard and Bonhomme picked it up. No sooner did Concini miss it than he rushed back to the churchyard where Jacques had just hidden what he had found in the carving of a stone cross. The shoemaker is suspected, arrested, and thrown into a madhouse, where he loses his memory and mind. But his confinement comes to an end, and he recovers his reason. What quite cures him is Paris getting into a state of red-hot anger against the Concini. In Act iii. Jacques and Henriot go to the stone cross to look for the half of the medal, they having learned that the other half was found on Ravaillac and is in the hands of justice. Should the two parts tally, what damning evidence there will be against Concini! But Leonora has discovered, by her incantations, their purpose. As Jacques is about to draw the piece he hid from under a carved ornament of the cross, he is stabbed, and left for dead. Henriot is seized by the sbirri and thrown into a room which is to serve as a place of detention at the Louvre. The prisoner, knowing the Palace of old, gets out and makes his way to the former bedroom of King Henry, now the chamber of Louis. The half-brothers are old friends and rejoiced to meet again. Notes are compared about the Concini, the story of the broken medal is told, and as the King is still a minor, he must act irregularly to get rid of these miscreants. When he finds the half medal of the churchyard tallies with that taken on Ravaillac, he no longer hesitates. Vitry, the Captain of his Guard, is secretly ordered to avenge King Henri, and stabs Concini in the Louvre. Leonora is sent to the Bastille, and thence before the Sorbonne, which orders her to be executed as a witch, and her body burned. But Henriot saves her daughter to marry her with the King's approval. Margot, who has been a devoted nurse to the wounded Jacques, becomes his wife.

The resources of Ulster House, Conduit-street, enable Messrs. BENJAMIN, in cases of need, to execute orders in 24 hours.

We see the bridal parties in the costumes of old Paris on the Pont Neuf. They are there to see Louis XIII. go in state to Notre Dame to return thanks for being saved from the sorceries of Leonora and the murderous designs of Concini. This final scene is splendidly spectacular. The acting is good. But how those who saw the play when it was brought out twenty years ago miss Marie Laurent! She multiplied herself in it, the parts of Margot and Leonora having been assigned to her. Her personations of both were splendid. She was so frank, so open-hearted, so vigorous, so good-natured as the Bouquetière. As Leonora she was sinister, and made flesh creep and blood run cold. Madame Teissandier now discharges the same double task, and certainly with talent. But she is too much the fine lady as Leonora, who was the foster sister of Marie de Médicis and a carpenter's daughter. Mdlle. Mellot is perfect as Louis XIII., who is just fourteen. She must have read up well the different sketches of him, her rendering of the part being so historically correct. Her treble voice is sweet and in the order of nature, seeing what the King's age is supposed to be.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

DEAR LADY BETTY,—I have received the following ungracious complaint. Plutocrats plainly regard the poor from a very incorrect standpoint:—

SIR,—Bank Holidays cause an over-crowding of the thoroughfares, railways, and parks, as also of every place of entertainment. They are, in consequence, a source of material inconvenience to many whose means permit of their living generally in comfort.

Bank Holiday people scatter orange-peel and paper bags about the streets, and they smoke execrable tobacco. I pay an exorbitant rental for a house in the West-End purposely to escape such annoyances. My interests, then, should be protected.

Those who have to work to live are manifestly inferior to those who have not. The former practically exist upon sufferance. It is plain, then, that our convenience should be consulted before theirs.

Why should the people require rest, change, and amusement? They are unaccustomed to these luxuries, and they only render them discontented with their ordinary circumstances. Besides, they might as reasonably require to be provided with champagne, shilling cigars, stalls at the opera, and other similar aids to rational existence.

It is unbecoming for the workpeople to take holidays when thousands around are clamouring for employment.

Bank Holidays cause grievous loss to merchants and manufacturers, and as these are the chief producers of public wealth, their loss is a national loss.

Work is ennobling. It is necessary for health. It also protects men from mischief.—Faithfully yours, MIDAS.

This is a most unbecoming spirit. The extravagant aristocratic magnificence of these upstart gentlemen threatens to bring even superciliousness into disrepute.

* * * * *

Lord Spencer has definitely refused the succession to the Viceroyalty of India. The choice now lies between Lord Herschell, Lord Cromer, and General Lord Roberts. Though an ambitious man, it is very unlikely that Lord Cromer would accept the appointment, for he suffered much there from the climate when Private Secretary to Lord Northbrook some twenty years ago. Besides, the health of Lady Cromer would not permit of her accompanying him to India, and, as his children are at school in England, he would also be practically prevented from seeing them for fully five years. Another consideration to be taken into account is that Lord Cromer is by no means a wealthy man, and that by accepting the Viceroyalty he would forfeit his pension in the Diplomatic Service.

Lord Cromer would, of course, wish to be appointed British Ambassador at Constantinople, but it is almost certain that the Sultan would refuse to sanction his appointment. Moreover, having been for all practical purposes absolute ruler over Egypt for close upon thirteen years, Lord Cromer has been spoilt for the delicate management of questions which is necessary in diplomatic transactions.

Lord Brassey would make an excellent Viceroy of India. He possesses great administrative ability, has a charming manner, and is extremely wealthy, whilst Lady Brassey would be an admirable Vice-Queen.

It is understood that several vacancies in the Diplomatic Service will occur before very long. Sir John Walsham will retire shortly and not in the very best of spirits; for, like several other of our distinguished diplomats, he has a serious grievance against the Foreign Office authorities. Both Sir Robert Morier, our Ambassador at St. Petersburg, and Lord Vivian, the Ambassador at Rome, are suffering from ill-health. Mr. Austen Lee, whose name has so frequently been mentioned in the recent "forged documents" scandal in Paris, may be expected to secure one of the earliest desirable appointments. What would best suit Mr. Lee's abilities and experience would certainly be to succeed Mr. Joseph Crowe as Commercial Attaché for Europe. He is an accomplished linguist, and was for some years official secretary to Sir Charles Dilke, whose acquaintance with commercial matters is not only very large but extremely valuable. For some reason all the newspapers, including the Times, persistently refer to Mr. Austen Lee as "Secretary of Embassy" at Paris. This is utterly incorrect, for the Secretary of Embassy there is Mr. Edmund Phipps.

Several new departures in the autumn manœuvres of the West-end clubs are noticeable this year. White's Club will shortly close for repairs and redecoration, but the members, instead of accepting the hospitality of some similar institution, are to be accommodated at Willis's Restaurant, where the first floor is to be reserved for their use, whilst the same tariff for meals will be charged as they are in the habit of paying at their own club-house.

On the 19th, the Bachelors' Club will, for the first time upon record, only partially close, and the wing of the building usually reserved for ladies will be devoted to the use of the members.

The members of the Guards' Club, which is to be closed from the 20th inst. until September 20, will be entertained by the Marlborough and by the New Club in Grafton-street. The latter, which was started with the purpose of supplying an unpretentious and inexpensive club suited to the more recent requirements of young men in the West-end, has achieved remarkable success, and is now established firmly as one of the serious institutions of the sort in London Club-land. An eighteen-penny luncheon and a half-a-crown dinner, both simple and excellent, are attractions which meet a severe want in these days of universal depression.

The St. James' and several other clubs will not close at all this season, and, indeed, the general tendency is to abolish the complete closing of clubs for annual repairs. What alterations and improvements are necessary can be effected by closing individual rooms without placing members to the inconvenience of being locked out. Meanwhile, as the attendance is much decreased during the months of August and September, the servants can be given their well-earned holidays in batches.

The Ranelagh Club at Barn Elms will be kept open throughout the year instead of closing, as Hurlingham does, at the commencement of August. The proprietors of the Maison Dorée Club have also decided to keep their establishment open all the year round, representations having been made to the Committee that it would be a convenience, if this were permitted, to Members of Parliament and others compelled to remain in town.

As the shooting season is upon the point of commencing, it may be advisable to mention the latest addition to modern scientific convenience. It appears that there now exists at Leadenhall Market an extensive refrigerating depository where, at a very small charge—I believe twopence annually for each deposit—game and all similar perishable articles are kept for use at any time during the year. Last season a large number of sportsmen preserved game here, and by this means were able to have partridges and pheasants throughout the close months.

The question of Sir Frederick Burton's retirement from the Directorship of the National Gallery has been started prematurely. It will not be very long, however, before the matter really does come within the field of practical consideration. Mr. Poynter, the Royal Academician, appears to be popularly nominated as his probable successor, but it is inconceivable that an artist who earns some four or five thousand a year by his paintings should voluntarily give this up merely to secure a post of distinction which, though it carries with it a Knighthood, is otherwise only remunerated with a salary of a thousand a year. Upon the other hand, the duties and labours accompanying the office of Director of the National Gallery in its present extended state would not permit of the holder also carrying on his own private profession.

In no important National Gallery upon the Continent is an artist appointed to the office of Director, for the very simple reason that from the mere training which he has undergone his judgment has become prejudiced, and his taste leads him to give distinct preference to some particular school of art or to some particular period. Such a prejudice, of course, is altogether undesirable in an official who has to be mainly responsible for accumulating representative pictures in a great National collection. Mr. Sydney Colvin, the present Chief of the Print Department at the British Museum, on account of his large experience of pictures and liberal-minded taste, would be the most suitable nominee for this post, when the time arrives when Sir Frederick Burton is unfortunately compelled to resign the office which he has administered with such discretion and distinction.

Great regret will be felt at the death of Lady Bolsover, which occurred at the close of last week. Since the accession of her stepson to the Dukedom of Portland the late Lady Bolsover had played a prominent part in London Society. In consequence of her death, the Duke's proposed house-party for Doncaster week, at which the Prince was to have been present, has been given up.—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

THE ridiculous scare about Isinglass having subsided, Mr. McCalmont's horse is now a very firm favourite for the Leger, 6 to 4 having been betted on him during the last few days; and as there seem now to be more layers than takers, it is probable that still longer odds will soon be asked for, if the horse goes on all right. Isinglass is now in fairly strong work at Newmarket, and he is going very much better on the turf than he did when he was being trained for the Derby on the tan. He will come to the post at Doncaster in the very best possible condition, and it seems to me that he is sure to win the Leger; but, nevertheless, I advise people who fancy him to wait until the day of the race. It is better then to lay 2 to 1 or 5 to 2, when the horse is fit and well in the paddock, rather than now to lay 6 to 4, with all the manifold risks of the next month to encounter. Isinglass has not run a hard race this year nor, indeed, has he ever been really punished, and I fully expect that he will win both the Leger and the Lancashire Plate. It may be hoped that next year we shall see him running against Marcion for the Ascot Cup.

Ravensbury looks better than any one could reasonably expect to see him after the tremendous amount of work he has gone through this season; but I have not the very slightest fancy for Mr. Rose's horse, who has been three times easily beaten by Isinglass this year, and I fail to see how any rational being can expect him to reverse the Two Thousand and Derby form. As to Ravensbury having really given serious trouble to Isinglass at Epsom, that is a mere fairy tale, for Mr. McCalmont's horse won easily, and if they had run another two hundred yards he would have been further off than he was.

Directly after Ascot I recommended Phocion as being the best outsider in the Leger, and Lord Ellesmere's horse has made a still further improvement in his looks during the last few months, and he goes as well as possible in his gallops. Phocion is sure to stay the course, and I shall be surprised and disappointed if he does not get a place. He has an engagement at Sandown Park on the Friday before the Leger is run, but he will not be seen out until Doncaster, and whatever may be his fate in the great race, he is tolerably sure to win the Scarborough Stakes on the following day.

Medicis is very little better than Mountain Chief over six furlongs, but I should fancy that Baron de Rothschild's horse likes a much longer course, and he would no doubt lose both the four-year-old and Le Nicham if they were galloped over the Leger distance. I indicated Medicis as a promising outsider before his race at Sandown Park, when he stood at very long odds, but my expectations do not go so far as to lead me to anticipate that he will beat Isinglass. He is merely a good place investment, but if any of my readers have backed him at a long price they will do well to hedge, as he (according to present arrangements) is to be sent to France next week, in order that he may run for the Grand Prix de Deauville on the 20th. No English horses have been entered for this race, and the French lot are so exceedingly moderate that Medicis ought to win easily; but, of course, a journey to France and back, with the chances of a rough passage across the Channel, will not improve his prospects at Doncaster. I should think that he is a certain starter for the Leger, whatever he may do at Deauville, for Le Nicham has not the most remote chance, as he could not stay the course.

The outsiders are a dreadfully bad lot. Some crack-brained simpletons have backed The Jew down to 20 to 1, but 2,000 to 1 would be a short price to take about the horse, judging from his public form. The Jew has only distinguished himself when his opponents have been very moderate indeed. Peppercorn is doing plenty of work at Newmarket, but he can have no chance whatever for the Leger, and is more likely being prepared for the September Stakes at Sandown Park. Tanderagee is a non-stayer, and unsound in his wind, so he is not likely to be seen at the post for the Leger. Harbinger is another animal which has no chance, and Childwick could not stay the course, while Dame President is a roarer. Fealar is a very bad horse, and Canning need not be thought of after his exhibition at Goodwood. The backers of Self Sacrifice and Pergamos surely ought not to be suffered to go at large. They are both handicap horses of by no means high class. Silene is more likely to start for the Park Hill Stakes than for the Leger. Royal Harry need not be thought of so long as three or four of the more fancied candidates keep well. The Duke of Portland will show himself to be very silly if he starts Raeburn, as that horse has repeatedly demonstrated his utter incapacity to stay even a mile, and he cannot have the ghost of the shadow of a chance over a mile and three-quarters, especially as the Leger will probably be a fast-run race this year. Raeburn might be trained for the Lancashire Plate at Manchester, but he has not been doing well during the summer, and the best policy would be to throw him up for the remainder of the season. The very disappointing career of this horse leads one again to wonder why on earth the Duke of Portland did not send Mowerina to Galopin after the success of Donovan instead of keeping her to his own horse.

It was not because Sempronius was amiss that he was kept away from Goodwood, where his only engagement was the Richmond Stakes, which was won by his stable companion, Galloping Dick. Sempronius is in reserve for the Champagne Stakes at Doncaster, where he will meet the Illuminata colt at even weights, and, in my opinion, it is lucky for Bullingdon that he is not entered for that race.

If the amateur who laid 20 to 1 against Bullingdon for the Derby at Goodwood (10 to 1 having subsequently been accepted) had taken the trouble to look up the colt's engagements, it is probable that he would have refrained from any such harum-scarum speculations. Last year it was expected that Bullingdon would turn out a failure, so forfeit was paid for him for several stakes in which he had been engaged as a foal, and he was not entered for the Middle Park or Dewhurst Plates, or for the Two Thousand or Newmarket Stakes. The consequence is that he will not meet the Illuminata colt until Epsom, and he is tolerably sure to be a good favourite for the Derby during the winter, inasmuch as he has only easy engagements for the remainder of this season. In the Buckenham Stakes Bullingdon will again meet Glare and Speed, and, having beaten them at Goodwood, he may reasonably be expected to beat them again, especially as he is still capable of much improvement. Then he is in the Rous Memorial Stakes at Newmarket (5 lb. extra), the large entry for which includes nothing better than Speed, Theseus, and Hornbeam. His last engagement as a two-year-old is the £2,900 race at Liverpool in November, when he might meet Galloping Dick and Delphos, but he is not likely to be seen out after the First October Meeting. Bullingdon can evidently stay, and he is very game, judging from his second race at Goodwood. It happens that Sempronius is not engaged in the Derby, so that at present Bullingdon seems to be held safe for that race only by Lord Rosebery's colt. The Two Thousand will be a very interesting race next year, and Mr. D. Baird may yet discover a very formidable candidate for Epsom in that good-looking and highly-promising colt, St. Florian, who ran so well with Bullingdon in the Ham Stakes at Goodwood, and he is still exceedingly backward. I hear that St. Florian will now be reserved for the £5,000 stake at Kempton Park, run on October 6. Galloping Dick might show his best form at Epsom, which is an excellent course for rogues, but I fancy that this colt will presently discover himself to be deficient in stamina. Bullingdon's backers for the Derby must not forget that his half-brother (by Bend Or), Orion, was a very smart two-year-old, but he never did any good afterwards.

Orme's next and last race is to be the Limekiln Stakes of £1,000, which is run on the first day of the Houghton Meeting, and the course (R.M.) will exactly suit him. The entry includes Orvieto, Suspender, Simonian, El Diablo, Buccaneer, and Le Nicham.

If Childwick can stay the A.F. course, he would have a very good chance of winning the Lowther Stakes of £1,000, which is run on the same day as the Middle Park Plate. He would have 26 lb. the best of the weights with Isinglass, and 20 lb. with La Flèche. I should fancy that this is the race which Childwick will go for.

There will be racing next week at Stockton, Wolverhampton (Dunstall Park), Nottingham, and Portsmouth Park, but interesting sport can be expected at only the first of these meetings, which will extend over three days.

On Tuesday, at Stockton, there is a large entry for the Wynyard Plate of £600, and I shall plump for Lord Zetland's Galingale, who has been well tried at Newmarket. On Wednesday, fifty-eight three-year-olds are left in for the Great Northern Leger of £800, and they are a poor lot, including nothing better than Inferno, Charles the Third, Low Moor, Canning, Queen of Navarre, Erin, and Carnton. I shall predict the success of Canning, who will have very much the best of the weights. The Hardwicke Stakes of £500 has a huge entry, but cannot now be dealt with, as several of the animals engaged will be running this week at Redcar. On Thursday the Zetland Plate of £500 is a certainty for Marcion.

Family Washing only.—Collection and delivery twice daily. For families leaving Town, work delivered day following collection, and with three days' clear notice, household work collected and delivered prior to families arriving in Town. Under new management.—Belgrave Steam Laundry, 196, Ebury-st., Belgravia, S.W.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN, The Stock Exchange settled down to business again during the past week, and although the feeling is still nervous, and the prevailing holiday influences are opposed to real activity, there has been a considerable improvement in tone and a partial recovery in prices. The paramount interest is, of course, still in the American market, in which prices, although fluctuating widely, have on the whole been on the up grade.

Stock Exchange Prospects.

There is no doubt that investors, wise in their generation, have been buying and taking up cheap stocks in this department and in other markets to a considerable extent, and, whenever this movement has reached a certain volume, and the surplus stock thrown over by weak speculators have been absorbed, a further substantial improvement may be looked for. Already European investment purchases of Yankee securities have done their share towards shipments of gold from this side to New York, some £2,500,000 in all having been despatched, which should go far to relieve the monetary stringency in the United States. The great scarcity of currency—partly due to hoarding—is, in fact, the weakest point in the Yankee position, and whenever it is remedied there will be a marked change in the Wall-street market, which is every now and then disturbed by reports of bank failures in the interior, and by sudden spasms such as followed the collapse of the pork corner in Chicago. The meeting of the U.S. Congress should, however, eventually lead to a better state of things, and the view of usually well-informed authorities is that Yankee Rails will now gradually, and with occasional reactions, advance to a higher level. The Continental Bourses have pulled themselves together again, and South American securities have withstood the weakening influence of the political troubles in the Argentine Republic better than might have been expected. The Mining market, too, has displayed greater strength, partly in sympathy with the American market, and had it not been for the uncertainty still prevailing with respect to the Matabele King's probable action against the British Chartered Company of South Africa, the recovery would have made greater progress. The advance in the Bank rate from 2½ to 3 per cent. is a wise measure, as it will protect the gold reserve of the Bank of England at the right moment, and attract fresh supplies of the precious metal. On the whole, the result of the week's events is, therefore, encouraging, and there is thus a prospect of the various members of the "House" who have been heavily hit, or have been "helped" last settlement, pulling through their difficulties, unless unforeseen troubles were again to cause a temporary set-back. The "House," by the way, is taking its holiday sadly, and writing, as I do, from one of the southern seaside resorts usually much frequented by the members, I notice the absence of many of the shining lights, who used to represent the Stock Exchange with so much dash on former occasions. Let us hope that, by the time the next Bank Holiday comes round, the balances at their bankers will again permit the usual trip to the sea.

Sanitary Surveys.—Fee for inspection and Report in London, 2Gs.—The Sanitary Engineering Co., 65, Victoria-st., Westminster.

Home Rails.

The dividend announcements of the week have again borne out my anticipations. On June 13 I estimated the dividend, for the half year ending June 30, of the North-Western at 5¼ per cent., against 5¼ per cent. for the corresponding half of 1892, making 6¼ per cent. for the whole year ending on that date. This is exactly the distribution now announced, "Brums" at 168, therefore, yielding 3¾ per cent. on the investment. The Great Western dividend, which was estimated by me at 4¼ per cent., against 4¼ per cent. for the past half of 1892, turned out still worse, viz., 4 per cent., so that the dividend for the whole year ended June 30 last, amounts to only 5¼ per cent. On this basis, Great Western at the reduced quotation of 156 yield only about 3¼ per cent. on the investment. The weekly traffics generally have been unfavourable, chiefly owing to the comparison having been with the week before Bank Holiday last year. This week the comparison will be reversed, but the unsettled weather and the coal strike do not exactly justify any sanguine estimates. The Scotch stocks, especially North British Preferred and Deferred have been bought to some extent from Glasgow and Dundee, but it remains to be seen if the movement will prove more lasting than the last few abortive attempts to put quotations up. There is so far no improvement in other low-priced stocks, such as "Saras" (Sheffield Deferred) and Districts; neither have Chathams displayed any special strength, although the Chairman, Mr. J. S. Forbes, spoke at the meeting of shareholders with his usual eloquence, and had, on the whole, some comforting news to impart. Brighton "A" have moved sharply at times, and would have maintained their rise had atmospheric conditions been more propitious. A portion of the usual clique went on the "Bull" tack in the middle of the week, putting the price at one time up to 150½, much to the chagrin of their former allies, but the latter had their revenge when Jupiter Pluvius interfered, the quotations receding again. I have already stated that I do not advise speculation in the volatile "Berthas" at present, but for investment they may be recommended as yielding a better return than any other Home Railway stock. By the way, my whilom correspondent, the "Little Field-Marshal," sends me a line thanking me for my remarks concerning him, and informing me that he has paid his creditors 10s. in the pound, and will probably be able to pay the balance shortly. I hope to see him reinstated in due time, for the Brighton market is not complete without him. South-Eastern Deferred have made an attempt to rouse themselves from their stupor, but the times and the weather have been against them.

The Yankee Crisis.

Now that Congress is assembling at Washington, and that undoubtedly an earnest effort will be made, not only to repeal the mischievous Sherman Silver Bill, but also to place the financial and currency requirements of the United States upon a stable basis, it is not improbable that my anticipations of the last month or two will come true, and that those who have availed themselves of my strongly-urged advice to buy substantial dividend-paying as well as low-priced Yankee stocks at the very moderate prices then prevailing, will have reason to congratulate themselves. The lowest price at which Louisville were sold—or, rather, given away—in the panic was 50½. They touched yesterday 58, while Milwaukees, which fell at one time as low as 49½, are up to 56, with corresponding movements in the rest of the active list. There are, of course, still many unfavourable features in the position in the United States, the principle trouble being the scarcity of currency as a result of hoarding. But this trouble can no doubt be cured by wise legislation, and it is, under all the circumstances, not surprising that the "Bears" in New York have commenced to cover, as President Cleveland might easily spring a mine upon them. As an illustration of the extent to which the "Bears" in Wall-street will go, the following little tale, as told by a New York financial paper, is of interest:—On Tuesday morning, U.S. Government Fours were 111 bid on the Stock Exchange. Shortly afterwards,

Mr. A. J. Weil, through a broker, offered 50,000 dols. down to "110¾ for currency," at which price Mr. Pliny Fisk bought the bonds. On Wednesday morning Mr. Weil personally delivered the bonds, and Messrs. Harvey Fisk & Son tendered him the amount in five-dollar gold pieces, which Mr. Weil refused to accept, stating that he wanted currency. Mr. Fisk insisted that five-dollar pieces were currency. Later, Mr. Weil's brother called and renewed the demand for currency, and was refused. The firm notified A. J. Weil & Co. later that unless the bonds were delivered before 2.15 o'clock on Wednedays they would be bought in under the rule, and about 1.15 Mr. Weil's representative called and accepted the gold for the bonds. Such sharp practice as this to affect the Money Market is a novelty even in Wall-street "Bear" tactics, and it is said that the Governing Committee of the New York Stock Exchange is likely to investigate the transaction. There is no doubt, however, that investors both in this country and in the States have made the task of the ursine party more difficult of late. A large number of orders for "odd lots" are reported from Wall-street, and if a glance could be got at the the transfer-books of many corporations, says the Wall-street Daily News, we doubt not they would show a steadily diminishing proportion of stocks in brokers' names. Investment purchases have also been very important on this side, and large blocks of shares are in course of shipment from New York. It is partly this movement which has lowered the New York exchange, and made gold shipments from this side possible. But the large grain shipments to Europe must also be telling on the balance of trade. Those for the week ended July 14 were the largest during the year, while the exports of corn were 1,183,000 bushels, compared with 586,811 for the corresponding week of last year. It will be seen from the following table that the exports of the six weeks up to the middle of Jnne have been almost steadily increasing, while at the same time last year, with better crop prospects at the time, they were irregular and averaged much less. The wheat export figures for the six weeks ended July 14 were as follows in the two years:—

	1893.		1892.
June 9	3,610,500	.....	3,052,797
June 16	3,834,840	.....	3,336,346
June 23	3,553,000	.....	2,457,820
June 30	3,971,300	.....	3,216,745
July 7	3,677,900	.....	2,060,504
July 14	4,184,630	.....	2,583,155

With regard to further gold shipments, it is understood that the Bank of France will be prepared to part with some of its millions, which is a promising feature. As regards the unsettled financial and commercial condition in the States, although greatly to be deplored, it should prove a powerful weapon in the hands of President Cleveland to bring the silver men to reason and carry his measures. Under all the circumstances I look for a gradual improvement in Yankee stocks, of course with occasional reactions, upon which investors will do well to buy. I consider Louisville, Milwaukees, and Atchison Second Mortgage bonds the best purchase; but cheap stocks, such as Atchison shares, Erie, Readings and Reading First Income bonds, Central Pacifics, and Atlantic Firsts also deserve attention. With reference to the position of the Atchison Company, the Financial News published a few days ago some interesting remarks based on information obtained from the London agents, according to which the results of the past year showed a surplus over fixed charges of 2,500,000 dols., equal to nearly 2½ per cent. on the Ordinary stock. I fully agree with my contemporary that, with such a balance in hand, the "A" and "B" Second Mortgage bonds under 40 look extremely cheap. There is, of course, the question of the floating debt of between 6,000,000 dols. to 7,000,000 dols., but 17,000,000 dols. of assets have been put up as security, and under all the circumstances there seem to be no grounds for anxiety. Canadian Pacifics and Grand Trunks have moved with the Yankee market, but I like the former much better than the latter.

Foreigners and South Americans.

The Siamese difficulty is at an end as far as it was a disturbing factor in the markets, and the "Bears" will have to look for other bogeys to achieve their purpose. An attempt has been made to rig Spanish, but this must remain an unprofitable move. It is true that the Cortes have separated, but the necessity for raising the wind remains, and the time cannot be far distant when a serious crisis will have to be faced. As to Italians, they do not recover from their weakness, and indications are towards lower prices. Some trouble was reported from Paris on pay-day, an important operator not having paid his differences. Portuguese seem to be a dead market, but Russians have at last given way slightly in view of the Russo-German tariff war and the reported need by Russia at home of a portion of her balances in Paris and London. The disturbing feature in the South American market remains the political trouble in Argentina. Several of my daily contemporaries are talking very glibly about these events, but they do not seem to understand the position. This is no upheaval against the National Government. On the contrary, the latter, since Dr. Del Valle has formed a Radical Ministry, has tacitly encouraged the Radical Party, who are at present the aggressors in the various provinces, and only its policy of non-interference has rendered the movement possible. Santa Fé seems now to be in the hands of the Radicals, whose leader, Dr. Alem, is looked upon as an honest and honourable man, and a thorough-paced reformer. That he should be determined to put an end to the disgraceful political and financial mismanagement of these Provinces, and especially of Buenos Ayres, is not surprising, and the expulsion of Governor Costa from La Plata will be hailed with satisfaction by all well-wishers of the country. What position that modern Cincinnatus, General Roca, the Conservative leader, will eventually take, it is impossible to say. He has resigned the Presidency of the Senate, and once again signified his intention to withdraw from public life. But I daresay he would not refuse to obey the call of duty, should one of these days the Presidency again be offered to him. The worst feature is that the present National Government, and especially the President, are not strong enough. To the foreign creditors it is not material which party gets the upper hand in this struggle, so long as the country at last settles down peacefully, as all parties appear to favour the settlement with the bondholders which has recently been agreed upon. The documents have arrived in Buenos Ayres, and the ratification of the agreement should now promptly follow. The commercial progress of the country is so far satisfactory, although the high gold premium is a disturbing factor; but that is due chiefly to the disturbed political outlook. Whenever the present troubles are over, the gold premium will drop, and a sharp recovery in the Government and Railway stocks may be looked for. There has been a moderate recovery in the so-called silver securities which had been unduly depreciated, especially Mexican Six per Cent. Government stocks and Peruvian Corporation Debentures. It would not be surprising to see this improvement gather strength when once the U.S. Congress has pronounced its decision on the silver question. Chilians and Brazilians would show less weakness if the exchange would improve more steadily. The former should, in any case, be held for a smart advance, as the interest is quite safe. Uruguay bonds are being kept down by the Argentine muddle, which also unfortunately affects such stocks as Costa Rica "A" and "B" bonds. The latter, however, are remarkably cheap.

The Kaffir Circus.

The market for South African Mining shares has shown a distinctly hardening tendency, and it is evident that it would require but a moderate buying movement to bring about a marked advance. The apprehension of trouble to the British Chartered Company from Lobengula has caused great weakness of the latter shares, which has reacted on other Land shares, although it is difficult to see why that should be, except for the reason that some holders of shares in Transvaal Land Companies are also interested in the Chartered Company. To these my advice is, as it was when Chartered shares stood over 10s., to get out as soon as possible. Amongst Witwatersrand Mines, Salisbury, Village Main Reef, Geldenhuis, New Primrose, and Glencairns have been the strongest, and with the announcement of the July crushings greater animation is expected. Afrikanders are steadier at 25s., and advices from the property continue favourable. This also applies to Buffelsdoorn, from which mine active operations will, no doubt, be reported next month. Oceana shares have improved, and there has also been a reviving demand for Oceana Development shares. Quotations are, however, still very low, and purchases now made will, no doubt, look very cheap in a few weeks. Diamond shares are recovering but slowly from the heavy slump, De Beers being quoted 15½, New Jagersfontein 15¼. With reference to the Nyassa Company, I learn that a first sub-Company will be launched almost immediately. Negotiations for the sale of two blocks of agricultural lands to a second sub-Company are also stated to be in progress, the amount involved as purchase consideration being put as high as £1,000,000. There seems, therefore, a prospect of the Nyassa shareholders receiving a big plum shortly, as, on the completion of these sales, the Company would be in a position to distribute a dividend and bonus of 200 per cent. on its present paid-up capital. The Company is also, I hear, sending out its general business manager and an experienced geologist to its territories in Africa this month. The African Gold Recovery Company are again looking for an increase in their July output upon the June "record" output of 27,400 oz. The Transvaal Gold and Exploration 5,000-ton plant started on July 10, and the Buffelsdoorn 8,000-ton plant a few days ago, while several other large plants are approaching completion, including the Langlaagte Estate 30,000-ton plant, and the Sheba 5,000-ton plant. Amongst Australian Gold Mines a recovery has taken place in Aladdins to 1½, the blocks of shares which were thrown upon the market by recent failures having now been absorbed, and passed into strong hands. As the recent decline was due only to extraneous reasons, the improvement is likely to make further progress, the more so as favourable crushings are again expected. This also applies to Wentworth Priority and Ordinary, which are recovering at ¾ and ⅜ respectively. Great regret has been caused by the sudden death on Wednesday last of Mr. Arthur Forbes, senior partner in the firm of Arthur Forbes & Co., of 16, Cornhill, Australian Mining Brokers, who are chiefly connected with Queensland Mines. Indian Mines have improved during the week, thus fulfilling my anticipations. In American Mines, Holcomb Valley have improved to 1s. The news received by cable from this very promising Californian Gravel Gold Mine is to the effect that the Bucyrus Steam Shovel works well in the gravel, and that the rest of the machinery is now on the road. This is most satisfactory news, and there seems to be every prospect of good results at an early date.

China and Glass. — Messrs. Goode, Artists and Designers, solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

The Caratal Mine.

In midst of the general collapse in the Mining Market the shares of the Caratal Gold Mining Company have shown remarkable strength, large blocks being daily bought, with the result that the quotation has advanced to 10½d.-1s. 1½d. This, it should be understood, is the price of shares of 2s. 6d. each with 2s. 4d. credited as paid. The upward movement has been caused by the receipt of favourable advices from Mr. Alfred Bull, one of the Directors, who is now on the property, and by the anticipation of yet more important news. I have already stated that Mr. Bull has had the Company's title to the mine fully confirmed by the Venezuelan Government. According to the Mining World, he has also arranged with the local creditors of the old Company, whose claims in the aggregate amounted to between £3,000 to £4,000, to "take 80 per cent. in paper—in other words, in shares—and 20 per cent. in cash, after cutting down many of their accounts to the fine edge of nothing." To that extent the Company's available working capital is, therefore, increased. Mr. Skertchley, the well-known mining engineer, is at present engaged in taking numerous assays of the large accumulation of valuable tailings on the property, which are expected to realise a small fortune for the shareholders. But this is not all. I hear of negotiations having been opened in another direction by Mr. Bull, which, if successful, would greatly enhance the value of the shareholders' holding. The arrival of favourable news on any one of these various points would, no doubt, further stimulate dealings in these shares, which, being still very low priced, offer an exceptional opportunity for a little speculation, as the chances of a big rise can be secured with very little outlay and a merely nominal risk.

An Australian Bank Depositor's Complaint.

On July 6 I referred to the complaint of a depositor in the City of Melbourne Bank, at the manner in which he had been treated by that institution. He had a deposit for three years with the Bank and on the expiration of that period, on May 15, the deposit receipt, duly endorsed, was presented to the Bank by his bankers, the Clydesdale Banking Company's London branch. Payment, was, however, refused on the ground that the depositor's signature did not correspond with the signature given when placing the deposit three years previously, and on the following day the City of Melbourne Bank suspended payment. There was, it appears, some change in the signature, as the depositor (a medical man) had lost part of his right hand in the meanwhile through blood-poisoning, and was therefore under the necessity of writing with his left hand. But on two occasions—viz., May and November, 1892—interest receipts with the fresh signature were accepted by the Bank without demur. The depositor has since had a lengthy correspondence with the Official Receiver of the Bank, copies of which he has forwarded to me. I cannot, obviously, find room for the whole of the letters which have passed, but the following final communications will explain the position:—

July 28, 1893.

Sir,—I am desired by the Official Receiver to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 26th inst., and in reply to point out that you are wrong in your statement that it was within his power to declare that your deposit receipt was entitled to priority of payment. It was not a question of accepting the statement of the Bank authorities against your own. The facts of the case appear to be incontrovertible, and although the Official Receiver recognises that the non-payment of your deposit receipt upon technical grounds is, no doubt, a great hardship to you, still the Bank appears to have been justified in its action, and I have to express his regret that he can give you no further answer than that contained in his previous communications.—I am, Sir, yours, &c.,

W. J. Warley,
Assistant Official Receiver.

To J. W., Esq.

July 29, 1893.

Sir,—I am in receipt of yours of the 28th, the terms of which do not lead me in the slightest degree to acknowledge the justice or equity of your action. You say "the facts of the case appear to be incontrovertible." You mean, I suppose, the facts as presented by the Bank authorities and stated by you in your letter of the 11th. In my reply I distinctly took exception to their plea that "my signature had never come under their notice, as the interest warrants were payable by the Bank's cheques on the Royal Bank of Scotland," and showed further that it is not the usual practice to refuse payment in the way they did, no fewer than three other Australian Banks having at the same date paid up my deposits on a similar signature without any demur whatever. And yet with these palpable objections, as well as with the other statements and arguments which I adduced, you adhere with a tenacity worthy of a better cause to the views of the Bank authorities and endorse their action. You admit that the refusal to pay was based on a mere technicality, and that it "is a great hardship" to me. With this faint glimmer of something approaching to equity one would have supposed that you would, at least, have had the generosity and courage to say to the Bank authorities, This person may in your eyes be technically in the wrong, but he has given ample reason for failing to notify his change of signature. You have had his money for the time stipulated, other Australian Banks have without hesitation paid his deposits on a similar signature; pay you in like manner or give priority to his claim and so avoid bringing a stain on the good name of British finance. As you have failed to do so and appear determined to abide by your original decision, I cannot but regard your action as inconsistent with your judicial position. —I am, yours truly, J. W.

"Toilet Lanoline" softens, clears, and preserves the skin, and should be used in every household. "Toilet Lanoline" protects the skin from the effects of exposure, and adds to the natural beauty. In collapsible tubes, 6d.; in small boxes, 3d., from all chemists and druggists. Wholesale depôt, 67, Holborn-viaduct. The genuine bears the trade-mark, "Lanoline."

To the Official Receiver.

These letters will sufficiently show the arguments used on both sides. I must confess that the case strikes me as one not only of great hardship, but also of great injustice to my correspondent, and I still hope that the authorities of this Bank, which shortly intends to re-open for business, will deal with this case fairly and equitably. The manner in which it is at present being conducted is certainly not encouraging to British depositors.

My Letter Box.

I am again obliged to remind my readers that I can only reply to communications which are accompanied by the names and addresses of the writers, not, of course, for publication, but as a token of good faith. All anonymous letters will be consigned to the wastepaper-basket. Some delay must necessarily occur in answering questions which entail special inquiries. My correspondents will also greatly simplify my task by reading my weekly letters carefully through, as these frequently contain remarks on the very subjects on which information is sought. I again repeat that I can accept no fee for replies in "My Letter Box," and that I cannot undertake to answer by letter. I must also absolutely refuse to execute any orders for stocks and shares, or to act as an intermediary in any way.

Government, &c., Bonds.

Secundus.—Yes, Costa Rica "B" bonds are a promising speculative investment. H. G., Oporto.—Interest on the Greek Funding Loan is paid six-monthly in cash. I do not know of any sale of the Bank shares in question, and the present time is, moreover, extremely unfavourable for the purpose. Old Soldier. —1. I should not sell Brazilians now; on the conclusion of the political troubles a recovery is probable. 2. You are aware of my view of Italians, but I do not wish to persuade you. If you are in doubt, sell half and purchase cheap U.S. Railway stocks, such as Louisville, Atchison Second Mortgage "B" bonds, &c. Mexican Sixes have improved, and will go better in time unless some further collapse in silver should occur.

Banks, Trusts, and Financial.

T. N. P.—This is one of the Trust Companies which I have adversely criticised from the outset. Sell. Consul.—Thanks. I am glad to hear that you and your friends have benefited by my advice with respect to the Australian Banks. B. B.—This is one of the Australian Land Companies, concerning which I have advised many of my readers in "My Letter Box" for a year or two to get out. I am afraid that the future of the reconstructed Company will not be very promising, and it would be preferable to get out. Should this not be possible, would it not be wisest to join the reconstruction and then sell? Juggins. —The firm of outside brokers in question has gone into bankruptcy, and I cannot therefore help you. Why did you not heed my repeated warnings? Hereford.—There are better investments to be made in the well-known Transvaal Land Companies. J. D., Liverpool.—I will try to obtain the required information concerning the Austrian Lottery bond for you in Vienna, and communicate the result to you.

Home Rails.

Index.—Have you read my article regularly? I have so frequently advised purchase of Berthas of late for investment that you ought to have got in at bottom. But they are still cheap. Rollo.—Some speculative revival is probable in the low-priced Home Railway stocks such as North British and Caledonian Deferred, Sheffield Deferred, and Little Chathams.

American and Foreign Rails.

B. T. K.—You do not forward your full name and address on your post-card. I have repeatedly explained that the reason of the fall in Mexican Central Four per Cent. Gold bonds is the silver crisis, which has caused all Mexican securities to depreciate; but as the interest is secured for four years to come, apart from the revenue of the line, the fall is greatly exaggerated. Hold. J. C. A.—Hold your Northern Pacifics by all means. Your intended small investment in Norfolk Prefs, Milwaukees, Louisville, and Atchison "B" is very promising and you should act at once. In fact, I hope that you have bought already on the strong advice given by me last week, as you would in that case have got in cheap. Asset.—You should hold Argentine Great Western Debenture stock now; it is just as likely to go ahead as the bonds mentioned. Why not buy Brighton "A" for permanent investment—they pay you over 5 per cent.? Devon.—I dealt last week, under "Yankee Rails," with the mischievous invention of a receivership for the Atchison line, and I hope that you have acted upon my strong advice to buy Atchison Second Mortgage bonds at the price then prevailing. Yes, Central Pacific and Reading First Income bonds are also a good purchase for investment. T. A. P.—Hold the Ohio and Erie. There seems to be no fear of an assessment of the latter. See under "Yankee Rails" in last week's issue. Auclia, Yeovil.—I have not changed my view concerning Mexican Central Four per Cent. Gold bonds. The interest is secured for four or five years, and that surely will give time to cure the Silver trouble. G. H. Y.—I thoroughly agree with your remarks concerning the recklessness of the City Editor of the Standard in falsely announcing a receivership of the Atchison line. Such mischievous statements tend to bring the trouble about in times of panics like the present. See remarks under "Yankee Rails" in last week's issue. J. R.—Hold Erie. The reply is not at all in harmony with subsequent articles in the same paper. See under "Yankee Rails." E. P.—Louisville and Nashville shares. J. M. S.—I have not changed my opinion of the bonds, the interest on which is secured for some four years irrespective of the revenue of the line. I called them a speculative investment in the sense that they are not on a par with gilt-edged stocks. J.—I consider all the Yankee Rails mentioned, including Atlantic Firsts, as very cheap, and likely to rise as soon as the monetary position in the States improves. Tipperary.—Yes, you might buy some Atchison Four per Cent. First Mortgage bonds to average, as you propose. G. H. H.—I should say that these bonds are quite safe, but I do not like to advise you to put too many eggs into one basket.

Mining Shares.

Orme.—The question is, if you want to invest in dividend-paying mining shares or not. If the former, you cannot expect to get them at rubbish price. But if you want low-priced shares for a little gamble, you cannot do better than buy Caratals or Holcomb Valley at 10½d. to 1s. 1½d., which may, on the receipt of favourable information, easily double their price. W. P. N.—The journal in question is not evidently aware of the real position of Oceanas, which should be bought. P. S. B.—I subsequently advised the clearing of a profit in Poormans, which you could have done. The decline, however, is due only to the general depression. You should hold New Primrose for a recovery, also Day Dawn P.C. Bunker.—The depression in the Mining market alone is answerable for the decline in the shares referred to. You should hold all the shares No. 1-12, if you can, for a recovery, as they are well selected. Zoutpansberg will eventually touch much higher prices. Hold, and buy more to average. I do not recommend purchase of the Land shares last mentioned by you. The making-up prices were again put very low by the dealers. Stace, Brockley.—Yes, both the South African Companies are very promising as a speculative investment. Little Chathams will probably recover when speculation revives. Militia.—The new issue was made at a price considerably above the present one, and I suppose the interest was paid so as to secure its being placed. But I agree with you that this action of the Board requires explanation. A. P.—The whole of this department is depressed, and there is no option but to hold for a recovery, which, I am informed, is certain to come about, there being no reason for the fall. I will do my best to obtain further information. Bovine.—Under the circumstances it will be preferable to hold, but not to buy more yet. A recovery in both Mines may, however, be looked for. Amongst the thirteen Mines mentioned, Nos. 1, 3, 6, and 12 are the most promising for a small sum. L. A. C.—1. I will make further inquiries. 2. No catch. 3. Caratals are a low-priced and very promising Mining share, likely to advance to higher prices. 4. The Financial News. Red Cross.—Yes, Zoutpansberg Land shares are extremely cheap, and should be picked up. They will at least double their price in a short time.

Industrial Companies.

Avalon.—You will find some comment on this Land Company under "Various Investments." Z. Y. X.—I have advocated the sale of these Dock securities for some time, and should advise you to sell on any possible improvement. Avalon.—You will find the Middlesbrough Town Lands Company referred to under "Various Investments." Leatherhead.—The report is certainly favourable, and I believe that a recovery in these Brewery shares is fully justified. The Board do not appear to give the shareholders information early enough. Puzzled, Cardiff. —This is an old dodge; have nothing to do with it. Laurels.—After the heavy fall, and in view of the general depression, I think you had better hold both shares in the hope of a recovery. Secretariat.—Thanks, I do not consider the Electric shares in question a promising investment just now. T. O. W.—You do not state what the amount of your holding is. The affair has a suspicious look, and I think you had better do nothing. The remedy is clearly against the underwriters. The certificates of the Mining shares ought to have been delivered to you by now, although the reconstruction may have caused some delay.

Mixed Investments.

Paterfamilias.—In your position you ought to be satisfied with the present yield of your sound securities, and not to go into speculative stocks. Dubious.—1. Yes, these bonds are cheap and worth buying to a moderate extent. 2. Not yet. 3. Very speculative at present, but if you can lock them up for some time, you might average. 4. No, other cheap Gold Mining shares, such as Buffelsdoorn, Glencairns, or Kimberley Roodepoort, would be preferable. 6. I think you have no option but to consent. Grange.—I do not think that you can do better than buy Louisville and Nashville shares. If you want a good dividend-paying Mining share, New Primrose or Nigels should suit you. Perse. Certainly hold 1 (Peruvian Corporation Debentures), and buy more to average. I am afraid prospects of No. 2 are not satisfactory; hold 3, it is a sound investment. Nos. 4 and 7 will no doubt recover again. This is hardly the time to sell 6, and with respect to No. 5, I cannot obtain any reliable information. A. C. Yes, the proposed little Trust of De Beers, Louisville and Nashville, Uruguay bonds, and Caratals would be very suitable. The latter shares can be bought freely in the market, but you should buy at once. C. A. C. You should hold No. 1; there is nothing in the rumour mentioned by you. As soon as the Chilian exchange recovers there will be a marked improvement. 2. Premature reports. Both Pacena and Jaz Pampa and Nitrate Rails are doing well, and should be held. 3. Do not average yet. E. N. M. No reason to sell the American and other Railway bonds. Hold also Chilians, Buenos Ayres and Rosario Debentures, Great Northern Preferred, and the rest of the stocks. The Trust shares are not very promising, but a recovery is not improbable. When that comes about, sell. With regard to the Australian Company, I do not see how I can help you. I have warned my readers against this kind of investment for years.

The Oriental Pension and Guarantee Fund.

With reference to the letter which appeared in last week's issue from a correspondent, who claimed to speak in the name of the shareholders in the Oriental Pension and Guarantee Fund, I have received the following communication from the solicitors to the liquidators.

3, Abchurch-lane, London, E.C.,
August 3, 1893.

We notice in the article in your paper of the 2nd inst reference made to the Oriental Pension and Guarantee Fund, Limited, in which you accept the representation of a correspondent, and state that he appears to have a very serious grievance. As no application has ever been made by the shareholders, and, as probably the gentleman who is writing to you has never made any inquiry himself, we think it is only fair, on behalf of the liquidators, that the short facts should be stated. The Fund was formed by contributions from the members who hold stock in respect of such contributions and the interest thereon. There also was a further fund built up by the premiums that had been paid upon the guarantee policies. The policies of guarantee expired in September, 1892, but provision was made by these policies for the funds to be held in hand for twelve months, in order to enable the liquidators of the bank to make necessary inquiries and claims. On November 8, 1892, the Guarantee fund went into voluntary liquidation, and immediately thereupon every member of the Fund received the full amount that he had subscribed to the Fund and for which he held stock.

The remaining funds could not be divided because of certain legal questions that were raised by persons who were members, or had been members, of the fund, and a summons was at once taken out for the purpose of having these questions cleared up. The difficulties were communicated to the stockholders, and it was not until August 1 that this summons was finally decided by Mr. Justice Kekewich, and upon his decision immediate steps will be taken to complete the division.

In lieu, therefore, of the stockholders having anything to complain of, they have had the full amount contributed by them, and every effort has been made to hasten the division of the property as much as possible, and the Liquidator of the New Oriental Bank has waived his right of retainer. We may mention that the articles were so drawn as to raise very numerous legal questions.—Yours, &c.,
Foss & Ledsam.
Solicitors for the Liquidators.

Having made some further inquiries, I have come to the conclusion that there is no reason for complaint on the part of those interested in the fund at the action of the liquidators, who are three former employés of the New Oriental Bank, acting on behalf of their confrères, and my correspondent will therefore have to withdraw his criticism. The amount of £7,148 has been divided amongst the stockholders, and now that Mr. Justice Kekewich has given his decision, the final division of the remaining £13,337 will be made. Had not the articles been drawn in a very awkward manner by the then solicitors, much of the trouble and delay would have been avoided.

Various Investments.

Silver has improved to the extent of about 1d. during the week, being quoted 33½d., but this has been rather owing to the continued shutting up of silver mines, and to a moderate demand for the metal for the East, than to Mr. Balfour's appearance at the Mansion House in the interest of bi-metallism. In my opinion Mr. Balfour has made a double mistake. As a political party leader it did not become him to champion so prominently a cause upon which his own party is very much divided, while bi-metallism in this country is so forlorn a hope that even Mr. Balfour's eloquence cannot establish it. The speech was more especially mischievous on the eve of the meeting of the United States Congress for the express purpose of repealing the Sherman Bill, as it might create an impression amongst the American silver men that there was a chance of England backing them up, which is, emphatically, not the case. Rupee paper has hardly undergone any change during the week, but Australian Government stocks have hardened, and if this improvement should continue, large holders of these will get an opportunity of realising, without loss, at least part of their holding, so as to reduce their risk. That I consider advisable, as further spasms in Australasia are quite on the cards in view of the unsettled condition of trade, and of the likelihood of further mercantile failures. The shares of the three Australian Banks which have weathered the storm have improved, which is satisfactory. The Eastern Banks continue protesting against the treatment accorded to them by the Government in the matter of their silver exports to India before the closing of the Indian Mints, and I must confess that they have a very good case as regards the silver afloat at the time when the momentous decision of the India Council was so suddenly taken. Mexican Rails are again on the down grade notwithstanding the better tendency of silver. The fact is that the recent improvement to 61 in the case of the First Prefs. was entirely due to "Bear" repurchases, and as these have now apparently been completed for the present, a reaction has set in. Trustees and Executors shares have improved to 4 discount now that the Standard's story concerning an alleged new issue of Second Debentures is exploded. The passing of the interim dividend by the Salt Union and the consequent fall in these shares to 3½ lends force to my repeated remarks concerning this Company, and those who have cleared out on my advice have reason to congratulate themselves. Ever since the formation of the Company I have expressed the view that this monopoly would not answer, and events have justified the strong view which I have taken. The English shareholders of the Middlesbrough Town Lands Company who attended the extraordinary general meeting on Friday heard a very sorrowful tale from the President. Having gone in for the formation of subsidiary Companies at a very inopportune moment, the Company, in order to keep afloat, has to create a mortgage on the whole of its property for the sum of £75,000, the debentures being offered to the shareholders. Whether the latter will respond seems more than doubtful. There appears to have been a great want of forethought in the financing of this concern.—Your affectionate uncle, MOSES.

All Rights Reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

THE DISCIPLE AND HIS MASTER.

"I SHALL probably return by the 6.30 train this evening," said Mr. Sloman to his pupil, as they parted at the railway station; "but if by chance I am unexpectedly detained at the British Museum, I shall be back for certain by the 9.15."

"Very good, sir," replied young Lord Dreux, turning away with a smile which was reflected on the countenance of his tutor.

They were both of them inclined to take a cheerful view of life that morning, and each went his way with the gratifying conviction that he had succeeded in making a fool of the other. Charles Algernon Alston, Viscount Dreux, had for some time given great anxiety to his noble parents. His general conduct was highly unbecoming, and he appeared quite regardless of all that was expected of him as heir to an ancient earldom and bearer of a name to which a long line of ancestors had imparted a certain cachet of respectability. His expulsion from school and his subsequent rustication at college had deeply mortified his relations, while his idleness and extravagance caused them the keenest distress. But their uneasiness grew into positive alarm when they became aware of his deplorable taste for low company, and were informed of the persistence with which he frequented questionable places of amusement. A vague but disquieting rumour had reached their ears that he was falling under the influence of some feminine member of the dramatic profession, though they were unable to obtain definite information on this point. Had they done so, they would have found that things were even worse than they supposed, for the young lady for whom Viscount Dreux had formed a penchant was no other than Miss Florrie Flitters, the music-hall celebrity, whose characteristic rendering of the popular ditty, "Catch 'em on the Hop," was nightly applauded with frantic delight by her numerous admirers. It was decided that a vigorous effort should be made to keep him out of mischief, at any rate during the few remaining months of his minority. With this object he was placed under the charge of the Rev. Nicodemus Sloman, his father hoping thus to postpone, if not to prevent, the sowing of a crop of wild oats which would certainly be some day reaped in shame and sorrow.

But in making this arrangement for young Dreux, the old recommendation, "Set a thief to catch a thief," had been unintentionally put into practice. The tutor was altogether unworthy of the confidence reposed in him, and there was a very wide difference between Mr. Sloman as he really was, and Mr. Sloman as he appeared to the world. He had formerly filled the post of domestic chaplain in several aristocratic families, where his plausible manners and gentlemanly appearance had always created a favourable impression. In fact, he was generally taken at his own valuation wherever he went, and many excellent people had the highest opinion of him. He had but recently returned from abroad to settle in a picturesque village in Surrey. Here, he said, he intended to devote his time chiefly to literature, and he had already commenced the opening chapters of an exhaustive work on the "Shepherd Kings." The preparation of this book, he explained, would necessitate repeated visits to the British Museum, and he had chosen his present residence in order that he might be within convenient reach of London. But Mr. Sloman, in his excursions to town, was wont to combine with the small proportion of work which he talked about, a comparatively large share of amusement which he thought it unnecessary to mention. While supposed to be poring over mummies or deciphering inscriptions, he was more frequently enjoying the society of certain light-hearted acquaintances, who were hardly fit companions for a person of his age and position.

It will thus be seen that Mr. Nicodemus Sloman was scarcely the most suitable "guide, philosopher, and friend" that might have been selected for Lord Dreux. But whatever commandments the tutor's elastic conscience may have permitted him to break through, he had always rigidly obeyed that unwritten law which decrees, "Thou shalt not be found out."

Now, Mr. Sloman was a widower, and he had an only daughter, who earned her living as a governess in Germany. No sooner had he obtained some insight into the character of his new pupil than he began to reflect what an admirable thing it would be if he could but manage to bring about a marriage between the Viscount and this young woman. Unfortunately, there were difficulties in his path, and he did not exactly see how they were to be overcome. He could not summon his daughter home, for such a proceeding as this would at once rouse the suspicions of the Earl and Countess. They would not dream of permitting their son to remain in a house where a pretty girl was continually at his elbow. They would at once remove him, and in so doing they would only be obeying the dictates of common sense, since from time immemorial it has been the custom of young fellows to fall in love with their tutor's daughter. Under these circumstances, Mr. Sloman had written to his beloved child, explaining to her the ambitious project which he had ventured to form for her settlement in life, and pointing out the obstacles that seemed destined to prevent its fulfilment. In reply he had received a touching assurance of the most filial anxiety to further his wishes in every possible way, together with a suggestion which was both startling and audacious. Mr. Sloman was compelled to admit his daughter to be his superior in fertility of resource, and he thankfully acknowledged that the pains which he had bestowed on her education and training had certainly not been thrown away.

Two hours after the tutor's departure for London his hopeful pupil might have been found in the drawing-room of a pretty cottage on the outskirts of the village, where dwelt a lady with whom Lord Dreux had recently made acquaintance. Miss Nancy Bell, as she called herself, was possessed of considerable personal attractions, and a very short space of time had sufficed to put the young people on a remarkably friendly footing. Indeed, the Viscount professed himself to be her warm admirer, and he seized the opportunity to call on her whenever his tutor's back was turned. To say the truth, there was not much difficulty about this, for Mr. Sloman rarely made any inquiry as to the direction in which his pupil took his walks abroad.

"And where's the old Johnnie this morning?" inquired Miss Nancy Bell.

"Gone to the British Museum," answered Dreux; "so the coast is clear."

"Ah!" she replied, "that's all very well for to-day. But I have been considering matters carefully, and I've come to the conclusion that this sort of thing won't do."

"What sort of thing?" he added.

"Why, your coming here so constantly, you know. Of course, I needn't tell you that I'm delighted to see you, but if you don't look out you'll do it once too often. Some well-disposed person will give a hint to Mr. Sloman, and then he will never let you out of his sight."

"Why should anybody bother to tell him?" said Dreux. "He is a newcomer here himself, and you and I are both total strangers to the inhabitants. Who would have anything to get by telling tales?"

"Oh," she answered, "wherever one goes, there are plenty of people quite ready to make mischief. No, it's too risky, my dear boy, and for your sake it is necessary to be prudent. So I have made up my mind, and I am going to London almost immediately to stay with a friend."

"Is this a polite way of pointing out that you are bored to death with me?" he asked sulkily.

"I?" exclaimed Miss Nancy. "How can you be so unfeeling and so ungrateful when I am putting myself to the greatest inconvenience entirely in your interests?"

"It's very kind of you," he replied, "but I assure you I'm quite capable of looking after myself."

"I don't doubt it for a moment," she said, "but it is as well to be on the safe side. I dare say you have had more than enough of this dull place, and you can easily get a fortnight's leave from your tutor. Then you will come up to London and we shall meet again there. You will be out of reach of Mr. Sloman, and we can have a real good time."

"I wish to goodness I could get up to town," said Dreux, disconsolately, "but the governor has taken care to prevent that. He has given old Sloman a list containing the names and addresses of certain people, and, unless I am invited to stay with one of them, the orders are that I'm to go nowhere at all. Of course, the governor knew beforehand that it's a thousand to one against any of them inviting me to stay. My relations are not so keen to have the pleasure of my company, I can tell you."

"Oh, but that is a difficulty which we can arrange quite simply," answered Miss Nancy. "You have only to give me the rough draft of a note of invitation from one of these people, and I will copy it and post it in London. How is your tutor to know whether the letter is genuine or not?"

"By Jove! that's a bright idea," observed Dreux. "I'll write it out at once if you can find me a piece of paper."

Writing materials were quickly produced, and the Viscount hastily scribbled a few lines of pressing invita-

THE MALVERN HILLS.—Most delightful of English Watering-places. Air pure, dry, invigorating. Lowest death-rate (certified), pure water, perfect sanitation. Matchless scenery, charming walks and drives, hunting, golf. Frequently visited by Royalty tion, which he addressed to himself and concluded with the signature of one of his maiden aunts. The feelings of the lady in question may be dimly imagined could she but have known how her graceless nephew was taking her name in vain. Miss Nancy Bell put the document in her pocket.

"Then we may consider that settled," she said. "You will be sure to come?" she added, with a pause of momentary uncertainty.

"Sure to come?" he repeated. "After being shut up for three months in a hole like this, do you think the prospect of a fortnight in town isn't attractive enough in itself, to say nothing of seeing the prettiest and jolliest girl in the world there?"

"So you are pleased with my plan?" she asked coquettishly.

"I should think so," he replied with enthusiasm. "There is only one woman on earth whom I really care to see, and since you are giving me the chance of that, I feel I'm the luckiest fellow alive."

It was a curious thing that as Mr. Sloman walked home from the station that evening he should happen to come across Miss Nancy Bell in a secluded lane. It was still more singular that the two did not meet as strangers.

"Well," asked the Rev. Nicodemus, "how are you getting on?"

"Splendidly," was the answer, in tones of unmistakable triumph. "Everything has been decided. I am going to London at once, and he is to follow directly afterwards. You may safely bet every shilling you are worth that at the end of a fortnight I shall come back as Viscountess Dreux."

"Do you think a fortnight is long enough?" inquired Mr. Sloman.

"In my opinion it will be ample time," she said. "But of course, if I find that it isn't, he will have to write to you for extension of leave."

"Exactly," he assented. "You will let me hear how things go?"

"I'll let you hear pretty quickly if anything goes wrong," she returned. "But in a case like this the less one writes the better. So you will understand, if you please, that 'no news means good news,' as they say."

"Very well," he said. "I suppose you are certain of him?"

"Quite," she answered, emphatically. "He is head over ears in love with me, and the thing is really as good as done."

"I congratulate you, my dear," said Mr. Sloman, with heartiness, "You have managed the whole affair to perfection, and you certainly deserve your success. His father and mother will make themselves disagreeable, but you mustn't mind that."

"Of course they will be nasty; but what if they are?" she answered, "Very likely they will say unpleasant things about you when they know everything, and you may have to go abroad again."

"I shall be the last to complain in that case," he said. "I am quite willing to make any reasonable sacrifice for your sake. Do you want any more money?"

"Not yet, thanks; I have plenty to go on with."

"Then we will part company for the present," said Mr. Sloman. "It is as well to avoid observation just now, and somebody might happen to see us together, so good-bye."

"Au revoir," replied the young lady carelessly, and the Reverend Nicodemus walked on towards his dwelling, rejoicing in the conviction that, although in this instance, he had been at some trouble and expense to cast his bread upon the waters, it was coming back buttered with as little delay as possible.

A few days later Lord Dreux, with a perfectly grave face, announced that he had just received an invitation to stay with his aunt. He presented the letter for his tutor's inspection, and Mr. Sloman, in a becomingly serious manner, granted him permission to accept his relative's proffered hospitality. Having thus performed to their own satisfaction their respective parts in this little comedy, pupil and tutor shortly afterwards exchanged a cordial farewell. The Viscount went off to London exulting in his newly-won liberty, and congratulating himself on having so easily befooled the simple-minded divine. Mr. Sloman remained in the country to continue his literary labours, and to chuckle at intervals over the guileless fashion in which young Dreux had rushed headlong into the trap that had been laid for him.

The time wore slowly away. The Reverend Nicodemus heard not a word either from his pupil or from the enchantress who had bewitched him. In spite of himself, Mr. Sloman was beginning to grow anxious. He had been assured that silence would mean success, and he felt confident that whatever Lord Dreux might be doing, he must still be unremitting in his attentions to Miss Nancy Bell, otherwise she would have written to complain of his conduct. Nevertheless, Mr. Sloman would have been glad of definite information. He was fearful lest any untoward event might occur to mar everything. If Dreux, for instance, should happen accidentally to run against one of his relations in London, some awkward questions might be asked, and unpleasant explanations would probably ensue. On the whole, however, the tutor thought there was but little chance of this. The shooting season was at its best, and the Viscount's noble relatives were mostly in the country, absorbed in the slaughter of pheasants. Should any of the family by ill-luck turn up at this inconvenient moment, Mr. Sloman felt with relief that he himself would be perfectly safe. He had given Lord Dreux permission to stay with his aunt, and for doing this no blame could be attached to him. If the Viscount had thought proper to deceive him, and to go elsewhere, he would naturally plead utter ignorance of the fact.

He was well pleased to have his doubts and misgivings at length set at rest, by the arrival one evening of a letter addressed in his pupil's well-known handwriting. He could scarcely control his anxiety, as he hastily tore open the envelope, but uncertainty was speedily changed to rejoicing when he had mastered the contents of the following note:—

Hôtel Métropole, Thursday.

DEAR SIR,—I write to inform you that I was married this morning. Perhaps you will think I have taken rather a hasty step, but I can assure you this is not the case. I have not yet told my people anything; I am afraid it will be rather a shock to them at first, especially to my father and mother. But I feel sure that when they come to know my wife, they cannot fail to love and admire her. I should be exceedingly grateful if you would kindly give me your advice as to the best way of breaking the news to them. I fear there will be some unpleasantness, but it would be a great advantage for me if they could be brought to see the matter in a reasonable light. They ought to know that I am the best judge of what constitutes my own happiness. You have always shown me so much kindness that I hope you will help me now if you can. Trusting you will forgive me for all the trouble and anxiety I have caused you, believe, me yours truly, DREUX.

Mr. Sloman was alone in his dining-room and about to sit down to dinner when the above communication was put into his hands. As there was nobody present to be scandalised by its effect on him, he may be pardoned for giving vent to his feelings without any constraint.

"Victory!" he exclaimed, flourishing the missive above his head. "I have played for a high stake, and won it."

Then he went to the sideboard and mixed himself an unusually stiff tumbler of whiskey and soda, which he drank to the health of the bride and bridegroom. This done, he left his dinner untasted, and went straight into his study to compose and dispatch his reply without loss of time. Lord Dreux duly received it the next morning:—

East Muggleton, Thursday night.

DEAR DREUX.—Your letter has just come to hand, and has occasioned me the greatest astonishment and consternation. I need hardly point out that you have acted in a most inexcusable manner, and have shown a total want of consideration for the feelings of your parents. Your marriage will undoubtedly be a terrible blow to them, and you cannot expect to escape from the consequences of their very just and natural resentment. I will say nothing here of your dishonourable conduct towards myself. Earnestly as I had looked forward to better things from you, I wish to keep my own regret and disappointment completely in the background. I trust you are beginning to realise the extent of your wrong-doing, and that you will endeavour to make your future conduct atone in some measure for the pain you have inflicted on all who take a sincere interest in your welfare. While condemning, in the strongest terms, your heartless behaviour to your relations, I am still willing to make due allowance for the impulsiveness of youth. I will therefore come to London to-morrow, and will call on you at the Métropole, in order that I may personally advise you as to the course you should pursue. For the sake of your parents, with whom I deeply sympathise, I would gladly do whatever is possible to soften the shock of this disastrous intelligence.—Yours truly,

RATIONAL DOG FEEDING.—Give wholesome and nutritious food (Spratt's Patent Meat Fibrine Dog Cakes). Do not give tit-bits and dainties because your dog, like a spoilt child, prefers what suits his palate. See that the Dog Cakes are stamped "Spratt's Patent" and a "×," as cheap and innutritious imitations are often substituted for extra profit. Pamphlet on Canine Diseases post free, SPRATT'S PATENT, Limited, Bermondsey, London.

NICODEMUS SLOMAN.

Mr. Sloman was as good as his word, and went up to London the following day. He began to find that he was getting nervous as he approached the temporary abode of his pupil; but he was in unusually good spirits notwithstanding, and felt that when once this somewhat awkward interview was over he should have little left in life to wish for. "She has done it cleverly—very cleverly indeed," he reflected. "He is such a young ass himself that it's really a fortunate thing for him to have married a woman with brains enough for both."

The expected meeting was not destined to take place just yet, however, for Mr. Sloman was informed, on inquiry, that Lord and Lady Dreux had gone out, and were not likely to return till between six and seven o'clock. He therefore left a message to the effect that he would call again, and decided that in the meantime he would occupy himself, first of all, by securing a room for the night. He accordingly bent his steps to the same house which Miss Nancy Bell had made her headquarters in town—this being a place where he was well known, and had often stayed before.

The first person he encountered on ascending the staircase was Miss Nancy Bell herself, and, as may be imagined, the astonishment was mutual.

"Good Heavens! What are you doing here?" he cried.

"What on earth has brought you up to London?" she exclaimed.

It was impossible to proceed with the necessary explanations on the staircase, so the lady dragged him without ceremony into her sitting-room, where she repeated her question.

"Why, of course, I'm here in consequence of young Dreux's marriage," he said.

"Marriage?" she cried; "you don't mean to tell me he's married?"

"What?" he said, aghast, "hasn't he married you?"

"Not he!" she replied. "I begin to think," she continued furiously, "that he never had the slightest intention of it."

Mr. Sloman gave a kind of gasp. He opened his mouth as though to answer, but consternation had temporarily deprived him of the power of speech.

"I understand it all now," she went on. "That pupil of yours is very far from being the idiot we supposed him, and he has simply used me as a blind to cover his goings on with somebody else. He has come to see me every day and taken me about to different places of amusement, yet all the while he has been playing his own game and laughing at me in his sleeve. I got a hint yesterday morning from a friend of mine, that he had been seen several times in company with a girl whom he admired long before he was put under your charge. Unfortunately, I didn't believe there was any truth in the rumour."

"Well," said Mr. Sloman, "you seem to have made a mess of it altogether, and you have only yourself to thank for your infernal stupidity. Now you will have to clear out, and you must go as soon as possible."

"Of course I shall go," she answered. "I shall return to Germany at once. But it's all your fault from beginning to end, papa. At your age you ought to be a better judge of character."

Mr. Sloman rallied his scattered senses, and tried to pull himself together. He had some vague idea that it would be expedient to make the best of a bad business, and he therefore went back to the Métropole a little later.

Lord Dreux professed himself delighted to welcome his tutor.

"How do you do, sir?" he said, heartily. "It was awfully good of you to come and see us at once. Let me introduce you to Lady Dreux—not that it's exactly necessary I think, for she tells me you know her already."

The Reverend Nicodemus stepped forward with a bow, but the words of greeting died away upon his lips as he found himself face to face with Miss Florrie Flitters, of music-hall celebrity.

"Oh, Mr. Sloman," she said, sweetly, "how delightful to meet an old friend like yourself! Of course you'll stay and dine with us?"

MUSIC.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

IT has for the past few years been the absurd custom of our music managers to crowd seventy or eighty concerts a week into June or early July, and to leave August and September practically musicless. I dare say something of a similar sort would have happened this year were it not for the fact that the Royal Marriage happily killed the concert season early in July, and that a new man has arisen to resume the Promenade Concerts in early August. Mr. F. Sinkins was originally a singer in the choir of Exeter Cathedral, but he came up to London a few years since as a concert agent. At first I fear he did not set the town ablaze, a fact which he may perhaps attribute to the dulness of the London intellect; while others may recollect that whatever it may be in the West Countree, there is a strong objection here to paying threepence or anything else for concert programmes. Now, however, Mr. Sinkins, feeling his feet, has launched out, and with a spirit which does him credit. He has taken Covent Garden for a certain period at a rent, I learn, of £190 a week plus the salaries of certain members of the permanent staff. He, moreover, has engaged a band for five weeks certain, with Mr. Betjemann as leader and Mr. Cowen as conductor, and he has likewise retained several well-known artists, such as Mesdames Ella Russell, Marie Roze, Valda, Palliser, Duma, Thudichum, McKenzie, Belle Cole, Swiatlowski, Hilda Wilson, and Nettie Carpenter; Messrs. Ben Davis, Dufriche, Piercy, Houghton, Black, Bispham, Oudin, Slivinski, Fry, Wolff, and Ysaye. Miss S. Jones, an American singer, who calls herself "The Black Patti"—a ridiculous name which she would do well to drop—will appear, and an engagement has also been accepted by Mr. Sims Reeves (whose "thankful, final, and grateful farewell" took place in May, 1891, at the Albert Hall, when Mr. Irving delivered a very touching valedictory address) to sing at a dozen more (and more or less absolute) farewells, at a lump sum of £1,000. He has also offered another veteran, Madame Patey, a fresh engagement prior to her last farewell, and he has conceived the extraordinary idea of producing M. Saint-Saëns' Biblical opera, "Samson et Dalila," as an oratorio in French.

The Covent Garden audience need not be timorous about "Samson et Dalila;" for unless they have some objection to the inclusion in oratorio of dances by the Priestesses of Dagon (Dalila at their head) in the Philistine Temple, they are not at all likely to be shocked. M. Saint-Saëns has even dispensed with the jawbone of the ass, a fable which to so excellent a Hebrew scholar would be sufficiently nonsensical. An eminent Divine has strongly insisted that at Lehi (Anglicè "Jawbone") at the summit of the hill called Chamor (Anglicè "The Ass") the Samson of the Israelities detached a boulder of the rock, and, rolling it down the mountain, killed many Philistines. In the days of William Tell, the Swiss at the battle of Morgarten performed a similar feat against the soldiery of Leopold of Austria. M. Saint-Saëns, however, makes his hero pluck the sword from the Philistine chief and kill him; but Samson is afterwards captivated by Nautch dancers, and by the singing and allurements of Dalila, until, in the last act, he is bound in prison, his hair, as is suitable to a prisoner, being cut short. The fact that Dalila is actuated by wholly patriotic motives, and merely proposes by her skill as a coiffeuse to save her native city of Gaza, may be accepted as an example of the history of Samson written up to date.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. Restores the colour. Renews the growth. Arrests the fall. Cleanses the scalp.

The Americans have an idea that no singer has any real right to pose as a great prima donna until, at least once, she has been the victim of a jewel robbery. Madame Nordica has long been recognised as a popular prima donna in this country; but in American eyes the fact that she had never suffered a jewel robbery was against her. I hope, therefore, I may congratulate Madame upon the fact that her diamond brooch, valued by the singer at £250, was supposed to be missing from the drawing room at Osborne. From Osborne and the Medina Hotel messengers were, however, sent, and on the morrow the missing brooch, I am delighted to learn, was found in the Royal drawing-room. Whether Madame Nordica is in the habit of taking off her brooch when she begins to sing, or whether the full power of her splendid voice sent the trinket flying, is not disclosed, and, perhaps, we may take with a pinch of salt the Daily telegraphese of the statement that "She gave the alarm instantly, the House was filled with policemen" (I wonder how many policemen it would take to "fill" Osborne House), "and the utmost excitement prevailed." Had it been so, for a moment the Crown of England might have trembled in the balance.

Madame Patti will leave Liverpool on October 28, for her farewell visit to the United States. This "farewell" does not in any way imply that the great prima donna intends to retire into private life, and, indeed, her arrangements with Messrs. Harrison for her tours in this country even now extend to 1895. But Madame Patti does not propose to revisit America after the present tour, which will consist of forty concerts in all the great cities of the Union, from New York to San Francisco, and from November 9 to mid-April. Almost every concert will include an act from one of the favourite operas of the Patti repertory, sung in costume; and, before the season closes, Signor Pizzi's new one-act opera will be produced. Signor Nicolini will accompany Madame Patti on the Lucania, but most of the members of the troupe, which include Madame Fabbri, MM. Lely, Novara, Galassi, Marcheroni, and Arditi, will sail by the Paris from Southampton on the same day.

Somebody has written an elaborate analytical notice of Dr. Stanford's "Veiled Prophet," with particulars of many of the leading motives. In the prelude two of them, it seems, represent the veil. How on earth I, or any other music-lover, could possibly suppose that these two subjects were typical of the absurd piece of muslin which Signor Ancona wore over his nose perhaps somebody will explain. There is also a theme of Daybreak and another of Universal Love. Things of this sort ought to be labelled. Only the other day a musical impressionist talked of a certain phrase as being typical of Revenge, when it proved merely to be the awakening of nature in the forest.

For the veil worn by the false prophet at Covent Garden, however, Signor Ancona was, I believe, personally responsible. It was certainly not the thing which either composer or librettist desired, and the idea seems to have been borrowed from a lady's "fall." Nor, of course, do the stage directions indicate that the tenor hero should go to sleep with his chin resting on one hand, while airily-clad girls are dancing round him, and a sweet-voiced damsel is singing at him. These and other absurdities will doubtless disappear when the opera is revived next year; and they will further point to the unwisdom of producing an important work at the fag end of the season, when adequate stage rehearsals are impossible.

Mr Norfolk Megone again this season has the direction of the orchestra at Devonshire Park, Eastbourne, the members being selected from the best London concert orchestras, with Mr. Joseph Harman, of Hallé's Manchester band, as leader. Two performances will be given daily until the end of the season in October, and Thursdays in each week are "classical" nights.

The Liverpool Town Council have adopted the very happy idea of setting aside, out of the money devoted to technical education, a sum for the proper training of school teachers, and particularly those engaged in Board and elementary schools. There are, according to Sir John Stainer, about three millions of children in the United Kingdom earning the grant of a shilling a head a year for singing music at sight; but, although the youngsters may be good readers, it is very rare that attention is paid to their voice production, so that in many cases the voice is ruined before the adult age is reached. The scholarships now founded at the Liverpool Music School will enable school teachers themselves to be taught the very useful art of voice production, and the effect upon the rising generation is likely to be great.

Mr. David Baptie has just collected, and is passing through the press, a series of biographies of no fewer than 1,100 Scottish musicians. The book, of course, goes back to the early part of the fifteenth century, when James I. of Scotland was a notable musician, and, says a chronicler, "His truly excellent composition, 'At Beltayne or Peblis,' is still held in high esteem," although, unluckily, it is now lost. Later on in the fifteenth century, John Broun, a lutare or lute player, had seven oxen for a music lesson, while the "twa fithelaris," or fiddlers, who sang "Graysteil" before James IV., received three sheep. If Madame Patti had lived in those days, she might easily have collected enough stock to open a butcher's shop.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—Messrs. Methuen, in their advertisements of what, to my thinking, is an admirable novel, "Dodo," (1) sarcastically print in parallel columns conflicting notices of the story. It is droll, certainly, to read strophe and anti-strophe as thus:—

> The story is told with charming grace and considerable power, whilst the dialogue is a perpetual feast of epigram and paradox.—Speaker.
>
> "Dodo" is a delightfully witty sketch of the smart people of society. The writer is a showman with keen insight and sympathy, and he is a true artist.—Spectator.

> A hopelessly commonplace story of a heartless and wholly frivolous woman.—Whitehall Review.
>
> We cannot remember to have met a more unpleasant person than Dodo. She swore like a trooper, smoked like a furnace, and behaved like a cad. The author's style is almost as base as his heroine's.—Daily Chronicle.

Not less droll is the similar perplexity of the late Bishop of St. Andrew's, expressed in his preface to the second instalment of his autobiography—"Annals of my Life, 1847–1856" (2)—as to whether the first instalment was "a dull, heavy, straggling patchwork," as one critic pronounced it, or "written in such admirable English as should give it a place near the graphic narratives of Hume and Gibbon," as another wiseacre maintained; whether, again, his verses were, as one expert expresses it, "among the best things of their kind I have ever read," or, as another has it, so bad that it was a pity their baldness was not hidden under a Latin wig. But the explanation of this confusing conflict of expert evidence lies in the heading of Messrs. Methuen's advertisement of "Dodo": —"Contemporary Criticism." Critics are unanimous only about books which have received already the imprimatur of time or of some papal pronouncement; but about other books—as criticism in England is neither an art, a science, nor a profession—quot homines, tot sententiæ. On a new book by a new writer, opinions are as arbitrarily various as tastes, and are unanimous only and servilely, and often insincerely, about established reputations. With a

(1) "Dodo." By E. F. Benson. Two vols. (London: Methuen & Co.)
(2) "Annals of My Life." 1847—1856. By Charles Wordsworth, D.D., D.C.L. Edited by W. Earl Hodgson. (London: Longmans, Green, & Co.)
(3) "A History of Marlborough College during Fifty Years." From its Foundation to the Present Time. By A. G. Bradley, A. C. Champneys, and J. W. Baines. With numerous Illustrations. (London: John Murray.)
(4) "The Early Days of Marlborough College." By Edward Lockwood. Illustrated. (London: Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.)
(5) "A Short History of China." Being an account for the General Reader of an ancient Empire and People. By Charles Demetrius Boulger. (London: W. H. Allen & Co.)
(6) "Aurangzib." By Stanley Lane-Poole, B.A. "Rulers of India Series." (Oxford: at the Clarendon Press.)

débutant, reviewers go by their own judgments, and as Pope sings:—

> 'Tis with our judgments as our watches—none
> Go just alike; yet each believes his own.

When, however, time or some contemporary pope classes an author with the classics, then the critics, as Suckling sings, set their watches accordingly:—

> But as when an authentic watch is shown,
> Each man winds up and rectifies his own,
> So in our very judgments.

The Bishop of St. Andrews, however, who twice gave the casting vote for his own appointment to the see, was little likely to have been disconcerted by the hostile opinions he quotes in his preface, especially when "The Annals of My Life" read like a volume of printed testimonials of an applicant for a situation. No doubt there were people who, through what in Christian charity we may call invincible ignorance, did not take Dr. Wordsworth at his own valuation; but it is hardly fair to class Mr. Gladstone among these miscreants. When under Dr. Wordsworth's wardenship, Trinity College, Glenalmond, was foundering beneath a load of over £10,000 of debt, while, as he frankly admits, his broken health, and the distraction of numberless episcopal calls and claims, more than ever disqualified him to pilot the water-logged craft, Mr. Gladstone, it is true, advised or compelled his resignation. Why? Because the Bishop was a political opponent!

> I am afraid it must be said that Mr. Gladstone was not sorry to find in these pecuniary difficulties an occasion for suggesting the removal of the Warden, who, however, was in no degree responsible for them.

The head-master of a public school in no degree responsible for its commercial failure! And why? Because, as a note gravely informs you—

> It was a remarkable coincidence that other similar institutions, such as Radley and St. Columba's, in Ireland, fell into pecuniary difficulties, which involved a change in their administration about the same time.

Was Mr. Gladstone at the bottom of these administrative changes also? Surely the worthy Warden here stultifies himself? The commercial failure of Glenalmond adequately explains the call upon its overworked and broken-down Principal to resign; while an adequate explanation of this commercial failure itself might perhaps be found in the following sentence in the Warden's letter justifying some expulsions from the College:—

> However, it will be a satisfaction to you to know that all our trouble has arisen where we might have expected it, and nowhere else—i.e., from two schismatics and one Presbyterian, of all of whom we are now happily rid, one having been expelled, and the other two taken away; but how much mischief they may have done beforehand neither I nor anyone else can tell.

Fancy any modern school flourishing under such media-val management! While on the subject of public schools I must mention the excellent "History of Marlborough College"(3), a co-operative work produced in celebration of the jubilee of the school by Messrs. Bradley, Champneys, & Baines. I confess what fascinated me most in this history was the account of the frightful sufferings of the wretched children, shuttlecocked in the early days of the college between brutal boys and almost more brutal masters. In one account "Early Days of Marlborough College"(4)—you are told that "Occasionally two masters would be caning at the same time with the rhythm of blacksmiths hammering on an anvil." Do you remember Mr. Penley in one of his grotesque impersonations while being vigorously and simultaneously thumped by two aggrieved husbands, wistfully moaning, "I wish you'd toss for me!" Hardly less harrowing are Messrs. Bradley, Champneys, & Baines' account of the flaying alive in school of a poor child under a master's cane, and of his being kicked, cuffed, bled, and bullied diabolically out of school by the boys. It is a heart-sickening story, not only of the proverbial brutality of boys—

> As cruel as a schoolboy ere he grows
> To pity, more from ignorance than will,

but of the infernal tyranny of masters,

> When a master lost control over himself in his efforts to wring some note of pain from a peculiarly heroic victim; the former gave up exhausted, but the latter had to be consigned to the sick-room, where strips of his shirt were extracted from his lacerated back by the tender hands of Dr. Fergus.

What a comment upon

> Ingenuas didicisse fideliter artes
> Emollit mores, nec sinit esse feros, that the ferocity of the middle ages should linger latest in our public schools! However, you might fairly contend that the raison d'être of such schools is not the mere and discouraged accident of scholarship, but games; and surprising certainly is the fatuity of masters and managers, who, in these days of the abolition of privilege and the universal establishment of competition, do all they can to handicap their charges in the race of life. By the way, I have come upon in an interesting and, in view of the Siam imbroglio, an opportune book—"A Short History of China" (5)—a Chinese settlement of a difficulty arising out of their system of universal competitive examination, of which we have heard something at home. The Irish, it is said, get a disproportionate share of competitive appointments, owing to their superior quickness and precocity; and the Chinese solution of this difficulty, if applied here, would be a pressing of the principle of Home Rule to an extreme and unwelcome limit:—

> As all the honours were being carried off by students from the Southern Provinces, who were of quicker intelligence than those of the North, it seemed that in course of a short time all the posts would be held by them. Accordingly it was decreed that all competitors for literary honours should be restricted to their native districts.

I have left myself space only to mention the latest accession I have seen to the admirable "Rulers of India" Series—"Aurangzib" (6), by Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole.—Believe me, dear Mr. Wyndham, yours very sincerely,

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—It seems at least a month since I wrote to you last, so much that is novel and interesting having happened since then. I am writing this from The Hague, where we arrived in time for breakfast on Monday morning, having crossed from Harwich to the Hook on Sunday night. This new way saves the long, slow steaming up the Maas to Rotterdam, the rail taking only twenty-five minutes, while the boat requires an hour and a half. We had an excellent passage, the boat being a very good one, with hardly any perceptible motion. The gruesome preparations made by most of the passengers in the ladies' cabin for possible mal de mer rather frightened us, so we stayed on deck till the very last moment. It was quite lovely. The moon shone brightly on the water, and we passed quite close to several light-ships, and also to the bell-buoy, or whatever it is called, that is fastened out at sea opposite Dovercourt. It has the saddest sound, ringing out there all by itself, sometimes loud and sometimes low, and we were glad to get out of hearing of its sorrowful voice.

After spending most of the night on deck, Maud and I were rather dishevelled, as you may imagine, and it was agreeable to find spacious lavatories at the Hook, and an attendant who spoke English fairly well, though obviously Dutch. We produced our little bit of soap, put carefully in a corner of our hand-bag for this occasion, and enjoyed a refreshing application of cold water, while the Pater and Charlie passed our travelling bags through the Customs. We managed with very little to carry, which is always advisable on the Continent. Father and Charlie had one small portmanteau between them, while Maud and I managed with a very light valise, in which we had each a light skirt and a blouse, in addition to brushes, combs, and other necessaries. This saved all trouble of having the luggage registered, for we kept our bags with us both in train and steam boat, and economically used the trams instead of cabs. Consequently, our journey cost us very little. The buildings at the Hook are very spacious, covering quite an expanse of land. We breakfasted in the refreshment room, and very much enjoyed the delicious coffee after our night on board the boat. The train started at a quarter to seven, the carriages being most luxuriously upholstered in scarlet velvet and made so that travellers can pull out a pillow under the window and push up the dividing arm, thus being enabled to lie very comfortably at full length. As we passed along in the bright morning sunshine, the novelty of everything was enjoyable. We saw our boat steaming up the Maas, and soon left it far behind. The peasants in their blouses of Cambridge blue, the unknown large birds, and the frequent windmills, all gave us an exhilarating sense of the unusual. We got to the Hague at 7.30, and made our way to the Hotel Central by train, which starts from the Dutch railway and goes through the city. It is a very fine one, with large open squares and an abundance of fine trees on either side of the principal streets. We found the hotel very full, but after a short delay were given bed-rooms, and after getting rid of the dust of travel, we made our way to the breakfast-room. The head-waiter and the door-porter here both speak English very well, which is good for us, for not one of our party knew a single word of Dutch when we arrived. The chambermaids are all Dutch, and we could not get on at all with them, every attempt to make ourselves understood in French or German ending in a hearty laugh on our side and good-humoured smiles on theirs. However, we all sallied forth after breakfast, and our first purchase was a dictionary and a phrase-book. Both of these are for Dutch people learning English. None were to be had giving the two languages the other way about, so that we found ourselves provided with carefully minute instructions as to the pronunciation of our mother tongue, while we were left completely in the dark as to that of Dutch. We found that the chambermaids and shop-people of the lower grade pronounce g like k, t like d, and so on, but we are now able to understand them, and make ourselves understood. Dutch sounds very like infantile English sometimes. "Een kop koffie en brood en boter" sounds rather like a nursery request for coffee, bread and butter, does it not?

GLACIER is a substitute for stained glass, which has been before the public for nearly 15 years, and more appreciated to-day than ever before as a necessity for the decoration of windows. The list of houses, churches, mansions, public buildings, hotels, &c., that have had it, and the windows of which can be pointed to with pride as specimens of rich decoration, is well worth your perusal. The effect is as good and the price about one sixth to one twentieth of stained glass. To be had in every town in the kingdom from agents, or from the manufacturers and patentees, McCAW, STEVENSON, & ORR, LIMITED. Linenhall Works. Belfast.

When we started, we all resolved that we would carefully avoid sight-seeing, such as galleries, museums, cathedrals, &c., for we found when abroad before that these tired us out and took up all our time. Do you think us dreadful Goths for this decision? We have rigidly kept to it, and have not even seen Paul Potter's "Bull," except as photographed in the windows, nor have we any wish to make closer acquaintance with a peculiarly disagreeable masterpiece of Rembrandt also in the Gallery here, showing a doctor dissecting a corpse. All our time is spent at Scheveningen, which is quite the most delightful seaside place we have ever seen. We like it far better than Trouville. To get there, we have only to walk about a hundred yards from this hotel to the Rhenish railway station, opposite which is the starting-place of the electric trams. They run every five minutes. The fare to Scheveningen is 15 cents. (3d.), and we are about a quarter of an hour on the way. Arrived there on the first occasion, we looked in vain for the sea, but, following the other people up a steep, short hill, we soon heard the roar of the waves, and at the top came in sight of the wonderful sea. It was a new sensation. The Dunes, as the long, low sandhills are called, are sufficiently high to protect the houses from sight or sound of the sea. Behind these are miles of sand, stretching far on either hand, and along these come rolling in the great breakers, foaming over and over, even on the calmest days. The Kurhaus, a magnificent building on the top of the Dunes, as well as the hotels, in one of which the King and Queen of Saxony are at present staying. The sands are covered with hundreds of people, for this is the height of the season. The greater number of the people are seated in the "wind tools," as the high, hooded, wicker chairs are called here. There are hundreds of these, and the charge is 10 cents (2d.) from 7 o'clock to 12, also from 12 o'clock to 5, and another 10 cents from 5 to 9. There are tents which can be hired by the day, week, month, or season. Each has four chairs and a little table. The bathing machines are at either end of the populous part. Men and women bathe together, but there is very little swimming. They bob up and down and splash very much, with great laughing and fun. The place is a perfect Paradise for children. They build fortifications of sand ever so high, and surround them with a fosse into which the incoming tide may flow. Not only children, but grown up men and women join in this amusement, and it is funny to see parties of young men and girls busily at work making castles of sand and looking quite seriously intent upon the pastime.

It is perfectly lovely to sit in those great wicker arm-chairs and look now at the sea and then at the thousands of people who throng upon the sands, most of them well-dressed and belonging to the educated classes. It seems delightfully odd to hear them all talk and not know a single word that they say. Now and then a phrase sounds just like English and we look up with great interest, but only to find that it was an illusory momentary resemblance between the two languages. There are scores and scores of boy soldiers, probably cadets, upon the sands, their dark blue uniforms with orange facings and tassels on the shoulders brightening up the crowd. They all wear swords, some of them of a very businesslike length, others short like toy swords and hung on to the right shoulder with gilt chains. We have seen several flourishing flirtations, many of them diligently prosecuted on the front of the electric trams where it is quite the fashionable place to stand with the driver. Such is the competition for this position that it is often quite difficult for passengers to get in or out among the press of people. On the beach there are small boys in sailor dress who carry about iced lemon squashes on metal trays, the charge for which is 6 cents, a little over a penny. We could not get anything of the sort in England for that price, could we? Opposite the Kurhaus there are planks arranged down to the sea, or rather high-water mark, and on either side of these are booths or stalls where fruit, cakes, lemonade, delft, and shell boxes are sold. Some of the sellers speak English, but we now begin to make ourselves understood in Dutch.

The money is a little confusing at first, but when once it is impressed clearly upon the brain that six guilders are half-a-sovereign, and that three are five shillings, it is easy enough. We are taking home a complete set of Dutch silver and bronze coins: a large one like our crown, worth 2½ guilders, a guilder or florin, value 1s. 7¾d., a 25-cent. piece, and a 10-cent. piece. In bronze we have a 2½-cent. piece, a 1-cent., and a tiny little baby piece worth half a cent.

There is a large café restaurant attached to this hotel, and there we dine in the evenings. There is a high glass roof, and it is almost like being in the open air, the front of the café being open to the street. Lots of people come in to lunch and dine, and there is a festive air about the whole arrangement. The dishes are occasionally of an unusual kind, but we can have English dishes if we wish. The omelettes are quite superb, and the salads make me long to ask for the recipes for you. England seems such a long way off when we are dining at one of the square tables, with a band of music somewhere near and the electric light shining on the coloured glass canopy, the doors and pillars of which are wreathed with flowers and creepers. Yesterday evening a very pretty woman came in with her maid, and both dined together. It was nice to have such a charming face to look at while we enjoyed our repast. The maid had the same dishes as the mistress, and some of her half bottle of champagne. Where would one see such a thing in England?

COSTUMES FOR SCOTLAND, &c.—Messrs. REDFERN beg to announce that they have designed some very practical Gowns for ladies visiting Scotland, either for Shooting, Travelling, Golfing, &c., to which they invite an inspection.—27, New Bond-street, W.

We saw some beautifully-dressed girls at Scheveningen. One was in blue-and-white striped flannel, with a pale blue silk blouse and a twist of pale blue silk about her waist, caught through a long silver buckle about 6 in. in height. The figures of the Dutch ladies are wonderfully different from those of the Germans, being upright and full of dignity, though without stiffness. The children are beautifully dressed here, especially the boys, none of whom wear trousers, but well-fitting knickerbockers, which do not go in creases and wrinkles, but fit quite closely and comfortably to the legs.

The waiter hands us the London Times every morning at breakfast, and we often wonder how it is that people know in a moment that we are English, addressing us in what they intend to be that language. The funny things that happen are innumerable. Father asked for armchairs on the sands at Scheveningen, and the man brought us four donkeys! The idea of our party, including the portly Pater, careering about on donkeys was irresistible, but the man seemed to see nothing amusing in it. We hurriedly hunted up "armchair" in the dictionary, and pointed to those about us, and were soon supplied with what we wanted. A man who was carrying a piece of wreckage on his shoulder informed Maud that "A sheep is bruk up over daar," and when Maud, in concern, thinking he meant that a shipwreck had just taken place, asked "Where?" he responded with "You spik no English. I taught you wass English," and gave her up in despair. He meant that his log of wood came from some wreck at sea.

It is so delightful here that we shall stay as long as we can, so it is just possible that my next week's letter may be dated from here.

Frances, who is staying at Brighton, sends me the following account of the "Sussex Fortnight":—

No better sign of the times has been given than the experience derived by the really select few who enjoyed the "Sussex Fortnight." Glorious Goodwood was, I doubt not, as glorious as ever to those that were present, but, alas! they were, as compared with previous years, very few and very far between. And even those who were present seemed to be there on the cheap. In fact, Goodwood's glory appeared altogether second-hand. What I mean by this is that the past glory of Goodwood has primarily been dependent, I take it, upon the people who attend there, and secondly (personally I consider that this should come first) upon the dresses that are worn. Now, these latter were at this year's meeting distinctly second-hand. They had all been seen before, and in several instances (as the song says) "many a time." It is, however, out of date to discuss Goodwood now. But the same state of affairs was conspicuous the following week at the Brighton and Lewes races. These, I know, are not "Society gatherings;" but they point, even more than Goodwood does, to what the "condition of the money market" really is. Now, things must indeed be bad; in fact, bad does not express the deplorable state of affairs during the last week. Take, for instance, the Métropole at Brighton. This year the theatrical world, as represented by its more attractive personal items, was almost non-existent. The Stock Exchange, which usually is in full bloom during the fortnight, was solely represented, as far as my information went, by two successful "Bears" (what that means I don't quite understand), and three gentlemen who had failed to meet their engagements. Naturally, this gave a very depressing effect to the whole surroundings, and very considerably limited the numbers of the company present, and the interest in those who had managed to put in an appearance. Fortunately, on Wednesday the Middlesex Yeomanry, otherwise the Duke of Cambridge's Hussars, came to the rescue, having decided to spend their ten days' drill at Brighton—the men being quartered at the Grand Hotel and the officers at the Métropole. They have given a much-needed fillip to the otherwise lamentably depressing condition of affairs, and this week, what with their sports on Wednesday and their inspection (with luncheon afterwards) on Friday, we are looking forward to quite a lively time.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

MARIANI WINE

This Inimitable COCA WINE is an aid to intellectual exertion, and is indispensable to brain-workers and others who suffer from Debility, Exhaustion, Mental Depression, Dyspepsia, Sleeplessness, Voice Fatigue; also to promote Convalescence. Written Testimonials from over 2,000 Physicians. "A powerful rejuvenator and renovator of the vital forces." Sold by Chemists, Grocers, and Stores, or delivered free by Importers, WILCOX & CO. 239, Oxford-st., London. 4s. per bottle, or 45s. dozen. Be sure and ask for MARIANI WINE.

MOURNING FOR IMMEDIATE WEAR.

Messrs. JAY'S

Large and well-assorted STOCK includes a choice and varied selection of COSTUMES, MANTLES, and MILLINERY, suitable for any degree of Mourning, and ready for IMMEDIATE WEAR. Orders to special instructions are executed in a few hours, and Ladies are Waited Upon in any part of the country without any extra charge whatever.

JAY'S,
REGENT STREET, LONDON.

JOHN EXSHAW and CO.'S BRANDIES

The great reputation No. 1 Brandy has obtained in India has induced J. EXSHAW & CO. to now supply direct to the English Public.

No. 1	66/- per doz.	Very Old Liqueur	140/- per doz.
Liqueur	84/- ,,	Magnificent Old do.	175/- ,,
Fine Liqueur	96/- ,,	Grand Champagne	200/- ,,

SAMPLES FORWARDED.

CHAMPAGNES.

Jules Champlon & Co.'s 1889 (in Bottles only)	68/- per doz.
Moet & Chandon's Dry Imperial 1884 (in Bottles only)	105/- ,,
Ditto ditto ditto 1889 (in all sizes)	84/- ,,
Lebeau & Co. (in Magnums and Bottles only)	54/- ,,

CLARETS.

Ch. La Croute 1889	24/- per doz.
Ch. Brane Cantenac 1889	30/- ,,

Bottled at the Chateau).

SOLE AGENTS for the United Kingdom—

POWELL, TURNER, & CO.

28, King-street, St. James's, S.W. & 23, Finch-lane, City.

TASTERS TO H.M.'s WAR OFFICE
And GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY.

Telegraphic Address: "PEREIRE, London." Telephone No. 3,575.

CRITERION RESTAURANT, Piccadilly.

NO. 1 EAST ROOM—CUISINE VERITABLEMENT FINE.
SPECIALLY DEVOTED TO THE SERVICE OF
À LA CARTE DÉJEUNERS AND DINNERS in the most Recherché Style of French Cookery.
CUISINE UNRIVALLED IN ENGLAND. LARGE SELECTION OF CHOICE WINES.
NO. 2 EAST ROOM.
A Special Dinner at 10s. 6d. each Will be served in this Room at Separate Tables, between the hours of 6 and 9 p.m.
COMPOSED OF A SELECTION OF DISHES FROM THE CARTE DU JOUR OF THE EAST ROOMS.

JOHANNIS

KING OF NATURAL TABLE WATERS.

Promotes Digestion. Prolongs Life.
Prevents Gout and Rheumatism.

SPRINGS: Zollhaus, Germany.
LONDON OFFICES: 25, Regent Street, Waterloo Place.

Mr. HELBRONNER, Ld.
300 & 302, OXFORD STREET, W.
ECCLESIASTICAL AND DOMESTIC EMBROIDERERS.
Weavers of Dress Silks,
Decorators, Upholsterers, &c.

LADIES' HOSIERY.

Ladies requiring stockings for comfort, elasticity, and wear-resisting qualities should ask for the Patent TRIPLE SPLICED INSTEP HOSE, which are undoubtedly the best produced. They are made in Cotton, Lisle Thread, Summer and Winter Cashmere, Spun and Pure Silk.

Each pair is stamped with the Registered trade mark, "MUSA DYE," and "PATENT TRIPLE SPLICED INSTEP HOSE, No. 20,778" on sole of foot.

To be obtained of all the best Hosiers and Outfitters in the United Kingdom.

Ladies experiencing any difficulty in obtaining these goods are requested to write to the patentees, who will forward them the address of the nearest vendor. This will ensure their having the genuine article.

Wholesale only of the Patentees:
DEBENHAM & FREEBODY,
Fletcher Gate, Nottingham.

MELLIN'S FOOD

For Infants and Invalids.

"48, LOUISE-ROAD,
"WATER-LANE, STRATFORD, E.
"February 1.

"DEAR SIR, I enclose you a photo of our baby girl, Dorothy Gentle, she having been fed on your Food for the last twelve months. Being obliged to resort to the feeding-bottle, I was recommended your food by a friend of mine. The photo was taken when she was six months old, and I think you will see by the condition of the child it will speak well for its excellency. I have always persuaded my friends to use it, as I am sure it cannot be too highly recommended for infants. Yours faithfully,
"AUGUSTUS GENTLE."

MELLIN'S FOOD BISCUITS.

(Manufactured by Carr & Co., Carlisle, specially for G. Mellin.)
DIGESTIVE. NOURISHING. SUSTAINING.
For Children after Weaning, the Aged, Dyspeptic, and for all who require a Simple, Nutritious, and Sustaining Food.
Price 2s. and 3s. 6d. per Tin.

AN ILLUSTRATED PAMPHLET ON THE FEEDING AND REARING OF INFANTS.
A Practical and Simple Treatise for Mothers, containing a large number of Portraits of Healthy and Beautiful Children, together with facsimiles of original testimonials which are of the greatest interest to all mothers, to be had, with samples, free by post on application to MELLIN'S FOOD WORKS, PECKHAM, S.E.

(The Original Firm Established 1810.)
Mappin Brothers

"Queen's" Plate.
For TABLE FURNISHING, &c.

By Her Majesty's Special Warrant.

Queen's Plate is the finest Electro-Silver Plate in the World. Has stood the test of over 80 years, and is supplied direct to the public by the actual Manufacturers from Queen's Works, Sheffield.

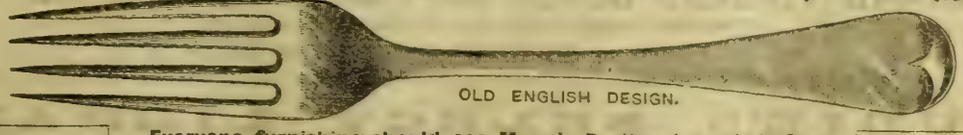
Mappin Brothers' Corporate Trade Mark is on all in Queen's Manufactures Plate and Queen's Cutlery.

Only London Show Rooms: 220, REGENT ST., W.; & 66, CHEAPSIDE, E.C. (Next Sir John Bennett's.)

OUTFITS OF "QUEEN'S" PLATE.



"QUEEN'S" TABLE CUTLERY.

ILLUSTRATED PRICE LIST and SAMPLES POST-FREE.

Everyone furnishing should see Mappin Brothers' goods before deciding elsewhere.

Inspection invited at the London Show-Rooms.

SELECTIONS of Goods forwarded to the Country on APPROVAL.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

ZOLA'S NEW NOVEL. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

Dr. Pascal. By Émile Zola. Translated by Ernest Vizetelly. With a Portrait of the Author.

"'Dr. Pascal' should justify M. Zola in the eyes of those who have ever had any doubt as to the design of his work, of its scientific aim and its moral purpose. Zola is of all others the writer with a purpose, a positive and definite aim that of any man of science or the healthiest. And so we say moral purpose, consciously moral."—Pall Mall.

Also, uniform, crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. each.

The Downfall. By Émile Zola. With two Maps.

The Dream. By Émile Zola. With eight Illustrations.

SIXPENNY EDITION OF CHARLES READE'S GREATEST NOVEL.

It is Never Too Late to Mend. By Charles Reade. An entirely New Edition, handsomely printed in large 8vo, with Portrait cover, price SIXPENCE; cloth limp, 1s.

BERTRAM MITFORD'S NEW NOVEL.

The Gun-Runner. A Romance of Zululand. By Bertram Mitford. With a Frontispiece by Stanley L. Wood. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"'The Gun-Runner' is positively thrilling. The story is one that will be read with breathless interest."—Literary World.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ALL SORTS AND CONDITIONS OF MEN."

The Ivory Gate. By Walter Besant, Author of "Children of Gibeon." Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"It is certainly a story to be read. Our interest never flags for a moment."—Saturday Review.

MRS. CROKER'S NEW STORIES.

'To Let,' &c. By B. M. Croker, Author of "Pretty Miss Neville," "A Family Likeness," &c. Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d. [August 17.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, Piccadilly, W.

1/- 1/-

QUEER STORIES

—FROM—

"TRUTH."

"The special qualities of 'Queer Stories from Truth' (Truth office, 8vo, pp. 204) are already well known, and they are as evident in this as in previous collections. The vein is mainly of a somewhat cynical character, but in the 'Sailor Doll' there is a strong vein of pathos."—Manchester Guardian.

"TRUTH" Publishing Office,

10, Bolt-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

NOW READY.

The BISHOP'S WIFE. A Sketch. By Dayrell Trelawney. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

Mrs. FINCH-BRASSEY. By Mrs. Andrew Dean, Author of "Isaac Eller's Money." In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"'Mrs. Finch-Brassey' is almost daring in the slightness of its plot, but is a careful and humorous study of an odious woman, with several sketches of other characters cleverly indicated."—World.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MRS. SEVERN."

Mrs. ELPHINSTONE of DRUM. By Mrs. Stevenson, Author of "Juliet," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"'Mrs. Elphinstone of Drum' is out of the common; a book to read."—Vanity Fair.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS.

IN THREE VOLUMES, AT THE LIBRARIES.

AS A MAN IS ABLE. By DOROTHY LEIGHTON.

"We seem to have struck a vein of clever new novelists lately. Here is another work that is quite as interesting as 'Dodo,' which we had the pleasure of criticising favourably a week or two ago."—Vanity Fair.

SECOND THOUSAND.

THE LAST SENTENCE. By MAXWELL GRAY, Author of "The Silence of Dean Maitland."

"'The Last Sentence' is a remarkable story; it abounds with dramatic situations, the interest never for a moment flags, and the characters are well drawn and consistent."—Standard.

THIRD THOUSAND.

THE HEAVENLY TWINS. By Madame SARAH GRAND, Author of "Ideala."

"It is so full of interest that one feels inclined to give oneself up to unreserved enjoyment of it. The twins are among the most delightful and amusing in fiction."—Athenæum.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.

IDEALA. A Study from Life. By Madame Sarah Grand, Author of "The Heavenly Twins." New (Fifth) Edition, 1 vol., 6s.

THE JEW. From the Polish of J. I. Kraszewski. With an Introduction by Edmund Gosse. (Heinemann's International Library). Cloth, 2s. 6d.; paper, 2s. 6d.

DONALD MARCY. By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Author of "The Gates Ajar," &c. 8s. 6d.

"'Donald Marcy' is one of those novels that you read through with interest, from the first page to the last."—Literary World.

FROM WISDOM COURT. By Henry Seton Merriman and Stephen Graham Tallentyre. With 30 Illustrations by E. Courboin. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"It is the book to take upon a punt, to carry to the hills, to dream over on a hammock; a holiday book par excellence, of a sort which is not forgotten with the return to work."—"The Optimist" in The Sun.

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

Price Sixpence.

THE HARROGATE MINERAL WATERS and HOMŒOPATHY. A new Analysis. Reprinted from the Monthly "Homœopathic Review."

Published by E. GOULD & SON, London, and can be purchased at any Booksellers'.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, LIMITED.

FOUNDED IN 1842.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE (either New or Second-hand) of the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum. LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Books exchangeable by the Library Messengers) from Two Guineas per annum. COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum. N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of each one. LITERARY TOAST GRATIS.

TOWN AND VILLAGE CLUBS SUPPLIED ON LIBERAL TERMS.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books Gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the Leading Books of Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand, at greatly Reduced Prices. LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; and 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C. (Mansion House End).

MESSRS. METHUEN'S LIST.

THE NOVEL OF THE SEASON. THE FOURTH EDITION IS NOW READY.

E. F. BENSON. DODO: A Detail of the Day. By E. F. Benson. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

"An unusually clever and interesting novel."—Guardian.

"'Dodo' is very good company. The author's matter is original and interesting."—National Observer.

"Clever and well written. 'Dodo's' lovers are much to be pitied, but her readers may be promised a very pleasant time."—Morning Post.

"A delightfully witty sketch of the smart people of society. The writer is a showman with keen insight and sympathy, and a true artist."—Spectator.

"The story is told with charming grace and much power. The dialogue is a feast of epigram and paradox."—Speaker.

SECOND EDITION READY.

BARING-GOULD. — MRS. CURGENVEN OF CURGENVEN. By S. Baring-Gould, Author of "Mehalah," "In the Roar of the Sea," &c. 3 vols.

"Among his series of brilliant romances, 'Mrs. Curgenven of Curgenven' is one of the best."—Morning Post.

"The swing of the narrative is splendid."—Sussex Daily News.

"A very fine and powerful story."—Bristol Mercury.

GILBERT PARKER. — MRS. FALCHION. By Gilbert Parker, Author of "Pierre and his People." 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

"A very striking and admirable novel."—St. James's Gazette.

"A work of original power. It has intellect and imagination in it, finely imagined and well told."—Scotsman.

"A surprise, a revelation almost."—Lady's World.

"A splendid study of character: a book of remarkable power."—Athenæum.

ANTHONY HOPE. — A CHANGE OF AIR. By Anthony Hope, Author of "Mr. Witt's Widow," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Humorous in conception, witty in execution. A book to read from beginning to end."—National Observer.

"A graceful, vivacious comedy, true to human nature. The characters are sketched with a masterly hand, and the dialogue is neat and pointed."—Times.

HOSKEN.—VERSES BY THE WAY.—By J. D. Hosken. Printed on Laid paper, cloth, gilt top, 5s. Also a Large-Paper Edition on Hand-made Paper, limited to 75 copies, 12s. 6d. net.

Lyrics and Sonnets by J. D. Hosken, the Postman Poet, of Helston, Cornwall, whose interesting career is now more or less well known to the literary public. "Q.", Author of "The Splendid Spur," &c., has written a critical and biographical introduction.

METHUEN & CO., 18, Bury-street, W.C.

The Investors' Review

Edited by A. J. WILSON.

Number VII. August, 1893. Quarterly. Price 5s.

Braggart Queensland.
Australian Banks, Failed and Other.
Sir William Harcourt's Unseasonable Boasting.
The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian Government.
An Indian Lunacy.
Greek Finance.
Uruguayan Railways. By C. E. Akers.
South American Railways.
Australian Mortgage Land and Finance Company.
The Birkbeck Bank. &c. &c.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

TO BOOKBUYERS and Librarians of Free Libraries.—The August Catalogue of valuable New and Second-Hand Works, offered at prices greatly reduced, is now ready, and will be sent post free upon application to W. H. SMITH & SON, Library Department, 186, Strand, London, W.C.

STERILITY IN WOMEN: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. By J. B. RYLEY, M.D., M.R.C.S., London.—A New Illustrated Edition of this work is Now Ready. Price 3s. 6d.; post-free 3s. 8d. London: HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand.

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL MEDICAL SCHOOL, PADDINGTON, W.

The WINTER SESSION BEGINS on October 2, with an INTRODUCTORY ADDRESS at 4 p.m. by Mr. J. E. LANE, F.R.C.S. The ANNUAL DINNER will be held on WEDNESDAY, October 4, at the Métropole, Mr. H. W. PAGE, F.R.C.S., in the Chair.

ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS IN NATURAL SCIENCE.

One of £105 / *Five of £52 10s. } will be awarded by Examination on September 25 and 26.

[*Two of which are specially open to Students from Oxford and Cambridge.]

Numerous CLASS PRIZES and SCHOLARSHIPS are given by competition at the end of each year; and there are, moreover, annually Sixteen Resident Medical and Surgical Appointments in the Hospital, open to Students without expense or charge. There is daily Clinical teaching by the Physicians and Surgeons. Frequent classes are also held by the Medical, Surgical, and Obstetric Tutors. The School provides complete preparation for the higher Examinations and Degrees of the Universities.

The Residential College is at present at 33 and 35, Westbourne-terrace, W. Terms may be had on application to the Warden, E. W. Roughton, M.D. and B.S.Lond., F.R.C.S.

H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES last December laid the Foundation Stone of the CLARENCE MEMORIAL WING.

The New Building will contain

(1) A NEW OUT-PATIENTS' DEPARTMENT.
(2) LYING-IN WARDS for the reception of Lying-in Women as In-patients.
(3) A RESIDENTIAL COLLEGE for Medical Officers and Students. The latter will then be close to their work and more directly under the influence of the Medical School.
(4) ADDITIONAL SPECIAL WARDS.
(5) A NURSES' HOME.

This will add 100 beds to the Hospital, making 381 in all, at an estimated cost of £100,000.

The prospectus may be had on application to Mr. F. H. Madden, the School Secretary.

G. P. FIELD, Dean.
A. P. LUFF, M.D., Sub-Dean.

WINDERMERE HOUSE, BARNES, S.W.

Head Master - - MERVYN F. VOULES, M.A.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR PUBLIC SCHOOLS, ARMY, NAVY, &C.

The School is within three minutes' walk of the station. Convenient trains from the West-end. Small classes and individual attention. Good cricket ground. Organised games. Day boarders have dinner and tea at the school, and prepare their work under the superintendence of a Master. No home lessons. Limited number of boarders received.

For further particulars apply to the HEAD MASTER.

AMUSEMENTS.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. Herbert Beerbohm Tree,
EVERY EVENING (except Saturday) at 8.30,
A WOMAN OF NO IMPORTANCE,
By Mr. Oscar Wilde.
MATINÉE SATURDAY NEXT, August 12, at 2.30, on which Evening there will be no performance. Box-office (Mr. Lewis) open 10 to 5 and 9 to 10. Seats may also be booked by letter or telegram.—HAYMARKET.

ADELPHI THEATRE.—A. & S. Gatti, Sole Proprietors and Managers.—A New Drama of Real Life, by Henry Pettitt and Cecil Raleigh, entitled A WOMAN'S REVENGE, Every Evening, at 7.45. Mr. Charles Warner, Charles Cartwright, Herbert Flemming, Rudge Harding, John Carter, and F. W. Gardiner; Misses Elizabeth Robins, Gertrude Kingston, F. L. Forster, and Fanny Brough. Box plan at theatre. Telephone 2,645. Open at 7.30.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE. Manager, F. J. Harris.—Every Evening, at 8.15, MOROCCO BOUND. John L. Shine and Charles Danby; Misses Violet Cameron and Letty Lind. Preceded, at 7.45, by Rex Harley, the inimitable Mimic of Popular Actors. Box office 10 to 10. Doors open 7.30. Next Matinée Saturday, August 12.

ALHAMBRA THEATRE.—Open 7.45.—Two BALLETS, Operatic Music, and Varieties. At 8.40, the New Grand Romantic Ballet, in Four Tableaux, entitled FIDELIA. At 10.30, CHICAGO, and Grand Ballet of Nations. Frequent Change of Programme. Telephone 5,065.

THE EMPIRE.—Leicester-square.—Grand Programme.—Two Grand Ballets, Second Edition of ROUND THE TOWN and KATRINA. Unqualified success. Unrivalled VARIETY ENTERTAINMENT. Magnificent Orchestra. Doors open at 7.45. No free list.

LONDON PAVILION.—Grand and Unsurpassed Holiday Programme.—Dan Leno, Jenny Hill, James Fawn, Bessie Bellwood, Mons. Ganivet, Sisters Macearte, Charles Godfrey, Kate James, Little Chip, Minnie Cunningham, G. W. Kenway, Florrie Gallmore, Tom Leamore, Jennie Valmore, Charles Bignell, Nellie Navette, Tiny Websters, Evans and Laxmore, Selbini Troupe, Flo Hastings, Ada Lundberg, Arthur Rigby, Tilley Sisters Brothers Horn.—EVERY EVENING. Doors open 7.30. Admission from 1s.—Manager, Mr. Edward Swanborough.

PALACE THEATRE.—Managing Director, Sir Augustus Harris.—FULL LICENCE.—The HANDSOMEST THEATRE in EUROPE. The finest Variety Entertainment in London. Prices from 6d. EVERY EVENING at 8.

TIVOLI, Strand, London.—Cool and Well Ventilated.—Open EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, and SATURDAY MATINÉE, at 2.30, with a STAR PROGRAMME, embracing every Artiste of note now in London.—Manager, Mr. Charles Morton.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker-street Station, in connection with all railways. Through bookings at all Metropolitan stations.—Magnificent Group containing Portraits of H.R.H. the Duke of YORK, H.S.H. the Duchess of YORK. Royal Tiger Hunt, H.R.H. the Prince of Wales in the howdah; Juno, the famous war elephant, charging a tiger. Political Celebrities, Cabinet Ministers past and present. Grand Scenes and Tableaux. Music all day. Refreshment Bars, &c. Chamber of Horrors, Portrait Models of Thomas Neill, Frederick Deeming, Mrs. Pearcey, &c. Admission, 1s.; Children under twelve, 6d. Chamber of Horrors, 6d. Open from 10 to 10.

THE GRAND PANORAMA.

NIAGARA FALLS in WINTER.
Nature's Greatest Wonder
In the World's Greatest City, at NIAGARA HALL,
York-street, Westminster.
St James's Park Station.

OPEN daily, from Ten to Ten. Admission 1s. Children half-price. Tickets, including admission, at all Dist. and Met. Ry. Stations.

ROYAL DUBLIN SOCIETY.—GREAT IRISH HORSE SHOW, 1893, Balls Bridge, Dublin, August 22, 23, 24, 25. 1,200 Entries. Trotting, Driving, and Jumping Competitions.—Programmes and Tickets to be had on application. RICHARD J. MOSS, Registrar.
Leinster House, Dublin.

EARL'S COURT EXHIBITION OF GARDENING AND FORESTRY.

THE GARDEN OF LONDON.

OPEN DAILY, 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.

ALL ROADS LEAD TO EARL'S COURT.

BANDS of H.M. 2nd LIFE GUARDS and SCOTS GUARDS, the EXHIBITION BAND, GRAND ORGAN, STRING BAND. Miss NELLIE GANTHONY'S ENTERTAINMENT.

ILLUMINATIONS.

Tens of Thousands of Electric, Gas, and Vauxhall Lights, arranged with regard to colour.

FERNERIES, FOUNTAINS, WATERFALLS.

ADMISSION ONE SHILLING. SEASON TICKETS (Half Price), 10s. 6d., available till End of Season, admitting to the Main Building, Exhibition of Gardening and Forestry, Central and Western Gardens, and to one of 2,000 Free Seats at Captain Boyton's World's Water Show.

CAPTAIN BOYTON'S WORLD'S WATER SHOW, EARL'S COURT.
PHENOMENAL SUCCESS.
COOLEST PLACE OF ENTERTAINMENT IN LONDON.
THE THRILLING SENSATION, SHOOTING THE "CHUTES," and A HOST OF STARTLING NOVELTIES.
TWO PERFORMANCES DAILY at 3.30 and 8.30.
RAIN OR SHINE.
ADMISSION to GRAND STAND 6d. to 5s., and
2,000 FREE SEATS.
2,000 FREE SEATS.
2,000 FREE SEATS,

"TRUTH" HOTEL LIST.

BOURNEMOUTH.—NEWLYN'S ROYAL EXETER HOTEL. In a beautifully sheltered position and its own private grounds. Only 100 yards from the lovely Pavilion Gardens, and two minutes from the Pier. Accommodation, appointments, and views unsurpassed. Excellent cuisine. Table d'hôte at 7 p.m. Omnibus at East Station.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HOTEL MONT DORE.—"The finest Hotel on the South Coast."—L. & S. W. Railway Guide. Adjoining the hotel is a large Winter Garden, containing a covered tennis court, lounge, and a unique Bath Establishment, comprising Turkish, sea-water, pine, and other Baths. For tariff and full particulars, address THE MANAGER.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.
Splendid position facing the sea.
BOARDING TERMS
from 10s. 6d. per day.
According to the position of rooms selected.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

BUXTON.—The PEAK THERMAL ESTABLISHMENT. A High-class Hydropathic Hotel. Mineral water and other baths. Resident physician. Electric light. Passenger lift. Magnificent public rooms. Excellent cuisine. Table d'hôte 7 p.m., separate tables. Terms moderate.—Telegrams, "Thermal, Buxton."

CALLANDER & TROSSACHS HYDROPATHIC.—Splendid Drives. Good Fishing. Lawn Tennis. Golf.
Terms from £2 12s. 6d. per week.
Apply to the MANAGER.

CHESTER.—QUEEN RAILWAY HOTEL, connected with the General Station by covered way. Porters in scarlet livery on the platforms attending trains day and night. Billiards. Lifts to all floors. Telegraph office in the Hotel. Telegraphic address, "Queen, Chester." Telephone, No. 27, Chester Exchange. H. T. GOULD, Manager.

EDINBURGH.—CLARENDON HOTEL.—The finest site in Princes-street, opposite the Castle. Perfect sanitation. Table d'hôte, separate tables. English management. "The most economical first-class Hotel in Scotland." Strongly recommended. Boarding terms. Apply for tariff.

FOLKESTONE.—THE LEAS HOTEL, situated in private grounds, adjoining fashionable promenade. Sea views. Redecorated and newly-furnished throughout. Passengers' lift. Certified sanitation. Excellent cuisine. Moderate tariff.

FOLKESTONE.—ROYAL PAVILION HOTEL, facing Sea. 200 Apartments. Near landing-stage for Continent. Large winter garden. Table d'hote at 7 p.m.
G. SPURGEN, Proprietor.

FOLKESTONE.—BATES' HOTEL, West Cliff Gardens, and LONGFORD PRIVATE HOTEL, The Leas. Oldest established and most select Family Hotels in Folkestone. Reduced terms during Winter and Spring months. Pension (new Coffee-room) at Bates' Hotel.—G. L. HART, Proprietor. Sanitation Certified.

GAIRLOCH HOTEL, LOCH MAREE, ROSS-SHIRE.—This magnificent hotel is situated amidst the finest Highland scenery in the West coast of Scotland. Accommodation for over 200. Good Fishing. Large posting establishment. Swift steamer from Oban every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

GRAND CANARY.—THE METROPOLE.
Newest and best Hotel.
Delightful position, fronting the sea.
Terms most moderate.

LONDON.—The COVENT GARDEN HOTEL, Covent-garden.—Most central FAMILY HOTEL, within five minutes' of Law Courts and Somerset House. Hydraulic lift. Quiet rooms. Electric light. Table d'hôte, 6.0 to 8.30 (open to non-residents). Moderate charges. Night porter. Telegrams, "Replete, London," Telephone 2783.—M. A. S. BROWNE, Proprietor.

LONDON.—QUEEN'S-GATE MANSIONS, South Kensington, S.W. (close to Hyde Park, Albert Hall, and Imperial Institute) with all the advantages of a first-class residential hotel; public dining, drawing, billiard, and smoking rooms; hydraulic lift to every floor; electric light throughout.—Tariff on application to MANAGER.

MALVERN.—The Most Charming Luft-Kuhr Ort in England. THE IMPERIAL HOTEL offers every modern comfort, is surrounded by its own grounds, and commands splendid views. Brine (Droitwich) Baths now open for the season.—For tariff, apply to the Lessee and Manager, F. MOERSCHELL.

MATLOCK BATH.—ROYAL HOTEL.—Hydropathic Baths of every description. Medical Man. Healthful situation; extensive grounds, greatly admired. Large swimming bath. Billiards. Dairy farm. Splendid fishing.—Also NEW BATH HOTEL, with extensive grounds, fishing, &c. &c. Terms very moderate. 'Bus meets all trains.—T. TYACK, Proprietor.

NEWQUAY, Cornwall, The Biarritz of England.—ATLANTIC HOTEL, "the finest Hotel in the county." Splendidly situated. Full view of the Atlantic from Trevose Head to St. Ives. Ocean view from every window. Beaches, caverns, and cliff scenery unrivalled. Bracing climate. Bathing, yachting, fishing. Delightful excursions. Magnificent rooms. Strictly moderate charges.

NORWOOD (UPPER).—The QUEEN'S HOTEL, near the Crystal Palace. Specially adapted Suites of Apartments for families and permanent residents. Winter boarding. Terms from Three Guineas. A limited number of single rooms at 2½ guineas.

PARAMÉ, near St. Malo.
HÔTEL DE LA PLAGE.
Under English Management.

PORTRUSH (Giant's Causeway), co. Antrim.—NORTHERN COUNTIES HOTEL. Facing the Atlantic. Bracing air, magnificent scenery; tennis; Golf links, the finest in Ireland; surf and deep sea bathing, sea-water baths. Table d'hôte dinner, from 6 to 8 p.m. French cuisine. Charges very moderate. The HOTEL is UNDER RAILWAY MANAGEMENT.

SALISBURY.—The WHITE HART FAMILY HOTEL, nearly opposite the Cathedral. The largest and principal Hotel in the City. Table d'hôte (two hours each meal) at separate tables daily. Carriages for Stonehenge and other places of interest in the neighbourhood at fixed inclusive charges. Tariff on application to H. T. BOWES, Manager.

ST. LEONARD'S-ON-SEA.—The ALEXANDRA HOTEL, Eversfield-place, due south, facing the sea. Hydraulic lift to all floors. Billiard-room. Conservatory. Electric light in all public rooms. Table d'hote at separate tables, at 7.—Under the Management of Mr. and Mrs. PERCY BEER (Late of Bailey's Hotels, London).

SEA VIEW.—ISLE OF WIGHT, PIER HOTEL. The most modern and best appointed hotel in the island. All public rooms, private sitting-rooms, and greater number of bed-rooms face the sea and pier. Splendid bathing and boating. Royal I.W. Golf Links, ten minutes' walk.
G. ROWLAND ROBERTS, Proprietor.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—ROYAL KENTISH HOTEL.—Largest, best appointed, facing the Common, close to Chalybeate Springs and Parade. Table d'hôte (separate tables). Inclusive terms, 12s. per day. Tariff of MANAGER.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WELLINGTON HOTEL, Mount Ephraim. Under the distinguished patronage of his Grace the late Duke of Wellington, K.G., the leading nobility and gentry, &c. 422 ft. above sea level, south aspect; elegantly furnished; piano in every sitting-room. Cuisine, English and French; Table d'hote, large Dairy Farm.—BRABY, Proprietor.

THE CROSVENOR HOTEL
BELGRAVIA, LONDON, S.W.
Well known for Wedding Breakfasts and Dinner Parties.
TABLE D'HÔTE OPEN TO NON-RESIDENTS.
Covered Communication to three Railway Stations.
The only Terminus Hotel of the Brighton Railway Company in London.
Electric Light throughout.

BRISTOL HOTEL,
Burlington Gardens, London, W.
(Between Bond-street and Regent-street, and close to Piccadilly).
Lighted by Electricity throughout. New Hydraulic Lift to all floors.
THE CHOICEST OF WINES. FRENCH CUISINE OF HIGHEST CHARACTER.
SEPARATE ENTRANCE TO RESTAURANT IN CORK STREET, OPEN TO NON-RESIDENTS.
Luncheons at fixed price of 4s.; Dinners at 10s. 6d. or à la carte.
Private Rooms for Parties of Four or more.
NO SUPPERS.
TELEPHONE No. 3,597.

THE BURLINGTON RESTAURANT,
169, Regent Street, W.
The most recherché 5s. Diner Parisien in London.
Luncheons and Dinners a la carte.

ST. JAMES'S PARK, S.W.
QUEEN ANNE'S MANSIONS.
(QUEEN ANNE'S GATE, OPPOSITE ST. JAMES'S PARK STATION).
Finest view. Most central position. Near Houses of Parliament, Victoria, and Charing Cross. Suites of Rooms, Furnished or Unfurnished, having all comforts and privacy of home, at moderate outlay compared with expense of keeping house. All servants supplied and catering done by the Management. Rents include attendance, electric light, lifts, hot and cold water, &c.
Address, MANAGER.

ALBANY HOTEL (ROBERTSON TERRACE), HASTINGS.
Finest position on the whole sea front. Enlarged and superbly furnished. Only Hotel with Electric Light in every room. Passenger Lift. Dining, Drawing, Reading, Writing, Smoking, and Billiard Rooms. Table d'Hote 7 p.m. Moderate Tariff. No charge for attendance.
C. A. SCHWABE, Manager.

BUXTON, DERBYSHIRE.
THE PALACE HOTEL.
This large and elegantly-appointed high-class Hotel contains upwards of 200 rooms. The hotel occupies the finest position in Buxton, and is surrounded by its own grounds of six acres. Ground-floor sitting-rooms and bed-rooms. Magnificent public rooms. American elevator. Table d'hôte at separate tables.
A. CROSS, Manager.

GRAND HOTEL, JERSEY.
LARGEST AND BEST APPOINTED HOTEL IN CHANNEL ISLES, AND THE FINEST SITUATION IN JERSEY.
Directly facing the Channel. Best Sands and Safest Sea Bathing opposite the Hotel. Magnificent Public Rooms. Swimming Bath. Tennis Courts, &c.
TABLE D'HÔTE DINNER at 7 p.m. (separate tables) "best in Jersey."
Terms Moderate (inclusive or a la carte).
Telegrams—"Grand, Jersey." SYDNEY ROGERS, Manager & Secretary.

HOTELS, &c.

OATLANDS PARK HOTEL, Walton-on-Thames. 17 miles from London. Waterside retreat, formerly the favourite residence of H.R.H. the late Duke of York, thoroughly restored in its own extensive pleasure grounds; large covered-in carriage drive; lounge; cuisine; table d'hôte; lawn-tennis. Inclusive terms, from 12s. per day. Apply for illustrated prospectus. Weybridge.

THE MANAGER, IMPERIAL HOTEL, ABERDEEN (patronised by the Royal Family), begs to call the attention of old visitors and intending visitors to the fact that it is through no fault of his that their Porter or Boots is not visible on the arrival of the trains, but because the Palace or Station Hotel Company have monopolised the right to have their porters within the barriers at the station to the exclusion of those of the other hotels in town.

ILFRACOMBE. The RUNNACLEAVE Private HOTEL. 120 beautifully appointed rooms. Recreation hall, to seat 300, with fitted stage, carriage, yacht, tennis, photographic dark room, billiards, and indoor skating rink, free of charge until August. Chef de cuisine. Moderate tariff.

SOUTHPORT.—PALACE HOTEL.—Summer Season. Charming Seaside Family Resort. Extensive grounds. Electric light. Tennis. Golf links. Splendid baths.

ILFRACOMBE.—ILFRACOMBE HOTEL.—Unrivalled sea frontage and open surroundings. Seven lawn tennis courts. Large swimming bath. New lounge hall. 250 rooms.—Tariff of MANAGER.

DREW & SONS, PICCADILLY CIRCUS, LONDON, W.

PATENT "EN ROUTE" TEA BASKET

Packed free of charge on receipt of cheque.

Two-person size, complete, as sketch, with Silver Plated Kettle Regd. Spring Screw Cap, £2. 17s. 6d., or all fittings Silver Plated, £4. 10s.

Four-person size, Plain Metal £4. 14s., in all Silver Plated, £6. 10s.

N.B.—Either of these "En Routes" fitted with Drews' Patent Railway Attachment, lid and fall tray. Two-person size, 7/6: Four-person size, 10/5 extra to above prices.

NOTE.—All "En Routes" are now fitted with Drews' new patent sponge-packed lamp, with entirely new system of burner, specially adapted for travelling purposes, being superior in every way to the old lamp and boiling kettle more quickly. These lamps fit all Drews' baskets and can be had separately. Polished Brass, 5/-, Polished Nickel, 7/6.

ESTATES, AUCTIONS, &c.

ALDRIDGE'S.

31

"NEW TIMES" GUILDFORD COACH HORSES

(The Property of Mr. WALTER [illegible])

Will be SOLD without Reserve, next Wednesday, August 16.

Catalogues forwarded.

W. & S. FREEMAN.

HYDE PARK AND PORTMAN ESTATES.—Messrs. FREDERICK A. MULLETT, BOOKER, & CO.'S Register of the Select Furnished and Unfurnished Residences TO BE LET and SOLD may be inspected daily at their Auction and Estate Agency Offices, Albion House, Hyde Park-square (the corner of Albion-street), W.

GROSVENOR GARDENS. FOR SALE,

A DESIRABLE FAMILY RESIDENCE,

Situated on the preferential side of these gardens. The house has just been handsomely decorated and thoroughly sanitated by the owner for his own occupation, and an additional large room, suitable for a billiard-room, has been built out behind. There are six reception-rooms, twelve bed-rooms, and three bath-rooms, and the offices have been greatly enlarged. The direct lease to be sold, and two-thirds of the purchase money could be left on mortgage at 4 per cent.—Apply to

Messrs. LUMLEY & CO., 22, St. James's-street, London, S.W.

VALUABLE GROUND-RENT for SALE, in London, producing £850 per annum net. Thoroughly secured, upwards of £40,000 having been expended by the tenants on the ground in substantial buildings.—Particulars of Messrs. C. J. LEE & CO., Chartered Accountants, 32, King-street, E.C.

TO INVALIDS.—A list of Medical Men in all Parts willing to receive Resident Patients, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes Private Asylums, &c.—Address, Mr. G. B. STOCKER, 8, Lancaster-place, Strand, W.C.

COALS.—The Marquis of Londonderry supplies SEA-BORNE COAL from his DURHAM COLLIERIES: Londonderry Wallsend, 27s.; Pittington Wallsend, 26s.; Primrose, 25s. 6d.; Seaton Wallsend, 24s. per ton. Cash on delivery.—Seaham Wharf, Nine Elms-lane, Vauxhall.

£20 TOBACCONISTS COMMENCING. Illd. guide, post-free, "How to open respectably £20 to £1,000." Tobacconists Outfitting Co., 186A, Euston-rd., Ldn. Mngr. H. MYERS, Est. 1866.

"JAP" CARPETS

We have just received a shipment of Carpets and Rugs of Japanese Manufacture from our Agents in Hiogo, and as we are able to sell them at a very low price, we offer them to our Customers in preference to submitting them to the Wholesale Trade. They are novel and artistic in design and colouring, and of thick pile.

CARPETS.

8	feet long by	6	feet wide	28/- each.
10	„	9	„	50/- „
12	„	9	„	63/- „

RUGS.

3	feet long by	1 ft. 6 in.	wide ...	2/6 each.
4	„	2	feet wide	5/- „
6	„	3	„	8/6 „

A FEW MIRZAPORE CARPETS, 9 ft. by 6 ft. ... 27/6 each.
KURD RUGS, 5 ft. by 3 ft. ... 5/9 „
BANGALORE RUGS, 6 ft. by 3ft. ... 5/- each.
KURD CARPETS, 9 ft. by 4 ft. 6 in. ... 21/- „

Catalogues of all the best Floor Coverings free.

TRELOAR & SONS

LUDGATE HILL, LONDON, E.C.

NEW ROUTE to the CONTINENT vid the Great Eastern Railway Co., HARWICH and the HOOK OF HOLLAND, daily (Sundays included). Passengers leave London (Liverpool-street Station) at 8 p.m., and the principal Northern and Midland towns in the afternoon. Dining Car between York and Harwich and back. New twin screw S.S. Chelmsford. Through carriages to Germany run alongside the steamers at the Hook of Holland. Return Fares to Amsterdam, 38s. 7d.; Cologne, 44s. 9d.; Berlin, 81s. 2d.
ANTWERP vid Harwich every week-day. Hamburg, by G.S.N. Co.'s steamers, Wednesdays and Saturdays. Cheap tickets and tours to all parts of the Continent. Read the G.E.R. "Tourist Guide to the Continent," price 6d., post 8d. Particulars at 61, Regent-street, W., or of the Continental Traffic Manager, Liverpool-street Station, E.C.

QUICK CHEAP ROUTE to DENMARK, SWEDEN, and NORWAY, vid HARWICH and ESBJERG. The United Steamship Coy. of Copenhagen Steamers sail from Harwich (Parkeston Quay) for Esbjerg every Monday, Thursday, and Saturday, after arrival of the train leaving London, Liverpool-st. Station, at 9.3 a.m., returning from Esbjerg every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, after arrival of 9 a.m. train from Copenhagen. Return Fares:—Esbjerg, 53s.; Copenhagen, 88s. 3d. The service will be performed (weather and other circumstances permitting) by the Steamships Koldinghuus and Botnia. These fast Steamers have excellent accommodation for passengers and carry no cattle. — For further information address TEGNER, PRICE, & CO., 107, Fenchurch-st., London; or the Continental Manager, Liverpool-st. Station, E.C.

AUSTRALIA and NEW ZEALAND. — NEW FAST PASSENGER ROUTE, via Vancouver, by fastest Atlantic steamers (any line) to Montreal or New York; thence via Canadian Pacific Railway, taking in the grand scenery of the Rockies, only actual trans-continental line running through trains under one management.
Atlantic to Pacific. Many optional routes, including Niagara and Chicago. Break of journey allowed.
New steamships, 5,000 tons each, of New Zealand and Australasian S.s. Co., largest, fastest, and finest running from American Continent to Australasia, leave Vancouver about as follows:—
S.s. WARRIMOO .....September 14th,
S.s. MIOWERA .....October 14th,
monthly thereafter, calling Honolulu, Brisbane, and Sydney. Electric light good cuisine, exceptionally large cabins.
For pamphlets and berths apply to Passenger Department, Canadian Pacific Railway, 67 and 68, King William-street, London, E.C.; 7, James-street, Liverpool; 105, Market-street, Manchester; 67, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow.

ORIENT COMPANY'S YACHTING CRUISES by the steamships "GARONNE," 3,876 tons register, and "CHIMBORAZO," 3,847 tons register, leaving LONDON as under:—
For NORWAY,
16th August, for 15 days, calling at LEITH two days later.
For SICILY, GREECE, the LEVANT, and CRIMEA, leaving 2nd September, for 40 days.
For the MEDITERRANEAN, leaving 12th September, for 31 days.
For MADEIRA, TENERIFFE, WEST INDIES, AZORES, &c., leaving 22nd November, for 65 days.
The Steamers are fitted with Electric Light, Electric Bells, Hot and Cold Baths, &c.
Managers { F. Green & Co. / Anderson, Anderson, & Co. } Head Offices, Fenchurch-avenue, London.
For particulars apply to the latter firm, at 5, Fenchurch-avenue, E.C.; or to the West-end Branch Office, 16, Cockspur-street, S.W.

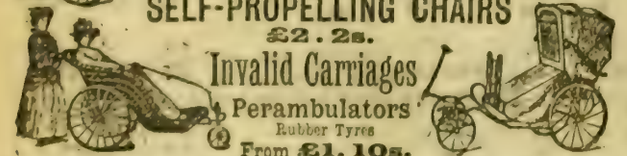
NORWEGIAN YACHTING CRUISES
(FORTNIGHTLY) FROM NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.
Shortest route to Norway. Only one night at sea.
By the ALBION STEAMSHIP CO.'S (Ltd.) Fast and Splendidly-fitted Yachting Steamer
"MIDNIGHT SUN" (Captain NIVISON, R.N.R.), 3,020 tons, 2,860 horse-power.
Fares from 12 Guineas, including a sumptuous table.
NEXT SAILINGS—JUNE 17; JULY 1, 15, 29; AUGUST 12, 26; SEPTEMBER 9.
All applications for Berths to be made to the Yachting Steamer "MIDNIGHT SUN" Passenger Office, 4, Lombard-street (Tel. Add., Tourist), Newcastle-on-Tyne. Write for Itineraries.

CARTER 6A, NEW CAVENDISH ST. ILLUSTRATED PRICE LIST POST FREE.
PORTLAND PLACE, LONDON, W.

LITERARY MACHINE
For holding lamp, meals, &c. in any position over an easy chair, bed or sofa. Deliciously luxurious. A most useful gift. PRICES from £1 1s.

INVALID COMFORTS
Walking Machine for the lame
Adjustable Couches and Beds, £2.
Exercising Chairs £5. 5s.
Reclining Boards £1. 1s.
Commodes £1. Leg Rests 10s. 6d.
Easy Chairs £2. 10s.
Commode Chairs £2. 10s.
Carrying Chairs, £1.
Bed Tables 7s. 6d.
Crutches 10s. 6d.
Folding Couch Chairs 10s.
Bed Rests 10s.

BATH CHAIRS
From £1. 5s.



SELF-PROPELLING CHAIRS
£2. 2s.

Invalid Carriages
Perambulators
Rubber Tyres
From £1. 10s.

JOHN CARTER, 6a, New Cavendish St., Portland Place, London, W.
Telegrams—BATH CHAIR, LONDON. ILLUSTRATED PRICE LISTS POST FREE.

LONDON AND COUNTY ADVANCE AND DISCOUNT COMPANY, Limited. Cash advanced from £10 to £500, without preliminary fees or deductions for interest, for short or long periods, repayable by easy instalments, at moderate rates, upon approved security. Bills Discounted. Forms free. Offices, 57 and 58, Chancery-lane, W.C.—JOHN STONE, Secretary.

FARADAYS'
FITTINGS

Electric Light Works
3 BERNERS ST. W

The ONLY Antiseptic Saline.

SALT REGAL

FOR ALL
Bilious and Nervous Disorders,
SUCH AS
Sick Headache, Constipation,
Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion,
Disordered Liver.

At all Chemists throughout the world, in bottles, 1/6 and 2/9.

Office: 49, ISLINGTON, LIVERPOOL.

MILD INDIAN CIGARS. OBTAINABLE EVERYWHERE.
BAHADUR

WOODS' PATENT GALVANISED
STEEL WIRE MATTRESSES & BEDSTEADS.
Carriage Paid, and Liberal Cash Discount allowed.

Guaranteed for Five Years.

EXHIBITED
CARRYING
ONE TON
At LIVERPOOL, MANCHESTER, and other EXHIBITIONS.
SHOW ROOMS:
128, BOLD ST., LIVERPOOL.
Catalogues and Prices free on application to the
LONGFORD WIRE, IRON & STEEL CO., LTD.
WARRINGTON.
Please mention this Paper.

SCOTTADIE

ROYAL SCOTCH WAREHOUSE

115 & 115a REGENT STREET
LONDON W

For
Coats & Ulsters
Travelling Cloaks
Carriage Rugs
Travelling Wraps
Shawls
Plaids
Shetland Shawls
Shooting Stockings
Scotch Tweeds & Homespuns for Suits & Gowns

Telegraphic Address—Scott Adie, London

"OPTIMUS"

Photographic PRIZES £105 Competition

Entry Form post free on application.

The Largest Selection of PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS in the World. Best Value given. Before buying Cameras, Lenses, Microscopes, or other Optical Instruments, write for CATALOGUE, which is sent POST FREE.

"OPTIMUS" PHOTOGRAPHIC OUTFITS.

Rayment's Wide Angle, Long Focus, Rack Camera, Three Double Dark Slides, "Optimus" Rapid Rectilinear Lens, Instantaneous Shutter, Tripod, and best Waterproof Case.

For Plates of the following dimensions—

Ins.	4¼ × 3¼	6½ × 4¾	8½ × 6½	10 × 8	12 × 10	15 × 12
	£10	£12	£15	£20	£33	£30

PERKEN, SON, & RAYMENT, 99, HATTON GARDEN, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON.

CANCIA'S PURE ITALIAN WINES.

Vino da Tavola ... ... 14s. per dozen.
Chianti Melini ... ... 18s. and 24s. ,,
Capri White Scala ... ... 24s. ,,

CANCIA'S PURE ITALIAN WINES.

Castel Ricaldone (Italian Burgundy) ... 18s. per dozen.
Sparkling Asti ... ... 30s. ,,

CANCIA'S PURE ITALIAN WINES.

Vermouth Cinzano (Tonic). In litre bottles 30s. per dozen.
Samples free on application.

R. CANCIA & CO., LIMITED.

GENERAL DEPOT:—
55, CASTLE STREET EAST, OXFORD STREET, W.

TO CONNOISSEURS.

ST. EMILION . . . . CLARET . . . . 18/- per dozen.
MEDOC . . . . . CLARET . . . . 15/6 per dozen.
ST. GEORGE'S . . . CLARET . . . . 13/- per dozen.
Price List of other CHATEAU CLARETS, from 21/- to 74/- per dozen, posted on application. LE MONNIER & CO., JERSEY.
CARRIAGE AND DUTY PAID.

THREE GOLD MEDALS.

The Y & N Patent Diagonal Seam Corset

Exquisite Model. Perfect Comfort. Guaranteed Wear.

Will not split in the Seams nor tear in the Fabric. Made in White, Black, and all the fashionable colours and Shades in Italian Cloth, Satin, and Coutil; also in the New Sanitary Woollen Cloth. 4/11, 5/11, 6/11, 7/11 per pair and upwards.

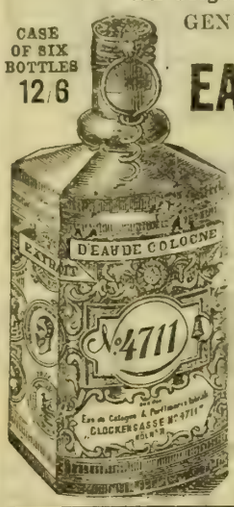
CAUTION.—Every genuine Y & N Corset is stamped "Y & N Patent Diagonal Seam No. 116," in oval on the lining.

Sold by Drapers and Ladies' Outfitters in the United Kingdom and Colonies.

AN ALWAYS ACCEPTABLE PRESENT.

An Original Case of MÜLHENS'

CASE OF SIX BOTTLES 12/6



GENUINE NO. 4711 BRAND OF

EAU DE COLOGNE.

THE PUREST & STRONGEST, YET MOST DELICATE EVER PRODUCED.

THE WORLD says: "Anyone desirous of getting a thoroughly genuine Cologne, cannot do better than send for a bottle of the '4711' Double Extract. Once having used it, repetition is a foregone conclusion."

Large selection of Choicest Perfumes, Toilet Soaps, &c. Quintuple Concentrated Extracts, made from Fresh Flowers gathered at Grasse.

Of All dealers in Perfumes, or at the LONDON BRANCH:

62, NEW BOND ST., W.

(ONE DOOR FROM BROOK STREET.)

Price Lists on application to Mr. C. REUTER, Manager. And at

COLOGNE, NEW YORK, VIENNA, RIGA, and ODESSA.

ESTABLISHED 1818.
Ten Prize Medals.

PETER F. HEERING'S

COPENHAGEN

CHERRY BRANDY.

Sold by all Wine Merchants, and at all Bars and Hotels.

FLORILINE

FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH

Is the BEST LIQUID DENTIFRICE in the WORLD.

PREVENTS THE DECAY OF THE TEETH.

Renders the Teeth Pearly White.

IS PERFECTLY HARMLESS AND DELICIOUS TO THE TASTE.

Is Partly Composed of Honey, and Extracts from Sweet Herbs and Plants.

Of all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the World.

2s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE TOOTH POWDER,

Only put in Glass Jars, Price 1s.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

Prevents the Hair from Falling off.

Restores Grey or White Hair to its ORIGINAL COLOUR.

Being delicately perfumed, it leaves no Unpleasant Odour.

IS NOT A DYE.

Should be in every House where a HAIR RENEWER is needed.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST OR HAIRDRESSER FOR

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

Price 3s. 6d. per bottle.

PURE IRISH

LINEN SHIRTS,

Tailor-Made

Direct from Ireland.

Save 30 per Cent.

Made of the most durable Long Cloth, and fitted with the finest Linen Ireland can produce.

MADE TO MEASURE.

FIT AND STYLE GUARANTEED IN THE LATEST FASHION.

Half-a-dozen Pure Irish bespoke Shirts, securely packed, delivered free to any address in the Kingdom for 33/-, 39/-, or 45/-. Foreign Postage Extra.

Sample Shirt to Measure, Post Free for 5/6, 6/6, or 7/6.

Dress Shirts with fine Irish Linen Fittings, Six for 39/-, delivered free. A Sample Dress Shirt to Measure, Post Free for 6/6.

Old Shirts re-fitted with New Irish Linen Fronts, Cuffs, and Neck-bands for 2/3 and 2/9 each. Returned Carriage Free. Coloured Shirts, best quality. French Cambric 30/-, Oxford Cloth 33/- per half-dozen. Patterns Free. Four-fold Irish Linen Collars, best quality, 7/6 per dozen. General Catalogue post free.

For Measure, send size of Collar, Chest, and Height, or an old shirt.

TAAFFE & COLDWELL,

Army Shirt Tailors, 81, Grafton St., Dublin.

CAMEO CIGARETTES

A PHOTOGRAPH IN EVERY PACKET.

A SEPARATE MOUTHPIECE FOR EACH CIGARETTE.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

CASH ADVANCED PRIVATELY.

UNION DEPOSIT BANK.

No. 17, KING WILLIAM ST., Charing Cross, London, W.C.

[ESTABLISHED 1867.]

ADVANCES MADE in TOWN or COUNTRY at a FEW HOURS' NOTICE, Without Public Enquiries, for Short or Long Periods,

From £30 to £5,000,

To Ladies and Gentlemen, Merchants, Farmers, Traders, or any responsible persons upon their

NOTE OF HAND ALONE.

ALL TRANSACTIONS STRICTLY PRIVATE.

Also upon security of Furniture, Stock in-Trade, Reversions, Deeds, Leases, Life Policies, Legacies, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Farm Stock, &c., without mortgage expenses, from one to 15 years, repayable by easy instalments, or so long as the interest is paid, the capital may remain.

NO SURETIES REQUIRED.

Distance no object. No delay, and no unnecessary expenses charged.

FIRST LETTER OF APPLICATION IMMEDIATELY ATTENDED TO.

A Gentleman sent direct from the Bank to carry out all advances.

Current accounts opened in accordance with the usual practice of other London Banks.

Prospectus gratis, or post free on application. ; Personal visit preferred.

Interest allowed on deposits, 4½, 5, and 6 per cent.

Apply to the SECRETARY.

The Burglar Bewildered.

HOW?

THROUGH THE

HOMACOUSTIC

WHAT IS THE HOMACOUSTIC?

The HOMACOUSTIC is a contrivance connected with Speaking Tubes, which entirely supersedes, for indoor purposes, not only the Telephone, but all other existing arrangements for indoor inter-communication.

HOW WAS THE BURGLAR BEWILDERED?

The owner of the house fortunately had a Homacoustic commutator fixed in his bedroom. This commutator placed him in direct communication, not only with his butler's room, but with seven other rooms in the house.

Directly he heard the Burglars he explained the state of affairs through the Homacoustic to his butler, and to the occupants of the other rooms; arranged what should be done, and they were thus all enabled to pounce on the Burglars together, and catch them red-handed, without their being even aware that their presence was so much as suspected. There was no ringing of electric bells, no creeping about the house to warn the inmates, NO PERSONAL DANGER.

The Homacoustic is far more dreaded by Burglars than any existing arrangement of "Protection from Burglary," for whereas when an electric bell rings, though it may probably arouse the inmates, it also acts as a warning to the Burglars themselves to be off.

NO HOUSE IS REALLY SAFE

—— WITHOUT THE ——

HOMACOUSTIC

Independent of its protective advantages, the Homacoustic is invaluable in all private houses for everyday use, and in all properly arranged business premises it is an absolute necessity.

The Homacoustic is automatic, not mechanical. Once fixed, always in working order. Its first cost is its last cost.

With the Homacoustic there is no blowing into pipes. The automatic whistle is always in position. One speaks and listens at the same time. The tube is closed when not in actual use. Ordinary speaking tubes can be utilised.

The HOMACOUSTIC SAVES TIME, TEMPER, & TROUBLE.

HOMACOUSTIC SPEAKING TUBE COMPANY,

22, QUEEN STREET, LONDON, E.C.

WHAT IS IT?

Why, an ATTACHMENT TO A SPEAKING-TUBE,

by means of which you can carry on a sustained conversation, and need only have one instrument for 6 or 8 Tubes.

Of all Speaking-Tube Fitters, or

THE HOMACOUSTIC SPEAKING-TUBE CO.

Show Rooms—22, Queen Street, London, E.C.

(NEAR MANSION HOUSE STATION.)

THE MILDEST OF MILD INDIAN CIGARS are

OAKES & Co.'s SUPERS

NO. 3,

THE PAGODA BRAND. QUALITY & FLAVOUR UNEQUALLED.

The Cheapest and Best INDIAN CIGAR in the Market.

SAMPLE BOX of 100 SENT to ANY ADDRESS for FIFTEEN SHILLINGS.

OAKES BROS. & CO., 46, NEW BROAD-STREET, SOLE IMPORTERS.

CORNS! BUNIONS! NAILS! And all Diseases of the Feet Successfully Treated, Without Pain, by Mr. GARDNER, 85, Regent-street, W. Highest surgical testimonials (Sir Wm. Jenner, &c.). Also testimonials from the Prime Minister, Bishop of London, H.R.H. Prince Christian, &c. CORN, BUNION, and Chilblain Ointment absolutely cures gouty and all painful affections of tender feet, soft corns, stiff and enlarged toes and joints, &c. Post free 15 stamps. SKIN TONIC BALSAM gives great PURITY OF COMPLEXION, removes Redness, Roughness; also promotes healthy action and Softness of the Skin. 19 or 38 stamps.

Royal Amateur Photographers.

THE STEREOSCOPIC COMPANY

Have been favoured with orders for Photographic Apparatus from

H.M. THE QUEEN.

H.R.H. The Princess of Wales.
H.R.H. Princess Christian.
H.R.H. Princess Louise.
H.R.H. Princess Henry of Battenberg.
H.R.H. Prince Henry of Battenberg.
H.R.H. The Duc d'Orleans.
H.R.H. Princess Henry of Prussia.
H.R.H. The Prince of Naples.
H.R.H. Prince Damrong of Siam.
H.R.H. Prince Sanpasadht of Siam.
H.R.H. Prince Rabi of Siam.
H.I.H. Prince Christian Victor.
H.S.H. Princess Catherine Youriewsky.
H.S.H. Prince Boris Czetwertynski.
H.E. The Governor-General of India.
Etc., etc., etc.

AS USED BY H.R.H. THE PRINCESS OF WALES

Has a finder the exact size of the plate you are using.

Has dark slides of a novel description and role for Plates or Films.

Can be focussed even during the transition of the object to be photographed.

Has an instantaneous shutter capable of various speeds; also time exposures.

Can be used as a Hand Camera as well as on a stand for ordinary photography.

Is fitted with exceptionally rapid Lenses working at F/6.

PRICES, COMPLETE WITH 2 LENSES AND 3 SLIDES.

To take pictures

	£ s. d.
5 × 4	15 15 0
6½ × 4¼	25 0 0
7½ × 5	26 12 0
8½ × 6½	35 0 0

FREE LESSONS IN PHOTOGRAPHY

ARE GIVEN BY THE

Stereoscopic Company,

106 & 108, Regent-st. W

AND

54, CHEAPSIDE, E.C.

200 pp. List Free by Post for Seven Stamps.

CARPET CLEANING.

CARPETS and TAPESTRIES Cleansed from dust by PURE AIR.

Impossible to damage the most delicate fabric.

Collection and Delivery free.

Send for Prices and Particulars to your Upholsterer, or

The Compressed Air Carpet & Tapestry Cleaning Co.

Brook Green, W. Office: 94, Victoria-st., Westminster.

N.B.—The Trade and Public are invited to visit our Works, and convince themselves of the bona fides of our process.

REAL GERMAN HOLLOW GROUND

KROPP RAZOR

NEVER REQUIRE GRINDING.

Black Handle .. 5/6 | A Pair, Ivory Handles, in Rus. Leather Case, 21/- | Duplex Strop 7/6
Ivory Handle .. 7/6 | Kropp's Strop Paste, 6d.

From all Dealers. — Wholesale: OSBORNE, GARRETT, & CO., LONDON, W.

TRADE MARK (REGD.)

The YŌST Typewriter

HAS NO RIBBON.

Awarded FOUR GOLD MEDALS

(Highest Award Wherever Shown)

PARIS, MONACO, KIMBERLEY, and LAUNCESTON.

Writes three times as fast as the Pen; makes several copies at one operation.

THE YOST IS BEING UNIVERSALLY ADOPTED. USED BY

HER MAJESTY'S GOVERNMENT.
THE EMPEROR OF GERMANY.
THE INDIAN and COLONIAL GOVTS.
THE KING OF WURTEMBURG.
THE DUKE OF NEWCASTLE.
THE EARL OF SEFTON.
THE EARL OF DYSART.
VISCOUNT EMLYN.
THE LATE LORD MAYOR.
THE BARONESS DE WORMS.
MR. RIDER HAGGARD.
DR. NANSEN.

AND THOUSANDS OF COMMERCIAL AND PROFESSIONAL MEN.

THE YOST TYPEWRITER Co., Ltd., 40, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

And at PARIS, MANCHESTER, BIRMINGHAM, LEEDS, LIVERPOOL, GLASGOW, and BELFAST.

ARTISTIC HOMES.

"ABOUT OUR HOMES."

MAPLE & CO. "ABOUT OUR HOMES." (Hazell, 1s.). Maple & Co. will be happy to SEND a COPY of this little BOOK, which contains much interesting information upon DECORATION and other matters in connection with modern furnishing, free of charge, upon application.

BEDROOM SUITES

1,000 BEDROOM SUITES

1,000 BEDROOM SUITES at from 70s. to £300, forming a selection without parallel in the world, in every conceivable variety of style and design, and every description of woods at prices ranging from £3 10s. to £300, thus readily suiting every class of residence. Every one about to furnish should visit the Exhibition of Bedroom Furniture.

MAPLE & CO LTD

TOTTENHAM COURT RD. LONDON

The Largest and most Convenient

FURNISHING ESTABLISHMENT IN THE WORLD

EASY CHAIRS

FIVE HUNDRED TO SELECT FROM

MAPLE & CO. have always on show an immense assortment of their world-famous, luxuriously comfortable Easy Chairs, Lounges, and Settees, in various shapes and coverings, all ready for immediate delivery, and at most moderate prices. A Comfortable Easy Chair is always an acceptable present.

TURKEY CARPETS

FINE QUALITIES

MAPLE & CO wish to direct special attention to some very choice Turkey Carpets now on show, remarkable both for their exceptionally fine quality and purity of colouring—many being exact reproductions of the most beautiful specimens of XVII. century art.

NEZOOM CARPETS

NEZOOM CARPETS

MAPLE & CO.'s NEZOOM CARPETS (Registered) are now on show, in all the new patterns and colourings. These carpets, being of the finest quality, and made entirely without seam or join, will wear admirably, and all waste in matching is avoided. List of Sizes post-free

Marza Wine.

The Latest, Most Palatable & Scientific IRON AND COCA WINE.

SPECIAL REPORT IN THE "LANCET," July 1st, 1893.

"The Marza Wine is agreeable to the palate, and is valuable not merely as a stimulant but also as a Tonic, from the presence of a considerable quantity of Iron, also the principles of the Coca Leaf, Phosphorus, and Pepsine. The formula of Marza Wine is a commendable one and thoughtfully planned."

MARZA WINE IS INVALUABLE FOR CONVALESCENTS, ESPECIALLY AFTER ACCOUCHEMENT, INFLUENZA, &c. FOR DEBILITATED MEN, DELICATE WOMEN, GROWING CHILDREN, AND ALL FEELING BELOW PAR.

Marza Wine.

AWARDED THE GOLD MEDAL —FOR— PURITY, PALATABILITY AND EXCELLENCE.

RECOMMENDED BY EMINENT PHYSICIANS FOR

ANÆMIA, INSOMNIA, NERVOUS DEBILITY, BRAIN FAG, INDIGESTION, MENTAL DEPRESSION, EXHAUSTION, VOCAL FATIGUE, NEURALGIA, &c.

MARZA WINE makes rich red blood and gives tone and vigour to all the vital organs.

Price 3/9 per Large Bottle, 42/- per doz. Everywhere, or Carriage Paid of THE MARZA CO. Ltd., 19, Wilson Street, London, E.C.

RHEUMATISM, &c. Great English Oil of Peppermint Cure (as recommended by a sufferer in this paper, page 142, 27th July) never fails to cure the very worst cases of RHEUMATISM, Sciatica, Lumbago, Neuralgia, HEADACHE, &c. Send name and address for full particulars free of THE MELANOCA COMPANY, Mitcham. Hundreds of testimonials. Please mention this paper.

WHAT IS BEAUTY?

Fresh, Clear, Firm Complexions, and a Beautiful Figure.

ANNA RUPPERT, the Eminent Lecturess, under Royal patronage, can give you all that is required to make you an envied woman. Try RUPPERT'S SKIN TONIC. Harmless, effective, and permanent. Does not require continued use; refreshes and makes any complexion firm and girlish. Nothing magic, but a perfect tonic, used locally.

ARTISTIC MANICURING.—Have your hands and finger nails made beautiful, 4s. 6d.

BEST CHIROPODIST in London; reasonable.

SPECIAL LONG-WAISTED CORSET (perfection), 12s. 6d.

PUREST COMPLEXION SOAP in the world, 1s. (three for 2s. 6d).

BEAUTIFUL Illustrated BOOK, "NATURAL BEAUTY," contains much valuable information. Sent to any address, 4d. in stamps. All advice upon the subject of Face, Hair, Hands, Feet, and Figure given freely. No charge. Consultation with Mrs. RUPPERT daily between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. All clients' names sacred. All letters in perfect confidence. Special treatment for special cases. Don't suffer with red faces, acne, eczema, oily skins, &c. Write at once, for SKIN TONIC has been subjected to the best doctors in England and pronounced harmless and beneficial. 10s. 6d. per bottle; three bottles (usually necessary), 25s. Call or address, the Complexion Specialist,

ANNA RUPPERT,
89, Regent Street, London, W.

Also at: 124, Western-road, BRIGHTON; 3a, Shandwick-place, EDINBURGH; 74, Grafton-street, DUBLIN; 8, King-st., MANCHESTER; Clarence Chambers, Corporation-street, BIRMINGHAM; 66, Marland-place, SOUTHAMPTON; 17, Rue de la Paix, PARIS; BERLIN, VIENNA, MADRID, BARCELONA, CALCUTTA, SYDNEY, &c.

JEWSBURY & BROWN'S

White, Sound Teeth, Healthy Gums to Old Age.

Oriental Tooth Paste.

CAUTION.—The only genuine is JEWSBURY & BROWN'S.

Pots 1/6 and 2/6. All Chemists.

60 YEARS IN USE.

TAYLOR'S CIMOLITE

Is the only thoroughly harmless SKIN POWDER. Prepared by an experienced Chemist, and constantly prescribed by the most eminent Skin Doctors. Post free. Sent for 14 or 36 penny stamps. MOST INVALUABLE.

J. TAYLOR, Chemist, 13, Baker-street, London, W.

ALL FAT PEOPLE

can safely Reduce Weight and cure Corpulency permanently by taking TRILENE TABLETS (Regd.) for a few weeks. They are small, agreeable, harmless, and never fail to IMPROVE both HEALTH and FIGURE without change of Diet. An English Countess writes: "Your Trilene Tablets act admirably." Send 2s. 6d. to THE TRILENE Co., Sole Proprietors, 70, FINSBURY PAVEMENT, LONDON.

TOO FAT.

Dr. GORDON'S Elegant Pills cure STOUTNESS, rapidly and certainly. State height, weight, and send 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., or 11s. to DR. GORDON, 24, Hart-street, Bloomsbury, London.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT

PURELY VEGETABLE, Perfectly Harmless. Will reduce from two to five pounds per week; acts on the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into Fat. Sold by Chemists. Send stamp for pamphlet.

Botanic Medicine Co., 3, New Oxford-street, London, W.C.

THE GREAT QUESTION OF HEALTH.
WHAT TO DRINK?

PITKEATHLY TABLE WATER.

As a remedial agent in cases of sluggish liver, plethoric states of the system, chronic affections of the organs of respiration and circulation, gastric derangement and biliousness, it has been pronounced by medical men of high authority as most efficacious.

"I use the Aerated Pitkeathly largely, and value it."—Dr. MATTHEWS DUNCAN.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

London: INGRAM & ROYLE, 52, Farringdon-st., E.C., and at Liverpool.
" WM. BEST & SONS, 22, Henrietta-street, Cavendish-square, W.

Sole Proprietors, REID & DONALD, Perth.

SUN LIFE OFFICE

FOR BUSINESS FACILITIES

LARGE CASH BONUSES

AND SPEEDY SETTLEMENTS.

ESTD. 1810.

Apply for NEW PROSPECTUS at the Chief Office, 63, THREADNEEDLE STREET, E.C.

HARRIS C. L. SAUNDERS, General Manager.

ACCIDENTS OF TRAVEL

AND ALL OTHER ACCIDENTS INSURED AGAINST BY

The Railway Passengers' Assurance Company,

THE OLDEST AND LARGEST COMPANY PROVIDING FOR

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.

64, CORNHILL, LONDON. W. D. MASSY, A. VIAN, } Secs.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

MEMBERS OF THE STOCK EXCHANGE are NOT ALLOWED to ADVERTISE for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than their own principals.

Brokers or Agents who advertise are not in any way connected with the Stock Exchange, or under the control of the Committee.

List of Members of the Stock Exchange who act as Stock and Share Brokers may be obtained on application to

FRANCIS LEVIEN,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.
Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

DOMINION of CANADA. — Quebec Central Railway Company. Issue of £100,000 Five per Cent. prior lien Bonds of £100 each, being the balance of a total issue of £300,000, authorised by special act of the Legislature of the Province of Quebec, of which £200,000 are issued and quoted in the Stock Exchange Official List. Repayable at par on the 1st February, 1908.

These Bonds constitute a first charge on the whole undertaking, of about 212 miles of railway, at the average rate of only about £1,415 per mile. 152 miles are in full operation, and have earned in each of the past four years more than sufficient to pay the interest on the entire issue of £300,000.

Issue price £102 10s. per Bond of £100, payable as follows:—

£5	0	0	per Bond on Application.
£27	10	0	,, on Allotment.
£35	0	0	,, on 15th September, 1893.
£35	0	0	,, on 15th January, 1894.
Total £102	10	0	per Bond.

Half-yearly Coupons are attached, payable in London on 1st February and 1st August, the first Coupon being payable on the 1st February, 1894.

Payment may be made in full under discount at the rate of 2½ per cent. per annum.

The Quebec Central Railway Company are prepared to receive applications for the £100,000 Bonds above referred to.

A survey of the route of the Chaudière Valley extension, originally contemplated by the Company, having been made, it has been found that a better route can be obtained by starting from near Tring Station on the Main Line, and continuing for about 60 miles, to a connection at Megantic with the International Railway (Canadian Pacific, Montreal and Halifax Short Line), which has been adopted, and the Subsidies voted by the Dominion and Provincial Legislatures have been transfered to the new route.

The Directors have received from Messrs. Holt & Lukes, Contractors, of Montreal, Canada, a satisfactory tender for the construction of the Tring and Megantic Branch, and the Contract will be given out so soon as the legal formalities are completed.

Through Trains, with Parlour and Sleeping Cars attached, already run daily between Levis (opposite Quebec) and Boston, and between Levis and Portland (Maine), also through Cars daily between Levis and Springfield for New York. When the Branch is completed it will form part of the shortest route between Quebec and the Maritime provinces.

Scrip certificates to bearer will be issued against letters of allotment and the bankers' receipts. The Bonds will be delivered after payment of the last instalment.

The Bonds are to bearer, but may be registered in the name of the owner at the office of the Company in London.

Applications for Bonds must be made on the form annexed to the prospectus.

In the event of no allotment being made the amount paid on application will be returned without deduction.

Should a less number of Bonds be allotted than are applied for, the balance paid on application will be applied towards payment of the amount due on allotment.

Failure to pay the amount of any instalment when due will render all previous payments liable to forfeiture.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be obtained at the Offices of the Company and of Martins Bank, Limited, the Bankers.

DIRECTORS.

Edward Dent, 11, Old Broad-street, London, President.
Horatio Brandon, 15, Essex-street, Strand, London.
Alexander Bremner, 38, New Broad-street, London.
Edmund Etlinger, 27, Cavendish-road West, London.
Frederick H. Norman, 68, Lombard-street, London.
Joseph Price, 5, Great Winchester-street, London.
Samuel Gurney Sheppard, 57, Old Broad-street, London.
Frank Grundy, Sherbrooke, Canada.

BANKERS.—Martins Bank, Limited, 68, Lombard-street, London.
SECRETARY.—T. Lindley.
No. 5, Great Winchester-street, London, E.C.
August 9th, 1893.

BIRKBECK BANK.—(Estab. 1851). Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane. Two and a-half per cent. interest allowed on deposits, repayable on demand. Two per cent. on current accounts, calculated on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £100.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, can be obtained, post free, on application to FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES TO PRIVATE INSURERS.

THE IMPERIAL INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED. FIRE. Est. 1803, 1, Old Broad-st., E.C., & 22, Pall Mall, S.W. Subd. Capital, £1,200,000. Paid-up, £300,000. Total funds, £1,600,000.—E. COZENS SMITH, Gen. Man.

THE EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY OF THE UNITED STATES.

LONDON OFFICE: 81, CHEAPSIDE, E.C.

ASSETS OVER .. .. £31,800,000.
SURPLUS EXCEEDS .. .. £6,400,000.

This Society originated the Tontine System of Life Assurance, under which the premiums paid form a lucrative investment, and not an expense, affording provision for old age as well as immediate family provision in the event of death.

ABSOLUTE SECURITY. LOW PREMIUMS. LARGE PROFITS.

Before assuring elsewhere, send for Prospectus and Illustrative Pamphlets.

A. MUNKITTRICK, Manager for Great Britain and Ireland.

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE
63, Threadneedle-street, London, E.C.
FOUNDED 1710.
THE OLDEST PURELY FIRE OFFICE IN THE WORLD.
SUM INSURED IN 1892,
£391,800,000.

(FIRE.)

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.—Holborn Bars, London.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF LIFE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITY BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
REVERSIONS PURCHASED.

Invested Funds, £16,000,000.

The last Annual Report can be obtained on application to the Secretary.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE COMPANY, Limited,
No. 10, ST. SWITHIN'S LANE, LONDON, E.C.
General Accidents. | Personal Injuries.
Railway Accidents. | Death by Accident.
C. HARDING, Manager.

JOHN SHAW, STOCK & SHARE DEALER.

HEAD OFFICE:—

WARDROBE CHAMBERS, DOCTORS' COMMONS, LONDON, E.C.

BANKERS:—
CAPITAL AND COUNTIES, Ludgate-hill, Long Acre, Piccadilly, and Brighton Branches.

LONDON AND MIDLAND, Newgate-street and Tooley-street Branches.

DIRECT PRIVATE TELEGRAPH WIRE between LONDON and BRIGHTON Offices.

FULL PARTICULARS of SPECIAL ARRANGEMENTS for DEALING sent post free on application.

COVER SYSTEM.—The loss is limited, the profits are unlimited, and there is such an independence in acting that the principle must and does recommend itself to business men—indeed, it is the only method on which they deal—for speculative accounts.

£5 COMMANDS £500 STOCK.
£10 COMMANDS £1,000 STOCK.
£50 COMMANDS £5,000 STOCK.
£500 COMMANDS £50,000 STOCK, and so on in proportion.

NO OTHER LIABILITY WHATEVER.

JOHN SHAW, STOCK AND SHARE DEALER,
LONDON, BRIGHTON, MANCHESTER, AND DUBLIN.

THE

GRESHAM

LIFE OFFICE,

ST. MILDRED'S HOUSE, POULTRY, LONDON, E.C.

THOMAS G. ACKLAND, F.I.A., F.S.S., Actuary and Manager. JAMES H. SCOTT, Secretary.

WEST-END BRANCH—3, WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.

Sir FRANCIS OSBORNE, Bart., Local Secretary.

FUNDS.

Assets	Exceed	£5,000,000
Annual Income (1892)		£913,602
Total Payments under Policies		£11,000,000

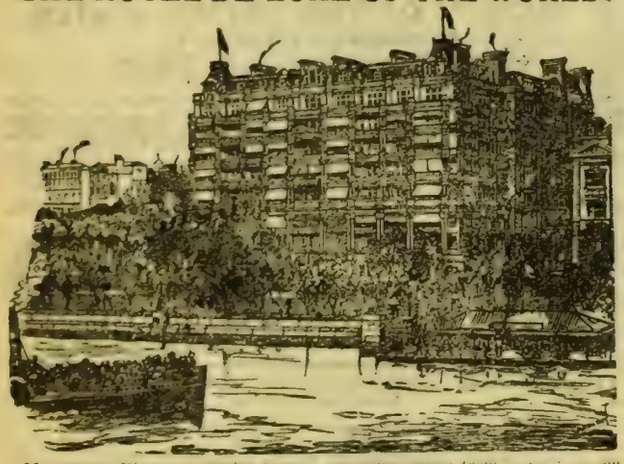
Moderate Rates of Premium. Liberal Scale of Annuities. Loans granted upon Security of Freehold, Copyhold, and Leasehold Property, Life Interests, and Reversions. Also to Corporate and other Public Bodies, upon Security of Rates, &c.

PROPOSAL FORMS, &c., to be obtained on application to the Society's Agents, or to the Head Office as above.

SAVOY HOTEL & RESTAURANT.

Victoria Embankment, LONDON.

'THE HOTEL DE LUXE OF THE WORLD.'



Magnificent River and Garden View Bedrooms, Single, from 7s. 6d.; Double, from 10s. 6d. Small and large suites, with bathrooms, &c., attached, from 25s. No charge for Light, Baths, and Attendance. Shaded Electric Light everywhere. No gas. The building is absolutely fireproof.

SAVOY RESTAURANT, with large terrace. The finest and only Open Air Restaurant in London. Private Rooms for Dinner Parties, &c.

THE VICTORIA ROOMS. Specially adapted for Balls, Banquets, Masonic and Regimental Dinners.

Chef de Cuisine, M. ESCOFFIER. Manager, L. ECHENARD.

General Manager, C. RITZ, Proprietor of the Hotel de Provence, Cannes.

LIQUEUR OF THE GRAND CHARTREUSE.

This most excellent Liqueur, the great preventive of Indigestion, and almost certain remedy for sea-sickness, can now be had of all Wine Merchants, and at prices much lower than formerly.

Sole Consignee, W. DOYLE, 35, Crutched Friars, London, E.C.

TAMAR INDIEN GRILLON

Very agreeable to take.

A LAXATIVE AND REFRESHING FRUIT LOZENGE FOR

CONSTIPATION,

HÆMORRHOIDS,
BILE,
HEADACHE,
LOSS OF APPETITE,
GASTRIC AND INTESTINAL TROUBLES.

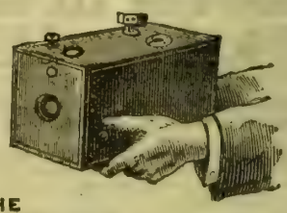
Box 2s. 6d., stamps included.

Sold by all Chemists and Druggists.

E. GRILLON,

69, Queen-street, Cheapside, London.

The Camera that takes the World!



THE

KODAK

No previous knowledge of Photography necessary.

"YOU PRESS THE BUTTON, WE DO THE REST,"

(Unless you prefer to do the rest yourself)

AND THE PICTURE IS FINISHED.

Price from £1 6s.

EASTMAN PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS CO. LD., 115-117 OXFORD-ST., LONDON, W.

SEND FOR PRETTY, ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, POST FREE.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

WORLD'S FAIR route to Chicago.

JAPAN and CHINA.—Fastest, finest, and only twin-screw Royal Mail Steamers on Pacific Ocean leave Vancouver every three weeks.

AROUND the WORLD Trips for £125.

SUMMER TOURS through Canadian Lakes and "Rockies."

FREE FARMS and Cash Bonus for Settlers.

For Tickets and Free Guide Books, apply Passenger Department, Canadian Pacific Railway, 67 and 68, KING WILLIAM STREET, LONDON, E.C.; 7, James-street, Liverpool; 105, Market-street, Manchester; 67, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow.

PATRONISED BY H.I.M. THE EMPRESS OF GERMANY

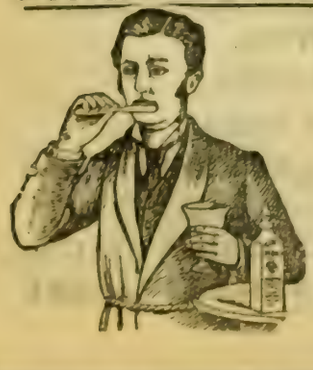
THE NOTED

"IPSWICH" POTTED MEATS.

Nothing can be better for the Yachting, Fishing, or Picnic Basket.

Sole Maker—R. SEAGER, IPSWICH.

Ask your Grocer.



DECAY OF THE TEETH

arises from various causes, but principally it may be attributed to early neglect or the indiscriminate use of tooth powders and pastes, which give a momentary whiteness to the teeth while they corrode the enamel. The timely use of that delicate aromatic tooth-wash,

FRAGRANT

SOZODONT

will speedily arrest the progress of decay, harden the gums, and impart a delightful fragrance to the breath. The formula of Sozodont includes only botanic ingredients, and it contains only the purest and most salutary of these.

OUR PUZZLES.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 754.

This has proved a somewhat difficult competition to decide. That Shakespeare was well acquainted with the game of Tennis is certain, and many competitors gave quotations actually referring to that sport as implying that the Bard had an anticipatory knowledge of Lawn Tennis. But this I consider was hardly a fair interpretation of what the puzzle demanded to be done. Several other competitors, with notable industry and ingenuity, constructed out of a number of Shakespearian extracts a kind of running commentary on Lawn Tennis. These were exceedingly cleverly done, but it is obvious that, having regard to the conditions laid down in giving the puzzle, the prize cannot be awarded for any such collection of quotations. At the same time, I cannot but heartily commend Dora, Leaf Rule, Zealandia, Mrs. E. Culverhouse, Infelix, Helen G. Burton, Ivy Leaves, Moonlighter, and Caledonia for the very exhaustive collection of quotations made by them. I have decided to award the prize to ADA for the quotation taken by her from the 35th Sonnet.

PRIZE QUOTATION.

"All men make 'faults.'"

This passage, it seems to me, implies a wonderful anticipatory knowledge on the part of Shakespeare of what was going to happen when Lawn Tennis became the fashionable pastime it now is. From my knowledge of the game all men do make "faults," in marked contrast to the lady players, who rarely attempting a very hard "service" make a correspondingly small number of "faults."

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 759.

The wasp is very much in evidence just now. The newspapers, in fact, are full of this insect and its phenomenal doings; and, so far as the silly season has gone, the sea serpent has, in comparison, been literally nowhere. Many of the bad qualities of the wasp have been already pointed out, but it possesses another drawback which I have not yet seen alluded to; and which renders it especially interesting from the point of view of a Puzzle Editor. That is to say, the wasp possesses a name for which, so far as I am aware, no perfect rhyme has ever been found. I am, of course, assuming that the word is pronounced as though spelt "wosp." Experience has repeatedly proved how ingenious TRUTH Puzzle competitors are in finding rhymes for the most difficult words; and it is, therefore, proposed to offer another opportunity for the display of this rhyming skill. The usual prize of Two Guineas is offered, that is to say, to the competitor who best succeeds in composing

A COUPLET OR QUATRAIN IN ANY ORDINARY METRE, AND ON ANY SUBJECT, IN WHICH ONE OF THE LINES SHALL END WITH A RHYME FOR THE WORD "WASP" AS USUALLY PRONOUNCED.

All answers must reach me, at the latest, by the morning of Monday, August 21 next.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 755.

This competition is one in which I can scarcely hope that my decision will commend itself to all those who are interested in it. It is certain that a verse conveying "a cool sensation" to one reader may have no such effect on another. For myself, however, I have taken great pains in the matter, having read all the verses received under conditions of time and temperature which it seemed to me would make my judgment more likely to be correct. As a result I have decided that the stanzas which most successfully carry out the requirements of the competition are those sent by NETHERBY and SEA DEW. The Prize has, therefore, been divided between these competitors.

PRIZE STANZAS.

Like a dewdrop's plash in a fairy well,
Like elfin chimes of a crystal bell,
The clear sweet clink, the mellifluous clink,
Of glace with glass, in an ice cool drink. Netherby.

A marble hall; cool fountains softly sprinkling
Their million jets 'mid palms that wave between,
And far away, like sleigh bells gaily tinkling,
Sweet music flowing from a harp unseen! Sea Dew

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Buildings, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on post-cards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand: whilst in the case of new competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 The real name and the address of IVANHOE, winner of Prize No. 754, are W. J. MCCOMBE, Esq., 22, Frederick-square, Posnett-street, Belfast.

 The real name and the address of GOODLES, winner of a half of Prize No. 750, are J. P. YABSLEY, Esq., 40, Bromar-road, Denmark Park, S.E.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.—I am obliged to you for sending an amended version of your lines on the sinking of the Victoria.

STANCHION.—I regret the misprint in your Shakespearian quotation, which should have read, "Then Angelo thy faults thus manifested," &c. The word "Angelo" is not very distinctly written, however, in your original answer.

H. W. TRENCHARD.—It is now too late to give the Puzzle you suggest. A similar one will, however, be probably given before long.

NEWNHAM.—It was not possible to find room to publish even a half of the quotations received.

IRISH.—Your suggestion is a very good one, and I am much obliged to you for sending it.

AICHDOUBLEU.—Your lines in answer to Puzzle No. 755 arrived too late for publication with the rest.

THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 756.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS.—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

RHYMED VERSES ON THE MODEL OF PRAED'S "GOOD-BYE TO THE SEASON."

 A considerable number of the verses received are not written in the required metre; and thus are rendered ineligible for the competition.—THE P. E.

We've dragged out the season's elastic
To well nigh its uttermost stretch,
For Paddy's necessity's drastic—
Poor downtrodden, clamouring wretch!
But now that, by help of the closure,
Home Rule is set up on its feet,
We'll pair with complacent composure,
And shake off the dust of the street.

No more need we crowd to the lobbies,
Or snigger at Wallace's wit.
We'll leave the guffaws to the bobbies;
We've paired and 'twere folly to split.
We're quit of the Whip and the Teller,
We've finished with gibes and abuse,
We're weary of badgering Mellor;
Let politics go to the deuce.

We've wept for our hapless Victoria,
Sea-swallowed in Tripoli Bay;
We've shouted a "Hoch!" and a "Gloria!"
For happy Victoria May.
Were Mounseer but sated as I am
Of questions, divisions, and House,
He'd stop potting natives in Siam,
And leave us in peace with the grouse.
Awful Warrior.

Here's Gladstone in capital feather,
And Sexton triumphant at last,
For there's no longer any doubt whether
Their Bill for Home Rule will be passed.
'Tis a time to be marked with red letter
By the "items" I cannot recall;
By the few—very few—who know better,
And the rest who know nothing at all.

What a hub-bub the thing has created—
This union of brass and of clay—
With Paddy, who'll never be sated,
And John Bull, who'll be called on to pay;
What a fuss it has made through the season,
What a time it has wasted in vain,
This commixture of folly and treason,
This last product of G.O.M.'s brain.

That open discussion would kill it
Its backers too certainly know,
So many the blunders that fill it,
So strong the attacks of the foe;
But, thank Heaven, the fight's not yet ended,
Though some to their trust are untrue;
For the country is yet well defended,
And the Lords it will never get through.
X.Q.Q.

'Tis going, 'tis gone, somewhat chequered
Has been its career, sooth to say,
The sunshine has beaten the record,
And "town" has been festive and gay.
But not all unmixed was the blessing
(As few blessings are, to say sooth),
The harvest lookout is distressing,
Our crops are destroyed by the drouth.

Such a gath'ring of Royalty's cousins
Was ne'er seen in London before;
Crowned heads have been with us in dozens,
Royal Highnesses, too, by the score.
But, alas! at the height of the season
(Let charity mingle with blame)
Our ships have gone down for no reason,
Our mines have blown up for the same.

The Wedding was splendour's quintessence,
There was ne'er a more happy despatch;
And George and May "know by these presents"
How well we are pleased with the match.
But while with its hand in our pocket
Joy cheated the moth and the rust,
The Mansion House Fund like a rocket
Went up, and came "down with the dust."
Marplot.

Good luck to the Bride and the Bridegroom!
They're gone, but their presents yet stay,
The Institute "fellows" denied room,
That they may be there on display.
The Queen and the Royal relations
Have parted (in tears, we don't doubt);
The Princes, at steamboats and stations,
Have joyfully bowed them all out.

The sportsmen who cheered Orme at Goodwood,
To Scotland, for shooting, are bound,
Though some, in a seafaring mood, would,
Of course, on the Solent be found.
But still at St. Stephen's we languish,
And still through the lobbies we trot;
Still fiendishly gloat o'er the anguish
Of Mellor, when tempers grow hot.

Though weary of Bartley's amending,
And Joseph's "ferocious" attacks,
While votes on Supply are still pending,
We dare not attendance relax.
But once the long Session is over,
And Home Rule the Commons has passed,
We'll off to Chicago and "Grover,"
To visit the World's Fair at last.
Netherby.

The wedding is over. The presents
Now claim the attention of all;
The public, both townsfolk and peasants,
Still storm the Imperial hall.
There, diamonds of the first water,
And jewels of every hue,
Showered down upon England's fair daughter,
Are spread for our wondering view.

There's more than one elegant carriage,
With horses and harness complete,
To honour this popular marriage,
And ponies, both pretty and fleet.
There's a sewing-machine and typewriter,
When useful employments delight,
For hours that are gayer and brighter,
Pianos to music invite.

See fans of all fashions and sizes,
Of pictures a gallery fair,
And painting whose beauty surprises
On panels of porcelain most rare.
'Tis well to have lineage royal,
When Hymen invites one to bliss.
What nation than England more loyal?
What wedding more favoured than this?
Excelsior.

Farewell to the season just waning,
The season of one eight nine three;
It hasn't been spoilt by the raining
And hailing we gen'rally see.
The weather's been very propitious
(The sun—oh, how hot it can be!),
And certainly quite as delicious
As that at the Queen's Jubilee.

The season, though one of great gladness,
Was marred by a shocking event:
The nation was plunged into sadness,
On Tryon's great blunder intent.
The Duke with his bride now rejoices
(At present on honeymoon bent),
And hundreds and thousands of voices
Shout welcomes and welcomes well meant.

And now all from town are departing,
Away from the dust and the smoke,
And hansoms and growlers are darting
About, filled with luggage and folk.
But stay! there are some, please remember,
Who don't think it much of a joke:
The Commons must sit till September,
Bound fast by Home Rule's Irish yoke.
Stanchion.

Good-bye to the Season! It leaves me
With quite a small pang of regret,
No single event in it grieves me,
And nothing I fain would forget;
I saw all its sights and its glories,
The Drawing Rooms, concerts, and balls,
Old Gladstone attacked by the Tories,
And nothing dismayed at their calls.

The Queen has been getting quite young, Sirs,
She opened the Institute new,
And there, while the masses gave tongue, Sirs,
I got a magnificent view;
I watched my dear boy, who's at Eton,
Play marvellous cricket at Lord's,
Though one should be very discreet on
Such subjects when feats he records.

I saw the brave show at the marriage
Of Prince George and fair Princess May,
I watched the bright bride in her carriage,
And saw her speed blithely away;
I saw all the Opera splendid
With lights and with roses galore,
And now I have done what most men did,
And hied me away to the shore. Almaviva.

Alas for "M.P.'s," since their labours
Are past, I'm afraid, near an end.
Neither "Reds," nor their opposite neighbours,
Would like to their "Parties" offend;
So there they must stay in their places,
And long weary hours endure,
And try with inglorious faces,
To banish the thoughts which allure.

Their dreams are of moor and of mountain,
They walk home, instead of "cabbing," for change.
They pass by the Shaftesbury fountain,
And glare at that monument strange;
Let it only reminds them of "questions"
Anent our disorderly streets,
And in hopes to forget these suggestions,
They push home to lose care 'twixt the sheets.

How "riling" to read in a letter,
From one who has managed to "pair,"
That he finds himself very much better,
And, eke, that the weather keeps fair.
But things mundane, we know, have an ending,
And tho' worried "M.P.'s" now feel sore,
Let us hope, when their ways they are wending
From Town, they'll forget what they bore.

Plumepierre.

HER FIRST SEASON.

Good night to the Season! 'tis ended,
Farewell to flirtation and fun;
For the curtain, alas! has descended,
Ere it seemed that the play had begun.
Farewell to the park and the carriage,
The fresh morning rides in the Row,
The pomp of the Princess's marriage,
The Imperial Institute show.

The Sunday parade and the dresses,
The decorum of dinner and drum;
The balls and the bouquets, and guesses
From whom they could possibly come.
The wagers, the luncheons, the coaches
At Ascot or Sandown or Lord's;
The laughter, the chaff, the reproaches,
The pleading of passionate words.

The watching for one who ne'er misses,
Who is constant, and tender, and true;
For the clasp of a hand, for the kisses
Which I oughtn't to like—but I do.
Good night to the Season! 'tis over,
But I'll bear it as well as I can,
For at least it has brought me a lover,
Which I hadn't—before it began.

Kathleen.

Hurrah! we leave London to-morrow,
I thought, with a sense of delight,
When, feigning a lachrymose sorrow,
I wished both my daughters good night.
This season has altered completely
Some notions of living in town,
Though my wife just now whispered sweetly,
"You must have enjoyed it, my own."

Enjoyed it! By Jove, if a camel
Delights in the load on his back,
If fishes are pleased with a trammel
When skilfully laid in their track,
Then have I imbibed a full measure
Of joy in the regions of bliss.
Our road up the mountain of pleasure
Was hot in a season like this.

The Derby, the Wedding, the Cricket,
The Pictures, the Dinners, the Balls,
And Ascot (two guineas a ticket),
To say nought of opera stalls.
Led on by the soft wiles of beauty
(I mean of my daughters and wife),
Like a slave I've stuck to my duty,
And shortened the years of my life.

Offa.

The season is over and ended,
Desolation reigns over Pall Mall,
Tall youths and fair maidens have wended
To mountain, to moor, and to fell.
No steeds in the Row are seen prancing,
Their riders have vanished away;
There's an end to the music and dancing,
The jewels, and costly array.

The American heiress has taken
Her millions to spend them at Loo.
The English milords are forsaken,
And all look exceedingly blue.
The wedding we're thankful is over;
The papers again we can read.
Princess May can be left with her lover
The Sandringham cattle to feed.

'Twas a season of sunshine and sorrow,
Knells mingled with marriage bell gay;
Smiles followed by tears on the morrow
For our sailors in Tripoli's Bay.
Bright jewels the fair bride adorning
Were matched by the tears flowing free
From the eyes of sad widows moaning
Brave men sleeping under the sea.

Vicar.

And now the great season is ending;
But what has it left in its train?
I hear shouts of triumph ascending;
I hear a long echo of pain.
In a glow of great splendour and gladness,
It dawned like the seasons of old,
Till a hush of deep sorrow and sadness,
On the evening of bright June was told.

And then with a sound of rejoicing,
The sweet month of July was hailed,
When arches, and banners, and mottoes,
Round the squares and the wide streets were nailed.
With the bells from cathedrals all ringing,
A procession in splendour passed on,
While the voice of a nation's loud singing
Was echoed through country and town.

And now the gay season is ending,
Leaving memories of pleasure and pain;
Good-bye! till with bright summer weather,
We hail it in sunshine again.
For some it came laden with gladness,
To deck their gold pathway with flowers;
For others the night of deep sadness
Has darkened its golden-voiced hours.

Oar Cross.

There's an end to the balls and the dancing,
There's an end to the dust and the glare;
In the Row are no thoroughbreds prancing,
In the Park are no mashers to stare.
No longer my brain must be worrying
Which dinner or fête to attend;
My hosts over Europe are scurrying,
To my desolate Club I must wend.

The Mall, with its diamonds sparkling,
At the wedding of George and of May,
Is now all deserted and darkling,
The belles of the season away.
My wife and my children are sailing,
Enjoying the sweet summer breeze;
While I the street 'buses am hailing,
And earning a few guinea fees.

The concert, the play, and the dinner,
Are all of them things of the past;
And I, a disconsolate sinner,
To the stool of my office chained fast.
My home's given over to paint and repair,
My study's no longer my own;
The end of the season to me means despair,
For in London I'm left all alone.

Ivy Leaves.

Good-bye to the pert London sparrow,
Adieu to the 'Varsity match,
Farewell to the "Eton and Harrow,"
As I dive down the after hatch.
No more of frivolities racy,
A truce to Society's lies,
My mainsail—Sir George Lewis pace—
I can fearlessly scandalise.

I gladly quit square, street, and place,
Have aimed my last handful of rice,
Morganatic'ly tied, the mainbrace
Is the chum I shall fitfully splice.
No more does the opera trouble,
Chevalier recitals are o'er,
And the rest, not at billiards, scores double
Sans frocks—what a blessing galore!

No music-hall syrens I fear,
Bars are not now a Gaiety tip,
The whistles—no soft ones—I hear
Never breathed from fair woman's lip.
Now swells, not of clubland, I greet,
Rising up with most graceful of bows,
The milkmaid may tread my old beat,
I make a fresh one to fetch Cowes!

Lister.

Welcome the season of yachting,
The harbour is crowded with craft;
And stewards are busy allotting
The cabins and bunks fore and aft.
The swift racing boats are all ready,
For there are matches to-day;
The signal gun booms—All now steady,
Spread out your white wings and away.

Society's darlings are present,
The snobs of Society too;
The Peer is there, so is the peasant,
All eager the racing to view.
Vanity stalks like the peacock;
But what does half the world say?
"See yourself as others"—oh, cruel shock,
Let 'em live in their plumage to-day.

Oh, welcome the gay yachting season,
While it's on take the fill of its joys,
For soon comes regret—but 'tis treason
To talk of this much to the boys.
The club boys, I mean; jolly fellows,
Who are in the swim to the last,
Carcening about on the billows
Long after the season is past.

Aichdoubleu

Farewell to the season in sorrow,
Farewell to its empty show;
Farewell to the swells who borrow,
Farewell to friend and foe.
Farewell, farewell to the season,
It has been, no worse than of yore;
It is never "a feast of reason;"
Don't we always say it's "a bore"?

A joyful farewell to Home Rulers;
May their vulgar laughs cease;
They have served as useful coolers,
And taught us the value of peace.
Farewell to the wearisome speeches,
From which we learnt nothing at all;
We hie to the river's beaches
From politics that pall.

Farewell to contention and riot,
The strife of Party and place;
Welcome Father Thames and his quiet,
His gudgeon, roach, and dace.
Farewell to the season of matches
'Twixt Prince and millionaire,
Miss Vanderbilt's one of the catches
Of this year's Vanity Fair.

Perplexed.

Good night and good reason, 'tis over,
The West-end no longer is gay—
The masher, fond maiden, and lover
Are gone to the seaside away.
There's nothing in town to invite one,
E'en Members in frenzy carouse,
All laws of precedence abandon,
And kick up a row in the House.

Good-bye for this reason, 'tis ended,
Festivities' brilliant display;
Departed the ones we befriended,
And joined the white Rose to its May.
There's nought been attempted left undone
To make the whole nation rejoice;
One blaze of delight lit up London,
And cheered them God-speed in one voice.

Good luck for one reason, 'tis over,
Fanatics no longer will bray
Of sycophants wrapped up in clover,
Or knighted in honour of May.
Dear TRUTH, I would rather abandon
All joy for the sorrow that's borne,
And grant a Victoria's pension
To widows and orphans we mourn.

Sol.

The Duke and his Duchess are married,
The functions endured and discussed;
In a week or two, who will have tarried
In town save poor wretches who must?
I really can bear it no longer—
Such dulness around, yet no rest;
Man's nerves should be very much stronger,
By modern inflictions oppressed.

Fate's death-wheel turns faster and faster,
Or so to the living it seems;
The air is all dark with disaster,
More horrid than horrors of dreams.
Then politics: Parliament's yellow
With jaundice of Irish disputes;
The country's as bad—not one fellow
But champions Home Rule or refutes.

Quite the newest new topic is Siam,
And possible ructions with France.
Who's not sick of it all? At least, I am;
I'll be off; let the world take it's chance.
Ten o'clock! Then I'll start by eleven.
What land shall my solitude screen?
Oh, is there a spot under Heaven
Where newspapers never are seen?

Mos.

Stanzas have also been received from Lancastrian, Grip, Cordova, The Ghost, Comtesse Olga, Mab, Qu'appelle, Cantab, A. C., Boiled Rice, Snowdrop, Esperanza, Bloater Paste, Milly, A. H. C., Adonis, Metheglin, Stroke Oar, W. W. S., Merry, R. W. Stepney, Nono, Vashti, America, M. M., Diaper, Blue Ruin, C. C. R., and Vampire.

A THIN PAPER EDITION OF "TRUTH"

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

AND CAN BE OBTAINED ON ORDER OF ALL NEWSAGENTS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

To the Continent, America, Australia, New Zealand, or the Colonies (India and China excepted), on the following terms:—

Three Months	£0 7 7
Six Months	0 15 2
Twelve Months	1 10 4

To India, and China, on the following terms:—

Three Months	£0 8 2
Six Months	0 16 3
Twelve Months	1 12 6

And to any address in the United Kingdom—Three Months, 7s.; Six Months, 14s.; Twelve Months, 28s.

[illegible] 3s. 6d. Cases for Binding TRUTH in Half-yearly Volumes, price 3s. 6d.

Post-Office Orders are to be made payable at [illegible] to Mr. Eric E. Bowker, Truth Buildings, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's Gate London, S.W. Cheques to be crossed Williams, Deacon, & Co.

PUNISHMENT for LOOKS.

Among the ancients, if two persons were suspected of having committed a crime, and it was not clear which was guilty, the better-looking one was released and the other punished. Whether rightly or wrongly, people are still largely judged by their faces. High character may shine out through every feature and yet the face be made almost repulsive with pimples or other disfigurements. Much harm may be done to the complexion by strong, highly-scented, coloured soaps, and the public is appreciating more and more every day the importance of a pure soap for toilet use. In perfect health the skin may withstand powerful or impure soap, but not so if there be a little dyspepsia or biliousness. A soap which embodies the most modern advances in manufacture is "Vinolia" Soap, which is guaranteed pure by the makers, and is one usually recommended by medical men and especially dermatologists.

"Vinolia" Soap—Premier 4d., Floral 6d., Balsamic 8d., Toilet 10d., and Vestal 2/6.
"Vinolia" Cream (for Itching, Face Spots, &c.), 1/1½ and 1/9 per box.
"Vinolia" Powder (for Redness, Roughness, &c.), 1/- and 1/9 per box.

BLONDEAU ET CIE., Ryland Rd., London, N.W.

THE GREAT SECRET.

How LIPTON'S TEAS have reached a pinnacle of Success NEVER BEFORE ATTAINED by ANY TEA in the WORLD.

LIPTON BRINGS HIS TEAS DIRECT FROM THE TEA GARDENS TO THE CONSUMER, and is Sole Proprietor of the following celebrated TEA ESTATES, which cover thousands of acres of the best Tea Land in Ceylon, viz.:—Dambatenne, Laymastotte, Monerakande, Mahadambatenne, Mousakelle, Pooprassie, Hanagalla, and Gigranella. He has also extensive Export and Shipping Warehouses in Colombo and Calcutta, thereby

ABOLISHING ENTIRELY ALL MIDDLEMEN'S PROFITS.

WHY PAY MORE,

WHEN AT LIPTON'S YOU CAN BUY

THE FINEST TEA THE WORLD PRODUCES

NO HIGHER PRICE. At 1/7 per lb. NO HIGHER PRICE.

RICH, PURE, 1/- and 1/4 per lb. AND FRAGRANT.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Delivered carriage paid for an extra 1d. per lb. to any address in Great Britain on orders of 5 lbs. and upwards.
Samples sent free on application. A GUARANTEE.—Money returned in full if Tea does not give perfect satisfaction in every way.

LIPTON, Tea and Coffee Planter, Ceylon.
The Largest Tea, Coffee, and Provision Dealer in the World.

Ceylon Tea and Coffee Shipping Warehouses:—Maddema Mills, Cinnamon Gardens, Colombo.
Indian Tea Shipping Warehouses and Export Stores:—Hare-street, Strand, Calcutta.
Ceylon Office:—Upper Chatham-street, Colombo.
Indian Offices:—Dalhousie-square, Calcutta.
GENERAL OFFICES: BATH STREET, CITY ROAD, LONDON, E.C.
Branches and Agencies throughout the World.

OVER ONE MILLION PACKETS LIPTON'S TEAS SOLD WEEKLY IN GREAT BRITAIN ALONE, AND THE SALE INCREASING BY LEAPS AND BOUNDS ALL THE TIME.

The ÆOLIAN

is conceded by the WORLD'S BEST MUSICIANS to be without question

THE GREATEST MUSICAL INVENTION OF MODERN TIMES.

THIS Unique and Wonderful Instrument is not only adapted to the wants of the Trained Musician, but can also be played by Anyone AFTER A FEW DAYS' PRACTICE; so that every home can have, by means of the "ÆOLIAN," any piece of music ever written—from the simple Psalm to the most intricate Opera, Waltz, March, or Dance. The Musical Expression, or Tone Colour, can be varied entirely at the will of the player, the "ÆOLIAN" responding as promptly to any change of tempo, or degree of power, as a well-drilled Orchestra.

Testimonials have been received from the following Eminent Artists and Musicians, viz.:—

Mons. Jean de Reszke; Mons. J. Lassalle; Mons. Edouard de Reszke; Signor Luigi Arditi; Senor Pablo Sarasate; Mons. A. Vianesi; C. W. Pearce, Mus. Doc., Cantab.; Madame Berthe Marx; Herr Anton Seidl; and many other prominent members of the Musical Profession.

A VISIT TO OUR SHOW ROOMS WILL BE ESTEEMED A FAVOUR.

Price from £25 to £104.

GEORGE WHIGHT & Co.

225, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

(Sole Licencees for England.)

"WORTH A GUINEA A BOX."

BEECHAM'S PILLS.

LARGEST SALE IN THE WORLD.

A WONDERFUL MEDICINE for all Bilious and Nervous Disorders, such as

SICK HEADACHE, CONSTIPATION, WEAK STOMACH, IMPAIRED DIGESTION, DISORDERED LIVER, and FOR FEMALE AILMENTS.

Prepared only by the Proprietor, THOMAS BEECHAM, St. Helen's, Lancashire.

Sold by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Dealers everywhere, in Boxes 9½d., 1s. 1½d., & 2s. 9d. each. Full directions with each box.

BEECHAM'S TOOTH PASTE.

Will recommend itself; it is efficacious, economical, cleanses the teeth, perfumes the breath, removes tartar, and prevents decay. It is composed of the best known ingredients for neutralising the acids of the mouth, preventing all deleterious deposits upon the teeth, and is a pleasant and reliable dentifrice.

BEECHAM'S TOOTH PASTE is put up in collapsible tubes. Of all Druggists, or from the Proprietor, for ONE SHILLING, postage paid.

PIANOS ON THE THREE YEARS' HIRE SYSTEM.

This system is carried out extensively, liberally, and equitably by CHARLES STILES & CO., 40 and 42, Southampton-row, Holborn, W.C. The pianoforte becomes the absolute property of the hirer at the expiration of three years, or may be returned at any time, at the option of the hirer. The rates charged are the same as for ordinary hire, and no addition is made to the price. PIANOS, GRAND and UPRIGHT, new and second-hand, by BORD, BECHSTEIN, and other high-class Makers, at from 10s. 6d. to 100s. per month. Lists and all particulars will be forwarded post-free on application to

STILES & CO., 40 and 42, Southampton-row, Holborn, London, W.C

Influenza Increasing.

Physicians on the Continent strongly advise, as a preventative and most efficacious cure, natural aperients, especially the purgative water of

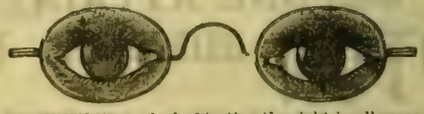
RUBINAT LLORACH.

Small doses only required.

E. GALLAIS & CO.,

90, PICCADILLY, W.

OUR EYES.



Mr. JOHN BROWNING'S method of testing the sight in all cases of defective vision ensures spectacles or folders suiting each eye and fitting perfectly. Consultations free.

JOHN BROWNING,
Ophthalmic Optician,
63, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.
(Author of "Our Eyes," now in its 14th Edition),
Sent post-free for 1s.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE.

INCORPORATED A.D. 1720.

Funds, £4,000,000. Claims Paid, £36,000,000.

LIFE. FIRE. SEA. ANNUITIES.

For the Latest Developments of Life Assurance, consult the Prospectus of the Corporation.

Full particulars on application to

Chief Office—ROYAL EXCHANGE, E.C.

OR TO

29, PALL MALL, S.W.

TANN'S

£5 5s.

SAFES.

LISTS FREE.

NEWGATE ST.

Printed for the Proprietor by WYMAN & SONS, Limited, Great Queen-st. W.C. and published at 10, Bolt-ct. Fleet-st. E.C. in the Parish of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st. Queen Anne's-gate, S.W.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici.—Cicero."

No. 868. Vol. XXXIV. Thursday, August 17, 1893. Price Sixpence.

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor should be sent direct to the Editorial Offices, Carteret-street, S.W., and not to the Publishing Offices in Bolt-court, Fleet-street.

No communication can be dealt with in the current issue of Truth if received later than the First Post on a Monday.

ENTRE NOUS.

THE Queen is to leave Osborne to-morrow (Thursday) week, about five o'clock in the afternoon, and her Majesty will arrive at Balmoral at three o'clock in the afternoon of Friday, the 25th. The Queen will not travel by way of Portsmouth, but she is to cross from East Cowes in the Alberta to the Clarence Yard at Gosport, whence the special train of the London and North-Western Company's carriages, which is always used for her Scotch journeys, will convey her direct to Ballater.

The Prince of Wales paid a visit the other day to Mr. and Mrs. William James at West Dean Park, their place near Chichester. Mr. James has expended an enormous sum in altering, enlarging, and decorating the house at West Dean (which is one of the finest in Sussex) since he purchased the estate of 8,000 acres about two years ago from Mr. Bowyer. West Dean was long the seat of the Peacheys, who were raised to the Peerage in 1804 with the title of Lord Selsey. The grounds are very pretty, and there is a well-wooded park, from which are beautiful views of the South Downs. The Duke and Duchess of Teck were to have stayed at West Dean Park for Goodwood races, but they were kept away by the death of his sister.

Nearly a year ago I announced that the Duke of Connaught would succeed Sir Evelyn Wood at Aldershot, and my intimation was decisively contradicted in some carping quarters. A few weeks back I repeated my former announcement on the subject, and then the Times stated officially that the Duke would remain at Portsmouth until August, 1895. Now, his appointment to Aldershot is officially announced. The fact is that there was recently a hitch, which threatened to stop the Duke's promotion, but it has been overcome, after he had pretty well made up his mind to stay on at Portsmouth.

The Duke is a popular Prince, who, by all accounts, has never made an enemy, and he has the credit of being a capable soldier, with a genuine interest in his profession. Neither of these circumstances, however, is sufficient to justify his being appointed to the Aldershot command. Had there been no one else with pre-eminent claims to the post, it would still have been felt that the Duke of Connaught is selected, not by reason of his personal or professional merits, but because he is the Queen's son. As it is, his appointment means the exclusion of an officer with unrivalled qualifications for the post, and it will therefore justly excite indignation and disgust. Seldom, indeed, has Court influence been exerted with more flagrant disregard for the public interest. This job will only increase the anxiety which is felt in the country as to what is to be done with Lord Roberts.

On Tuesday next the Dowager Lady Erroll is to succeed the Dowager Lady Southampton as Lady-in-Waiting on the Queen. She is to accompany her Majesty to Balmoral, and will remain at Court until September 12.

A correspondent writes:—

Heligoland has been ruined as a watering-place by its cession to Germany, and the splendid Kurhaus and bath-house which have recently been built are quite empty. Only "cheap trippers" now visit the island, which has been abandoned by the Princes, nobles, and merchants who used to come regularly every summer, and stay for weeks together. The immense fortifications which have been constructed have quite altered the island, which, moreover, now swarms with artillerymen, and officers belonging to every branch of the army are constantly coming and going. When Heligoland was given over to Germany by Lord Salisbury, it was announced by the Tory papers that the rights of those of the inhabitants who might choose to remain British had been thoroughly safeguarded; but this assurance has proved to be a perfect flim-flam. Any one who declared for remaining British was prevented from plying with boats, which practically meant ruin. Then a poll-tax of 120 marks a year was imposed on the Britons, and finally they were ordered to be officially described as foreigners, which meant that they were deprived of the right to acquire or to own property on the island.

There has been some lamentable muddling in the public band arrangements for the present season at Folkestone. For some years the matter was in the hands of a voluntary committee, which raised a considerable sum, and expended it on a few concerts by crack military bands. The subscriptions, however, fell away, and power was obtained by Parliament for the raising of a half-penny rate in aid of the public bands. The rate realised £320, and this was handed over to the old committee, reinforced by two or three representatives of the Corporation. The result of it all is that about £400 is being spent on fourteen military concerts, whereas the amount of the rate alone would have procured the exclusive services of a first-class band for six or seven weeks. The ratepayers, among whom there was a strong opposition to the band-rate, are chiefly to blame for this result. For less than 1d. in the pound they could provide a splendid band to perform in different parts of the town throughout the season; and if they had the sense to profit by the example of Scarborough, Eastbourne, and other places, they would realise that no form of municipal expenditure yields a more substantial return.

Scarborough, however, cannot be held up in all respects as a model of municipal perfection. The Corporation some time back vetoed over-head wires. As a result of this, residents on the South Cliff have been for several months deprived of a telegraph-office, the Post-office having declined to lay wires underground. There is, in consequence, a delay of about half-an-hour in despatching and delivering all messages. The Telephone Company also decline to go to the expense of under ground wires, so that the South Cliff is deprived of a telephone service. The objections to overhead wires are notorious; but they are not stronger in Scarborough than elsewhere. If a municipality for the public benefit have them removed, they ought to make provision for laying them underground, or the public loses more than it gains.

A correspondent writes from Eastbourne:—

The hotel-keepers and tradesmen here complain that the town is not as full as it ought to be at this time of year, but those who have been on the Parade during the last few days have found it quite full enough for comfort. There can certainly be no good reason why the place should not be full. With the exception of Sunday, when the brilliant show on the front was rather marred by a hot and suffocating sea-fog, the weather during the past ten days has been simply perfect, and there is the usual abundance of entertainments. Mr. Norfolk Megone has a first-rate orchestra at Devonshire Park, and the illuminated fêtes there started a fortnight ago. Among theatrical attractions we have just had "Walker" and "The Bumble Shop," and are to have this week Miss Fortescue's and Mr. Ben Greet's Companies. The German Reeds are coming, and Madame Albu, assisted by Signor Tito Mattei, and other celebrities, is giving concerts at the Town Hall. Among the notabilities here during the last week I have noticed Count and Countess Festetics, Lord Sandford, and Mr. Edward Carson, M.P., who has been rusticating in company with Mr. Dunbar Barton. The Princesse de Wagram, who has been making a long stay here, is still at the Cavendish.

Another correspondent sends me the following concerning East Anglia:—

That great shoulder of England which Norfolk thrusts into the North Sea attracts every year an increasing number of visitors and summer residents. At Overstrand, which may be described as a kind of "Chapel of Ease" to Cromer, a village of smart bungalows has sprung up, and bathing and lawn-tennis are in great request. Until now, Overstrand has escaped the enterprise of hotel-keepers. Children with brown bare legs, and innumerable dogs, crowd the sea-front. The commissariat is very well done. Meat and fish, poultry and groceries, are in the hands of very civil and obliging East Anglians, and vehicles can always be obtained at the "White Horse," the solitary inn, which enjoys a monopoly of potables. Lawn-tennis, tea, and young ladies attract the clergy, while the much-abounding juveniles of both sexes disport themselves all over the place.

Excursions are not wanting for those inclined to explore this corner of very old England. Just where the Wash joins the German Ocean are curious old sea-ports, such as Blakeney and Wells-by-the-Sea, not to be confounded with the bishopric of Wells held with Bath in the West Country. More inland lies Houghton, where Sir Robert Walpole hunted by day and fared sumptuously at night. Sandringham and Lynn are not far off. Those loving quaint and weird memories can visit Blickling Hall, round which the phantom coachman is said to drive the headless horses and funereal coach; Felbrigge, made notorious by "mad" Windham; and lonely Stanfield Hall, the house once held by the Jermy family, massacred by the assassin Rush.

Doncaster is not likely to be a success this year from the social point of view. There will be no party at Welbeck Abbey, which has usually sent a contingent of at least thirty; at Wentworth Woodhouse there are to be only a few members of Lord Fitzwilliam's family; while it is very doubtful whether Lord and Lady Wharncliffe will have any guests at Wortley, and it is understood that Nostell Priory will also be closed. It is believed that Lord Scarbrough and Lord Houghton will have small parties at Sandbeck Park and Frystone Hall respectively, and, no doubt, there will be contingents from Brocklesby, Edenthorpe, Wheatley, and Escrick.

There were extensive festivities last week at Dalzell Castle, Lanarkshire, to celebrate the coming of age of the eldest son of Lord Hamilton, the Liberal leader of that county. On Tuesday night, Lord Hamilton gave a dinner to about three hundred of the tenants in the tennis court of the Castle, and Mr. Hamilton was presented with several addresses and a number of valuable presents.

The Dowager Lady Huntly, who died on Thursday, had been in failing health for a long time. She was almost unknown in society, having resided for many years past entirely at Orton Longueville, her place near Peterborough, where she was very popular indeed. Lady Huntly was a very clever woman of business, and she managed the family estates for many years with conspicuous ability, and was then much beloved and esteemed on Deeside; but a generation has passed away since she left Aboyne Castle. She was a staunch Evangelical, having been converted to Low Church principles in early life by her neighbour in Hunts, the famous Lady Olivia Sparrow who had great influence over her. Lady Huntly was more than thirty years younger than her husband (who died in 1863), and he was the son of the "wicked" Marquis, who was described by Lord Cockburn in 1846 as "the contemptible monkey-faced wretch of a beau who danced at Versailles with Marie Antoinette about sixty years ago, who is still grinning and dancing somewhere abroad at the expense of creditors who can't afford to let him die." Aboyne Castle then "exhibited all the signs of dilapidation and insolvency."

The death of Mr. Mackie, of Fyvie, has caused deep regret among all classes in Aberdeenshire, for he was well known all over the county, and was a universal favourite. Mr. Mackie took a prominent part in county affairs, and in every sort of local business, and he had been an enthusiastic Volunteer for thirty-three years. He was not only a first-rate man of business in his capacity as banker and merchant, but he was also a clever and successful farmer. He was always a keen Tory, but so genial in his politics (as in everything) that whenever the Liberals held a meeting at Fyvie, their Member or candidate (as the case might be) was always Mr. Mackie's guest for the night.

Great and universal offence has been given in the North by the Duke of Fife, by a very arrogant speech which he delivered at Elgin the other day, in which he advised all the young men of the county to emigrate. Surely the depopulation of the Highlands has been proceeding fast enough to suit even the proprietor of Mar Forest, wherein nearly 100,000 acres are set apart for the exclusive occupation of red-deer. The Duke of Fife and his predecessors have been always prominent on the black-list of those Highland landlords who have steadily discouraged agriculture in the interest of grouse and deer.

For the Truth Hotel List, see pages 354-355 in the present issue.

For Amusements, see page 353.

The recent show of the Highland and Agricultural Society at Edinburgh has proved a great financial success, the receipts having exceeded £4,880, this being £1,600 above the total at any previous meeting of the Society, except the Centenary Exhibition in 1884.

The annual meeting of the Isle of Wight Artisans' and Mechanics' Industrial Society was held the other day at Newport at a very inconvenient time in order to suit Prince Henry of Battenberg, who had promised to attend and present the prizes. At the last moment, however, when it was too late to postpone the meeting, Prince Henry sent a message to intimate that an engagement at Osborne would prevent him from attending. A great deal of dissatisfaction was expressed at this exceedingly ungracious and inconsiderate conduct on the part of the "Governor and Captain" of the island, who certainly has not increased his popularity thereby.

Some long and very absurd obituary notices have been published in the newspapers of Mr. James Stillie, a well-known Edinburgh bookseller, who is described as having been a confidential friend of Sir Walter Scott, and as having been entrusted with the conveyance of the proofs of some of the Waverley Novels to Abbotsford. Unluckily, Lockhart's "Life of Sir Walter" does not contain a single allusion to Mr. Stillie, although he gives copious details of every one who was ever brought into any sort of connection with his hero. If Mr. Stillie had really seen anything of Sir Walter Scott in private life, his name must have appeared in Lockhart's book. Considering the extreme care that was taken to preserve the secret of the authorship of the Waverley Novels, it is in the greatest degree unlikely that an apprentice and a mere boy was ever entrusted with the confidences of Sir Walter and his publishers.

Mr. Stillie was employed by the Ballantynes in their shops until 1825, when (at the age of twenty-two) he started in business on his own account. He became a good judge of old books and rare manuscripts, but his reputation as an expert has been considerably tarnished of late by the fact that he was one of the victims of Smith, the forger of Burns and other manuscripts. However, a man of nearly ninety could not be reasonably expected to retain his faculty of judgment in such delicate and perplexing matters.

Lord Carlisle has presented to the National Portrait Gallery Hogarth's celebrated picture of the "Committee of the House of Commons on the Fleet Prison," which had been hung for many years at Castle Howard.

The Archbishop of Canterbury having gone to the Continent, a notice has been issued requesting those having business with him to address themselves to the Archdeacons of Canterbury and Maidstone. It is to be hoped that no very urgent business will necessitate this course being taken, as the two Archdeacons are themselves away from home. Their official residences at Canterbury, like those of most of the other Canons and Minor Canons, are let for the summer season—a matter which causes no little discontent among the other residents in the city, who if they desire to let their houses, naturally suffer considerably by the competition of the cathedral dignitaries. Whether it is becoming for clerics in this position, occupying their residences rent free, to grab a few pounds per annum by letting them furnished, is a question worth their consideration, though I do not suppose that they will readily be induced to consider it.

Canon Wade, who died last week, was for more than half a century one of the most prominent, popular, and successful of the London working clergy. He was a genial Irishman, a man of many accomplishments, and a fine scholar; and he showed much tact at Bristol in his dealings with the late Dean Elliot, who was by no means disposed to facilitate the improvement or the extension of the Cathedral services. In later years, the Canon became widely known by his introduction of the Passion Music at St. Anne's every Lent. He was one of Mr. Gladstone's intimate friends, and they worked together in many ways, and were instrumental in establishing the House of Charity in Soho-square. It was Lord Hatherley who gave Canon Wade the Stall at Bristol, which he held during the last twenty-one years of his life, and he lived to see the Chapter revolutionised, and the Cathedral become the centre of Church work which he so ardently desired to make it.

Canon Cazenove was a very able, a very hardworking, and a most popular clergyman. He was one of Bishop Wilberforce's intimate and trusted friends ("good old Cazenove," as the Bishop defined him), and held the living of Reigate for some thirty years, and exercised a quasi-Episcopal authority over the town and neighbourhood. He was a zealous supporter of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, most munificent in his gifts to Church and charitable institutions, a delightful host, and a man of wide information and first-rate conversation.

Sir Walter Gilbey is again issuing his annual appeal that the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution shall participate in the distribution of the offertories collected at harvest festivals. No appeal could possibly be made for a better object. There is something, however, a trifle incongruous in the fact that Sir Walter should find it necessary to mention that the claims of the distressed agriculturists upon the Institution are this year stronger than ever, while he is at the same time appealing for liberal donations by way of thanksgivings for the harvest. I fear that those who are most immediately concerned in the harvest will be the last to find it a subject for thanksgiving. As long, however, as the price of the quartern loaf remains independent of the vagaries of the British climate, there can be no question that the rest of us have a great deal to be thankful for.

I have received the following amounts towards Lady Jeune's Holiday Fund for poor and sickly London children:—Margaret, £1; M. E. A. P., £1. 1s.; B. E. C., £5; Mrs. R. H., £4; Mrs. M. R., £5; X., £5; A. B., 10s.; S. B. S., £2. 2s.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"Royal Bath." "Hôtel de Luxe of the South." Sea frontage, 1,000 ft.; grounds, 5 acres. Due south. Moderate charges. Tariff on application. Comparison invited. Electric light throughout. Only Hotel on "East Cliff."

The appointment of Major-General Nairne to be Commander-in-Chief at Bombay, which has given much satisfaction in India, has been made, I hear, on the recommendation of Lord Roberts. Major-General Nairne has served in India during the greater part of his career, and he is a very able Officer, and most popular.

In view of the vacancy which will shortly occur on the Head-Quarters Staff of the Royal Marines, it is desirable that attention should be directed to the systematic evasion in recent years of the regulation which limits the time for which Staff appointments may be held. It is laid down that after five years' Staff employ an officer shall perform two years' regimental duty before being again eligible for a Staff appointment, and that after holding Staff appointments officers shall go to the head of the roster for foreign service. In spite of these excellent rules, one officer now on the Head-Quarters Staff, after having held an appointment for five years, was passed into another for a further term of five years. Another officer lately left the Head-Quarters Staff after nine years' service there, and the present Professor of Tactics at Greenwich has performed no regimental duty for about twelve years. There is a certain class of Service regulations which seem made only to be broken.

A detachment of the Cameron Highlanders is to be stationed in the island of Skye during the autumn, in the hope that a number of the young Highlanders may be induced to enlist, and other Scotch regiments are to be represented at Oban and at Stornoway with the same object.

From the amount of correspondence which I have received on the subject, it is evident that deep and wide-spread interest is felt in the use of bad language in the Army. But practically all that can be profitably said about it is said by a Cavalry officer, who assures me, as the result of many efforts which he has made to improve the language of his troopers, that the men simply don't know when they are swearing. It is an unconscious habit. A soldier, it seems, emits a profane or obscene expression—just as an American expectorates—without the slightest notion that he is doing anything which is open to objection. It is a highly gratifying circumstance, however, that everybody who writes to me on the subject refers more or less pointedly to the Commander-in-Chief as the party who must be looked to for any reform in this direction. From private information which I have received, I have reason to believe that the Chaplain-General has been making representations to this effect, and that the Duke may shortly be expected to express himself very strongly on the subject.

Last week I ventilated a complaint from Chatham respecting the unsoldierly garments which the Engineers there are compelled to wear when off duty. A complaint of precisely the opposite character has been provoked among the Highland Light Infantry at Aldershot by an order of the General Officer commanding their Brigade, forbidding the wearing of black patrol jackets by N.C.O.'s when in undress uniform in barracks. I gather that this is a special grievance of the Highlanders, who, unlike other battalions, have no other garments than their white cloth jackets or red tunics. The effect of the above order is, consequently, that a Sergeant has to sit in his Mess buttoned up precisely as he would be on parade. A white jacket also requires a good deal of cleaning before parade, so that if a Sergeant wears one in his Mess till 11 p.m., it is difficult for him to turn out spick-and-span by 6 o'clock next morning. Unless, therefore, the order was intended to annoy, it should be reconsidered.

The Middlesex Yeomanry completed their annual training at Brighton last week, and on Friday they were inspected by Colonel Gough, the Assistant-General-Inspector of Cavalry. It has often been my lot to speak very strongly about the value of the Yeomanry as an arm of the Service, and only a few days ago all that I have written on the subject was fully borne out at the inspection of a Regiment of Yeomanry in the North of England, which was shown to be beneath contempt as a military body. "One scabby sheep infects a whole flock," and it is the existence of some few Regiments of Yeomanry who are badly officered, badly horsed, and badly drilled that has given such a bad name to the Force as a whole. It is, therefore, a great satisfaction for me to be able to show a reverse side of the picture. On the authority of Colonel Gough, who is one of the most astute and strict inspecting officers we have, I am pleased to say that the Middlesex Yeomanry is not only a credit to the Yeomanry generally, but a credit to the Cavalry branch of the Service. Colonel Gough said that he had seldom seen a Regiment more cleverly drilled or more splendidly turned out, and he was most complimentary as to the general appearance of both men and horses.

The Duke of Cambridge ought indeed to be proud of his "Hussars," as the Middlesex Yeomanry are called. I think it would be both a kind and a judicious thing if H.R.H. were to show his appreciation of the excellent character the Regiment has earned by taking a little personal interest in it. This would probably do much to remedy the only fault Colonel Gough was able to find, viz., that the Regiment required to be double its present number.

Now it is clear from the excellent status of the Middlesex Regiment that, under proper conditions, Yeomanry can be made useful, and, I may add, ornamental, soldiers. Primarily, it seems to me to be absolutely necessary that the Colonel should be a professional, not an amateur, soldier. In Colonel Kenyon Mitford the Middlesex men have a man who knows what such a regiment ought to do, who further knows how to teach them, and who, more important still, sees that they really work. At the same time, he does not lose sight of the fact that he is dealing with a Volunteer force, and not with Regulars, and he is consequently not only respected, but he is highly popular. His efforts have been most energetically backed up by the Adjutant, Captain W. H. Mitchell, of the 14th Hussars, who, to the regret of the Regiment, has just completed his five years. The other officers, too, are men who take a thorough interest in their work, and I am glad to see that their ranks have just been strengthened by the addition of Captain Rawson to their number. Captain Rawson, it will be remembered, was the scapegoat of War Office weakness and incapacity in connection with the scandal in the 1st Life Guards—a scandal, by the bye, that I don't think we have altogether heard the last of.

The Imperial, East Cliff, Bournemouth.—Position, appointments, and cuisine unsurpassed. 100 rooms. Luxuriously furnished. Electric light. Private omnibuses meet trains. Telegraphic address, Imperial, Bournemouth.—Chas. A. Reingpach, Manager.

It is a matter of complaint at the Curragh that the "night operations," which have been a regular weekly fixture since the commencement of the drill season, invariably take place on Saturday night. The operations keep the men out of their quarters till close on one a.m., which, when it happens every week, involves a substantial interference with the Sunday's rest. As Saturday night does not seem to be exclusively devoted to this kind of work at other stations, there can hardly be any valid reason why it should be so at the Curragh.

A resident at Warrington tells me that he has observed with astonishment a Staff-Sergeant, a Colour-Sergeant, and other N.C.O.'s apparently told off for the special duty of preventing children playing about a drain which runs beside the barracks. I share his astonishment, and it may be that my feelings are stronger than his, for as a taxpayer I object to soldiers being put to work which, I should have thought, ought to be performed by the Warrington police. Probably, if the soldiers thus employed were consulted, it would be found that their objections are even stronger.

So far back as May 18 I described the scandalous shortcomings of the transport arrangements at Aldershot for the removal of infectious cases to hospital. I regret to learn that up to the present no attempt has been made to remedy this glaring evil. Last week a poor wretch with scarlet fever on him was to be seen lying on a trestle waiting for removal to hospital from six a.m. till noon. This is a small matter in itself—though so serious in its possible consequences—and the application of a little administrative intelligence from the right quarter might have put it to rights in an hour or two. Is it too late for Sir Evelyn Wood to look into the matter before his departure?

A distinguished veteran in sanitation writes to warn me that my information respecting the Aldershot sewage farm may be derived from sources as "corrupt as the sewage." I beg my esteemed correspondent to at once dismiss this fear from his mind. My information respecting Aldershot sanitation, which is by no means confined to the sewage farm, is derived from sources quite above suspicion, and has been verified by the eyes and nose of a member of my own staff. I hear from Aldershot that one or two Volunteers fainted last week while passing this same farm. Whether these are the same incidents which have elsewhere been recorded as cases of sunstroke I cannot say, but if they are, I am disposed to think that there were other agencies at work besides the sun.

I have also the pleasure to record, with blushes which unfortunately there is no means of reproducing on paper, that my efforts to abate these nuisances have been publicly acknowledged, with thanks, in the columns of the Broad Arrow, where it is usually held that officialism can do no wrong. It is indeed a proud moment when a Service journal is found to solemnly admit that criticism on Service affairs in a paper (like TRUTH), written for civilians, may occasionally be productive of good effect where that of a Service journal proves abortive. After this I can reconcile myself to being told that I am given to mix up "genuine complaints with others which are just the opposite." The least that I feel I can do under the circumstances is to promise that, if the Editor of the Broad Arrow will kindly continue his laudable efforts to correct my imperfect information on military topics, I shall always be ready, as heretofore, to acknowledge my obligations to him in the most public manner.

Much annoyance and discontent have been caused at Taunton Barracks by a Regimental Order just issued, which enacts that all fresh milk used in the barrack-rooms or married quarters is henceforth to be obtained of one specified farmer. Two N.C.O.'s and a Bugler have already been in trouble for disobedience to the order. Two of them got off on the ground that their wives had taken in the milk without their knowledge; the third was severely reprimanded; and the C.O. has now given out that if any women take in milk contrary to the order they will be struck off the strength of the marriage establishment. It is difficult to conceive any valid reason for these extraordinary proceedings, inasmuch as the Hospital and the Officers' Mess are still supplied by two dealers interdicted by the order. The other farmers and milk-dealers in the place are naturally of opinion that the privilege has been obtained by undue influence, and knowing what I do of Depot management, I should be slow to say that they are wrong. The soldiers also object on the ground that the privileged dealer will not supply small quantities, and refuses to go round to the quarters with it. Why do Commanding Officers lend themselves to such fatuous aberrations?

The Volunteers who have been encamped this summer at Yarmouth have suffered the greatest misery and discomfort from the wretched quality of the tents supplied to them. The canvas would only withstand the rain for about ten minutes, and during some of the heavy showers to which we have lately been treated the occupants of every tent, with all their belongings, were completely drenched. I understand that the tents came from Colchester, and whoever is responsible for their condition ought to hear more of it. It is a stupid as well as a cruel thing to treat Volunteers in this way. The service has enough drawbacks without gratuitously multiplying the discomforts and expense attached to it.

In preparation for the approaching sporting season, ladies and gentlemen should visit Ulster House, Conduit-street, W., where their orders for every kind of garment will have prompt and careful attention.

Another important circumstance has been brought to my notice in connection with the position of Sergeant-Major Kenyon, at Exeter Depot. This individual, it seems, holds a medal for "Meritorious Service," which carries with it eventually an annuity of £20. It seems an outrageous thing that, if the man has been guilty of such conduct as is imputed to him in the findings of the Mess Committee, he should be allowed to retain a reward of this character. The treatment of Kenyon and the position which he is now occupying are so utterly unprecedented that the Commanding Officer must either be in ignorance of the real facts or wofully blind to their gravity. It seems desirable, therefore, that the General Commanding the District should inquire fully into the case, and an opportunity for so doing will occur at the forthcoming inspection.

I understand that Quartermaster-Sergeant Wilson has now been brought to trial at Bodmin, and found guilty, but the sentence upon him has not yet been promulgated. Under these circumstances, I think it better to refrain for the moment from any comment on the case; but I may say that there is a great deal in it which emphatically calls for further notice.

A comment in TRUTH of August 3 on the illegal award of a "minor punishment" to an N.C.O. at Hamilton, was thus criticised in the Broad Arrow:—

> Now, in the first place, was the offence really so very "trifling" as alleged? Secondly, would TRUTH prefer that no N.C.O. should be given a "chance," but invariably receive an entry in the defaulters' book, or be tried by court-martial? Many punishments are given which are not strictly legal, simply in order to avoid the necessity of entering a record of "trivial offences" in men's defaulter-sheets . . . . The probability is that the "injured" man in this case has been several times unpunctual in his return to barracks at midnight. Under such circumstances a lenient C.O. would be not unlikely to say: "If you can't return to barracks by twelve o'clock, I think we had better take away your standing pass for awhile, and see whether you can be in by tattoo."

As usual, this farrago of surmise and "probability" is utterly devoid of the slightest foundation of fact. I have further inquired into the case, with the view of testing the value of the Broad Arrow's probabilities. The delinquent is a Colour-Sergeant of thirteen years' service, eleven and a half of them as a Non-Commissioned Officer. During the whole of that time he has never been absent from a parade. For seven years prior to this occurrence he had no entry against him. The suggestion that an illegal minor punishment was given in order to avoid an entry in the defaulters' book is disposed of by the awkward fact that the man was severely reprimanded, and an entry of the fact made against him. The question as to whether the offence was "trifling" is equally disposed of by the fact that it consisted in his "having a few words" with his wife, on the strength of which a kindly-disposed Sergeant-Major reported him for making a disturbance in his quarters. Having thus demonstrated the value of his ingenious surmises, I would again point out to the Editor of the Broad Arrow the fatuous folly of endeavouring to get round facts of which you know nothing, by wild speculation in "probabilities."

Oddly enough, while counselling me to study "probabilities," and giving the foregoing object lesson on the advantages of such a course, the Broad Arrow overlooks the most weighty probability of all. Nearly all these Depots, and Hamilton most of all, are split up into cliques, and distracted by feuds and personal animosities. From what I know of life in these stations, I should say that when a Colour-Sergeant, who has a little difference of opinion with his better half, is first reported by a comrade to the Commanding Officer, and then sentenced by that Commanding Officer to an unlawful punishment involving a permanent blot on his record, the probability is irresistibly strong that the whole affair is the outcome of petty personal spite. That was the probability which first led me to comment on the incident, and the probability is strengthened by everything that I have since learned.

A question as to the legality of the same punishment as was given in the above instance, was asked in the House of Commons in April last. Mr. Campbell-Bannerman then stated that a Commanding Officer could legally take away a Non-Commissioned Officer's pass, and cause him to attend tattoo parade; but only in the case of a Non-Commissioned Officer below the rank of a full Sergeant. That, in the face of this, the General Officer Commanding the District should have refused to entertain the complaint made to him at Hamilton, is a matter strongly calling for explanation.

I hear with some surprise that the privileges conceded by the Railway Companies a year or two back to soldiers and their families on furlough are not considered to extend to Non-Commissioned Officers serving as Instructors of Volunteers and Yeomanry. That, at least, is the decision which the Great Western Company have recently arrived at in the case of a Sergeant-Major attached to a Volunteer Regiment, who applied for return passes at the single rates. If such is the general opinion of the Railway Companies, the General Managers by no means deserve all the compliments they received when their concessions to soldiers were first announced. An N.C.O. serving as Instructor to a Volunteer Corps has in every respect as good a claim to special treatment as though he were attached to a Line Battalion—if not better. Perhaps Mr. Agg-Gardner, whose agitation led the Railway Companies to grant soldiers a reduced rate, will look into this matter.

Evidence has frequently been given in these columns of the deadly monotony of garrison life at Gibraltar—so far as the rank and file are concerned. The place is little better than a prison to most of the soldiers stationed there, and it is to be feared that the demoralising effects of such a life are occasionally to be seen in the demeanour of troops who have spent a long period at the Rock. Under these circumstances, I would suggest to the new Governor that some relaxation might be made in the rules regulating the egress of soldiers from the fortress. Occasional passes might be allowed to Non-commissioned officers and men desirous of making excursions into Spain, and this should always be done, so far as the exigencies of garrison duty allow, when there are sports or other festivities going on in the neighbourhood. I am aware that N.C.O.'s can at present obtain such passes on application; but they have to be applied for several days in advance, and a man never knows for certain whether he will be off duty on the day for which his pass is granted. I am told that Staff-Sergeants are allowed monthly passes, and there is no reason that I can see why all N.C.O.'s should not have the same privilege.

BIRDS of a feather flock together. The first grey hair will soon have companions, unless their coming is rendered impossible by the use of Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S World's Hair Restorer.

Admiral Tryon's despatch-box, which was found floating after the Victoria had foundered, was specially made to contain the code of signals. Of course, it was desired to keep this code a secret, so, in order to provide against the risks of accidents, the box was lined with lead, and perforated with many holes, to ensure its at once sinking to the bottom of the sea if it happened to come into the water. It would be interesting to learn who were the designers of this box, which, being specially constructed to sink, floated safely, and is now at the Admiralty, a most practical proof of the fallibility of our experts.

A correspondent writes from St. John's, Antigua:—

It may interest some of the readers of TRUTH to know how strong is the spirit of kinship with our countrymen across the sea in this far-off and little-known corner of her Majesty's dominions. On the evening of July 24 an entertainment was given in our Public Hall for the purpose of raising a "contribution from Antigua" towards the Victoria Relief Fund. The programme comprised vocal and instrumental music, recitations (in which Captain Fleet of H.M.S. Tartar took part), and theatricals by local amateurs; and the performance was so successful that £27. 10s. was realised. I enclose you some verses which were written and recited on the occasion by a young West Indian.

Whether naval officers and seamen learn anything from the annual manœuvres of the Fleet I have no means of judging; but assuredly these operations are rich in matter of instruction for those who pay the piper. The chief lesson to be learned I take to be, that by the wisdom of the Admiralty and the dockyard authorities we are possessed of a fleet of ships a large percentage of which cannot be trusted to keep at sea for a couple of weeks without breaking down or otherwise getting into trouble, while whole classes of ships are unfit for the purpose for which they have been designed. From a useful catalogue published in the Star, I learn that in twelve days ending July 24 there occurred (apart from minor accidents) thirteen breakdowns of machinery sufficiently serious to necessitate the ships concerned putting into port for repairs. Still more gratifying to the public must be the discovery that the Admiralty have spent upwards of a million of money in building "torpedo catchers," which steam on an average three or four knots an hour slower than the torpedo boats which it is proposed that they shall catch!

A critic in one of the daily papers remarks upon the singular circumstance that, while a commissioned officer who loses or imperils a ship has to clear himself before a court-martial, officials in dockyards and at Whitehall, whose blunders lead to precisely the same result, are not only allowed to retain unchallenged their positions and their power for mischief, but never incur so much as a reprimand. Here we have in a nutshell the reason for the amazing catalogues of defects in design and construction which each year's manœuvres disclose in the Navy. Such revelations are unknown in the huge fleets owned by private Shipping Companies. Why? Because if shareholders discovered that their money was spent on ships that could not keep at sea for a week without a breakdown, or in purchasing costly craft utterly unsuited for the use to which they were to be put, they would make short work of the directors and managers whose negligence or stupidity led to these results.

The Southampton papers report a most amazing proceeding on the part of the Customs authorities. A young gentleman, whose name has somehow not transpired, but is said to be the son of a military officer, whose name also has somehow not transpired, was convicted and heavily fined by the Southampton Magistrates for smuggling 1,000 cigars, which are said to have been intended for an uncle who is "a fashionable physician" in London, but whose name also has somehow not transpired. A few days later a solicitor appeared in Court and publicly announced that the authorities had returned the fine. He added that this was done, "he believed, without the least solicitation." I should not share this belief unless I saw very strong evidence to support it; but, if this unprecedented favour was granted unsolicited, it is only the more reason why such extraordinary action should be explained. I have often protested against the extravagant scale on which fines for Revenue offences are assessed. If we are to have no fine at all when the sons of officers smuggle boxes of valuable cigars for the benefit of fashionable physicians, let us have the same rule applied to poor men who shirk the duty on a few ounces of tobacco. I am glad to see that one of the Southampton Magistrates has already pointed this moral.

Is there a branch of the S.P.C.A. at Southampton? If so, its officers and members would do well to look to the suffering inflicted on horses by the overcrowding of the tramcars. I am informed that on the Bank Holiday a car was seen coming up the High-street against the hill with twenty people in it in excess of the legal complement, and no extra horse. It is a disgrace to any town that such things should be allowed, but I fear that Southampton is not the only place open to the same reproach.

THE MALVERN HILLS.—Most delightful of English Watering-places. Air pure, dry, invigorating. Lowest death-rate (certified), pure water, perfect sanitation. Matchless scenery, charming walks and drives, hunting, golf. Frequently visited by Royalty.

LINES WRITTEN AFTER READING DR. WINTER BLYTH'S SANITARY REPORT FOR MARYLEBONE.

What place is this with clammy walls
Up which the loathsome cockroach crawls?
What place is this so dark and damp
Where at one's footfall rats decamp?
Where beetles swarm upon the stair,
And noxious odours fill the air?
Where woodlice to the flooring cling,
And spiders from the ceiling swing?

What place is this of filth and scum
Where God's own air can never come?
Where fœtid exhalations rise,
And corners yield a foul surprise?
What place is this of mildew stains,
And, as 'twould seem, defective drains?
What subterranean abyss—
What dark and dismal hole is this?

Is it some cell of olden time
Where convicts rotted for their crime?
Some East-end cellar dankly dim
Haunted by phantoms pale and grim?
Some human rat-hole where unspied
The troglodytes of London hide?
Is it Infection's favourite lair,
Where Fever mates with dull Despair?

Some gruesome home of Vice and Death
Where Sanitation gasps for breath?
Is it—but no! there's little need
With further queries to proceed;
There's no occasion long to seek
To know of what it is we speak.
It is a type of place well known,
Alack! in lordly Marylebone—
A West-End bakehouse, be it said,
Whence Dives gets his daily bread!

John Reekie, having been for thirty-two years in the service of the Corporation of Perth, applied for a pension on the ground that he was unable to continue at work. The Town Council screwed themselves up to the point of allowing him 5s. per week, but ordered the Harbour Master (in whose department the man was) to keep him at light work. I should have thought that after thirty-two years the man might have been allowed to retire on a pension sufficient to keep him; but (to my sorrow) I am not a Scotchman.

The contemplated job in connection with the Chief Constableship of Portsmouth, to which I alluded a fortnight ago, has been frustrated. A majority of the Watch Committee, it will be recollected, were pledged to give the appointment to Commander Bamber, one of their own number, and a borough Justice. Publicity was given to this little scheme before it could be carried out, however, and in consequence Commander Bamber has discreetly withdrawn his candidature.

The Portsmouth Corporation come in for some scathing strictures in the annual report of the Borough Auditors. In addition to grave complaints regarding the keeping of the accounts, it is stated that in the total of nearly £9,000 still outstanding on private improvement accounts, there are "sums owing by members of public Boards" to which attention has previously been called; that public men are among the debtors to another department; and that orders have been given to an employé of a member of the Council and to the partner of a member of the Asylum Committee in direct contravention of the law. It is further pointed out that one of the Asylum accounts includes "poultry and game of all descriptions, peas at 1s. 6d. per gallon, peaches at 6d. each, and grapes at 5s. and 6s. per lb., besides an item of 11s. for a chef." It is to be regretted that the auditors have not given the names of the public men whose accounts are allowed to be so long overdue, together with those of the consumers of the game and poultry supplied to the order of the Asylum Committee. As it is, however, the report contains plenty of facts and figures for the serious consideration of the Portsmouth ratepayers.

When once people are smitten with Sabbatarian mania there is really no limit to their idiocy. Envious, I suppose, of the fame which the Southport Corporation achieved by a similar measure, Mr. J. H. Bennetts last week urged the Penzance Town Council—which body he adorns by his membership—to prohibit the operation of automatic machines on Sundays. The Council, it seems, takes a share of the receipts of one machine, and the slot of the sacrilegious instrument is kept open on the Lord's Day. Therefore, argues Mr. Bennetts, the Corporation is encouraging Sunday trading! The appalling fact has been referred to the consideration of the Highways Committee, whose decision I shall await with interest.

A second illustration of the inscrutable workings of the Sabbatarian mind was furnished by the Bangor City Council. There the question was not Sunday trading, but Sunday bathing. A Committee reported that they "could not see their way clear to prevent persons bathing who desired to do so on Sundays," and, strange as it may appear, the Sabbatarian lights of the Council objected to this. Colonel Hugh Savage declared that he would not be a party to allowing Sunday bathing, Councillor Hugh Hughes denounced the practice as a desecration of the Sabbath, and, altogether, five out of thirteen members voted against the report of the Committee. These five, I presume, have discovered a new reading of the Fourth Commandment:—"Thou shalt keep dirty the Sabbath-day."

The attention of the managers of schools, asylums, workhouses, and all similar public institutions ought to be drawn to an inquest held last week upon a boy and girl belonging to Forest Gate Industrial School, who were found to have died from ptomaine poisoning, consequent upon eating putrid beef. It is a fact, which all those experienced in such matters will corroborate, that there are few institutions in which there is not need of closer supervision over the contractors who supply the provisions—more especially those of a perishable nature. In the Forest Hill case there must clearly have been gross negligence, or worse, on the part of some of the officers responsible for the passing and serving up of the meat which killed these children; and it behoves the Poplar and Whitechapel Guardians, whose children are exposed to such scandalous risks, to hold a searching inquiry into the whole circumstances. If they fail in that the Local Government Board should see to it.

The Dowager Duchess of Sutherland has lodged a claim in the Court of Session against the Trustees of the Sutherland settled estates in Scotland for £315,000, in respect of sums which are alleged to have been expended on improvements by the late Duke, during the period that he was tenant for life of the property "of the Earldom and estate of Sutherland."

Several of my contemporaries have been somewhat severe upon the Lord Chief Justice in connection with an incident at Leeds Assizes last week. Something said by a witness elicited a loud outburst of applause from the gallery, and his lordship at once ordered the arrest of the most prominent delinquent and committed him to prison for forty-eight hours. This has been criticised as a very harsh and arbitrary proceeding, but the Judge's censors have overlooked the sequel. Lord Coleridge, as is well known, holds very strong views as to the sanctity of a Court of Justice, and his object was to check unseemly demonstrations. Having shown that such contempt of Court would not be tolerated, he had the offender brought before him again at the close of the case, and with a few words of admonition liberated him. The indignation excited in the minds of some writers by the supposed two days' imprisonment of the offender was therefore uncalled for.

The following facts throw some further light upon the rent-collector Benabo, whose proceedings at Stepney were referred to in TRUTH of July 27. A gentleman took a house in Acre-lane, Brixton. The landlord had the misfortune to be in prison, and the tenant dealt with his son, who held a power of attorney. The house was mortgaged. The mortgagees took possession, and gave notice to the tenant to pay his rent to them. Demands were also made upon him for a year's ground rent and property tax, all of which he paid. The landlord came out of prison, and in July demanded the quarter's rent due at Midsummer. The tenant sent in reply a statement of his disbursements, showing that he owed no rent, and added that he could not pay any rent to the landlord without authority from the mortgagees in possession. No answer was given to this letter; but on July 29 the landlord came to the house accompanied by the above-mentioned Benabo, two other men, a policeman, and a van, and demanded admittance. The master of the house being away, they were asked to wait until his return in an hour's time. They declined, and proceeded to break open the front door with a crow-bar. They were then about to remove the furniture, but were fortunately prevented by the arrival of a friend of the master of the house, who succeeded in persuading them to wait till the pater-familias himself came in. On the return of that individual, and the production of his receipts, Benabo & Co. were of course compelled to retire. Had it not been, however, for the fortunate arrival of the friend, there is no doubt that the happy householder would have arrived to find his home dismantled; and there can be equally little doubt, I imagine, that this was the intention of the raid.

Several points of public interest underlie this story. As regards the part played in it by Mr. Benabo, it appears that this individual claims to be a sheriff's officer. There is no reason, of course, why he should have been aware of the outrageous character of the landlord's proceedings in this instance; but, comparing his appearance on this occasion with that which he made at the Thames Police-court a few weeks ago, and bearing in mind what the Magistrate said about him on that occasion, I should say that those to whom he is indebted for the official position he holds have a good deal to answer for. That the police should attend at the request of such an individual to countenance and support any illegality which an unscrupulous landlord may desire to perpetrate, is a monstrous state of things; and I would suggest to Mr. Asquith that he may, with advantage, reconsider the instructions which guide their conduct in such matters.

The evil, however, at the bottom of the whole business is the landlord's power of distress, and the absence of any effectual remedy to check the abuse of it. Until the law on this head is altered, such outrages must continue to occur. In the above case the tenant on making some inquiries at the police station respecting the assistance given by the police to Benabo, asked what would have happened if he had been at home, and had forcibly resisted the entry of his house and the seizure of his goods. An inspector humorously replied that he would have been arrested for breaking the peace; and no doubt this is what would have occurred. What a satire on our boasted freedom, and the doctrine that an Englishman's house is his castle!

I have it on the authority of Mr. Herbert Fuller, of Serjeants' Inn, that where rates are paid pending an appeal against an assessment, and the appeal leads to the assessment being reduced, the amount overpaid may be recovered by the ratepayer. This, as I stated last week, seems to me to be the only remedy which ratepayers can in reason require, and I hope that the publication of this information will prevent any further injustice being experienced under this head.

Mr. West, Q.C., the Recorder of Manchester, has frequently been the subject of unfavourable notice in these columns on the score of his Draconic sentences, but he deserves nothing but praise for sundry vigorous rebukes which he administered last week in the Salford Hundred Court to a barrister named McKeand, practising before him. Twice in the course of the cross-examination of one witness the Judge stopped this learned gentleman, informing him that he was bullying the witness, and making improper statements to the jury. The learned gentleman seems to have taken the rebuke very badly, and he informed the Recorder that he objected to his "unseemly interruptions"; but this will only confirm most observers in the view that the Recorder was probably right and the barrister probably wrong. There are too many McKeands at the Bar who seek to advance the interests of their clients at the expense of the interests of justice, and Judges are not half prompt enough in protecting witnesses against them.

B

The following is my Legal Pillory for the week. My readers will, I think, agree with me that the singular decision of the Southampton County Justices in the horse-maiming case fully entitles these worthies to the premier position which they are assigned in the list. Mr. John Chafen should certainly esteem himself a lucky fellow in appearing before a Bench possessed of such an extensive and peculiar acquaintance with the practice of foreign countries. But, whatever may be done abroad, the ignition of a quantity of furze under an animal unable or unwilling to move will strike most people as an atrocious act of cruelty, which in England, at all events, ought to be severely punished. Apparently if a man set fire to a sty full of pigs he could escape punishment at the hands of Sir O'Bryen Hoare and his colleagues, by simply pleading that his object was to obtain roast pork, like Lamb's Chinaman. Two other cases deserving of special attention are those from Blackpool and Huddersfield. The former is noteworthy for the flagrantly unjust distinction which was made between a male and a female guilty of exactly the same offence; the latter for the relative importance which the Magistrates attach to the brutal ill-treatment of a wife and her children, and an assault upon the sacrosanct person of a constable:—

Southampton County Police-court. Before Sir O'Bryen Hoare, Colonel the Hon. H. G. L. Crichton, Mr. W. Ramsay, and Colonel Wallace. John Chafen, charged with maiming a mare. The animal having backed with a load of gravel into some furze, Chafen was asked to assist in getting her out. He set fire to the furze, and the mare was severely burnt and had to be slaughtered. The Chairman said it was a common practice in foreign countries to start animals by putting something under them and firing it. The Bench did not think defendant acted with malicious intent. Discharged with a caution.

Southampton County Police-court. Before the same Bench. Rose O'Brien and Lilian Joy, charged with sleeping in the open air without any visible means of subsistence. Seven days each.

William Primmer, charged with obtaining 1s. by false pretences. An ironmonger handed him the money for "a wet," as he had ordered half-a-dozen shovels for the Corporation. The order proved fictitious. One month.

Birkenhead Police-court. Before Mr. C. S. Samuell. John Clinch, charged with assaulting Elizabeth Kelly by striking her a violent blow on the face, dislocating her jaw and knocking her down. Mr. Samuell said it was a most unprovoked assault. Fined 40s. and costs.

Birkenhead Police-court. Before Mr. C. S. Samuell. William Brown, dock labourer, charged with smoking a pipe on the quay at Wallasey Dock. Fined £5 and costs.

Birmingham Police-court. Before Mr. Colmore (Stipendiary), Messrs. Fisher, Ryland, and Edwards, and Dr. Warden. David Marston and his wife convicted of cruelty to their four children, one aged six months. The case was a very bad one and the Bench said defendants were a disgrace to humanity. One month each.

Birmingham Police-court. Before the same Magistrates. George Payne (63), charged with stealing a hurdle. Two months.

Oakham Petty Sessions. Before Mr. A. J. Fludyer, Sir R. Cayley, Messrs. C. J. Noel, J. W. H. Dyer-Edgell-Hundley, and R. Tryon. William Gardner, charged with assaulting John Bardett, whom he struck as he was sitting on a chair, causing him to fall and break his collar-bone. Ordered to pay 5s. 6d. costs.

Oakham Petty Sessions. Before the same Bench. William Peck (7) and John Peck (17) charged with stealing three tins of potted tongue, which they abstracted through the broken pane of a shop window. William, three strokes with a birch rod; John (a deaf and dumb youth), fourteen days.

Blackpool Police-court. Before Messrs. H. Fishor and G. Stewart. John Appleby, charged with indecent conduct with Mary Aspinall. Fined 10s.

Blackpool Police-court. Before the same Bench. Mary Aspinall, charged with indecent conduct with John Appleby. Fourteen days.

Newbury County Police-court. Before Messrs. A. R. Tull, Ll. H. Baxendale, M. H. Best, and A. Southby. George Webb charged with ill-treating a gelding. A piece of bone had been broken off the animal's hind leg, and in consequence an immense abscess had formed. Defendant left the horse lying in a field for two days without food or water. Fined £2. 15s., including costs.

Cockermouth Police-court. Before Canon Hoskins, Messrs. W. L. Alexander, A. J. S. Dixon, J. H. Jefferson, T. M. Harris, H. P. Senhouse, and T. Paisley. George Sharp, Robert Nicholson, and George Stamper, summoned for poaching in the river Derwent. Fined £21 each, or three months.

Callington Petty Sessions. Henry Sargent, son of a farmer, charged with cruelty to a steer. The animal having broken into his father's field, defendant deliberately fired at it, and a large quantity of shot was found in the breast, shoulder, and side of the beast. Find £1 and costs.

Tunstall Police-court. Before Mr. E. M. Wedgwood. Mark Winkle, a pauper, charged with taking whiskey into Spittals Workhouse, contrary to the rules. In default of paying 10s. and costs, committed for fourteen days' hard labour.

Blackburn Police-court. Before Messrs. J. Lund, T. Walsh, T. P. Ritzena, and A. H. Collam. William Howarth, convicted of assaulting his wife. He threw a step-ladder at her, kicked her twice, and was still beating her when the neighbours interfered. He had since deserted her. Fined 20s. and costs.

Preston County Police-court. Before Mr. J. J. Sidgreaves. David Pearson, pauper, charged with absconding with Workhouse clothes. Seven days.

Leicester Borough Police-court. Joseph Smith, charged with assaulting Sarah Street. He knocked her over two chairs on to the floor with such violence that two of her ribs were broken. He had disobeyed a summons in respect of a previous assault. Fourteen days.

Leicester County Police-court. Before Captain Pochin, Colonel Bellairs, Mr. E. R. Norman, and other Magistrates. James A. Herbert (17) and John T. Shaw, schoolboy, charged with stealing ten roots of thyme. Shaw, fined, with costs, 16s. 6d.; Herbert, three months.

Bradford West Riding Police-court. Emma Stead, charged with cruelty to her two daughters. She knocked one girl's head against a cupboard, knocked her down, and kicked her. She also attacked the other child and drove them both from the house. Fined 20s. and costs.

Boston Police-court. Before Messrs. S. Waddington, S. Sherwin, T. Small, W. M. Cooper, and other Justices. John Jones, charged with being found asleep on Bargate Green. One month.

Tain. Before Sheriff-Substitute Hill. George Munro, convicted of assaulting Alexander Ross, by striking him several blows on the head with a hammer. Fined £2. 2s.

Annan. Before Sheriff-Substitute Dunlop. John Niven, charged with poaching on the estate of Sir J. Fergusson. Sixty days.

Irvine J.P. Court. George Collins, convicted of assaulting Mrs. Goudie. He entered her house whilst drunk, struck her on the face, cutting her cheek, and gave her two violent blows on the breast. Fined 30s.

Airdrie Sheriff-Court. Before Sheriff Mair. Francis Clark, charged with poaching. Fined £5 or 60 days.

Huddersfield County Police-court. John Hill, convicted of assaulting his wife. After the assault he turned the woman and her children out of doors in their night-clothes, and kept them out, although it was a cold, wet night. Fined 40s. and costs. Hill was also charged with assaulting a constable, whom he kicked on the leg. Two months.

The compilation of my Legal Pillory week after week is a somewhat monotonous task. However necessary the work may be, one does not like to be always exposing the incompetence and injustice of Judges and Magistrates. I have thought once or twice that it would be an agreeable variation of my labours to publish an Anti-Pillory

MAJOR HOWLE & CO.'s fashionable Boots and Shoes (ready-made or to measure) for Ladies, Girls, and Gentlemen.—16, Coventry-st., W.; 409, Strand, W.C.; 81, Grace-church-st., City; 13, Queen Victoria-street (Mansion House), London. (Klenrusha, Polish.)

SPA, BELGIUM (10 hours from London and Paris.) Racing, tennis, golf, pigeon-shooting, &c. Splendid Casino, with theatre, &c. Waters unrivalled in cases of anæmia and dyspepsia.

column in which bright examples of judicial wisdom might be held up for the admiration and imitation of erring functionaries. Hitherto the difficulty of finding these bright examples has made me hesitate; but at length I think the idea should be given a fair trial. At all events, I have the following case for this week:—

Wednesbury Police-court. Richard Small (10), and David Farmer (11), were charged with stealing some fish. Alderman Richard Williams, the presiding J.P., said he must enter his protest against being called upon to try children of such tender years; there were other ways of dealing with children besides bringing them to the Police-court. It was playing with justice, and people would think they wanted to manufacture cases. The prisoners, who had already been flogged by their parents, were discharged.

This seems to me excellent good sense, and it is such a pleasant contrast to the outrageous sentences on children which I constantly record that I gladly quote the Alderman's remarks. The Anti-Pillory being thus started, it only remains for the Great Unpaid to hasten into it from the Pillory—which is at present full to overflowing.

I owe an apology to the Aston Magistrates. Last week I mentioned that they had dismissed two charges of sleeping out, and I rashly assumed that they had repented of their former monstrous method of dealing with this so-called offence. On the day TRUTH appeared, however, a woman named Jones was brought before Messrs. Yates and Bolton and Dr. Griffiths, J.P.s, for sleeping on the footpath in Park-road, Aston, and committed to gaol for three months. The Bench have thus eclipsed their own notorious sentence of six weeks for sleeping and snoring in a furniture-van, and made it clear that they have no intention of mending their ways. As my remarks of last week may have seemed derogatory to the reputation for incurable woodenheadedness which these ornaments of the Bench are evidently anxious to maintain, it is only fitting that I should express my regret at having misjudged them. To set the Aston J.P.'s quite right with the public, I may add that their sentences are not always so Draconic. Their lenity was displayed on Friday, when a ruffian who had attacked his wife with a buckled belt, inflicting five severe wounds on the head, was let off with just a third of the punishment awarded to the woman Jones.

A Clifton correspondent has sent me reports of two cases tried at Bristol Assizes before Mr. Justice Grantham. In the first an ex-solicitor, named Munro, was sentenced to five years' penal servitude for fraud. In the second a ruffian who had murderously assaulted his wife just before her confinement was let off with nine months' imprisonment. My correspondent, who knows a little of Munro, suggests that his punishment was exceptionally excessive. Without entering into the merits of the case, however, I may point out that there is nothing novel in the disparity of the two sentences. As my Pillory proves every week, offences against property are treated in this country as infinitely more heinous than offences against the person. The moral for persons with irresistible criminal inclinations is obvious. If they want to incur the least possible penalties, they should resort to personal violence against somebody rather than to robbery or fraud.

That there is one law for the rich and another for the poor is evidently the opinion of the Conservancy Board of the Lune, Wyre, Kear, and Cocker. At a meeting of this body the other day it was reported that Squire Ffrance, of Rawcliffe Hall, had been caught by water bailiffs netting in the Wyre without a licence. To his credit, one member, Mr. Hornby, urged that there should be a prosecution, and pointed out that near Garstang some poorer men had been punished for the same offence. But Mr. Hornby's colleagues would not for a moment consent to treat a squire like poorer men. Two or three members "thought" Mr. Ffrance did not "intend anything wrong," and so no proceedings are to be taken against him. How men who are not Squires are dealt with for these fishing offences, may be seen from a case in this week's "Pillory."

Mr. T. Whittaker, J.P., made an edifying exhibition of himself in the Scarborough Police-court last week. During the hearing of a charge of begging Mr. N. Todd, an officer of the local Charity Organisation Society, stated that the prisoner had had a little drink. Mr. Whittaker at once asked, "Was he drunk or sober?" adding that "he must have been either the one or the other." The witness declined to say positively that the man was drunk, and the Magistrate thereupon observed, "You have told a lie in the public Court." It is scandalous that a Magistrate should address such insolent and slanderous words to a witness. Far more scandalous is it that a gentleman who is unable to see any difference between having had a little drink and being drunk should be entrusted with judicial duties.

The readiness of the police to prosecute the humblest class of fortune-tellers has received a fresh illustration at Blackburn, where a man described as a labourer was last week sentenced to two months' imprisonment for practising in this line. The only evidence against the defendant was that of two policemen's wives, who were sent to him to have their fortunes told, and paid him eighteenpence each for two visits. The agent-provocateur method of obtaining convictions is in itself extremely objectionable, but the police seem determined to employ it. Why, then, do they not direct their wives to entrap some of the fashionable exponents of palmistry whose advertisements are to be found in the most respectable papers? It is ridiculous, not to say unjust, to punish ignorant men and women who foretell your future for sixpence or a shilling so long as better educated practitioners are permitted to do the same thing under a more high-sounding name for a fee ranging from one to five guineas. The latter, I believe, find it a lucrative profession, and one of the leaders might think it worth while to fight out the matter, and definitely settle the question whether palmistry is legal or illegal. If it be legal, the ordinary kind of fortune-telling ought not to be treated as illegal.

STAR & GARTER HOTEL, Richmond Hill, S.W. High, dry, & healthy. Famed for its Guild and Corporation banquets, wedding breakfasts, balls, &c. Unrivalled winter residence.—CHAS. JAMES, Manager.

Herefordshire Cider & Perry, six distinct varieties. Gold Medal, Paris, 1888. The Bishop of Ely writes, 1892, "Your Cider & Perry are excellent." List from H. P. BULMER & CO., Rylands, Hereford.

"The Black Sheep at Chipping Warden," alias the Rev. Edward Henville, is still realising all the capital that is to be got out of the fact of his son's gun accident. In the last letters which appeared in TRUTH, Henville gave out that the youth's fingers were to be amputated. He now announces that amputation has been avoided, but this is only the foundation for fresh claims on the charitable. If the fingers had been cut off there would be an end of the matter; but as it is, the doctor has had to be in attendance for a long period, and the bills are in proportion. I trust that no one will give to this reverend scamp, who, besides being one of the most energetic begging-letter writers in the trade, is a disgrace to the Church to which he is attached.

By the way, I see that in one of the latest appeals Henville uses as a reference the name of "the Rev. J. H. Oldrid, of Tunbridge Wells." In one case a lady wrote to this Mr. Oldrid on the strength of a similar reference, and so strongly did Mr. Oldrid recommend his brother of Chipping Warden, that Henville got the handsome sum of £10 out of the lady. Mr. Oldrid is, apparently a very old man. He was ordained in 1834, and has held no benefice since 1879. This, however, does not exonerate him from the responsibility he has assumed in connection with Mr. Henville. He is either aware of the disreputable character of the Rector of Chipping Warden, or he is in total ignorance of the man's career. In neither case is it to his credit that he should recommend Henville as a deserving object of charity.

While on the subject of current swindles it seems desirable that I should again sound a note of warning respecting the "Académie Parisienne des Inventeurs," for "the Professor Bottcher," the presiding genius of this concern, is just now uncommonly busy, and seems to be netting a good many victims — more especially in the manufacturing districts. Bottcher appears to be going the way of Angus Maclean. He originally baited his hook from the imposing address, "28, Rue Serpente, Hôtel des Sociétés Savantes," and his stationery still bears this heading; but, as a further note explains, the "offices of the Academy" have been removed to 57, Boulevard de Strasbourg. The Academy is there located in a small room up several flights of stairs, where, of course, its only visible representative is the Professor himself.

The "missing word" has re-appeared at Middelburg under the auspices of "The Anglo-Dutch Competition Company." A peculiarly tempting offer is made in the circulars of this distinguished firm, anybody who sends in subscriptions to the amount of £2 being privileged to be present at the opening of the sealed packet containing the precious secret. I can understand the attraction of the gambles in this form which have been stopped in England, for the parties who conducted them were close at hand and well known; but the people who can send their money on such terms to gangs of English adventurers on the Continent are only fit to be consigned to lunatic asylums.

Last week I was warning the South of Ireland against the Spanish Prison Trick. Now it is the turn of Scotland. The last attempt reported to me comes from Dundee. That anybody should attempt to get from a canny citizen of that town the sum of £20 by this cock-and-bull story of a buried treasure, and the mysterious trunk with the clue to the hiding-place, which must be redeemed to settle an hotel-keeper's bill, is by far the strongest proof I have yet received of the audacity of these swindlers. Either there must be several gangs running this trick or the chief operators have several depots and agencies. The letter to which I referred last week was written from Madrid. The address in the above instance is "Mr. Emile Fuy, Espana Industrial, Barcelona." All this ought to simplify the task of arresting the rascals if there were any real disposition to do so.

A paper called the North Star announces, as if it were a matter of some public interest, the result of an examination held at Middlesbrough by the "Kensington Society of Science, Letters, and Art." In this way the man Sturman keeps his ball rolling. Instead of puffing this arrant humbug, provincial papers would be much better occupied in informing credulous parents that this so-called "Society" is no Society at all, but a nom de guerre of Sturman, and that Sturman himself has admitted in an interview, which has been published in TRUTH, that "the exams are a bit wrong." The whole swindle is so hollow, and so obvious, that schoolmasters and schoolmistresses who attempt to impose upon parents with the bogus certificates granted after these examinations are only one degree less culpable than Sturman himself.

Having the other day communicated to my readers information which I had received concerning the virtues of peppermint oil as a cure for rheumatism, I have been beset from all quarters by inquiries as to how the specific is to be used. I understand from the gentleman who swears by peppermint oil that it is to be rubbed in, or "painted on the affected parts with a camel-hair brush." I hasten to make public this additional information, as I had been myself under the impression that the stuff was to be swallowed, and I am told that a mistake on this head may lead to the worst consequences. By the way, my informant insists that it must be the best peppermint oil, which, I am glad to hear, is the home grown article.

PFUNGST FRÈRES' EXTRA QUALITY CHAMPAGNES.—This select brand can be supplied through any Wine Merchant, or by the Agents, J. L. PFUNGST & Co., 23, Crutched Friars, E.C.

A word to my correspondents in distant parts of the world. I am very glad to have information of public interest from any locality. I am also glad, wherever it is practicable, to do what I can in airing the wrongs of my readers, wherever they may be situated. The correspondence of TRUTH, however, has grown to such dimensions, and still grows in such an alarming way, that it is becoming impossible for me to deal with every appeal that is made to me. To take only the last week, I have had letters addressed to me on behalf of coffee planters in Coorg, a princess in the Punjab, washerwomen in Gozo, a farmer in Mashonaland, hospital patients in Valparaiso, taxpayers in British Columbia, telegraph clerks in Hong Kong, and English visitors to Chicago. I will keep all these matters before me, and do my best with them; but in view of the difficulty of making the necessary inquiries into the facts, and the superior claims of other matters nearer home, correspondents at this distance must not be surprised if their communications do not receive immediate attention.

The following appears in a Jersey paper. I should like to know more of the advertiser, who is, I take it, of nothing less than Royal or Imperial lineage. It is not enough for her to have a lady to do her housework and cooking, but she declines to be put off with a lady by education or manners (mere bogus articles), and insists on having a blue-blooded aristocrat to wait on her. Such a chance does not often present itself to those of our old nobility who are in reduced circumstances:—

WANTED, a LADY (by birth) to do Housework and a little Cooking, where no servants are employed; good salary.—Apply, Mrs. BENSON, "Holly Lodge," Five Oaks.

I made in a recent issue of TRUTH the following remarks:—"Directors are usually the dummies of some astute company-monger. He gives them their qualification and owns them. They shut their eyes to every species of roguery, pocket their fees, and allow shareholders to be robbed." For this I have been taken to task by a Director, who contends that it is a libel upon a class containing the average proportion of honest and honourable men. He also asks whether I seriously mean it to apply indiscriminately to Directors of railways, banks, and other sound commercial undertakings. I take it that what hurts my Director critic's feelings, is the word "usually," and perhaps it is a little too wide. There are, of course, Companies in which there is not every species of roguery, and in which shareholders are not robbed. Obviously, in these, no Director can be guilty of the conduct which I described.

But in every Company there are dummy Directors; what is more, in every Company of which I have any knowledge the dummies are in a majority, and the business of direction is in the hands of a small knot. The dummies are "usually" the nominees of the active Directors, and they occupy their position by virtue of their being dummies. When they do not shut their eyes to roguery (there being no actual roguery) they shut their eyes to errors and negligences, and they would equally shut their eyes to roguery if it existed. In these opinions, I believe that many honest Directors, who are not dummies, will concur.

The generosity of the Primrose League in providing refreshments and entertainments for free and independent electors is well known. From a paragraph in a Scotch paper it would seem, however, that the expenditure on these occasions is not always so lavish as outsiders might imagine. Recently, the members of the Lochmaben Flute Band were requested to attend a Primrose League "demonstration." They did so, meeting an excursion train at the station, playing down to the castle, and continuing their performance during the afternoon. For these services the bandsmen received from the Committee the sum of tenpence each! After this exhibition of stinginess, musicians accepting an engagement with the League will be well advised to make a definite bargain and not to leave their remuneration, like the guileless Lochmaben players, to "the goodwill of the Committee."

An Englishman in the Colonies, much concerned, like the rest of us, at the late fracas in the House of Commons, offers, through me, the suggestion that the electric light should be controlled by a switch at the side of the Chairman or the Speaker. Those functionaries would thus, at the slightest indication of an émeute, be able to plunge the House into darkness. This is certainly a novel and effectual way of "drawing a veil" over a disagreeable incident; but I suppose the House could not be kept in darkness permanently, and I am bound to say that I should look forward with anxiety to the spectacle which would be disclosed when the lights were turned up again. Perhaps, however, it is a little premature to discuss measures for dealing with a repetition of the incident in question.

The correspondence that has been published between Colonel Walrond and Mr. Marjoribanks as to whether Mr. Logan or Mr. Fisher was to rise first to express his regret for the scrimmage, the signal for which, as Mr. Fisher stated, was given by his assault on Mr. Logan, shows pretty clearly that, whilst Colonel Walrond, Mr. Wharton, and Mr. Fisher were under the impression that Mr. Logan would rise first, this had not been agreed to either by that gentleman or by Mr. Marjoribanks. I confess that I never understood why Mr. Logan should have risen at all. The gravamen of the whole matter was that an assault had been committed by one member on another, and, whatever observations may have been exchanged, the man in the wrong was the man who committed the assault. This was, according to his own admission, Mr. Fisher. The offence was not so much against Mr. Logan as against the House. The incident is now closed; but the popular verdict will be that Mr. Fisher did commit an assault on Mr. Logan, and that Mr. Logan, although a far stronger man than Mr. Fisher, refrained from retaliating out of respect to the Assembly of which he was a member.

LORD "BALAAM" CHURCHILL AND THE HOUSE OF PEERS.

When Balaam, son of Beor, was employed to curse the Jews,
As a method (so thought Balak) of repressing them,
He, the reader will remember, was possessed of other views,
And occasioned much astonishment by blessing them.
So when Randolph is commissioned to extol our House of Peers,
And to magnify their doings by rehearsing them,
For our titled legislators he has naught but flouts and jeers—
In fact, he does not bless, but takes to cursing them.

Now, this is how it happened: When the Primrose Leaguers found,
That in spite of all their masquerading mummery,
The once deluded nation had a common-sense too sound
To be very long deceived by specious flummery;
When they saw that all the country t'wards Home Rule did more incline,
With a strength that tended much their pride to mortify,
They determined they would strengthen their defence's second line,
In other words, the House of Lords would fortify.

So they sent for Randolph Churchill (this the journalist records),
Knowing well his slashing style on things political,
And they said, "We want a leaflet backing up the House of Lords
In a conflict which it's clear will grow most critical.
A terse and telling leaflet" (so, apparently, they said)
"Which shall show—we do not stickle for veracity—
That our Upper House has always kept a wisely level head,
Always proved in time of crises its sagacity."

And Lord Randolph said, "Precisely!" and to work at once he went,
And dashed the leaflet off with such avidity
That next morning all the "copy" to the printer's had been sent,
And the Council got the proof with strange rapidity;
But they read it at their leisure, and they'd not perused it long
Ere of something unexpected they were sensible;
"This is ludicrous!" said one; quoth another, "It's all wrong!"
While a third remarked 'twas very reprehensible.

For instead of panegyric there was censure of the Peers,
For the way that they had hampered Nonconformity,
And defied the people's will by opposing every Bill
For reforming a political enormity;
Whilst in ending Randolph showed—for in logic he's not strong—
That although the Lords' past record's not a pleasant one,
And although in bygone crises they'd been generally wrong,
That they therefore would act rightly in the present one.

Their perusal being over, one would naturally think
That the Council would, as soon as they'd completed it,
Have condemned the fatal leaflet, and have taken pen and ink,
And, without the least compunction, have "deleted" it;
But, as though to prove what noodles Ruling Counsellors can be
(This by no means is the first time we've been hinting it),
They passed it for the printers by unanimous decree,
And have stultified the House of Lords by printing it.

Although the iniquities and crimes of Mr. Gladstone have been so long the theme of Tory writers, it has been reserved for the Standard to add an entirely new item to the catalogue. After discussing the prospects of the grouse season, and the effect of the prolongation of the Parliamentary Session upon the demand for shootings, that journal observes:—

> It is certainly unfortunate that one of the best seasons which have been known for years should be partially spoiled for no reason that will stand a moment's examination upon public grounds.

But though on public grounds M.P.'s should obviously be shooting grouse rather than attending to the business of the nation at Westminster, the Standard finds one consolation for its readers:—

> However, there are not so many sportsmen in the House of Commons as there used to be, so that the hardship will be less severely felt than it would have been a generation ago.

The moral which an elector of average intelligence ought to draw from this is that the number of sportsmen in the House should be still further reduced. There will thus be less fear of its being seriously argued that it is a public calamity for legislators to be engaged in their legislative duties instead of shooting grouse.

The question whether there are to be autumn sittings of the present Session, or whether the House is to be prorogued after the Home Rule Bill and Estimates are carried, and meet for a new Session in the late autumn, is, I believe, not yet decided. In the former case, the Unionists will probably discuss the Estimates during the entire month of September, and the autumn sittings will hardly commence before the middle of November. It would not secure above a month for legislation, as the Bills passed would have to be sent up to the Lords about the middle of December. On the other hand, were there a prorogation, probably the discussions on Estimates would be abridged, and the new Session might commence on November 1, in which case the debate on the Address might be got through and considerable progress be made in an important Bill or two before Christmas, leaving a clear field for British Bills next year. I am for prorogation, as against autumn sittings, simply because I believe that the former course would be more fruitful in legislative results, and I think that this estimate of the respective advantages of the two plans is gaining ground. As I have paired for the rest of this month and for September, I am perfectly unbiassed, for, whether the House sits two weeks or four weeks in September, it will not alter the fact that I shall be recruiting during that month my health abroad, and shall be back at home either for autumn sittings or an autumn Session.

C.O.M. WHISKY.—This well-known Brand, 30s. per case, free to every Railway Station.—ANDREWS & Co., C.O.M. WHISKY. Dame-st., Dublin, Proprietors C.O.M. brand.

One thing, however, I do hope. It is that, having carried Home Rule through the Commons by devoting an entire Session to it, we shall next devote an entire Session to British measures. To send the Bill a second time up to the Lords is mere swagger, very magnificent possibly, like the Balaclava Charge, but as thoroughly unpractical as that charge. When we have passed all our Bills once, and have exhausted the Newcastle Programme, let us, if it pleases any one, carry Home Rule a second time. We were sent to the House of Commons to carry certain British measures, as well as the Irish measure, and, having done this, to appeal to the country, if the Lords throw out any of our measures. To appeal before we have submitted to them all our measures, because they throw out the first one sent up to them, would be to play the game of the Opposition. Equally so, to my thinking, would it be to send up one measure twice, instead of sending up all once.

I shall never clearly understand why Mr. Gladstone did not bring in a Home Rule Bill giving immediate and full Home Rule to Ireland, and excluding the Irish Members from the Imperial Parliament. It seems to me that he would have found this as easy to carry as his Bill; it would have given satisfaction to Ireland, and left the field free in Great Britain for British legislation.

It equally surprises me how Mr. Balfour could have expected sensible men to vote for the exclusion of the Irish Members so long as Land, Taxation, and Constabulary were reserved from the control of the Irish Legislative Assembly. Obviously the Imperial Parliament could not have legislated on these matters without the presence of one single Irish representative.

If I have heard once, I have heard a hundred times during these Home Rule debates, some Unionist get up to deplore the subserviency of the supporters of Mr. Gladstone. But what does this subserviency amount to? That, deeming it desirable that the Bill should pass, they declined to vote for any amendment that would have defeated it. This seems to me to be a very reasonable position. On the other hand, it was reasonable for the Unionists who objected to the Bill to vote for any amendment that would have defeated it.

"TRUTH" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for the Continent, America, and the Colonies (India and China excepted) is 3 months, 7s. 7d.; 6 months, 15s. 2d.; 12 months, £1. 10s. 4d.; and to India and China, 3 months, 8s. 2d.; 6 months, 16s. 4d.; and 12 months, £1. 12s. 6d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the MANAGER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

SCRUTATOR.

TAKASHIMA'S SWEETHEART.

A WELL KNOWN West-end solicitor tells me the following story, which, besides possessing a tragic interest of its own, raises at least one point of considerable public importance. The heroine of the story may be known for the present as "Helena D." My reasons for not giving her name in full will not need explanation. She is a Lincolnshire girl, but during last year was living in domestic service in London. She there made the acquaintance of a Japanese gentleman, named Takashima. Mr. Takashima evinced a desire to improve the acquaintance. He explained that he was staying in England to learn the language, which he was studying at a school at Kensington, and that he was living at 8, Sussex-square, with his brother, who was, or had been, a Judge. After a short acquaintance and some correspondence, he offered marriage, and was accepted. The young lady, it would seem, loved the Japanese gentleman not wisely but too well, and before the engagement had lasted many months she made a discovery which rendered it necessary that the wedding should not be unduly delayed. Takashima was at Bournemouth at this time, and the young lady went down to see him there, with the result that the wedding was fixed to take place in the middle of January. Takashima returned to London a few days before the time appointed, and at once saw Miss D. and made final arrangements for the ceremony, which was to take place at a Registry Office. The happy day arrived, but at the appointed hour the bridegroom failed to present himself. Greatly alarmed at this, Miss D. went to 8, Sussex-square to inquire after him. She was there informed by a footman that Mr. Takashima was ill, but that he would write to her. She returned home, and in the afternoon there came, not a letter from Takashima, but another Japanese gentleman representing that individual. This visitor informed poor Helena D. that Takashima's account of himself was, from beginning to end, a pack of lies. So far from being a Japanese gentleman, highly connected, he was merely a valet at the Japanese Legation, which is located at 8, Sussex-square; and, what was of even more consequence to the unfortunate girl he had seduced, he was already married. After hearing this statement, the girl wrote to Takashima, and left the letter at the Japanese Legation the same evening. To this letter she received no answer. Her position was now a very alarming one, and, after a brief interval, she followed the advice given her, and consulted a solicitor, Mr. Arthur Newton, of Great Marlborough-street. Mr. Newton wrote to Takashima, requesting him to state at once what he was prepared to do towards discharging his obligations to the girl. This letter, again, Takashima did not answer; but immediately after it, the girl herself was favoured with a letter from another solicitor at the West-end, who informed her that he was instructed to arrange matters with her on behalf of Takashima, and requested her to call on the next day, bringing with her any letters which she had received from that deceiver.

TO OVERCOME WEAKNESS.—Pepper's Quinine and Iron Tonic gives New Life, Appetite, Health, Strength, Energy. Cures Neuralgia, Indigestion, Nerve Debility. Pepper's Tonic. Kept everywhere.

She called at the appointed time, and the solicitor, or his representative, then offered her on Takashima's behalf £20, as compensation for the wrong done her, conditionally on her returning all Takashima's correspondence, and renouncing all further claims upon him. What was the girl to do? She was ill, heart-broken, and half-beside herself with disappointment and fear for the future. As the solicitor was careful to impress upon her, it was clear that Takashima, having a wife of his own already, could not fulfil his promise to marry her; and equally clear that, if so disposed, he could retire to Japan forthwith without paying her a farthing. It will surprise no one to hear that in this state of things the unfortunate girl was persuaded to accept the offer, and give up the letters. She signed a document of some kind, and received £5 down, and the balance of £15 was subsequently forwarded to her by the solicitor. I should, perhaps, here state that I have caused some inquiries to be made of the solicitor who acted on Takashima's behalf; and I understand from him that he was not directly instructed by Takashima, but by an official at the Japanese Legation, who is stated to have himself found the money which was paid on this occasion.

Twenty pounds would not go very far to carry the girl through the trouble now in store for her, and her subsequent history is as sad as might be expected. At the end of two or three months she found herself in want, and went back to Mr. Newton. She had not informed that gentleman of her previous negotiations with the solicitor on the other side. On hearing what had occurred, Mr. Newton wrote to Takashima, and to the solicitor who had represented him on the above occasion, but no answer was vouchsafed by either of them. For a time Mr. Newton lost sight of the girl. Then he received news of her from a policeman, who had found her in a destitute condition in the street, and had taken her home and placed her in charge of his own wife. She had remained there for some time, but being apparently too proud to live longer on the charity of the policeman and his wife, she suddenly left them and disappeared again. Then came the climax of her trouble. She was taken ill in the streets and carried to Paddington Infirmary. There a child was born, and there the wretched mother remained until a few weeks ago. From the Workhouse she wrote again to Mr. Newton, imploring him to try and do something for her. Mr. Newton relieved her necessities for a time out of his own pocket, and the last I have heard of her was that she had obtained a situation with a lady at Lancaster Gate, had been compelled to leave it by illness, and had once more gone back to the Workhouse Infirmary, having apparently not a friend in the world outside it, who would help her and her child.

The point to which I desire most strongly to call attention is the position of the man, who, from beginning to end of the events above detailed, has never disputed that he is the father of this child. It has been ascertained that he is, as Miss D. was informed, a valet at the Legation. Possibly he may think that in paying £20 he has done all that the occasion requires of him. I cannot say what the custom in such circumstances may be in Japan. His offence has been committed, however, not in Japan, but in England, and it is to English law that his victim should look for protection. The protection which that law ordinarily accords in such circumstances is that the father shall permanently maintain the infant; and the law further says that no payment of the kind described above shall stand in lieu of such maintenance. Why is the mother deprived of her ordinary legal rights in this case? For the simple reason that as the servant of a foreign Ambassador, Takashima is exempt from the jurisdiction of any English court. Proceedings which were attempted, in order to compel him to contribute to the maintenance of the child, were defeated from this cause, the Magistrate refusing to grant a summons. But it is not only the law which is in fault. Whatever the law may say, there is no doubt that Takashima's employers possess the power to force him to do his obvious duty to the girl and her child. Apart from the influence which a master can ordinarily exercise over his servant, an Ambassador has it in his power to withdraw his protection from his servant, and thereby hand him over to the law of the country in which he resides. Now observe what the attitude of the Japanese Legation has been in this case. On June 9 Mr. Newton, who seems to have left no stone unturned in order to get justice done to his client, wrote to Viscount Kawase, the Japanese Minister, asking for an interview on this matter. On June 13, no answer having been received, he wrote again. Down to the present moment the Minister has not accorded these letters the common courtesy of an acknowledgment. As the last of the letters was registered, there can be no question as to its having been duly received. The "comity of nations," on which depends the immunity of an Ambassador's household from legal proceedings, demands, I should have thought, better treatment than this. The Japanese, too, have the reputation of being such a scrupulously polite nation.

The wrongs of Takashima's unfortunate sweetheart raise, however, something more than a question of manners or courtesy. I would ask why, in a case of this kind, the law of any country should grant any immunity to the perpetrator of a foul wrong at the expense of one of its own subjects? The immunity from legal process of an Ambassador and his entourage depends in this country upon a statute of Queen Anne. The statute is old enough, but it rests on ideas and necessities still more ancient. I cannot see any reason for maintaining it. We should not ask for any British subject attached to an Embassy to a foreign State the right to murder, outrage, or otherwise injure the subjects of that State; neither should such a demand be made upon us. Particularly does this apply to offences against women. The position of a woman who places herself at the mercy of a foreigner is bad enough at the best of times; but it is almost too dreadful to contemplate, if a foreigner is to be free to commit here in the midst of us such a wrong as this Mr. Takashima has committed, without his victim having any legal means of redress.

Rational Dog Feeding.—Give wholesome and nutritious food (Spratt's Patent Meat Fibrine Dog Cakes). Do not give tit-bits and dainties because your dog, like a spoilt child, prefers what suits his palate. See that the Dog Cakes are stamped "Spratt's Patent" and a "×," as cheap and innutritious imitations are often substituted for extra profit. Pamphlet on Canine Diseases post free, Spratt's Patent, Limited, Bermondsey, London.

PLAIN WORDS ON PRACTICAL JOKES.

One or two incidents that have lately occurred strongly suggest that the time has arrived for a little plain speaking on practical joking in the Army. The latest occurrence of this kind of which reports have reached London was as follows:—During the late Militia training the Hon. O. C. Molyneux, a subaltern of the 3rd Lancashire Fusiliers, was the guest of Colonel Marton, Commanding the 3rd and 4th Battalions Royal Lancaster Regiment. The two Regiments were encamped side by side. In the small hours of the morning Colonel Marton walked back with his guest to his quarters. Immediately afterwards, Mr. Molyneux's quarters were invaded by five officers of [the Lancaster Regiment, who seized the subaltern, and dragged him off to their camp. They there placed him under a tap, saturating him with cold water and mud. His uniform was treated by the same process, and utterly ruined. On making his escape, Mr. Molyneux went at once, as he was, to Lieut.-Colonel Romer, who was in command of his Battalion, and reported the occurrence, showing the condition of his uniform, and giving the names of his assailants. On the following morning, Lieut.-Colonel Romer, taking a very proper view of the matter, made a formal report of it to the Officer Commanding the North-Western District. His report detailed the facts precisely as I have now described them, adding that during the assault the Lancashire officers used the filthiest and most abusive language, and that the occurrence took place close to the men's lines and in the presence of several of them—a circumstance which adds materially to the gravity of the offence. He also stated that Mr. Molyneux was able to identify his assailants, and mentioned the names of two of them. The only result of their proceedings, so far as these individuals were concerned, was that they were ordered by the General to apologise to Mr. Molyneux, and to pay for the damage to his uniform.

I have spoken of this occurrence as a "practical joke" because it was so described to me, and the course taken by the General seems to indicate that he, too, regards the matter in that light. It may be that I am wanting in a sense of humour, or that military men look on these matters differently from civilians; but, in my humble opinion, there is nothing in the nature of a joke about it, "practical" or otherwise. Practical joking, it is true, is apt at the best of times to be characterised by a conspicuous absence of humour. In nine cases out of ten it is only a name for a spiteful trick played to gratify a personal grudge; but the trick may now and then be cleverly planned or lead up to a comical situation. There is nothing of the kind about the performance of these five officers of the Lancaster Regiment. It is simply a cowardly and blackguardly assault, with no more pretence at joking about it than if the whole five had set on their victim and thrashed him black and blue. Men do not do such things in jest; and it does not need the statement that the outrage was accompanied by the most offensive language to show that it was a deliberate display of malice. It was so regarded by Lieut.-Colonel Romer in his report. He there expressed his surprise at the occurrence, as the utmost good feeling had previously existed between the officers of the two regiments, thereby implying that this incident was the outcome of bad feeling.

On that view of it, serious blame attaches to the General, who allowed such conduct to go to all intents and purposes unpunished. One officer of high rank with whose opinion on the subject I have been favoured, declares that all the five men concerned ought to have lost their commissions. Personally, I should have been disposed to treat them more mercifully than that, because from the time and other circumstances of the occurrence, I should have concluded that they were all a little the worse for drink, and that on recovering their senses they would perceive that their conduct had been unbecoming both to officers and to gentlemen. But there can be no question as to the necessity of dealing out exemplary punishment of some kind to offences of this character. It may be said that the officers concerned were only Militiamen. For the credit of the Regular Army, I cheerfully give all possible prominence to that circumstance; but I am bound to add that to my knowledge the Regular Army is not blameless in this respect. I have had frequent evidence to the contrary, and it is only a few weeks since reference was made in TRUTH to a most cowardly and brutal attack made at an Irish station upon an officer whose only offence seems to have been that he was a "ranker." The idea is too prevalent throughout the Army that any form of rowdy violence may be perpetrated upon an unpopular comrade with impunity, provided it be done after dinner and be described as "practical joking." This idea is equally baneful in its effect upon the rank-and-file and upon the good name of the Army at large. For that reason it is desirable that the next General Officer who is apprised of conduct such as this at Bury should report the matter to headquarters, where I do not think such practical joking will receive much encouragement.

SHUCKBURGH OF BRISTOL.

Among the civil actions tried at Bristol Assizes was one of more than local interest, owing to the valuable light thrown by it on the character of one Edward Shuckburgh, a local money-lender, whose name will be familiar to many readers of TRUTH. Edward Shuckburgh was the defendant in the action. The plaintiff was his brother, Mr. Francis Shuckburgh. The matter in dispute was a sum of £227 odd, and certain other personal property, alleged to be due from Edward to the estate of a third brother, Thomas, deceased, of which Mr. Francis Shuckburgh was the administrator. The £227 was Thomas's share of the estate of an aunt, Rosina Shuckburgh, also deceased, and it was Edward's conduct in relation to this estate which is of so much interest to the public. It appeared incidentally that upon the death of the aunt, Edward had taken possession of the estate without disclosing the state of affairs to his brothers. When Mr. Francis Shuckburgh, accidentally hearing of the event, caused his solicitor to make inquiries, Edward wrote and informed him that if he thought he had any legal claims, he was at liberty to go to law, but that such an attitude on his part might have the effect of defeating certain generous intentions towards him which he (Edward) had formed. Francis seems to have felt more confidence in his own legal claims than in his brother's generous intentions. He commenced an administration action, and thereupon Edward at once paid over to him his share of the estate. Thomas seems to have appeared on the scene about the same time, but he died within two or three months. When Francis, as administrator, claimed the amount due to Thomas, Edward asserted that he had paid it, and produced Thomas's receipt. As Thomas was only a Sergeant in the Royal Artillery, and was engaged to be married to a young lady at Aldershot, the fact of his having received £227 two months before his death was not likely to have passed unnoticed had it occurred. Francis did not assert that Edward had forged their brother's receipt, but he contended that Edward must have obtained the document without paying over the money, and this was the issue which the Bristol Jury had to try. The defendant, Edward, went into the witness-box, and swore that he paid the money to Thomas in notes and gold at his own office in Bristol, on the date of the receipt. Upon his cross-examination, it appeared that about the time of the receipt he had made two false statements in regard to Thomas's whereabouts, and that he had given no information to Francis of Thomas's death. It further appeared that immediately on Thomas's death, he had applied to the War Office for his brother's effects to be handed over to him; and that on the form supplied for the purpose he had signed a declaration that he was the sole surviving relative. Upon this evidence being extracted from him, his counsel threw up his brief. Mr. Justice Day informed Edward that it was lucky for him that his case was not being tried in the adjoining criminal Court, and the jury, after a short parley, returned a verdict for the plaintiff.

HOUSE DRAINAGE.—Sanitary work of every kind contracted for.—The Sanitary Engineering Co., 65, Victoria-street, Westminster.

The net result of the case is, therefore, this:—The jury, by their verdict, find that Edward Shuckburgh endeavoured to rob his deceased brother's estate, for the purpose of depriving their surviving brother of his share of it, and that, in pursuance of this amiable project, he perjured himself in the witness-box. It is further proved that Edward had previously refused to hand over the share of one of his brothers in their aunt's estate; and that he had made a false declaration to the War Office in order to obtain exclusive possession of the other brother's personal effects. I invite special attention to these proceedings of Shuckburgh's for two reasons. In the first place, Shuckburgh conducts at Bristol an advertising loan office, and spreads his net with a special eye to the patronage of the medical and clerical professions, for whose benefit he makes a special parade of his own uprightness and integrity. In the next place, this same Shuckburgh, through his solicitor, Mr. Cumberland, had the impudence only a few weeks back to threaten me with legal proceedings unless I published, at his dictation, an apology for certain observations which had been made in Truth upon his circulars. On the collapse of the defendant's case at the trial detailed above, it was stated in Court by his counsel that his solicitor, the aforesaid Mr. Cumberland, had no knowledge of the false declaration to the War Office which put an end to the case, and all parties agreed in exonerating the solicitor from blame. That is highly satisfactory; but, as regards the threatened proceedings against Truth, I must repectfully observe that some further explanation is still due from Mr. Cumberland.

Let me once more recapitulate what happened between Shuckburgh and myself. In his character of the friend in need of the professional classes, Shuckburgh embellishes his touting circulars with letters purporting to be written by those who have done business with him. In one of these, reprinted in Truth of June 25, a Northumberland Vicar offers to satisfy anybody who may be referred to him of Shuckburgh's "bona fides." In another, a client, writing from "—— Rectory, Staffordshire," testifies to Shuckburgh's straightforwardness and promptness. In a third, an "M.D.," writing from "Suffolk," expresses himself "perfectly satisfied" with Shuckburgh's business methods I referred to these documents in Truth as "pretended testimonials." Nearly three weeks elapsed, when I received the following letter:—

19, Clare-street, Bristol.
June 10, 1893.

Sir,—I am instructed by Mr. Edward Shuckburgh, of No. 5, Bristol Bridge, Bristol, moneylender, to write you with respect to a paragraph inserted by you in No. 856 of Truth, May 25, 1893, asserting that my client was now distributing amongst the clerical and medical professions a sheet of pretended testimonials received from parsons and doctors who have done business with him. As this is absolutely untrue, and calculated to cause my client great injury and loss in his business, I must ask you whether you are willing to insert in your next issue of Truth an apology, which must be prepared by me, and for publication at your expense in four London or local papers my client may determine? Should you refuse to comply, my instructions are to commence proceedings without further notice, — Yours obediently, John Cumberland.

By way, presumably, of accentuating this communication, and showing how thoroughly in earnest Mr. Cumberland and his client were, a letter in identical terms was addressed at the same time to Messrs. Wyman & Sons, the printers of Truth. It not being my custom to comply with demands which are accompanied by the pointing of a pistol at my head, I did not answer Mr. Cumberland; but I mentioned in the next number of Truth that he disputed my description of Shuckburgh's circulars, and I added that if he would give me his personal assurance (as distinguished from his professional instructions) that the testimonials were genuine, I would accept such assurance, and give all publicity to it. From that day to this, although I recurred to the matter in Truth of July 20, I have heard not a word more from either Mr. Cumberland or his client.

Now, when Mr. Cumberland on June 10 informed me and Messrs. Wyman & Sons that "his instructions were to commence proceedings without further notice" unless we complied with his demands, he was either so instructed or he was not. The latter alternative implies that Mr. Cumberland stated an untruth with the view of intimidating Messrs. Wyman and myself into apologising to his client. Mr. Cumberland being a member of an honourable profession, that alternative must be dismissed at once. Accepting, then, Mr. Cumberland's statement that he was so instructed, I now ask him (neither Messrs. Wyman nor I having taken the slightest notice of his communication) why he did not carry out his instructions? Did he, after reading my remarks in the subsequent issue of TRUTH, communicate with Shuckburgh and fail to satisfy himself of the genuineness of the testimonials? If so, I maintain that it was his duty to write to me and say so. It will be seen that, in the letter which I have quoted above, Mr. Cumberland states categorically that what I had said about the testimonials was "absolutely untrue." He gives this, not as his instructions, but as his own statement. Let it be granted, however, in his favour, that the contradiction is to be taken as "made on instructions." Let us suppose that a solicitor, a member of an honourable profession, makes (upon instructions) a certain statement to the editor of a newspaper, with the view of its being published; and let us next suppose that the solicitor finds that his client has wrongly instructed him, and that he (the member of an honourable profession) has consequently been made the medium for the publication of a lie. Is it or is it not the duty of that solicitor to at once withdraw his statement as publicly as he made it? I say that it is; and I should imagine that among the members of an honourable profession there can be no room for doubt on the point. So strongly do I hold this view that I would, if necessary, invite the opinion of the Incorporated Law Society on the point, it being one of great importance to all parties concerned—to lawyers, to newspaper proprietors, and to the public as readers of newspapers. For these reasons I hope that Mr. Cumberland will enlighten me further as to his relations with Shuckburgh in connection with the letter above quoted, and more particularly as to whether he still adheres to his declaration that my observations on his client's circular are "absolutely untrue."

I need scarcely add, however, that whether Shuckburgh's testimonials are genuine or forged is now a matter of very little moment. The verdict of the jury at Bristol Assizes, and his own statements in the witness-box, afford a testimonial to this usurer's integrity and truthfulness which renders any other unnecessary. Should the publication of this unsolicited testimonial cause, in Mr. Cumberland's language, injury and loss to Shuckburgh in his business, I shall be sincerely glad, and Shuckburgh will only have himself to thank.

"MACLEAN AND HIS SPONSORS."

Several further letters have been addressed to me by "Honorary Members" of the "British and Foreign Association" in reference to the recent articles in TRUTH under the above head. Foremost among them I have much pleasure in publishing the following communication which I have received from Sir Frederick Pollock:—

> SIR,—Having regard to the facts appearing in your current issue, I shall be obliged if you will allow me to say explicitly in your pages (which will be far more effectual than any communication to Mr. Angus Maclean, even if he be now discoverable) that neither Mr. Angus Maclean nor any other person acting under the name of the "British and Foreign Association" is now authorised to make use of my name for any purpose whatever.—Yours faithfully,
> August 11. FREDERICK POLLOCK.

Sir Fitzroy Maclean asks me to state that he wrote to withdraw his name from the Association some weeks back. Professor Darwin, of Cambridge, writes that he was induced to subscribe to the Association by the recommendation of another honorary member, but that, not seeing his name on some of the later lists, he supposed, until he saw TRUTH of the 3rd inst., that his membership had lapsed. He now sends me a letter which he has written to Maclean ordering his name to be withdrawn, as does also Mr. Daniel Barton, the British Consul at Geneva, who states, like several others, that he has no recollection of having ever become a member. Mr. W. H. Grenfell also informs me that he has now withdrawn his name.

It may seem to some that I have devoted an unnecessary amount of space and trouble to this now apparently extinct swindle. But I would point out to any who may take that view that previous experience has shown Angus Maclean to be somewhat of the same nature as those reptiles which, when their heads or limbs are cut off, speedily grow new ones in their place. At least twice during the last three years I supposed that Maclean was suppressed, but after a time he has begun to wriggle about again. Moreover, as he re-appears—to take a theosophical view of him—on a lower plane of existence at each successive re-incarnation, and resorts to baser tricks and stratagems in order to earn a livelihood, the oftener he is resuscitated the more objectionable he becomes. He has now disappeared for the time, but I imagine that he is carrying about with him all the original circulars of the "British and Foreign Association" still left in stock; and as soon as he can procure a few postage-stamps and a room to serve as the "Offices of the Association," I have no doubt that he will be at his old tricks, or new ones worse than the old. It is, therefore, of real importance that all those whose names appear in these circulars should formally wash their hands of him, and thereby make it the more risky for him to obtain money by advertising himself as connected with them. I hope that this will be appreciated by those "honorary members"—and there are still a good many of them—from whom I have not yet heard.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

A TOILET IN A RAILWAY TRAIN.

THE other day, far off in the country, I got into a railway compartment in which there was only one person—a lady. In the course of the journey to town I witnessed the operation of a face and head toilet so perfect in its way that I felt as it went forward what a nice subject it would be to write about. The lady struck me as being a petite bourgeoise on an adventure bound. I took her to be thirty-five, but she might have passed for ten years younger, and was one of those women of whom the French say that "they are only the age they look." So few traces were on her visage of the flatness and tedium of highly genteel bringing-up and living that I concluded she was not of la crême. Her hat, a black and wide-brimmed Tuscan one, was trimmed with feathers, and sat jauntily on a head of thick light-brown hair, that went curling and waving about, and was of the texture of floss silk. The curls were so arranged as to show that they were no product of art, but grew out of the scalp. The figure was one to set off to advantage the clothes it wore, and was corseted in a way to confine the waist merely, and to give relief and freedom to the bust. There was nothing particularly noticeable in the materials of the garments; but was not la science du chiffon displayed in the arrangement of folds and frillings? As to the countenance, it was singularly agreeable, it having at once a soft and a piquant expression, and making one feel that there was a deal of life behind it. The features were well proportioned, but the nose had a touch of irregularity. This, however, was not a defect, it being in keeping with a beautifully-formed mouth of the cherry-ripe sort. A fine full forehead, fair and smooth, and speaking dark eyes, showed that the lady was no fool. She was unveiled, and had on gloves the worse for the smut and dust that found their way into our compartment. Nearly an hour and a half passed in the heat of a broiling afternoon. Our compartment felt like a Turkish bath, and had the same effect on the skin. The lady read the supplements of newspapers, which are generally filled with stories and chit-chat. I was deep in a novel when not engaged in watching her, for she had excited my curiosity. I had noticed a collection of objects in repoussé silver attached to her girdle. They were expensive, and, seeming to be toys for grown-up people, it did not occur to me that they were the objets d'utilité which they turned out to be. We drew nigh to Paris. The lady suddenly took out of her pocket a silver box of pearl powder, and a case mirror of the same metal. She then undid from the girdle what I should have taken for a flask of smelling-salts, also encased in silver. It held pâte d'amande soap, which could be applied with a camel's-hair pencil, that lay as if it were a pencil in a silver tube. A small basin of impervious linen, that was folded up and hidden under the porte bouquet of a sheaf of roses, was in turn forthcoming. Concealed among the flowers was also an indiarubber flask, filled with water. It amused me to note how ingeniously this utensil was stowed away, the neck being in the stalks of the flowers and the balloon part uppermost, and masked with the delicate foliage and tendrils of the vine. The lady had pinned to her petticoat a small square of bath-towel, the size of a pocket-handkerchief. Having set her toilet utensils on the seat before her, she examined every bit of her face carefully in the tiny mirror. This done, she raised carefully the curls that clustered over her forehead, and pouring out water into the basin, lathered her face and proceeded to wash it. The only words she uttered during the whole journey were spoken here. "It's distilled water, the best water for the skin when one uses soap." With what minute care she washed, attending particularly to the eyelids and nostrils. The drying process was not less minutely gone through. I was, as the lady operated, reminded of the elegant daintiness of a cat when it washes its face with its paws. On being washed, she took from the silver objects suspended from the girdle a small case-comb, and passed it through the short, fine front hair which she had pushed back. It was then ready to be curled round her fingers. An R.A. might have done worse than watch how she manipulated these little curls so as to throw them into a wild grace, and to give value to the charming forehead and piquancy to the physiognomy. Instinct alone, I should say, prompted the fingers, as they worked lightly with the silky hair. Next, the face having had time to dry well, the lady dusted it with the poudre de riz, wiping the powder well off near the ears, and more gently farther towards the front of the face. It was allowed to remain thickest near the nose, though still not thick. The little she left was really an improvement, and made her resemble a pastel of Latour. Somehow it brought her face more into harmony with the fla-fla of her frillings, and cleared off just a soupçon of provincial style. She was not yet done. I had noticed what had seemed to me a large old-fashioned watch hanging from the girdle, and thought what a good effect its antique air had on this modern person. It simply contained a small coiled-up taper, a few small implements for manicure purposes, a tiny pair of tongs such as Spaniards use as cigarette-holders, a glass tube of carmine, and another of what seemed gum-water. In short, it held quite an arsenal of war implements for a beauty. Care had been taken in the poudre de riz phase with the toilet of the eyelids and crows'-feet that were just beginning to appear. They, and the flesh of the cheeks near mouth and chin, alone betrayed the thirty-five years. Well, the taper was lighted, and one of the small implements examined and discarded for a simple hairpin, the rounded end of which was held over the flame until it was well covered with lampblack, when it was applied with a strong, quick, dexterous touch to the root of each eyebrow, care being taken to keep well in the middle. Thus applied, the mark made with the hairpin was hidden in the somewhat scattered hair of the brows, and did not show on the white skin. One must have seen the lampblack put on to have been aware of it, so discreet was the application. Indeed, discrétion characterised the use which had been made of all the different aids to nature. The carmine was rubbed in dry on the cartilage dividing the nostrils, and but a mere trace of it was suffered to remain. It improved the nose by giving it more definiteness. A faint touch was also applied with a wee chamois scumbling-brush to the eyelids. Finally, that survival of lovely woman's slavery, and now her means of ambush, the veil, was donned, to blend, of course, and tone down any little crudities that had remained. It was new, of soft black net, and, being fastened on the wide brim of the hat, stood out well, in covering the whole face from the upper part. Its ends were dexterously twisted at the back of the head, to give it a smart, shapely air. There was a small parcel on the seat containing new gloves and shoes, both of which proved neat fits, and were perfect in their different ways. An old pair of shoes were taken off and thrown out of the window, and the new pair well twisted backwards and forwards until they were quite supple were slipped on. A final touch had yet to be given. A lace-edged lawn pocket-handkerchief that lay in a cardboard box (which in turn disappeared from the window with the dirty gloves of the early part of the journey) was folded fanwise, and the central point stuck in a Swiss ceinture which held in a loose corsage at the waist. This last detail gave indescribable piquancy and freshness to the costume. We got to Paris. Somebody was waiting. I knew him by appearance. He was a Prefect who had, the papers next day stated, "just come to town to confer with M. Dupuy about the elections." The lady had come to meet him. Probably, as she took not so much as a dressing case with her, servants and others about her in her provincial home would have thought she had only gone a few stations off, to spend the day with some neighbourly family. She descended from the train with the lightness of a bird. The Prefect was respectfully empressé, but he could not help backing a few steps and exclaiming, "What a witch you are, to be so fresh-looking and élégante, after that eighty miles' journey in a railway-carriage, and not a train de luxe either!" Thought I, "You innocent man!" A neat brougham that was waiting whisked them away, he carrying the bouquet, and suspecting nothing of the water-flask and linen basin that were hidden in it. This high official had filled the prefecture of a department traversed by the railway by which I had travelled, and was promoted to a higher one by the actual Premier. I have been often asked what Prefects are good for. The toilet I witnessed in the train will perhaps suggest an answer.

Minton's (Limited). Minton's China.—A visit to Messrs. Mortlock's extensive collection in Oxford-st. and Orchard-st. will conclusively prove the superiority of taste and lowness of price for which this house has been so celebrated during the last century.

The political world is not a sweet one. But it never was so noisome as since those high-minded and chivalrous gentlemen, the Marquis de Morès and MM. Déroulède and Millevoye, otherwise Wildoats, otherwise Eucalyptus, entered it. The Republicans were often rough and unpleasant, but I do not recollect them being ruffianly. In this respect the three "gentlemen" just named have outstripped De Cassagnac. The affair of the forged papers brands the trio, it being now evident that they—and, indeed, their whole gang—knew they were forgeries before they were read in the tribune. Comte de Dion had obtained proof of this from Mr. Austen Lee. The Comte, nevertheless, signed a letter jointly with another second of Millevoye releasing this person from the duty of fighting a duel with M. Clémenceau, whom he had libelled and insulted. The Comte gave the reason for the release. It was that he had seen the papers (which he knew were forgeries), and they so fully convicted Clémenceau of being a traitor that no man of honour could accept a challenge from him. It is now given as an excuse that Millevoye, being tall as a eucalyptus, he was certain to be shot, for Clémenceau had a right to use pistols, and, being a crack marksman, would prefer these arms to swords.

I always said that Norton was the man of straw of the gang, and that the forgeries never originated in his brain, and never could have. The Government, for some reason I cannot quite fathom, wanted to hush up the affair while prosecuting, but was unable to do so to the extent it tried. Norton gave a consistent story. Ducret did not. Millevoye simply made a grandiloquent speech, in which he showed address in slurring ticklish points. It gave out a false tone from first to last. Norton, I informed you long ago, was the man of straw who was to stand the racket should the gang be prosecuted for the forgeries. For what else would he have been, towards the end, given £400, which the accomplices hastily scraped together when they found they were treading on dangerous ground? He had been originally paid 8s. for each translation of the forged letters from French into English, the Marquis de Morès' governess (it was admitted at the outset) having translated them from English into French. Neither the investigating Magistrate nor the Chief Justice at the trial thought of asking who wrote them first in English, or of examining the governess. Norton let out that several drafts had been made of the Foreign Office Memorandum, establishing that Clémenceau, Rochefort, and Burdeau had been bought. He was not pressed on this point, the Judge feigning not to hear what he said. Nor was Baroness Kurth, a professional beauty, called on as a witness. Millevoye, she says, used to go to her soirées, and she warned him of the machinations of England. A point that should certainly have been cleared up was this: 100,000 francs were to have been raised by private subscription by Millevoye to buy the "documents." It was pretty certain that beyond the salary of 10 francs a translation Norton was not to get more. There would then be a balance of nearly 96,000 francs. To whom was it to go?

The Government, I think, was at first taken in, or pretended to be taken in, by the forgeries. Dupuy was hatching the speech that he made last week, and in which he opens wide the door to Clerical Conservatives calling themselves "ralliés." Clémenceau would have been in the time of incubation looked at as a future thorn in the Premier's side. Hence the encouragement given to the forgeries, and the astounding way in which Dupuy and Develle delivered themselves up to them. The attempts to hush up are explicable when one comes to this conclusion, but not otherwise. The Prime Minister, who was brought up in the housekeeper's room of Comte Benedetti, and, of course, would have a sneaking kindness for Millevoye because he is a Bonapartist, regretted that France is not under the government of a Venetian Council of Ten. Were it, and he at the head, he would say to Clémenceau, "In twelve hours hence I expect you to have disappeared." He also blurted out that he had been turning over in his mind all day how to impel Clémenceau to commit suicide. Possibly he thought that in seeming to believe the forged papers genuine he would accomplish this result. Badgered, hunted, abused, and distressed for money as Clémenceau was, it astonishes me that he did not give himself his quietus. He is fearfully hard up and has been to my knowledge for years. The news of his suicide on the evening of the day M. Dupuy wished for it was cried on the Boulevards. Several editors telephoned to La Justice to have particulars. Clémenceau answered them. He began in each case by asking a lot of them to deny the truth of the report. One of them insisting that he was well informed, his interlocutor said: "The person who answers you is Clémenceau. Good-bye." The day on which Millevoye was to have crushed him, Clémenceau was dropped by all but three or four friends. In the lobby he was avoided as if he were a leper. One of the remaining friends went up to tell him of colloquies between Dupuy, Develle, and the holder of the damning documents. He then expressed commiseration. "There is one thing that annoys me," said C, "it is to hear every one putting an acute accent into my name." The kind friend took this hint not to keep on fussing and playing the part of a bore, and beat a retreat. The tide has since turned with a rush. That highway-gentleman, as Rochefort calls him, Morès, has gone to the Var for an electoral district, of which Clémenceau is candidate, to abuse him and otherwise stand in his way. Morès cuts now a sorry figure. To have borrowed 20,000 f. at 0 per cent. from unfortunate Herz and only to pay him at the end of two years, and that when he wanted to be at liberty to revile him—and he too a prisoner—was not what one posturing as a Bayard should do.

Mrs. S. A. Allen's World's Hair Restorer. Restores the colour. Renews the growth. Arrests the fall. Cleanses the scalp.

M. Dupuy's speech at Puy can be hardly called a programme. It admits of being turned into a roundelay. He spoke at as great length as though he were airing doctrines and creating a platform. The burden of his Jack Horner-like discourse was: "What a good boy was I, Dupuy, the poor process-server's son! How Dupuy loves Puy, and how Puy loves Dupuy!" This Dupuy is a massive man—short, thick-set, fleshy, and in constant good-humour with himself and the world. He is not an Auvergnat in his quickness to assimilate, and would be an ideal country juge de paix.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

THE harvest of a quiet eye, dear Lady Betty, gathers in a strange variety of thought, at times frivolous, at other times serious; now earnest then gay; whilst, with the man of the world, these reflections are apt to be coloured with a faint tint of cynicism which provides them with individuality.

Sitting one morning last week upon the summit of Wexcombe Downs, a fiery sun flooding the valley below with light, with only the sky-line around for a limit to the broad acres of princely Savernake, my thoughts not very unnaturally turned serious. Far as the eye could reach, field, forest, and flood, hamlets and townships, hills, hollows, and plains, lay spread the glorious demesne of the Most Honourable George William Thomas Brudenell-Bruce, Marquis and Earl of Ailesbury, Earl Bruce, Viscount Savernake, Earl of Cardigan, and Baron of ever so many other places besides in the various Peerages of the United Kingdom. For miles to the right were clustered the stately trees of Savernake Forest with the red deer peering timorously over the tall bracken, herds of fallow deer and droves of cattle leisurely seeking the cool of the shaded pool, the twelve-mile avenue of beech, unsurpassed in all England, and Savernake House for a centre to the picture, with its art treasures, heirlooms, and almost regal luxury.

To all of this and to much more besides only eight years ago did the present Lord Ailesbury succeed. To-day, just turned thirty, shattered in health and bankrupt, he has wrecked the fortunes of an illustrious house when at the very prime of its prosperity!

It is easy, of course, to blame others for the failure which they have made of their lives, but, as I gazed upon all the splendour which lay at my feet, I could not but feel pity for the lad who had squandered this magnificent inheritance. It required a special training to administer a property of such magnitude, and this training he never received. Semi-ruler over several thousands of tenants, he had obligations and duties to perform which only one in a million could have fulfilled. A great commercial business can be entrusted to the control of an able manager, but only the incessant personal attention of the owner himself can satisfactorily accomplish the task of ruling over so large an estate as Savernake. No mere generous outlay of money will make up for the personal interest that such a landlord should take in each individual tenant upon his estate. No wonder, then, that this poor lad, unaccustomed to country life, untrained to the management of an estate, and by nature opposed to the restraints of responsible Society, flung away the brilliant inheritance which was far too large for him to control. I cannot conceive a greater curse than for a man of his Bohemian disposition to be burdened with a property of this magnitude, which it requires the ability of a Statesman to administer properly. There is not one in a hundred thousand who could even conscientiously manage an estate of the size and of the importance of Savernake. No wonder, therefore, that with his tastes and with his disposition Lord Ailesbury was scared by the appalling task and was practically driven into a life of ignoble dissipation.

* * * * *

A distinguished politician has written desiring me to propose a compulsory close time for Members of Parliament. "It is both cruel and unwise," he writes, "to harass us day and night, summer and winter, as it is now rapidly becoming the custom to do. We are not vermin, and all other animals but these are protected by law." The phrase "other animals" must certainly be a slip, and, besides, though Providence created men, politicians have invented themselves, and the natural instincts of humanity, therefore, are not excited in their favour as they are in the case of the "other animals." Indeed, the more severely they are worked the sooner will they be exterminated—a circumstance which should very materially improve the prospects of the human race.

The Editor of the Times appears to have just discovered that the French detest the English as bitterly, if not more so, than they do any other neighbouring nation, and in a leading article on Saturday that paper astonished the world with a laboured attempt to account for the cause of this dislike to us. But the reason is a very simple one. We English are by no means a lovable race. We have many admirable qualities. We are a hardy, practical, persevering people; but these are not in themselves sympathetic properties. We are aggressive, self-assertive, purse-proud, and hypocritical. We are apt to sing psalms and pick pockets at one and the same time, and our neighbours, not altogether unjustly, therefore, resent the over-righteous tone that we adopt in criticising them and their concerns. Wherever the Englishman goes he has the fatal influence of spoiling even the most simple of characters. A few British tourists will make the inhabitants of the most inexperienced province shrewd, suspicious, grasping, and dishonest. This is within the common knowledge of any who have travelled in little-visited lands, and a consideration of this phenomenon will enable us the better, perhaps, to understand why our neighbours, and more especially the French, so heartily detest us. It is also a curious fact that whenever there are any General Elections to be held in the great Republics the most popular policy is to twist the tail of the British Lion. It would be instructive as a subject for the dull season to discuss the question, "Are we English really much superior to all other nations?" I think we are, but apparently our neighbours think otherwise, and it might be well, therefore, to discover whether we are mistaken or whether they are stupidly prejudiced.

It is ludicrous, of course, for the French to try to establish colonies in the face of the steady decrease of population which is evident in France. The chief purpose of a colony is to provide shelter for the overflow of population. The more France in its present condition extends its sphere of colonisation the more must it weaken itself, and we can therefore afford to look on with genial unconcern whilst it works out such a policy. Should our race ever so increase that Siam would become necessary to us, we should have it. Till then let us possess our souls in peace.

With the thermometer at ninety five degrees, with everybody in a state of collapse, physical, financial, and social, it is impossible to provide news, for the very ample reason that there is no news to provide. This continued tropical heat is not only unnatural, but utterly unsuited to the conditions of life in England. We cannot grow grapes, and it is useless for anything else; besides which, it interferes terribly with conversation, for as the recognised basis of this in England is abuse of the weather, now that we can no longer depend upon it, there is nothing left to us but silence. It is really becoming intolerable. We look at each other, gasp, say, "How are you?" and then collapse. Japhet's task when in search of a father was mere child's-play as compared to that of the myriads of inhabitants of the British Isles in search of a second conversational phrase.

The marriage of Lord Terence Blackwood, younger son of Lord Dufferin, to Miss Davis, will take place in Paris in October next. Miss Davis is an American.

For many years in the autumn the Carlton and Junior Carlton Clubs have interchanged hospitality whenever repairs and redecorations rendered it necessary that either of these institutions should close. This season, however, in consequence of the prolonged sitting of Parliament, the Carlton is compelled to reserve its accommodation for the use of its own members. The Junior Carlton, which will close its doors upon the 19th inst., is, therefore, to find an asylum at the Conservative Club in St. James's-street, when the members will have an opportunity of passing judgment upon the much-disputed decorations which occasioned so severe a controversy at the Conservative Club a few months ago.

Much surprise and more regret have been caused by the intelligence, telegraphed from Geneva, of the death of Julia Lady Jersey, which occurred in Switzerland on Sunday after a short illness. The late Julia Lady Jersey was one of the most familiar figures in London Society of recent times. A daughter of the distinguished Statesman, the late Sir Robert Peel, a sister of the present Sir Robert, the brilliant orator, of the Speaker of the House of Commons, and of the late Mrs. Stonor, for many years the intimate friend of the Princess of Wales, Julia Lady Jersey possessed a large share of the ability and conversational talent of this gifted family. A staunch friend, Lady Jersey never permitted the fluctuations of fortune to interfere with her friendships, a reproach so justly advanced against many of the would-be men and women of the world of our day. She was wise in the ways of the world—but she was not worldly.—Believe me to be, very truly yours, MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

THERE are only ninety-five entries for the Cesarewitch, as against 120 last year, but in 1891 the number sank to eighty-six, so that this handicap may be regarded as holding its own to a wonderful extent, considering how very few horses can now fairly stay the course over which it is run. Marcion, who had at the last been made favourite, has not been engaged. The silly, eager, greedy herd of addleheads who are always rushing in and prematurely backing horses in this infatuated manner, live in a succession of chloroform dreams, or they would long ago have recognised the boundless and bottomless folly of speculating in this sort of fashion when in utter ignorance of the owner's plans. Marcion has not been entered for the Cesarewitch because Mr. Vyner hopes that he will win the valuable stake (£4,000 added) which is to be run for at Longchamps on the Sunday in the Newmarket Second October week. The entry includes La Flèche and Sir Hugo, and they will no doubt be the top weights. Lord Bradford's horse suffered severely from his race on the hard ground during the Craven Meeting, but he is now going on all right, and it is hoped that he will stand another preparation. It is, however, by no means a certainty that Sir Hugo will start for the Cesarewitch, as the race which Lord Bradford has in his eye for this horse is the Champion Plate, which is run on the Tuesday in the Second October week, and the entry includes nothing better than Medici, Raeburn, and Buccaneer. No fewer than thirteen horses from the Manton stable have been entered, of which seven belong to the Duke of Beaufort, whose best candidate will probably be Son of a Gun. Last year's winner has again been entered, but it may be hoped that this handicap will not again fall to so bad a horse as Burnaby, and Insurance, who then ran second, is also exceedingly moderate. The fact is that the field for last year's Cesarewitch was probably the worst that has ever started for that handicap. Buccaneer, Watercress, May Duke, Red Eyes, and Chesterfield are the best class animals among the remainder. The best three-year-olds are Sweden, Nobleman, Wolf's Crag, and Tressure, who is a really good stayer, and she would have won the Prince of Wales's Stakes at Ascot if there had been a strong run race. The most remarkable feature in the entry is the number of presumed non-stayers which have been engaged, including several animals which were much fancied for the Stewards' Cup and other T.Y.C. handicaps, notably Amandier, Prisoner, and Childwick. The entry includes Enniskillen, Seaton Delaval, Roy Neil, Bushey Park, Rigmarole, Ragimunde, Old Boots, Brandy, and Newcourt as a matter of course. There are eight French horses, of which Callistrate is the best, and I hear that a coup is contemplated with M. Abeille's steed, who ran very well indeed in the spring, but afterwards he seemed to lose his form. The French have only twice won the Cesarewitch, in 1885 with Plaisanterie, and in 1888 with Ténébreuse, and on each occasion a huge stake was taken across the Channel. There is one entry from Hungary—a four-year-old, by Doncaster, that belongs to Herr Blaskowitz, who won the Goodwood Cup fifteen years ago with Kincsem.

There are 121 entries for the Cambridgeshire, as against 131 last year and 124 in 1891, but in 1889 the number sank to 106. There has not been a more brilliant entry for this handicap since 1871, when Favonius, Sterling, Hannah, Corisande, Sabinus, Henry, and Digby Grand were all engaged. The Duke of Westminster has entered Orme, who will certainly be top weight, with La Flèche next, and it will be very interesting to see how Major Egerton handicaps them with Isinglass and Marcion. It had been expected that the Derby winner would have been entered for the Cesarewitch, as he is believed to stay well, but to have trained him for that race might have impaired his speed, and it is intended to win the £8,000 stake at Manchester with him, the distance being a mile. I hear from Newmarket that a hope is now entertained at Bedford Cottage that Suspender may stand training again, in which case he might represent Mr. MacCalmont in the Lancashire Plate, but I shall not believe in this horse again being seen on a racecourse until his number actually goes up. Suspender is entered for the Cambridgeshire, and so is Haut Brion, who will assuredly win a good handicap during the autumn if he goes on all right. I do not for a moment believe that the Duke of Westminster entertains any serious intention of starting Orme for the Cambridgeshire or any other handicap, and the Limekiln Stakes will no doubt be his next and last race. El Diablo will probably turn out to be the best of Colonel North's lot of six, which includes that very unlucky mare, Lady Hermit. The best class in the entry, in addition to the animals already named, is represented by Windgall, Watercress, Gantlet, Buccaneer, Clarence, Gangway, Nobleman, Ali, Simonian, Childwick, Euclid, Lauriscope, Esmond, Sir Hugo, May Duke, Comedy, Laodamia, Newcourt, Perigord, Convent, Curio, Wolf's Crag, Adoration, Siffleuse, Chesterfield, Tressure, Cabin Boy, Mrs. Butterwick, and Raeburn. There are fourteen entries from the Manton stable. Either Comedy or Laodamia will certainly be a good favourite, as the speculative public have been waiting all the season with patient expectation for the "slipping" of these animals. It is odd that while Amandier, who is believed to lack stamina, has been entered for the long race, Medicis, who is supposed to be a stayer, is only in the short one, as also is Le Nicham. There are nine French horses, including Callistrate and Seraphine. The French have often been very dangerous in this handicap since Palestro won for the late Count de Lagrange in 1861, and they have been seven times successful, and must have won at least £300,000 by their victories, the most profitable of which was that of Montargis, twenty years ago, when he won by the shortest of heads, and more than £70,000 went over to Paris in consequence. It is rather a surprise to find the name of Glenwood in both these handicaps, but I shall be astonished if he is a starter for either of them.

"TOILET LANOLINE" softens, clears, and preserves the skin, and should be used in every household. "Toilet Lanoline" protects the skin from the effects of exposure, and adds to the natural beauty. In collapsible tubes, 6d.; in small boxes, 3d., from all chemists and druggists. Wholesale depôt, 67, Holborn-viaduct. The genuine bears the trade-mark, "Lanoline."

It may be hoped that both handicaps will be won by animals of good class, whose public form has been respectable and consistent, and not by some "thrown in" beast which has been dexterously "steadied." The hurly-burly which followed the victory of Comedy four years ago was useful, inasmuch as it served as a warning to "astute" owners; but the Stewards of the Jockey Club must not forget that such interference on their part must not be only occasional and transient, or it passes for weakness and caprice, and practically works out worse evils than a consistent, resolute, and systematic indifference. There must be one weight and one measure for all owners.

There was very good racing last week both at Redcar and at Kempton Park. Chin Chin was not sent south, so she picked up a small race at Redcar, where the principal two-year-old stake fell to Lord Zetland's Lucy Cross, by St. Simon, a filly which I mentioned some time ago as likely to be winning races about this time, but she is no flyer. Green Mint was greatly fancied for the Wilton Plate, but had no chance with Mr. Lowther's Carloman, who won all the way, and he must be a very useful colt. Mr. Vyner did not care to start Marcion for the three-year-old stake at Redcar, so Harbinger was made a great favourite, although the rush on him was most emphatically muddy-minded, for Peppercorn was sure to beat him on the Derby running, and Mr. Joicey's horse had the advantage of being fresh. It was a fine race, but Peppercorn won cleverly, and some distracted mooncalves have since mentioned him as a promising outsider for Doncaster; but 5,000 to 1 would be a short price to take about him for the Leger while Isinglass and other fancied candidates keep well.

During the last four months there has been a deal of elaborate noise raised about Government, a colt belonging to Baron Hirsch, and there could not have been more laudatory cackling about this creature if he had beaten Sempronius and Lord Rosebery's colt. Government has several times been withdrawn at the last moment from races, for he was regarded as being too valuable to be knocked about on hard ground. At last his début came at Kempton Park, and, as so often happens when the impending advent of a two-necked swan or a three-legged calf is proclaimed, it was a case of the mountain and the mouse, for Delphos, whose success I had predicted, gave him 19 lb. and beat him easily. It is clear that the idea of Government being a Derby colt is a fairy tale of the most crack-brained description. It is a pity that Delphos is not in the Derby, and, indeed, he has not a single engagement next year. I suppose his next race will be the £2,900 stake at Liverpool in November, which he looks like winning, as his penalties are neutralised by a 10 lb. breeding allowance, and he will be receiving 7 lb. from Bullingdon and 10 lb. from Galloping Dick. Siffleuse did not start for the three-year-old stake at Kempton Park, for which Queen of the Spring was a great favourite, but she had no chance with Avington. I hear that Siffleuse has begun long work at Newmarket, but she is not likely to start for the Leger if Isinglass keeps all right, and is more probably being prepared for the Park Hill Stakes, which will be worth more than £1,100.

There are forty-five entries for the Great Yorkshire Handicap at Doncaster, which is not much of a subscription considering that the race is worth £1,300. The entry includes Newcourt, Shancrotha, Lady Rosebery, Nobleman, Concrete, Seaton Delaval, Watercress, Chesterfield, Burnaby, Prisoner, Childwick, and Sweden. No fewer than six of the entries are made by the Manton stable. The Portland Plate has obtained only thirty-seven entries, of which the best are Milford, Glenwood, Bill of Portland, Lady Hermit, Marvel, Tanderagee, Medora, Gantlet, Perigord, Prince Hampton, Minting Queen, and Siffleuse. Marcion cannot lose the Doncaster Cup, for, of course, there was no foundation for the crazy tales about the Duke of Westminster having decided to enter Orme in order to test his stamina in a conclusive way. The Duke knows very well that Orme cannot stay, or he would have entered him, as, owing to the peculiarly idiotic conditions, Orme incurred no penalty, whereas Marcion will have to carry 10 lb. extra for winning the Ascot Cup, and the distance is now only two miles. The crack-brained howlers about Orme's superlative merits will at least cease their jargonings about his staying powers after his owner's palpable and undisguised reluctance to run him for a Cup race, even with so great an advantage in the weights.

Isonomy still heads the list of winning sires, with eight winners of fourteen races, value £17,479, of which £13,740 has been contributed by Isinglass. St. Simon comes second, with twelve winners of twenty-five races, worth £15,560, his best representatives having been Mrs. Butterwick, Silene, and Simonian. I dare say that St. Simon will presently have a good two-year-old in St. Florian. Hampton is third, with sixteen winners of twenty-six races, value £14,394. His best representatives have been Phocion, Speed, and the Illuminata colt, and the last of these animals may be expected considerably to increase the amount of his winnings before the season closes. Everything now points towards the conclusion that Isinglass will head this year's list.

There ought to be some excellent sport at York next week, although the meeting has greatly diminished in importance during the last fifteen years. There is a huge entry for the Yorkshire Oaks, which looks like being a match between Siffleuse and Silene, each having 7 lb. extra to carry. The Prince of Wales's Plate of £1,000, which is the most valuable two-year-old stake at York, will be won by Galloping Dick if he likes to do his best, and in his absence Galingale might be able to win for Lord Zetland. There is only a small acceptance for the Ebor Handicap, and there will be no genuine betting on that race until the day of running. I fancy Pilot, if he is "slipped" for this event. The Ebor St. Leger is at the mercy of Marcion, but if he does not start Peppercorn ought to be able to win; and I expect that Mr. Joicey's horse will also carry off the Great Yorkshire Stakes, the entry for which includes Harbinger, Royal Harry, Medora, and Inferno. There are nearly a hundred entries for the Gimcrack Stakes, including Lucy Cross and Carloman, and the best from Enoch's stable ought to win this race.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—We are but slowly getting through the interregnum of dulness and inactivity which usually characterises the holiday season, and which is aggravated this year by the silver crisis and the unsettled financial condition of the United States. It is doubtful, moreover, if we shall see much movement during the coming account; but once we get into September some life should return to our markets.

The Outlook on the Stock Exchange.

By that time, too, some of the unfavourable factors which have been in operation so long will probably have lost their disturbing force. Foremost amongst these is the currency crisis in the United States, which Congress is at present endeavouring to cure. As I anticipated, heavy gold shipments have continued from this side, and the premium on currency is disappearing in the chief American centres. Unfortunately, the heavy efflux of gold has now raised the value of money here, and thus, while the monetary outlook in Yankeeland is improving, apprehensions of dear money during the autumn are now rife on this side. A great deal must depend upon the action which may be taken by the Bank of France. If that institution were to part with gold to a considerable extent, the tension would be relieved. If, on the other hand, the usual illiberal policy were to be pursued in Paris, a 5 per cent. Bank rate would be a foregone conclusion. Not that this would do much harm in view of the restriction of speculative operations, but it would, no doubt, delay the incipient recovery in most departments. The American market is, of course, gaining more by the influx of gold to New York than it can lose by the rise in the value of money here, as further advances in Yankee securities must originate in Wall-street. Notwithstanding large crushings of the Witwatersrand mines, the Kaffir Circus has shown such persistent dulness that there are evidently still some weak spots in this department. That eventually a marked revival will come about need not, however, for a moment be doubted. Values have been well maintained in Home Railway stocks, but Foreigners do not promise well in view of the rising tendency of the money market. A curious effect has, by the way, been produced upon the bucket-shops by the recent very jerky movements in such securities as American Rails. Some of the large outside brokers, who used to work on the 1 per cent. cover system, are now refusing to do this business except with a 2 per cent. cover, as they have found to their cost that operators with some skill have the best of it when 2 or 3 per cent. advances or declines occur so frequently. The fact is that some unusually wide-awake punters took to running a "Bull" and a "Bear" at the same time, and in the same securities. As the changes on most days were much larger than the 1 per cent. cover, they were bound to win one way if they were sharp enough. Hence the revolt of the bucket-shop keepers.

Home Rails.

The Home Railway Market has been the steadiest of all during the week. The last meetings of shareholders have been held, and there is consequently no occasion for any speculative excitement. The payment of the dividends will probably induce some re-investment by holders who have fared better in this department than elsewhere, although they have had to put up with a slight diminution in the yield. Midlands have kept their price, notwithstanding the coal strike, which does not yet show any indication of coming to an end. The Board of Trade return for July, on the other hand, is encouraging, as far as the exports are concerned, and it is to be hoped that the present spasm in the money market and the coal strike will not again apply a check to trade and industry. The traffics of the Heavy Brigade during the next few weeks will therefore be watched with considerable interest. Brighton "A" have fluctuated within narrow limits, the brilliant sunshine acting as a support, although the Bank Holiday traffic has been disappointing. At 149 this stock is at a very moderate level, and were it not for apprehensions of a spasm in monetary affairs, it might be considered a good speculative purchase, especially as the comparison from the end of August will be with reduced traffics in 1892. As it is, it will be preferable to buy only for investment, and, as the yield is more than 5 per cent. per annum at present price, investors may safely put their money into "Berthas." The South-Eastern traffics have been fairly satisfactory, but Dover "A" are but slowly recovering from the blow which the "Read" failure struck them. At anything like 73 they are, however, a promising lock up. Neither Sheffield "A" nor Metropolitan Districts have improved upon their present very moderate values of 23⅜ and 24¼ respectively. Mr. J. S. Forbes, the Chairman of the Metropolitan District Company, descanted humorously upon the drawbacks to that undertaking of the fine weather in its competition with the omnibuses. He also, as might have been expected, replied to Sir Edward Watkins's remark at the Metropolitan meeting that the District Company were at their old games again, the "old game," as explained by Mr Forbes, being their wish to put District trains on to the Metropolitan line at High street, Kensington, against the Metropolitan's claim to run from Aldgate through High street, and put through trains on to the District line at South Kensington, the traffic involved amounting to £31,000. In the interest of both Companies, and also of the travelling public, it is to be hoped that this matter will be conclusively settled on an early date. The Scotch Companies have yet to make their dividend announcements, but the absence of activity in the stocks seems to indicate indifferent results.

Yankee Rails.

This has again been a week of fluctuations in Yankee Rails, and on occasional slumps cheap stocks could again be picked up. But an undercurrent of strength was to be observed, which invariably caused a brisk recovery to about the value prevailing a week ago, while a considerable advance was retained by such stocks as Atchison shares and Second Mortgage bonds, Norfolk Prefs., Erie, &c. Louisville and Nashville, as well as Milwaukees, were the most active stocks, and at no time touched the recent lowest points. It may, in fact, be assumed that prices of American Rails have now "gravelled," and that the movement will henceforth be upwards—of course, with reactions. The currency trouble in the States culminated during the past week in a high premium which touched 3 to 4 per cent. at one time, and stimulated gold shipments from this side. When all the gold at present on the way to New York has arrived at its destination, the financial situation there should be greatly relieved. As regards the chief source of all the trouble—viz., the mischievous Sherman Silver Act, it is satisfactory to find that Mr. Carlisle, the Secretary of the Treasury, has arranged with leading politicians for an energetic campaign in the House of Representatives, where the anti-silver men have a large majority. The silver men are indulging in a good deal of bluster, but I fancy that public opinion will be too much for them. Now that the Wilson Repeal Bill has been brought forward, everything will depend upon the intelligence, sagacity, and courage of those in charge of the measure. The most important point is that the first section of the Sherman Act should be repealed. With that section obliterated, further purchases of silver would be stopped, and silver dollars would be coined only when such coinage should become necessary to redeem the Treasury notes. If a substitute for the first section of the Sherman Act were to be incorporated with the repeal Bill contention would be promoted, and a great deal of time consumed in debate and in the explosion of demagogical pyrotechnics. To allow the free coinage men to dictate a substitute for the present mischievous law would, moreover, be equivalent to achieving a victory and then capitulating to the enemy. The most straightforward and easy thing to do is to pass a Bill for the unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act. Terms of agreement for future operations in silver can be better considered after repeal is accomplished. Should the Houses of Representatives pass the repeal Bill with a substantial majority, the Senate, although it is supposed to contain a majority of silver men, will probably have to follow suit. On the whole there is, therefore, a prospect of judicious silver legislation which should put an end to the prevailing distrust. According to mail advices from the States, investors are picking up stocks in small amounts as far as each buyer is concerned, but in the aggregate sufficient to make a great difference in the amount of floating stock. A Wall-street contemporary remarks that there will consequently not be enough stock to go around, and that the more the "Bear" interest depress quotations the faster the absorption of stocks by investors will go on, and the bigger "Bull" market we shall have when the current sets the other way. Under these circumstances, I keep to my view that American Railroad stocks should not yet be run speculatively, but that investors will do well to buy substantial dividend-paying stocks, as well as low-priced speculative shares, on the temporary reaction, which will no doubt come about now and then on fresh "Bear" raids or unfavourable news. With reference to the Consolidation of the Baltimore and Ohio and the Ohio and Mississippi Railway Companies, I learn that Mr. Wells has arrived from New York for the purpose of completing arrangements. The financial position in Montreal has been somewhat strained of late, but some shipments of gold which have recently been made to that destination will probably remedy this. Canadian Pacifics have kept their price better than Grand Trunks; but if the Yankee market should improve, both will no doubt follow suit.

FAMILY WASHING ONLY.—Collection and delivery twice daily. For families leaving Town, work delivered day following collection, and with three days' clear notice, household work collected and delivered prior to families arriving in Town. Under new management.—Belgrave Steam Laundry, 196, Ebury-st., Belgravia, S.W.

Foreigners and South Americans.

The steadiness of inter-bourse securities in midst of these times of crisis is remarkable, especially when it is considered that several of the countries whose bonds are still quoted at relatively high prices are in bad financial plight. Spanish and Italians are but fractionally lower, although it is not easy to see how either will provide for their needs now that it is getting more and more difficult for habitual borrowers to raise the wind. Italy is, moreover, suffering from a currency crisis somewhat on the pattern of that in the United States, but without possessing the immense resources and power of recuperation of that country. Greeks are low, chiefly owing to renewed weakness in Berlin, where a good deal of rottenness has of late been disclosed. Mexican Six per Cent. Government bonds have fallen heavily on sales from the same quarter. It appears that the reports made by the representatives of the firm of Bleichroeder, who had been dispatched to Mexico City with a view to ascertain the exact position there, have not been favourable, but much must depend after all upon the course of silver, and the white metal has shown remarkable steadiness of late. In the Argentine Republic the political position has somewhat improved through the resignation of the Governor and Vice-Governor of the Province of Buenos Ayres, and the disarming of the contending parties by the National Government; but fresh Ministerial changes are reported in the resignation of Señors Delvalle and Demaria, the Ministers of War and Finance, and the appointment of General Luis Campos and of Señor Terry in their stead, Señor Manuel Quintana taking the portfolio of the Interior. I anticipated from the outset that President Saenz Peña's alliance with the Radicals would not be of long duration. It is reported that Señor Demaria had ordered the prosecution of ex-President Juarez Celman for fraud before resigning, and this extreme step was apparently the reason of his fall. Señor Demaria does not appear to have taken any measures in favour of the foreign bondholders, and his retirement will not, therefore, be much regretted here. The weakness of the President is, however, the chief trouble, as a strong man at the helm is more than ever wanted. Chilians are firmer on the recovery in the Valparaiso exchange, but Venezuela are lower, and the rest of the South American market is lifeless, in sympathy with the general depression.

The Kaffir Circus.

Neither the elimination of the weak elements, the wholesale reduction of the account, nor the splendid crushings of the Witwatersrand Mines for July, which figured up to 126,169 oz., and constitute, therefore, the largest monthly output yet recorded (exceeding the June crushings, the previous record, by 3,262 oz.), have so far sufficed to infuse fresh life into the Kaffir Circus, even such substantial shares as City and Suburban, Jubilee, Meyer and Charlton, and Crown Reefs declining. There is better reason for the fall of ½ in Rietfontein, as the proposed arrangement for the appointment of a life governor, with a lion's share of the future profits, is deservedly unpopular. I recommended these shares from 40s. upwards, while they now stand at 5¼, but I cannot encourage such a gross departure from sound financial management. The New Primrose crushing of 7,552 oz. in July, against 6,961 oz. in June, was most satisfactory, yet it has not put up the quotation of the shares, which stand at 3¾, at which they yield on the basis of the last six monthly dividend nearly 11 per cent. per annum with every prospect of increasing returns. The Glencairn is now showing up again amongst the crushings with 1,382 oz. as the result of seventeen days' working in July. Having not only paid off the whole Debenture debt, also the cost of the reconstruction of the battery out of revenue, this mine promises now early and substantial dividends, and the shares at 30s. are very cheap. The Durban-Roodeport crushing of 5,415 oz., in July, was satisfactory, but that of the Nigel of 4,072 oz., showed a falling-off against the total of 5,155 oz. for June. The African Gold Recovery Company announces a yield for July of 27,890 oz. of gold from the Randt and of 1,500 oz. in other districts, total £29,390 oz. (as against 27,400 oz. in June), being over 22 per cent. of the total Randt output. Had it not been for the delay in starting the large 30,000 tons Langlaagte Estate Plant, the July return would have been still better, but this will now show in August. With regard to the future yield of the Randt Mines, the Johannesburg correspondent of the Glasgow Herald expresses the following favourable view:—

> When the mines temporarily closed resume working in a few months, and the extensions to crushing and cyanide plant at several of the mines are in operation, the Rand output of gold will be materially increased. The general estimate here is that the monthly production will reach 150,000 oz. before the end of the current year, and that in the course of a year or two it will touch 200,000 oz. Another important result of the comparison of the one month with the other is to show that the grade per ton of ore treated has increased from 9·92 dwt. in June of last year to 10·20 dwt. in the month just concluded. This result is, no doubt, due in some measure to the improved treatment at the various mines, but some of the increase is also accounted for by the higher grade of ore which appears to be found the deeper the Rand mines are carried. This fact is of importance in view of the great tracts of deep levels yet to be opened up, and on which the whole future of Johannesburg hangs.

From the Klerksdorp district very satisfactory advices are still coming to hand, especially as regards the Buffelsdoorn Estate and Gold Mining Company. The second level is opened throughout for 2,000 ft., and ready for the mill. The third level is being driven on to the east, and very rich ore has been struck 200 ft. from the boundary. The winzes to the north on this level are nearly completed, and it is expected to be ready for milling by September. The Cyanide Works (a McArthur-Forrest 8,000-ton plant) to which I referred last week started on the 1st inst. on the tailings, which promise to yield a large profit, and are easy of treatment, being very good and free from acids. The erection of the new mill is going on with all speed. There has been no delay in transit, and it is expected to run early in September, when with results both from the mill and the cyanide plant a marked advance of the shares would seem to be a foregone conclusion. From the same district good news is to hand concerning the Afrikander Mine. The crushing for July was 301 oz., and the first return from the cyanide plant will be made early in September. It is, in fact, anticipated by those best acquainted with the property that an output of 1,000 oz. monthly will be reached at no distant date. This means early dividends, as the capital of the Company is exceptionally small. Dealings in the shares of South African Land Companies have been scarce, and prices are on the down grade, Oceana and Oceana Development shares being, however, comparatively well supported. Some favourable developments are expected almost immediately, which should cause a substantial advance. With reference to the Silati Railway, advices are satisfactory. The supply of labour is said to be fairly good. According to the Gold Fields News, the contractors (Messrs. Westward & Winby) have at work fully 3,000 hands, white and native. Over 20 civil engineers are already at work, and a fresh survey party starts immediately from kilo 53. Engineers are arriving from all parts—Cape, Natal, and England—while contractors of all kinds and colours, good, bad, and indifferent, are anxious to secure sections. For the present, short lengths of work are being constructed. One of the finest specimens of the engineer's art on the line will be the Crocodile River Bridge, a handsome iron structure on heavy masonry piers. The total length of the Silati line is to be 32 kilos, or 200 miles, and although the first part of the line is through barren and unproductive country, the upper sections are in better and more favourable localities (amongst which there are a number of Oceana farms), which it is hoped will enter on an era of development and progress as soon as the iron horse opens up the way to the coast. Chartered British of South Africa shares have fluctuated between 21s. and 23s. 6d., and are not unnaturally out of favour with investors. The Matabele King has not, so far, taken any openly hostile measures, but that may happen any day. My view concerning the position is fully borne out by the following comment in the Pretoria Press :—

It has often been said that the Company would rejoice if Lobengula fully committed himself by some unmistakable hostile act, so that the Europeans could break Lobengula and absorb Matabeleland, which is believed to be the real land of Ophir; but whether this be so or not, it is certain that the Company is fully aware that it is not ready to hazard a conflict with the bloodthirsty potentate. How long the Company and the settlers will be content to exist on sufferance remains to be seen, but it should be recognised that Lobengula is a treacherous savage, in command of a very warlike nation bloated with a long career of almost uninterrupted success. It should also be borne in mind that should Lobengula determine on a grand attack he would sweep off every European in the country. Afterwards, of course, he would be annihilated, but it is not certain that Lobengula believes this, or whether in that case the belief would prevent him from taking full advantage of what must appear to him to be a glorious opportunity.

What would happen to the Chartered shares should Lobengula seize this "glorious opportunity" may be easily imagined. Much has been made by those connected with the Chartered Company of the judgment in the action of the Matabeleland Company against it. As a matter of fact, however, Mr. Justice Stirling took a middle course, and the Matabeleland Company practically obtained all it expected to get, so that it is simply absurd to represent this as a victory of the Chartered Company. Diamond shares are dull, and Jagersfontein especially are depressed, there being apparently some weak spots still to be weeded out.

Australian and American Mines.

The Australian position is improving, as is evidenced by a recovery in the prices of Australian Bank shares and Government stocks. It may, therefore, be considered that Gold Mining shares will also follow suit. Some of the Charters Towers Mines continue to yield good results. The Mill's Day Dawn United reports a fortnightly crushing of 1,864 tons for 1,970 oz. of gold, and another dividend of 3d. per share. The Brilliant Block Gold Mine reports a crushing of 278 oz. from 307 tons. According to a cablegram from the Aladdin's Lamp Gold Mine 500 tons of low grade ore have been crushed for 330 oz. of gold, and the stopes in the 300 feet level show a good improvement. Advices from the Wentworth Gold Fields Proprietary state that the mill is running well on average ore, and that the vein in the 480 feet level of the new main shaft is yielding first-class ore. From the Croydon (Queensland) Goldfield advices are improving. The Manager of the Mountain Maid Gold Mining Company reports that the reef is 5 ft. in thickness and showing gold freely, and the Directors have let a contract for crushing 1,000 tons at 14s. 6d. per ton. A recent cablegram stated that 800 tons of ore had already been crushed for a yield of 620 oz. of gold (exclusive of concentrates) valued at £3 per oz. The Directors are removing the battery to the mine where there is ample supply of water from the deep workings to keep it going all the year round. At present it is situated about one mile from the mine, and relying on surface catchment for water. The Directors say that they anticipate that as soon as the battery is re-erected they will be able to pay monthly dividends. The shares are quoted in the London Market about 3s. to 3s. 6d. From the Croydon King Block it is reported that they are driving towards the rich reef of stone recently discovered in the No. 1 N., about 15 ft. from their boundary. The crushing from this rich strike is now to hand and returned 321 oz. of gold from 21 tons of ore, or over 15 oz per ton. The True Blue Block is also doing well. The Manager states that at 230 ft. a large reef formation came in of 3 ft. of good stone, and a recent crushing of 100 tons yielded 121 oz. of smelted gold. The Manager further states that he expects to have regular monthly crushings in future. Mail advices from Melbourne report a terrible shake up in silver mining shares, holders being in blank despair concerning the future of their stocks. The view is, however, expressed that ultimately the Broken Hill mines will survive many of the low grade American mines, and, although progressive ventures in that district may be hurt, leading mines will probably maintain their output and profit. I have received so many inquiries concerning the prospects of the Broken Hill Proprietary Mine that the following communication from a correspondent who has studied the position will prove of interest :—

Can you assign any valid reason for the present low price of Broken Hill Proprietary shares? Perhaps you will say on account of the drop and uncertainty of silver. But, so far as I can see, it would require an immense drop in silver to reduce the present rate of dividend of 2s per month, or 300 per cent. per annum, to any appreciable extent. I give you my figures :—

Return for Week ending August 3.

Treated 8,803 tons ore, equal to... ...		457,756 tons yearly.
Yield 1,081 tons lead ,, ...	56,212	,, ,,
,, 225,093 oz. silver ,, ...	11,704,836 oz.	,,

The capital of the Company is £384,000, consisting of 960,000 shares of 8s. each.

Lead, 56,212 tons, at £10 per ton	£562,120
Silver, 11,704,836 oz., at 2s. 6d. per oz....	1,463,104
Total	£2,025,224
Expenses, say at £2 per ton of ore	915,512
Net profit	£1,109,712

equal to 289 per cent. on the nominal value of capital, or about 50 per cent. on present value of, say 46s. to 47s. per share. I have taken silver at 2s. 6d. per oz., or the lowest point yet reached; say it were to fall to 2s., or 20 per cent., the profit would be reduced by £292,621, but would still be £817,111, equal to 212 per cent. on the capital, or yield 35 per cent. on current value of shares. So far the Company has been paying 2s. per month, or 300 per cent. per annum. As each fluctuation of 1d. per oz. in silver means £48,770 to the Company, or 12¾ per cent., when silver is at 2s. 7d. per oz. the Company would earn 301¾ per cent. I have taken expenses at £2 per ton, as against £1, or 5 dwt., for gold ore, which I should think is ample. Dundee.

I do not wish to assume the responsibility for this calculation, and the future of Broken Hill Proprietary must be so largely dependent upon the course of silver, which is in itself very problematical, that I should not like to prophesy. But, on the whole, it certainly looks as if the present price of the shares of 2¼-⅜ was unduly depressed. They are certainly on a very different basis than the various American silver mines, such as Yankee Girls, Montana, Elkhorn, &c., of which I have warned my readers for a long time, and which are all but snuffed out. A fair amount of dealings has again taken place in low-priced Gold Mining shares, especially Holcomb Valley and Caratal. With regard to Holcomb, operations at the mine are now in full swing, and news may daily be expected of first results. I am informed that these shares are very scarce in the market, holders not being disposed to sell at the present low quotation of 1s. per fully-paid share. From the Caratal property, Mr. Skertchly, the well-known expert and engineer, cables that he has made a survey of the tailings, that the quantity exceeds the 100,000 tons referred to in previous statements, and that they are in every way suitable for treatment by the cyanide process. Arrangements will therefore at once be made for the erection of plant for this purpose. As soon as Mr. Bull arrives here, some other important negotiations which he has initiated will be at once dealt with by the Board. I am not at liberty to disclose the nature of the pourparlers which have already taken place, but they are such as to promise satisfactory results.

The resources of Ulster House, Conduit-street, enable Messrs. Benjamin, in cases of need, to execute orders in 24 hours.

China and Glass. — Messrs. Goode, Artists and Designers, solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

My Letter Box.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

Government, &c., Bonds

T. N.—The financial position in Spain is unfavourable, and you must be aware that I do not advocate the holding of these bonds. X. X. X.—I should distribute the sum in question over half a dozen sound stocks. I cannot advise you about the stock mentioned by you; the only Cape Town stock quoted in London is the Five per Cent. City of Cape Town Debenture stock at 104-6. I should say that a little private trust of Brighton "A," Guinness's Five per Cent. Debentures at 123, Natal Four per Cent. Inscribed stock at 108, and New York Central Four per Cent. Debentures at 104, would suit you; to which you could add some of the stock mentioned by you. It is not advisable to put all your eggs into one basket. Ubique.—I should say you might hold both Australian Government bonds, Nos. 1 and 2, for a further improvement. Hold Quebec Central, they will recover with the Yankee market. 4. No reason to sell San Paulo (Brazil) Five per Cent. stock at present. As soon as the fighting in the Province of Rio Grande do Sul is over, there should be a recovery in Brazilian securities. Joseph Pennywise.—It is not unnatural that the terms for a Government life annuity should vary with the price of the Two-and-a-Half per Cents. The difference is, however, trifling. Crofthead.—It is very difficult to express an opinion concerning the future of Greek Monopolies. On the whole I should feel inclined to hold for the present. I do not like the Canadian Railway bonds in question, but it seems rather a pity to sell them during the present depression. I will give a list of American Railroad bonds of different classes next week.

Banks, Trusts, and Financial.

Moffat.—This is one of several Anglo-Scottish Trust Companies which have not prospered. The Preferred stand at 1¼ to 1⅝, the Deferred at ½ to ¾. 1. There is no further liability. 2. See above. 3. Sell on a recovery. I should not have recommended the investment. J. B. G.—Yes, it is a sound and old-established Life Office, with which you may deal safely. Hammersmith.—I really do not see why you should be in such a hurry to sell these London Bank shares out, the Bank is doing well. You should not, of course, put your all into such stocks. Sell half, and re-invest in Brighton "A." Uncertain.—I advised the sale of these New Zealand securities when they stood at much higher prices. After the heavy fall, you might now hold. Melbourne.—Australian offices appear to be improving and you can safely hold Melbourne Four per Cent. Harbour bonds now.

Home Rails.

Juno.—My opinion of "Berthas" is favourable for investment, but I cannot obviously tell what price they may reach, so much depends upon the money market. R. W.—The dividend on Brighton "A" is paid only once a year—it will be declared in January next. This stock was ex. div. on January 27.

American and Foreign Rails.

Vepery.—1. This Brazilian Railway stock will probably recover again, and there is no option but to hold. I should never have recommended the investment. 2. Sell these Italian stocks at once; the country's finances are in a bad way and there is no chance of a recovery. 3. You cannot get high interest if you want a thoroughly safe investment. English Corporation stocks would yield 3½ per cent., gilt-edged American Railway bonds 4 per cent. Ignoramus, Fraserburgh.—Yes, you will do well to average Atchison Second Mortgage "A" bonds. The situation in the United States will improve gradually and so will the stocks. Louisville Six per Cent. General Mortgage bonds stand at 117-118, and there is nothing at present to affect them. For the investment of the sum mentioned buy Brighton "A," Atchison Second Mortgage bonds, Milwaukee, and Louisville and Nashville shares. Billiter.—1. Yes, the political troubles in Argentina are disappointing and are responsible for the rise in the gold premium. But a change will, no doubt, come about soon, and you should certainly hold Central Argentine for an improvement. You must not, however, expect a dividend until after the end of the financial year. 2. There has been a good deal of irresponsible "Bear" talk, but a recovery seems now probable. If better times come, this concern should look up again. G. O.—I will give next week a list of different classes of American Railroad bonds suitable for investment.

Mining Shares.

Kelwix.—The office of the Holcamb Valley Company is at 14, Cornhill, E.C. Fleet.—Neither of these shares of Transvaal Land Companies have been recommended by me, but both are cheap, and should now be held for a recovery after the heavy fall. Dundee.—The position of Broken Hill Proprietary shares must entirely depend upon the course of silver. The position is by no means unpromising, but it is impossible to make predictions in the present involved state of the silver problem. Leonard.—You should hold both Croydon King Block and Central Montrose. They will recover again when the depression in the Mining Market passes away. Midland.—I am making every inquiry concerning this Mine, and should advise you to hold in the meantime. Q. C.—1. After the heavy fall in silver, you might, as you propose, sell out the Australian Mining shares and buy Caratals instead. 2. There is little market for the Music Hall shares at present; you should hold for a recovery.

Industrial Companies.

L. C.—Whatever may be the ultimate outcome of the European Sims-Edison Electric Torpedo Company, the investment must at present be extremely speculative. Missolonghi.—I am afraid that the agitation carried on by the shareholders has temporarily spoilt the market for the shares. Certainly the shareholders can be compelled to pay up the calls. There will probably be a recovery when the general depression wears off. B. C. P.—I must defer until next week the desired criticism of your twenty-six stocks. It is rather a large order. Nearly Broke.—1. The general industrial depression has affected this Company as it has every other similar undertaking, but I understand that a fair dividend is being earned. 2. The American shares will recover again.

Mixed Investments.

Beta.—A recovery will, no doubt, come about eventually in Atlantics, and if you are a holder you should not sell now. This also applies to Erie; everything depends upon the recovery in the American market generally. Peruvian Corporative stocks should be bought on any marked decline. Cymro.—Yes, nine of the ten stocks mentioned are very suitable for permanent investment. It would perhaps be advisable at present to steer clear of No. 9. Anxious.—You should not sell Cedulas now, as an improvement is probable. The American Railroad bonds should be held. I cannot make out the name of the Trust Company you mention. Kindly send full title.

Various Investments.

A somewhat curious movement took place during the past week in silver, the price advancing to 34¾d., and reacting to 34½d., leaving a rise of 1d. for the week. Considering that the United States Congress is now engaged in the discussion of the repeal of the Silver Bill, this improvement is somewhat surprising, and is, moreover, contradictory to the fresh decline in silver securities. Neither does the temporary demand for the metal for the East account for it, as there must be a considerable stock still available. Far be it from me to wish to predict the immediate future of silver, and it looks almost as if the metal would eventually settle down at something like the present value, but it would be natural enough if some violent spasm should first depress the price again, as the closing of silver mines can hardly yet exercise its full effect. A moderate advance has to be recorded in Colonial Government stocks, and in the shares of the three leading Australian Banks, and as the reconstructed Banks are gradually falling into line again, it seems probable that the Australian position generally will improve. There has been a complete collapse in the Tyre speculation in Dublin, accompanied by some failures. Those who are hurt in this insane gamble cannot complain that I have not warned them. Mexican Rails have recovered and reacted, being swayed on the one hand by the "Bear" account, and on the other by apprehensions of a fresh fall in silver. A decline in Nitrate Rails is apparently due to forced closing of some weak accounts. The ordinary shareholders in Samuel Allsopp & Sons, Limited, will gather little comfort from the chairman's statement at last week's meeting of shareholders, as the increase of some £40,000 in the profits over the previous year is evidently due for the largest part to temporary causes. What have the other Anglo-American Trust Companies to say to the annual report of the Car Trust Investment Company, Limited, just issued, according to which 8 per cent. is paid on the Ordinary shares for the year, while "the Directors are pleased to be able to state that, notwithstanding the recent depression in monetary circles in the United States, the Company has suffered no loss, nor is there any depreciation in their investment"? Why cannot the Boards of other Trust Companies do likewise?—Your affectionate uncle, MOSES.

P.S.—Tuesday Morning.—The settlement disclosed great scarcity of stock, and a further reduction of the speculative account in all departments. Positive evidence of large purchases having been made by investors was supplied by a very considerable "take up" of stock, especially in the American and Home Railway markets. Numerous small amounts of American Railroad shares have passed into investors' hands, and a backwardation of ⅛ to 1/16 was charged on New York Central and Lake Shore, while Canadian Pacifics were also shown to be over-sold. The "Bears" had taken great liberties with Brighton "A," as proved by a final backwardation of ⅛, and rates in the Mining Market were also very light. Thus the first conditions for a more permanent recovery are established, and it may be taken for granted that as soon as a steady upward movement is initiated, the ursine party will, though unwillingly, convert it into a sharp advance. But no lasting improvement can come about without a more settled outlook in the Yankee market, and it will, therefore, be necessary to watch developments in Wall street and Washington very closely.

All Rights Reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

A RECORD FOR THE "TWELFTH."

THE whole of England, or of Scotland, Ireland, and Wales for the matter of that, does not contain two better grouse moors than those of Dammingham and Kersingham in North-East Yorkshire. These two properties adjoin one another, having a common boundary line of more than five miles; and as their size is about the same and both are equally well stocked with birds, there is naturally a good deal of rivalry between the respective owners, and sometimes even open quarrelling, consequent upon alleged infringements of boundary rights.

At the time when our story opens, the rivalry had degenerated into permanent ill-feeling of a distinctly rancorous type. For Sir John Damms, the Squire of Dammingham, had gone abroad, and had let his moors to a Liverpool merchant, named Figge, a somewhat purse-proud and bumptious individual, who very speedily made himself obnoxious to Squire Kerse, the owner of the adjoining property.

The Squire was what is called a survival. He belonged to that period, two or three generations back, when landowners in country districts were small kings; and he regarded the levelling tendencies of the present day with dismay and disgust. Trade of any description—even banking or brewing—he despised; but grocery (which was the source of Figge's fortune) positively stank in his nostrils.

"Fancy John Damms letting his place to a cad like that!" the Square had exclaimed, on first hearing about the new tenant of Dammingham. "He ought to have had more respect for my feelings. However, don't let the fellow try to interfere with me, that's all; else he'll soon have reason to wish himself away from Tom Kerse's neighbourhood."

In due time Mr. Figge took up his residence at Dammingham. He was an exceedingly wealthy man, and he spent his money in the district with a lavish generosity which made him "go down" well enough with the surrounding gentry; that is to say, the latter visited at Dammingham, ate Mr. Figge's excellent dinners, drank his choice wines, shot his grouse, rushed him for subscriptions to every conceivable institution, and—sneered at him behind his back.

Squire Kerse, however, was not of this sort. Although he was proud, overbearing, hot-tempered, and inconceivably prejudiced and obstinate, he still had the merit of being downright. From the outset, therefore, he showed his new neighbour very openly in what contempt he held him. He would not let his wife call upon Mrs. Figge, nor his own sons and daughters so much as speak to the young Figges; while he himself, whenever he met the grocer, stared blankly into his face and passed him by.

Now Mr. Figge was a proud man too, in his own way, and rather bad-tempered to boot. So he lost little time in retaliating on the Squire. When your estate has a common boundary with your neighbour's of five miles or so, it goes hard but you can find a hundred ways of annoying him. Mr. Figge, showing particular ingenuity in discovering such methods, and the Squire taking care to give as good as he got, there was soon a miniature war raging between their respective underlings across the boundary.

Matters were in this acute stage when the Twelfth of August approached (towards the close of Mr. Figge's first year in his new tenancy), and he and Squire Kerse began to organise their shooting parties for that eventful day. Even when Sir John Damms was at Dammingham, there had always been a strong rivalry between him and his neighbour anent the size of their respective bags on "the Twelfth"; but this year Squire Kerse's keenness to overtop the Dammingham bag amounted to a positive mania. It would be an indelible disgrace, he told himself, if that braggart grocer cad were allowed to kill a bigger head of game than he, Thomas Kerse, the best shot in Yorkshire, and the descendant of twenty Nimrods. No, come what might, he would eclipse and extinguish Figge utterly; and let him see that, however well up he might be in sugar and raisins, he was nothing better than a duffer in matters of sport.

Full of this resolve, he issued invitations to the nine best shots among his acquaintance, all of whom accepted; and (as Mr. Pinfire, the head keeper, observed to a henchman carrying one of the game-bags) the party that started from Kersingham Hall on the morning of the twelfth comprised "ten as downy marksmen as t' North Riding could put up."

Birds were plentiful everywhere that season; and Squire Kerse's moors were unusually well stocked. Hence the "ten downy marksmen" had ample opportunity for showing their skill; and of this they were not slow to take advantage. So little so, indeed, that when the party halted at mid-day to enjoy a well-earned lunch, they found that they had accounted for three hundred head of grouse. The Squire was radiant with good humour. This was the biggest bag ever made in a morning over that moor.

"I fancy," he said to one of his guests with whom he was taking wine—for the Squire was a desperate fellow to practise obsolete customs—"I fancy that our neighbour the grocer will hardly have topped that—eh?"

"No fear," laughed the other, quaffing his liquor. "We may rest easy on that score."

Just as they had finished luncheon, they were joined by an acquaintance, a gentleman-farmer in the neighbourhood, Parkinson by name, whom the Squire had generally included in his invitations for the Twelfth, but had omitted this year as not being a sufficiently good shot. He was an easy-going, good-natured man, however, and evidently was not at all offended, for he greeted Squire Kerse with his usual heartiness.

"Have some lunch, Parkinson?" said the Squire.

"Thank'ee very much, Kerse, but I've lunched already—with Figge's party, over at Dammingham. I was walking with them all the morning. But" (dropping his voice, and speaking in the Squire's ear) "I was obliged to come away at last; for really I could stand the fellow no longer. Just because he's had a good morning, he is boasting so insufferably about it that it makes one quite sick."

"A good morning—eh?" queried the Squire. "What's their bag?"

"Three hundred and sixty-two head!"

Squire Kerse's face fell tremendously.

"How many guns?" he asked.

"Eight," was the reply.

The Squire bit his lip, and looked glum and savage. All his good humour had vanished to the winds.

"Just before I left him," continued Parkinson, confidentially, "he had heard from a bumpkin emissary that your morning's bag was only three hundred head—to ten guns. My word! you should just have heard the vulgar beast crow. 'Hooray!' he chuckled. 'Wiped old Kerse's eye with some effect!' And altogether he was so boastful and offensive that I could stand him no longer, and, as I told you, I left him and came away."

The Squire turned purple with rage and mortification. He was so nearly choked by these sensations that he could not speak.

"I devoutly hope," Parkinson went on, "that you'll pull up your lee-way this afternoon, and end up with a bigger bag than that bounder; for, if you don't, he will be quite insufferably cock-a-hoop for months to come."

"Yes, damn him!" growled Squire Kerse, viciously.

The shooting after lunch, however, was not nearly so good as it had been in the morning. The Squire himself was so angry and jealous that he acquitted himself disgracefully, missing bird after bird, until he was in a state bordering on lunacy; while the other sportsmen seemed distinctly below the mark in point of accuracy.

"I tell you what it is, Squire," said Parkinson (who was walking next to the host, at about five o'clock in the afternoon), "I'm afraid it's all up, worse luck! and that that infernal Figge will have 'wiped your eye with some effect,' as he boasted."

Squire Kerse, whose face was an apoplectic purple, and whose eyes were now rolling like a maniac's, gave vent to his feelings in a volley of robust Yorkshire.

"I wouldn't have had it happen for anything," went on Parkinson in a vexed and mortified tone. "Not for anything. I've always taken a sort of family pride in your moors, Kerse. However, it's no good fretting I suppose. The thing's practically done, unless" (a bright idea suddenly striking him), "unless——"

"Unless what?" demanded the Squire, irritably.

"Why," explained Parkinson, "It's awfully unsportsmanlike and all that sort of thing, of course. But to sell that beast Figge one would do almost anything. And—and—you—er—see—er——."

"What the devil are you driving at, Parkinson?" ejaculated the angry Squire. "Do for goodness sake come to the point, and don't beat about the bush in that ridiculous manner."

"What I was going to suggest, in point of fact, was this," said the other, dropping his voice and speaking into the Squire's ear, "You could, if you liked—just to sell that bragging counter-jumper—get—in fact, buy fifty brace or so of grouse and add 'em to your bag."

"Oh, come!" answered Squire Kerse, with a scornful laugh, "that would be playing the game low down with a vengeance. Besides," he added, "it would be impossible to buy birds in that quantity to-day; quite out of the question. There has not been time for them to reach the dealers."

"There you're wrong, Kerse," replied Parkinson, speaking yet more confidentially. "You know Feathermore, the big game dealer in Bradford? Well, he always has hundreds of grouse for sale by the afternoon of the Twelfth, which he buys up in the morning from surrounding moors, and makes a jolly good thing out of it, too; for the rich manufacturers are deuced particular about having grouse for dinner on the Twelfth, and don't mind what they pay for it. So that if you liked——"

"No go, I'm afraid, Parkinson," said the Squire, shaking his head, "I couldn't stoop to it, really."

"As you please," rejoined the other. "I quite appreciate your feelings, of course. But I thought that just for a joke, you know, and in order to sell that fellow Figge. However, if you can't stomach it, there's an end of it."

But there was not an end of it. For Parkinson, who evidently had his knife into Figge even more than had Squire Kerse himself, kept returning to the charge with all kinds of persuasive logic; until the latter began to waver in his refusal, and at last actually gave his consent to the plan. In calmer moments he would have rejected the bare idea with utmost scorn. But in his present jealous and furious frame he was almost mad, and—we must charitably suppose—scarcely accountable for his actions.

Of course it was a dead secret between the Squire and Parkinson. The latter undertook to drive over in the pony-cart to Bradford—only four miles distant—at once; and there to fill two of the empty game bags lying in the cart, in which he was to bring back the grouse straight to the Hall, in order that when the day's bag was laid out there on the lawn—as was the Squire's invariable custom—these bags containing the purchased birds might be brought out with the rest. To preclude suspicion, and to make the whole thing more natural and likely, Parkinson was to take with him in the pony-cart the birds shot since luncheon; but to keep them there until he had made his purchase in Bradford, and then unload the whole freight at once.

These, and other necessary details, were quickly and quietly arranged, and Parkinson took the pony-cart and drove off; no one but the Squire knowing on what errand he was really bent. The latter now began to feel uneasy and uncomfortable, and to regret that his anger and jealousy had surprised him into so unworthy a trick. In fact, had it not been too late, he would doubtless have changed his mind and abandoned the unsportsmanlike plan. That, however, being impossible, it only remained to hope that Parkinson (who was particularly shrewd and capable) would carry his part through all right and do nothing which—fearful thought!—might lead to the exposure of the ruse.

The two hours which passed between his envoy's departure to Bradford and the return of the shooting party to Kersingham Hall were full of anxious moments for the Squire; and when the time came for laying out the game upon the lawn, to be inspected by the whole party, he was quite pale with nervous excitement. Parkinson, indeed, tipped him a reassuring wink, as much as to say that all was right. But Squire Kerse felt very uncomfortable nevertheless, and wished that the whole process were safely over.

Mr. Pinfire, the keeper, and his assistants began to turn out the contents of the game-bags one by one. All went well until they came to the last bag; and then — horrors! What did this mean? With a frightful oath, the Squire turned round to where Parkinson had stood a minute before. He had vanished. And then the poor old gentleman realised that he had been intentionally sold by his disinterested adviser, and rushed, nearly crazy, into the house, followed by the unrestrained guffaws of all his guests.

Their mirth was excusable. The poulterer's hand was all too apparent in that last bag; for every bird in the hundred had been neatly plucked and trussed!

* * * * *

The one thing needful to make Parkinson's mean revenge more bitter was supplied to poor Squire Kerse next day, when he learned that, owing to a family bereavement, Mr. Figge had put off his shooting party at the last minute, and had never been out on the Twelfth at all.

MUSIC.

ENGLISH OPERA IN THE PROVINCES.

THE Carl Rosa troupe started their season at Dublin on Monday, and the tour—the eighteenth annual journey of this company—will last till April, or perhaps a little later if the proposals for a London season, at present somewhat nebulous in character, assume more solid form. It is an open secret that the present tour is likely to prove a highly important one in the history of the Carl Rosa enterprise, and incidentally in the fortunes of English opera in the provinces. It is to this troupe, that for practically a whole generation, opera-goers in country districts have mainly had to look for these favourite entertainments. At any rate, since Carl Rosa first started an opera company in 1875, their performances have been visited by upwards of four millions of people in almost every city in the Kingdom—a fact which is quite sufficient to show how important the Carl Rosa business is to the musical community. It would, of course, be absurd to lay too much stress upon the fact that during the past two or three seasons the shareholders have not received any dividends. All speculations of this character have to pass through times of difficulty, and the last year or two has not been an absolutely fortune-making epoch for the majority of managers of public amusements. But during the last Carl Rosa season the tide, to a certain extent, turned, and there was a small balance to the good, which, if insufficient for dividend, was, at any rate, an encouragement. This year, too, the authorities have listened to advice, and have resolved to cut unduly high salaries. I have no doubt in the world that the artists were fully worthy the huge fees they were paid, but it was, nevertheless, a commercial fact that no enterprise of this sort could stand the strain. One lady, I believe, received £100 for three performances weekly, another took £60, and a singer and his wife £100 a week. Carl Rosa himself, a shrewd and business like man, who did not spare capital if he could perceive a return, but who knew perfectly well that his coat must be cut according to his cloth, never paid any such salaries to his travelling troupe. It was an effort which cost him many a heart ache to give an artist of the rank of Mr. Santley £80 per week, and the cardinal point of his policy was to personally train up the younger generation of artists at a moderate salary to take the place of the elders. This he was competent to do, for besides being a man of business, he was a musician of the first rank—a rare combination of qualifications which enabled him to make his fortune, but which it would be mere flattery to pretend that any one now connected with the Carl Rosa management can lay claim to. Nevertheless, thanks, it is understood, partly to the intervention of Mrs. Rosa, a return will this year to a certain extent be made to Carl Rosa's old policy, and reliance will be placed upon works rather than upon artists. Last year Madame Burns and Mr. Crotty, and this year Miss Ella Russell and Madame Estey (the latter for causes incidental to the lives of married sopranos), will not be members of the company; so that, although the troupe is still undoubtedly a strong one, it will be interesting to watch the result of the experiment of dispensing with some of its chief stars.

The two operas which will probably prove the biggest "draw" during the coming season are "Cavalleria Rusticana," which has already been given in English, and "Pagliacci," the English version of which will be produced in Dublin next week. The Rosa Company were, I fear, unwise, or, at any rate, unlucky, in not securing the sole rights in each work. Mascagni's opera will this winter be given in the provinces by other and rival troupes, sometimes at cheaper prices than the Carl Rosa Company charge; while "Pagliacci" will, I believe, be performed by at least two other companies, and will be introduced to Scotland by Sir A. Harris's troupe before the Carl Rosa people can get there. "Tannhäuser" has, I learn, already proved a success, and hence the determination to revive "The Flying Dutchman," which Carl Rosa himself once sardonically declared was one of the most profitable things he ever produced; for, after he had got all his money out of it, the ship and stock, which were fully insured, were burnt in the Theatre Royal, Dublin. Massenet's "Le Cid," which is in contemplation, has, I understand, not yet finally been decided upon, but it is hoped that after the New Year Mr. Hamish McCunn's "Jeannie Deans" will be ready for Liverpool. It would, however, be far better to postpone "Jeannie Deans" for a short London season, which, at whatever cost, is now necessary for the well-being of the Company. Rosa himself always preferred to produce in the metropolis his novelties from native pens, well knowing the valuable advertisement thus afforded to his provincial tours. The plan of remaining a considerable time in each of the larger towns is for many reasons a good one, and this year the Rosa people propose to adopt it very freely. The Company will be a month in Dublin, three weeks in Manchester, a similar time in two of the Scottish cities, and about two months in Liverpool.

A statement is going the rounds concerning the so-called "Black Patti," and asserting that Madame Patti had spoken of her in very complimentary terms. The "Black Patti" (who, by the way, is known at home as Miss Jones) may, of course, thoroughly deserve all the praise which but for one little accident the great singer might have offered her. It is, however, a fact that Madame Patti herself has never seen or heard her dusky namesake.

Madame Patti, by the way, will return from America next April at least £40,000 richer than she went. She is to be paid a minimum of £1,000 per night for forty concerts, plus all expenses, from which it will be perceived that it is about four times better to be a great songstress than an Archbishop.

Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, has recently finished a sacred oratorio, "Bethlehem," and he has now started work upon a comic opera. "Les extrêmes se touchent." Dr. Mackenzie, by the way, will not go to Chicago, owing to the failure of the season there. So the production of "Bethlehem" will be again postponed.

The Promenade Concert season opened at Covent Garden on Saturday night with excellent promise. Mr. Sinkins, who is new to this business, has, of course, to learn some details by experience, among other things that people nowadays do not want the conventional vocal waltz, but do desire to know by newspaper advertisements an outline of the suggested programme of the evening. Still he has secured a capital band, into whose playing it is hoped Mr. Cowen will soon be able to infuse a little more vigour and "go," and he has engaged a fine list of principal vocalists, together with Mr. Charles Fry, an excellent elocutionist, and the Meister Glee singers. It was a notable sign of the times that the audience crowded round the band-stand to listen to M. Ysaye's performance of so uncompromising a work as M. Saint-Saëns' violin concerto in B minor, and strolled away when any vocalist came forward to sing an operatic ditty. The fact is that the more frivolous class appear to have deserted the promenade concerts for the music-halls, and that the genuine musical amateur—an enthusiastic person, who exists in his thousands in London—is now being attracted to Covent Garden. There was little, too, of the frail element, once so greatly in evidence at this sort of entertainment, and the smoking-gallery appeared to be a good deal better patronised than the liquor-bars. Whether all this is to the advantage of the management, time, of course, must show; but it at any rate indicates that the director of the promenade concerts now has to cater for a higher class of audience than his former patrons would care to pretend to be.

Mr. Sinkins has, by the way, secured Covent Garden for a term of eight weeks certain. The Sims Reeves performances will commence on September 1, and when the aged tenor sings the audience will be seated, promenading being allowed only in the lobbies and behind the band-stand. This, I suppose, is intended to impart a sort of dignity to the proceedings, although why it should be considered infra dig. to stand up while listening to a vocalist I, for one, do not pretend to understand.

Madame Patey has wisely resolved to give a series of farewell performances in the provinces before her final appearance in public. I should, indeed, not be surprised if her final farewell concert at St. James's Hall were postponed till next year.

The dates of the Philharmonic concerts next season have now been fixed, and it appears that the first two performances will be given on Wednesday evenings, while in April, directly after the opera season opens, the concerts will be transferred to Thursdays. Now, Thursday is always one of the most important nights at the opera, and the question has already arisen, and will certainly again arise, why some of the Covent Garden players should be allowed to upset all the opera arrangements for the sake of four or five concerts at St. James's Hall. Last season "Mefistofele" clashed with a Philharmonic night, and eventually could not be given at all, and one of the novelties likewise had to be postponed for the same reason. I am sure no reasonable man would blame Sir A. Harris if he insisted that his orchestra should choose between the Philharmonic and himself, or, in other words, should decide whether, for the sake of these five Philharmonic concerts, they are willing to relinquish a season of sixty or seventy nights at the opera. The same trouble arose in Sir Michael Costa's time, and Costa absolutely refused to allow any member of his band to accept a Philharmonic engagement. The difficulty might easily be avoided if the Philharmonic directors changed their dates to Wednesdays.

Sir Augustus Harris has, I think prudently, deprecated the idea of a portrait, and has expressed a wish that, if the funds of the proposed testimonial to himself allow of it, the money shall be devoted to an operatic scholarship at the Royal College of Music. The Royal Academy already has such a scholarship, founded out of his own private pocket by the late Carl Rosa, but from the time it was inaugurated, nearly twenty years ago, to the present day it has, I believe, not given us a single opera singer of mark. The projected Royal College scholarship will, I hope, be more fortunate, although it is, I fear, a fact that the recruits to the operatic stage come mainly from private teachers. Whether it was wise to start a Harris testimonial at all is another matter, which concerns Mr. Russell, its projector, far more than Druriolanus, its recipient. Of course, to have been fully successful, the fund should have been organised in June, and not at a period of the year when the subscribers to the opera, who are among Sir A. Harris's staunchest admirers, are away from town. Sir Augustus would himself, perhaps, have preferred that an expression of popular favour should have taken the form of increased subscriptions to the opera house.

SANITARY SURVEYS.—Fee for inspection and Report in London, 2Gs.—The Sanitary Engineering Co., 65, Victoria-st., Westminster.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—We like this delightful place better than ever. We spend every afternoon on the "Zee Strand" at Scheveningen (please pronounce it Shenningen), and keep our comfortable quarters at the hotel in the Hague. I must tell you something about the dress we see here. There is every possible variety, as you may imagine, the thousands of visitors including Germans, French, and Dutch, with a sprinkling of English. The latest emanations from the brain of a Worth or a Redfern rub shoulders with the quaint costumes of the native women and girls, and the severest of travelling dresses may be seen in close proximity to the most elaborate composition of silk, muslin, ribbons, lace, and velvet. The fashions of the day after to-morrow may here be gleaned, and after a few days' observation we are delighted to find that there is no alarming width in dress skirts. White serge is in greater favour than any other material for ladies' wear, and the men adopt it pretty freely too. A daintily-garbed Frenchwoman wears white serge cut to perfection and fitting to a nicety, but without one atom of trimming anywhere. The perfectly plain skirt falls in uninterrupted lines to the feet, and the small coatee—a cross between an Eton jacket and a Figaro vest—is as guiltless of trimming as the skirt. The shirt is of snowy silk, and the tie is white, this touch being in accordance with one of the latest whims of fashion. The hat is white felt, very soft, thin, and light, with a narrow band of white trimming round the crown for sole trimming. The gloves are white wash-leather, and the large sunshade is made of serge like the dress, with a band of plain white ribbon for a border. This costume illustrates the true Parisienne's idea of a suitable get-up for a morning or afternoon spent in a big wicker chair by the sad sea waves. Light summer cloth comes next in favour to white serge. Two tall English girls, whose lovely complexions and beautiful figures attract attention wherever they pass, wear respectively white cloth and pale fawn-colour, of irreproachable cut and finish. There is very little navy blue to be seen, brighter tones of that colour being in great favour this year. Uniform blue is in demand, such as Prussian soldiers wear, and a still lighter tint, which might almost be called convolvulus blue, though that does not quite accurately describe it, is much seen, not only in cloth and crépon, but cotton materials. A handsome cloth gown in this colour is turned back with golden-brown moire, the bodice being made with two collars and three revers, one on the top of the other. Another blue gown, in this medium shade, is faced with scarlet, and round the skirt runs a wide band of scarlet. A belt of the same, passed through two slits in the coat, disappears for an inch or two at either side and is visible again in front, holding in the folds of a white silk muslin blouse trimmed with a deep fall of cream-coloured guipure lace. A scarlet silk tie, barred with an echo of the blue in the cloth, is tied round the neck in the deftest possible little bow. The sunshade is white, as are the great majority, whether the costume be coloured or otherwise. Skirts and coats of light, striped flannel are seen in great numbers, and, being of the genus tailor-made, are for the most part untrimmed. Gowns of fancy material have two little frills set on half-way down the skirt, and three at the edge. A gown of palest grey crépon has these frills in apple-green silk. The revers of the bodice and the sleeves are in the silk, and a belt of the same is gathered on to a wide foundation and fastened at the back under two rosettes. The collar is finished in the same way, with folds of the green silk, and ends at the back under a rosette. Another crépon dress is white, with frills of crépon in pale rose-pink. A blouse of pink silk is caught in at the waist with a band of wide ribbon, striped white and pink. The hat, made of fancy white straw, is lined with rose-pink chiffon, and trimmed with a few folds of the same and a couple of small white wings. Numbers of tartan silk blouses are worn with white or coloured skirts, and tartan sashes of considerable width are tied on over white or cream-tinted gowns. A charming dress is in very soft white muslin with a wide border of grey-blue woven in with the fabric. A wide silk belt exactly matches the grey-blue, a frill of which is turned back from the neck. Many of the bodices are cut with low necks, and lots of girls wear their pearls at Scheveningen, the idea being that the sea-air improves their colour. Quite three-fourths of the young girls wear half-length coats of drab or biscuit cloth, some of them very elaborately braided and made with cape-collars, or bold, pointed revers. Over white muslin gowns these coats are in much request. Not a single waist cape is to be seen in this fashionable assemblage. A cream-coloured cloth gown is made with a tightly-fitting bodice with small, triple shoulder cape, the edges of which are pinked out. This gives them a very light and pretty effect. A pink Empire sash is worn with this, being made with five knots of pink ribbon in front, from each of which radiates a line of pink ribbon, all of them meeting in the centre of the back under a rosette. A pink crêpe-de-Chine tie with embroidered ends exactly matches the tint of the ribbons, and pink wings in the cream-coloured felt hat carry out the scheme of colour to a consistent conclusion. A soft pale grey cloth suit has the cape collar buttonholed round with silk, and the triple basque is finished in the same way.

The children are beyond measure happy with their spades and pails, the latter painted in the red, white, and blue of the Dutch flag. For the most part, the youngsters are in holland, batiste, or white linen. There is no navy blue serge in this hot August weather. Few of them have shoes or stockings. A small Dutch boy guards a miniature mountain of these chaussures while the owners run in and out of the sea, dig deep holes, or build high castles with a Dutch flag flying from the top. A lovely little French girl wears a frock of warm buff-coloured cotton, speckled with scarlet dots, and bordered above a tiny flounce with a row of scarlet braid. The deep sailor collar is bordered to match, and the sleeves have their modicum of the braid as well. The beautiful child-face looks out from the depths of a big white sun-bonnet, much beruffled with fine embroidery. Neither shoes nor stockings encumber the shapely little legs which, as we look, come flying in before a pursuing wave, in company with many other pairs of youthful legs, the owners screaming in delight at the frolicsome mood of their playmate, the sea. There are hardly any sailor suits on the boys, these being appropriated by the lads who vend lemonade and coffee in connection with a refreshment stall by the planks which are laid down opposite the magnificent Kurhaus on the sand. The very small boys have brown holland suits, and the tall ones wear short navy-blue jackets and tightly-cut knickerbockers, quite without fulness, and meeting the dark-blue stockings at the knee, where they are fastened with a buckle. The neat finish of the boys' dresses is noticeable. When they throw off their jackets they show the belts of broad silk webbing in scarlet and white or blue and scarlet, and the fine shirts with close lines of blue or red on white. Scores and scores of young cadets in military uniforms mingle with the crowds on the sands, with here and there a naval uniform among them; and there are always groups of Scheveningen girls, with their quaint caps tied closely on their heads, and suggestive of nightcaps, and their many petticoats, which give them an appearance of enormous width. They wear petticoats as English wear jewels, to show their wealth. A well-to-do girl wears nine on week days and fifteen on Sundays. They are made of good, expensive material, and must be dreadfully heavy. On Sundays, too, they wear their silk aprons, three breadths of handsome silk in each, and on the day of rest they give up their everlasting knitting, which, on weekdays, they carry on as they walk about. They all wear earrings, even the tiny two-year-old girls. In strong contrast with the characteristic costume of the fisherwomen and girls is the hideous travesty of fashionable English dress in which the shopkeeper class array their small girls, with the crudest tones of pink, yellow, red, blue, and green heaped together on one little frock or hat. Thus, every possible phase of costume for daylight wear is to be seen here.

Costumes for Scotland, &c.—Messrs. Redfern beg to announce that they have designed some very practical Gowns for ladies visiting Scotland, either for Shooting, Travelling, Golfing, &c., to which they invite an inspection.—27, New Bond-street, W.

A delightful way of going to Scheveningen is by the horse-tram under the trees, which form an avenue nearly three miles long. So close are the splendid old oaks and elms that one could easily touch them from one's perch on the top of the conveyance, and the effect of the long glades with the sun shining through the trees is wonderfully fine. On the left, as we go from the Hague, is a wide high road, bordered with beautiful villas, the lawns of which are covered with the greenest grass I ever saw, greener far than even that of the Emerald Isle itself. As we pass, we see the carriages of the owners waiting, and admire their splendid horses, only a few of which have their tails docked in the ugly and rather cruel English fashion. On the other side of the tramway is a deep, thick wood, so you may imagine what a lovely drive it is. This route takes us through the village of Scheveningen, which consists chiefly of one long and rather narrow street. We saw the notice up "Kamer te huren"—rooms to let—in many houses. Visitors find the hotels and pensions much cheaper and pleasanter than apartments.

About five o'clock, when the fashionable folk go in to tea, the solid Dutch women of the village, shopkeepers, landladies, and others of a similar class, come out on the sands. They are very big and broad, though the men are seldom tall. It is funny to see these heavy women plunge into the holes dug by the children in the sand, and scramble out anyhow. They have a way of leaning over on each foot, as they tread on it, which imparts a curious waddle to their gait, but they look so thoroughly good-humoured and jolly that one feels a traitor in writing ill-naturedly of them.

The young Dutch girls of the cultured classes have round pink and white faces, with blue eyes, and, as a rule, lovely teeth and very fine hair that, without having much colour, glistens in the light. They are very pleasant to look at, and have plump figures and very good carriage. They understand flirting, of course. What girls do not? But they practise the art with a soft demureness that in no way interferes with the play of bright eyes and the smiling of rosy lips and very white teeth. We watched several interesting cases during our stay.

Father says we shall have to go back next week, and we are very sorry. We find that returning by the Hook instead of Rotterdam gives us exactly five hours and a half longer at the Hague. This makes all the difference in leaving leisure for a comfortable dinner. For those who cannot eat on board a boat, and there are many such, this is a very great consideration.

I have received the following from Frances:—

You remember that I told you last week we had the Middlesex Yeomanry down here for their annual drill, and I also mentioned that we were looking forward to a very exciting week. We did not anticipate in vain, for we have had a most enjoyable time since I last wrote you. On Tuesday the Brighton Corporation very liberally placed the entire Pavilion at the disposal of the Yeomanry, where the men gave a largely attended smoking concert, followed by a ball. We were not, however, present ourselves, but were told that both functions were a complete success.

The sports on Wednesday we thoroughly enjoyed, and we heard some military people near us declare that the "lemon-cutting" compared excellently well with the "lemon-cutting" at the Military Tournament in town. The Colonel of the Inniskillings was the judge, and several of the officers and their wives were present. The clown—who is, or rather was, a Sergeant of the Inniskillings—was highly amusing on a trained horse belonging to Colonel McKean. Any damage or mischief he got into was quickly "put down to the Yeomanry." I rather trembled for the poor Yeomanry, however, when I heard that Colonel Gough, one of the strictest Inspectors sent out for such purposes, was to inspect them on Friday. You will be glad to know though that he spoke most highly of them. We had glorious weather for the inspection, and some of the frocks were charming. The Baroness McKean, who is very pretty, wore a soft figured crépon in black, with three rows of black velvet, alternating with guipure embroidery, and deep epaulettes of similar lace on the bodice. Many white veils were worn, but unless they are very transparent, they entirely spoil a pretty face.

We were lucky enough to have invitations for the luncheon after the inspection, which was held—the luncheon I mean, not the inspection—in the lovely Clarence Rooms of the Métropole Hotel, instead of in a tent, as we had it last year at Richmond. Over 300 were entertained most admirably, and the hotel chefs certainly did their utmost—and most successfully too—to excel themselves. We are very sad, however, now, for the Yeomanry left us on Saturday, and Brighton, I am afraid, is given up for the next few weeks to most undoubtedly worthy, but equally undoubtedly uninteresting, excursionists. Still, our season will soon be on, and we are looking forward with every confidence to an exceptionally good and long one.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

DEAREST MADGE,—Every man's mind is his kingdom, in which none dispute his right to reign supreme. It is, however, one thing to have a right, and quite another to have the power of exercising it. Though every one is entitled to make up his own mind, the average man is a very feeble hand at the process. Great minds alone do not seem to have the difficulties in this way that beset smaller ones; in fact, the difficulty and labour of making up the mind is apparently in inverse ratio to its extent. And the little mind—especially if there be very little of it—takes the most making up of all. As an average woman, I own to many vacillations and waverings in the matter of making decisions, with a decided bias towards inviting extraneous aid to help them. Even with regard to a special toilet to be worn on a special occasion, how often one goes through perfect agonies of doubt and the most desperate mental conflict! Is not the wild appeal for outside help in the decision the invariable end of the struggle? What wear and tear the consideration of the summer change causes those who, wishing to go abroad, have the whole world lying before them for choice! Probably the difficulty of making up our minds in such cases has been the "making" of most of the health resorts in Europe. Do not half of us consult the doctors as to where we ought to go, not because we feel any real need of medical advice, but just to throw on their shoulders the burthen of choosing for us? To do them justice, they never fail us. In exchange for the guineas which infirm wills rather than infirm bodies have led us into spending, we get cheerfully and definitely scattered over the Continent, to be amused at Homburg or bored at Royat, to be grilled in Wiesbaden or chilled in the High Alps, and so on.

Only, above all, one should exercise a wise discretion in selecting a consulting physician. I speak with the melancholy experience of one wise after the event. Could you, could any one, in this age, have imagined the possibility of being ordered, just plainly and simply, sea bathing at a seaside resort in one's own country? Such a common, one might almost say, brutal prescription! Brutal in its simplicity and plainness! As if one were of the commonplace organisation of the last generation, instead of being a child of the end of the century, all nerves and complications and mystery!

With saddened souls we have been settled at the seaside for the last three weeks, with nothing but a beautiful open sea, a wide-stretching pebbly beach, and a lovely neighbourhood; a well-wooded country extending to a background of mountains. I don't know what one would do but for the bathing. It is the dark, deep shadow of the morning that makes the rest of the day bright by contrast, if only the stickiness were more transient, and the damp clamminess of the hair less clammy. By the way, how impossible it is, with no matter what kind of bathing cap, to baffle the attacks of the sea water on one's hair. The only sure way is to do as a neighbour of ours does, leave it with one's other adjustable belongings in the bathing-box when going into the sea.

SCARLET FEVER.—RELIABLE SANITATION AT FRACTIONAL COST. The new non-poisonous antiseptic "Izal" may be diluted in the proportion of one part to two hundred parts of water, so that a Half-Crown bottle, which is a handy size for family use, will make thirty gallons of powerful germ-killing Disinfectant, which will prevent the spread of Fever, Smallpox, Diphtheria, Cholera, &c. "Izal" is harmless to everything but disease, and is safe to use under all conditions. Sold in bottles, 1s., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d., and gallon tins at 10s. A sample bottle or tin sent, carriage paid in the United Kingdom, for postal order. The "Izal" Rules for Disinfection may be had free on application to NEWTON, CHAMBERS, & Co., Ltd., 19, Great George-street, London, S.W.

We were much disappointed regarding the manœuvring fleets. For days we vainly sought them on the horizon, and succeeded in seeing nothing beyond a few torpedo boats and small gunboats. We had hoped for a battle within sight of our coast. Was it not inconsiderate to have had all the battles take place so far out in the Channel? And just at a time when the disaster to the Victoria had sharpened our interest in naval matters, and our ignorance of the subject of war-ships had been somewhat enlightened by an attentive perusal of the proceedings of the court-martial.

Dublin has been given over to cricket matches—most of them rather poor—at the Viceregal Lodge, and the Polo Tournament in the Phœnix Park. Crowds assembled each day to witness what were sometimes most thrilling polo contests. The game can be very lively indeed; one cannot but wonder in the general wild and rushing confusion of ponies and men that more accidents do not happen. At this season the Phœnix Park is almost entirely in military occupation. Between cricketers, polo players and their spectators, members of every branch of the Service, like the salmon in Galway river as described by a native, "do be jostling one another" daily in and around the cricket and polo grounds. Amongst the gilded youth lately arrived in the Dublin garrison is Prince Francis of Teck, whose regiment, the 1st Royal Dragoons, is stationed at Island Bridge or the Marlborough Barracks—I forget which. He is an object of much interest, shining now in the new glory reflected from a brilliantly-married sister. What a difference a good marriage of one member can make to an entire family in any class of life! How it throws out family virtues and discovers new attractions! In fact, its power of transformation equals that of a magician's wand.

Next week the Horse Show is expected to crowd our capital, as it was never crowded before. We are only nervous lest public affairs should interfere with our great national autumnal festival. Fancy losing all the Lords from our Show, at which they generally muster in such force. In this melancholy case, however, it is to be hoped that the ladies will not also fall off. As at present arranged, the times are too uncertain to count absolutely on social arrangements. Lord Houghton will have a party for the week, and all the big houses in Dublin and the neighbouring counties will be full. There will be no party at Abbotstown, owing to the death of Lady Victoria Hamilton's mother, Lady Charles Wellesley. Are not military authorities inconsiderate? The Scots Guards are to leave Dublin in the Assistance in the beginning of the Horse Show week.—Yours ever,

CLARE.

I have recipes for an entrée and a sweet to send you this week. I hope you will like them. This way of preparing chickens in mango sauce has a most sublimising effect upon them:—

Prepare a young chicken for roasting, and then lard it with strips of sheep's kidneys and truffles placed in uniform rows (two of kidney and one of truffle) down the centre of the breast of the bird. Set it in a dutch-oven before the fire, baste frequently with butter, and while this is cooking prepare half a dozen mangoes (Bombay) in the following manner:—Cut them into slices, and blanch them by putting them in boiling water for ten minutes. Next place them in cold water for one minute to cool, then drain, and set the slices in a stew-pan with a gill of hamcoulis, and let them simmer for five minutes. When the chicken is ready, dish up, and, after removing the hard substance from the mangoes, pour the sauce over it. Garnish with slices of lemon cut into X-shaped pieces, and tufts of parsley between.

Apples done in simulation of an Alpine glacier are not only delicious, but make a very pretty dish:—

Put in a stewpan 4 oz. of castor sugar, 2 oz. of butter, 1 gill of water, the grated rind of a green lemon, 1 oz. of mixed lemon peel, and a blade of pounded cinnamon. Stir it over the fire till it is a thick syrup. Peel and core half a dozen Wellington apples (do not break them in doing so), dip them several times into the hot syrup, and fill the hollow caused by the removal of the core with marmalade. When cold, cover them with a rich, thin paste; cut the remainder of the pastry into long, narrow slips and twist it round the apples in a spiral form. Bake in a quick oven, and when done sift sugar over each and glaze with a salamander. Dish on an ornamental paper, and serve with glasses of custard to each person.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

MARIANI WINE

This inimitable COCA WINE is an aid to intellectual exertion, and is indispensable to brain-workers and others who suffer from Debility, Exhaustion, Mental Depression, Dyspepsia, Sleeplessness, Voice Fatigue; also to promote Convalescence. Written Testimonials from over 2,000 Physicians. "A powerful rejuvenator and renovator of the vital forces." Sold by Chemists, Grocers, and Stores, or delivered free by Importers, WILCOX & CO. 239, Oxford-st., London. 4s. per bottle, or 45s. dozen. Be sure and ask for MARIANI WINE.

MOURNING FOR IMMEDIATE WEAR.

Messrs. JAY'S

Large and well-assorted STOCK includes a choice and varied selection of COSTUMES, MANTLES, and MILLINERY, suitable for any degree of Mourning, and ready for IMMEDIATE WEAR. Orders to special instructions are executed in a few hours, and Ladies are Waited Upon in any part of the country without any extra charge whatever.

JAY'S,
REGENT STREET, LONDON.

THE MANUFACTURING
GOLDSMITHS' & SILVERSMITHS' COMPANY
Show Rooms—112, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. (Adjoining Stereoscopic Company.)
Supply the Public Direct at Manufacturers' Cash Prices, saving Purchasers from 25 to 50 per cent.

Fine Diamond Half-hoop Rings, from £15 to £200.

Fine Pearl and Diamond Brooch, £5.

SPECIAL NOTICE.
THE
GOLDSMITHS' ALLIANCE LTD.
(A. B. Savory & Sons), late of 11 and 12, Cornhill, E.C., is sold to this Company, and the business is transferred to the above address.

Fine Diamond Brooch, £5.

Fine Pearl and Diamond Ring, £18 10s.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE POST FREE.

The Largest and Choicest Stock in the World of Novelties specially prepared for WEDDING & COMPLIMENTARY PRESENTS.

Goods forwarded to the Country on approval.

Fine Pearl and Diamond Keeper Ring, £10.

Fine Pearl and Diamond Brooch, £

Fine Pearl and Diamond Bracelet, £35.

REGISTERED DESIGN
Fine Pearl and Diamond Brooch, £5.

Fine Diamond Cluster Ring, £25

CRITERION RESTAURANT, PICCADILLY
No. 1 EAST ROOM.—CUISINE, VERITABLEMENT FINE. Specially devoted to the service of À LA CARTE DÉJEUNERS AND DINNERS in the most Recherché Style of French Cookery.
CUISINE UNRIVALLED IN ENGLAND. — LARGE SELECTION OF CHOICE WINES.
No. 2 EAST ROOM.—A SPECIAL DINNER AT 10s. 6d. EACH will be served in this Room at Separate Tables between the hours of 6 and 9 p.m.
COMPOSED OF A SELECTION OF DISHES FROM THE CARTE DU JOUR OF THE EAST ROOMS.

LORD BYRON'S HEROINE

"Nothing earthly could surpass her,
Save thine incomparable oil, Macassar."
("Don Juan," Canto 1.)

A splendid testimony this of the Poet's high appreciation of the merits of

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL.

His Lordship preserved his fine head of hair by the use of this Oil, and recommended it to all his acquaintances as being the best and safest preserver and beautifier of the Hair. Sold also in a Golden Colour for fair hair. Bottles, 3 6, 7 -, 10 6, equal to four small.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO

Is the best and most fragrant preparation for the Teeth. All dentists allow that neither washes nor pastes are as efficacious for polishing the Teeth and keeping them sound and white as a pure and non-gritty tooth-powder; such Rowlands' Odonto has always proved itself.

ASK ANYWHERE FOR ROWLANDS' ARTICLES.

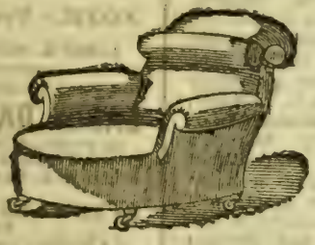
HOWARD & SONS.

PATENTEES OF

ENGLISH-MADE

PARQUET

FOR COVERING OLD FLOORS.
NEVER WEARS OUT.



DIVANS, SOFAS,

AND

EASY CHAIRS.

FURNITURE DESIGNERS & MAKERS. NEW CATALOGUES FREE.

25, 26, & 27, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.

Mr. HELBRONNER, Ld.

300 & 302, OXFORD STREET, W.
ECCLESIASTICAL AND DOMESTIC EMBROIDERERS.
Weavers of Dress Silks,
Decorators, Upholsterers, &c.

THE NEW PATENT

TRIPLE SPLICED INSTEP HOSE.

NO. 20,778,

For Ladies and Children.

These goods are spliced at the instep, where, in the case of lace-up boots and shoes, stockings first show signs of wear. In the heels and feet there is also a splicing thread more than is found in ordinary goods. Thereby the wearing power is doubled without the slightest clumsiness or discomfort. The improvement is particularly advantageous in the thinnest summer makes of stocking, where the extreme fineness of the yarn makes the ordinary goods very apt to wear out almost immediately.

Made in Cotton, Lisle Thread, Summer and Winter Cashmere, Spun and Pure Silk.

See Reg. Trade Mark "MUSA DYE" on each pair.

To be obtained of all the best Hosiers and Outfitters in the United Kingdom, and

Wholesale only of the Patentees:

DEBENHAM & FREEBODY,
FLETCHER GATE, NOTTINGHAM.

MORANT & Co.

DECORATORS,

91, NEW BOND STREET (4 doors from Oxford St.)

Makers of Venetian Seats, Henri II. Benches, Louis XIII. Sofas, Louis XV. and XVI. Furniture in great variety, not to be seen elsewhere. Chaises Directoire from old models.

The CLARET of the SEASON.

CHÂTEAU LA MARNIÈRE

(VINTAGE 1888, BLANQUEFORT.)

21s. Cash, delivered. Sample bottle, 2s. by post.

Order through your Wine Merchant or Grocer.

SOLE PROPRIETORS:

ARNOLD, PERRETT, & CO., LIMITED,
WINE MERCHANTS,
7a, Lower Belgrave Street, S.W. & Country Branches.

PRICE LIST OF CHOICE WINES AND SPIRITS POST FREE.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent Gratis. The List includes Private Asylums, &c.—Address, Mr. B. STOCKER, 8, Lancaster-place, Strand, W.C.

FOR SALE.
A SPLENDID SEA-GOING STEAM YACHT. Great bargain. Ready for cruise. Crew for season. Eight berths, six sofas. Price £2,350, in easy instalments.—Address, YACHT, Lee & Nightingale, Liverpool.

POPULAR NEW NOVELS
AT EVERY LIBRARY,
Published by Richard Bentley & Son.

1. PERDITA. By Mary E. MANN, Author of "A Winter's Tale," &c. In 2 vols. crown 8vo.

2. THE BISHOP'S WIFE. A Sketch. By DAYRELL TRELAWNEY. 1 vol.

3. WHO WINS — LOSES. By SOPHIA MARY LOCKE. 3 vols.

From the SPECTATOR.

"The absence of the name of any previous work on the title-page of 'Who Wins—Loses,' seems to indicate that it is a maiden effort; but, in addition to its other merits, it has a maturity of matter and manner very unusual in a first book. The characters, who are just the sort of people we are in the habit of meeting every day, are distinguished without resort to any of those tricks of individualisation to which inferior novelists are compelled to resort. This gift of natural delineation is admirably manifested in the portraits of Dorothy Legh and Mamia Fleetwood. They are both conscientious, commonplace, narrow-minded, and obstinate in the conviction of their own infallibility; but though neither has any distinguishing quality or habit by which she can be labelled, each is as distinct from the other as are the four clergymen of Miss Austen, so warmly praised by Macaulay. No character in the book is, however, more finely rendered than the one who is not delineated but self-revealed—the imaginary narrator of the story. She is a refined, disinterested, amiable, but somewhat too self-confident person who, having little in her own life that requires management, devotes herself to managing the lives of other people. Of course she makes some disastrous blunders, especially in the matter of matchmaking. . . . . A most capable and pleasant novel."

4. MRS. FINCH-BRASSEY. By Mrs. ANDREW DEAN. 3 vols.

From the WORLD.

"'Mrs. Finch-Brassey' is almost daring in the slightness of its plot, but it is a careful and humorous study of an odious woman, with several sketches of other characters cleverly indicated."

From the ATHENÆUM.

"A genuine piece of human nature . . . . evidently taken from life. At times clever and striking generalisations refresh the reader. A story set in vivacious and pleasant lines"

THE NOVELS OF MAARTEN MAARTENS.
Each Novel well printed on good paper, and neatly bound, price 6s. each.

1. The Sin of Joost Avelingh.
2. An Old Maid's Love.
3. God's Fool. [Immediately.

A New Story of MAARTEN MAARTENS' is now appearing in the pages of TEMPLE BAR.

THE NOVELS OF MARY LINSKILL, THE YORKSHIRE NOVELIST.
Each Novel well printed on good paper, and neatly bound, price 6s.

1. Tales of the North Riding.
2. Between the Heather and the Northern Sea.
3. The Haven under the Hill.
4. In Exchange for a Soul.
5. Cleveden.

THE NOVELS OF MARIE CORELLI.
Each Novel well printed on good paper, and neatly bound, price 6s.

1. A Romance of Two Worlds.
2. Vendetta.
3. Thelma.
4. Ardath.
5. Wormwood.
6. The Soul of Lilith.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

NOW READY.

The Two Lancrofts.
By C. F. KEARY,

Author of "A Mariage de Convenance." Three vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

The Saturday Review says:—"Not the least of Mr. Keary's attainmen many and varied, is the possession of a literary equipment so many novelis have failed to acquire. He is master of a scholarly English, of passion temper with reticence, pathos undiluted with pathology, and epigram freed of the n humour. It is not, therefore, remarkable that he should be the author of o of the most striking and original novels which have appeared for a very lo time."

SECOND EDITION.
NOW READY.

The Crime of Maunsell Grange
By FREDERIC BRETON,

Three Vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

NOTE.—New List of Books free on applicatio

JAMES R. OSGOOD, McILVAINE & CO., 45, Albemarle-street, London.

Now Ready. Foolscap 4to, 252 pp., Illustrated, Cloth, Gilt edges. 10s. 6d. net. T

EARLY DAYS OF MARLBOROUGH COLLEGE;
Or, PUBLIC SCHOOL LIFE BETWEEN FORTY AND FIFTY YEARS AGO To which is added A Glimpse of Old Haileybury; Patna during t Mutiny; A Sketch of the Natural History of the Riviera; a Life in an Oxfordshire Village.

By EDWARD LOCKWOOD, Indian Civil Service (Retired) Author of "The Natural History of Monghyr."

"A lively and gossiping description of the School in its infancy."—Morning P
"We feel almost tempted to call Mr. Lockwood the Gilbert White of Riviera."—Publisher's Circular.

SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & CO., Limited.
FARMER & SONS, 295, Edgware-road, London.

Messrs. HUTCHINSON'S NEW BOOK

"THE SUCCESS OF THE SPRING IN FICTION

I FORBID THE BANNS.
The Story of a Comedy which was played seriously. By FRANKFO MOORE. FIFTH and CHEAP EDITION. In cloth, gilt, 6s.

The "Athenæum" says:—"So racy and brillia a novel."

The "Daily Telegraph" says:—"A very remar able novel. It is daring in conception, brillia in execution, and altogether fascinating in trea ment. Told with infinite delicacy and masterf skill."

 This Novel passed through Four Editions in 3-volume form.

NEW VOLUME OF THE
POETS AND THE POETRY OF THE CENTURY.
Edited by ALFRED H. MILES.

ROBERT BRIDGES AND CONTEMPORARY POETS
In buckram, gilt, 6s.; in cloth, gilt top, 4s.

Containing Poems by Rudyard Kipling, E. Dowden, Andrew Lang, Rol Bridges, Edmund Gosse, Robert Louis Stevenson, Alice Meynell, Eric Mack Oscar Wilde, Mary F. Robinson, Norman Gale, Richard le Gallienne, &c., with Biographical Notices by well-known critics [This Da

B. L. FARJEON'S NEW NOVEL.

THE LAST TENANT.
In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. [This Da

DICK DONOVAN'S NEW BOOK.

FROM CLUE TO CAPTURE.
A Series of Thrilling Detective Stories. With numerous Illustrati by Paul Hardy. In cloth, gilt, 3s. 6d. [This Da

HUTCHINSON & CO., Paternoster-row.

Price Sixpence.

THE HARROGATE MINERAL WATERS and HOMŒ PATHY. A new Analysis. Reprinted from the Monthly "Homœopat Review."

Published by E. GOULD & SON, London, and can be purchased at any Booksellers'.

Hatchards, Booksellers, 187, Piccadilly, Londo
ALL THE NEW AND STANDARD BOOKS.
Post Orders Promptly Executed. Usual Cash Discounts.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S NEW NOVELS.

W. E. NORRIS'S new novel, entitled "THE COUNTESS RADNA," in 3 volumes, can now be obtained at all the LIBRARIES.

AS A MAN IS ABLE.
By DOROTHY LEIGHTON.
In 3 vols. At all Libraries.

"We seem to have struck a vein of clever new novelists lately. Here is another work that is quite as interesting as 'Dodo,' which we had the pleasure of criticising favourably a week or two ago."—Vanity Fair.

THIRD THOUSAND.

THE HEAVENLY TWINS.
By Madame SARAH GRAND,
Author of "Ideala."
In 3 vols. At all Libraries.

"It is so full of interest that one feels inclined to give oneself up to unreserved enjoyment of it. The twins are among the most delightful and amusing in fiction."—Athenæum.

IDEALA. A Study from Life. By Madame SARAH GRAND, Author of "The Heavenly Twins." New (Fifth) Edition, 1 vol., 6s.

THE JEW. From the Polish of J. I. KRASZEWSKI. With an Introduction by EDMUND GOSSE. (Heinemann's International Library). Cloth, 3s. 6d.; paper, 2s. 6d.

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

NOW READY.

ANNE BOLEYN:
A Historical Drama in Five Acts.
BY D. T. CALLAHAN, M.D.
Small Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"ANNE BOLEYN" is a very spirited piece of work.—PUBLIC OPINION.

A truly dramatic subject in speech of noteworthy limpidity and strength.—MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

The present writer has read every word of "Anne Boleyn" and got pleasure out of it.—THE SPEAKER.

The play . . . is skilfully wrought out.—THE SCOTSMAN.

The Author shows the possession of high poetic and dramatic ability.—GLASGOW HERALD.

London: A. P. MARSDEN, 27, Southampton-street, Covent-garden, W.C., Publisher.

A NEW NOVEL BY A NEW WRITER.
Just Published, in 3 vols., Crown 8vo, 31s. 6d. At all Libraries.

THE HEIRLOOM
By T. DUTHIE-LISLE.

Mrs. Wiggins' Last Success.
Second Edition, Crown 8vo, Illustrated, Tastefully Bound, 3s. 6d.

A Cathedral Courtship
And Penelope's English Experiences.

Baron de Book Worms wrote in Punch:—
"There is only one word that will fittingly describe 'A Cathedral Courtship'—it is delightful."
Daily News:—"Both stories are idylls. . . . From the first to the last the volume is full of life, humour, and colour."
Athenæum:—"Humour, vivacity, and freshness written on almost every page."
London: GAY & BIRD, KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND, Publishers and Agents for American Books.

STERILITY IN WOMEN: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. By J. B. RYLEY, M.D., M.R.C.S., London.—A New Illustrated Edition of this work is Now Ready. Price 3s. 6d.; post-free 3s. 8d. London: HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand.

AMUSEMENTS.

ADELPHI THEATRE. A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers. A New Drama of Real Life, by Henry Pettit, entitled A WOMAN'S REVENGE Every Evening, at 7.30. Messrs. Charles Warner, Charles Cartwright, Herbert Flemming, Rudge Harding John Carter, and E. W. Gardiner, Misses Elizabeth Robins, Gertrude Kingston, F. L. Forster, and Fanny Brough. Box plan at theatre. Telephone 2,645. Open at 7.30.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE. Manager, F. J. HARRIS.—Every Evening, at 8.15, MOROCCO BOUND. John L. Shine and Charles Danby; Misses Violet Cameron and Letty Lind. Preceded, at 7.45, by Rex Harley, the inimitable Mimic of Popular Actors. Box office 10 to 10. Doors open 7.30.

ALHAMBRA THEATRE.—Open 7.45.—Two BALLETS, Operatic Music, and Varieties. At 8.40, the New Grand Romantic Ballet, in Four Tableaux, entitled FIDELIA. At 10.30, CHICAGO, and Grand Ballet of Nations. Frequent Change of Programme. Telephone 35,095.

THE EMPIRE.—Leicester-square.—Grand Programme.—Two Grand Ballets, Second Edition of ROUND THE TOWN and KATRINA. Unqualified success. Unrivalled VARIETY ENTERTAINMENT. Magnificent Orchestra. Doors open at 7.45. No free list.

PALACE THEATRE.—Managing Director, Sir AUGUSTUS HARRIS.—FULL LICENCE.—The HANDSOMEST THEATRE in EUROPE. The finest Variety Entertainment in London. Prices from 6d. EVERY EVENING at 8. At 10, A PAL O' ARCHIE'S.

LONDON PAVILION.—Grand and Unsurpassed Holiday Programme.—Dan Leno, Marie Leyton, James Fawn, Bessie Bellwood, Mons. Ganivet, Sisters Macarte, Charles Godfrey, Kate James, Little Chip, Minnie Cunningham, G. W. Kenway, Florrie Gallimore, Tom Leamore, Jennie Valmore, Charles Bignell, Nellie Navette, Tiny Websters, Evans and Luzmore, Selbini Troupe, Flo Hastings, Ada Lundberg, Arthur Rigby, Brothers Horn.—EVERY EVENING. Doors open at 7.30. Admission from 1s.—Manager, Mr. EDWARD SWANBOROUGH.

TIVOLI, Strand, London.—Cool and Well Ventilated.—Open EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, and SATURDAY MATINÉE, at 2.30, with a STAR PROGRAMME, embracing every Artiste of note now in London.—Manager, Mr. VERNON DOWSETT.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker-street Station, in connection with all railways. Through bookings at all Metropolitan stations.—Magnificent Group containing Portraits of H.R.H. the Duke of YORK, H.S.H. the Duchess of YORK. Royal Tiger Hunt, H.R.H. the Prince of Wales in the howdah; Juno, the famous war elephant, charging a tiger. Political Celebrities, Cabinet Ministers past and present. Grand Scenes and Tableaux. Music all day. Refreshment Bars, &c. Chamber of Horrors, Portrait Models of Thomas Neill, Frederick Deeming, Mrs. Pearcey, &c. Admission, 1s.; Children under twelve, 6d. Chamber of Horrors, 6d. Open from 10 to 10.

NIAGARA FALLS in WINTER.
Finest Sight and Coolest Place in London.
NIAGARA HALLS, St. James's Park Station.
DAILY, 10 to 10 p.m. Admission 1s. Children 6d.
Tickets, including admission, all Dist. and Met. Ry. Stations.

EARL'S COURT EXHIBITION
OF
GARDENING AND FORESTRY.
THE GARDEN OF LONDON.
OPEN DAILY, 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.
ALL ROADS LEAD TO EARL'S COURT.
PERFORMANCES DAILY by the LEADING MILITARY BANDS, the EXHIBITION BAND, GRAND ORGAN, STRING BAND.
ILLUMINATIONS.
Tens of Thousands of Electric, Gas, and Vauxhall Lights, arranged with regard to colour.
FERNERIES, FOUNTAINS, WATERFALLS.
ADMISSION ONE SHILLING. SEASON TICKETS (Half Price), 10s. 6d., available till End of Season, admitting to the Main Building, Exhibition of Gardening and Forestry, Floral Tent, Central and Western Gardens, and to one of 2,000 Free Seats at Captain Boyton's World's Water Show.

CAPTAIN BOYTON'S WORLD'S WATER SHOW,
EARL'S COURT.
PHENOMENAL SUCCESS.
ENORMOUS HOLIDAY PROGRAMME.
TWO PERFORMANCES DAILY at 3.30 and 8.30.
RAIN OR SHINE.
ADMISSION to GRAND STAND 6d. to 5s., and
2,000 FREE SEATS. 2,000 FREE SEATS.

LIQUEUR OF THE GRAND CHARTREUSE.
This most excellent Liqueur, the great preventive of Indigestion, and almost certain remedy for sea-sickness, can now be had of all Wine Merchants, and at prices much lower than formerly.
Sole Consignee, W. DOYLE, 35, Crutched Friars, London, E.C.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.
(TO BE OBTAINED IN TOWN OR COUNTRY.)

I.
By Mrs. Robert Jocelyn.—FOR ONE SEASON ONLY. 3 vols.

II.
By Mrs. Robert Jocelyn.—THE CRITON HUNT MYSTERY. In picture boards, 2s.

III.
By B. L. Farjeon.—THE MARCH OF FATE. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

IV.
By Helen Mathers.—WHAT THE GLASS TOLD. In paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

F. V. WHITE & CO., 14, Bedford-street, Strand, W.C.

"TRUTH" HOTEL LIST.

BATH.—LANSDOWN GROVE HOTEL.—Desirable residence, in beautifully wooded grounds, 600 feet above sea level, facing south, and protected from north and east. Air dry and bracing. Assembly and Pump Rooms within easy distance. Omnibus free to and from Hot Mineral Baths. Billiards, Tennis Lawn.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HOTEL MONT DORE.—"The finest Hotel on the South Coast."—L. & S. W. Railway Guide. Adjoining the hotel is a large Winter Garden, containing a covered tennis court, lounge, and a unique Bath Establishment, comprising Turkish, sea-water, pine, and other Baths. For tariff and full particulars, address THE MANAGER.

BOURNEMOUTH.—NEWLYN'S ROYAL EXETER HOTEL. In a beautifully sheltered position and its own private grounds. Only 100 yards from the lovely Pavilion Gardens, and two minutes from the Pier. Accommodation, appointments, and views unsurpassed. Excellent cuisine. Table d'hôte at 7 p.m. Omnibus at East Station.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HÔTEL MÉTROPOLE.—On the East Cliff, facing the sea, three minutes from East Station. The largest and most magnificent Hotel in Bournemouth. Now open to receive visitors. Inclusive terms from 10s. 6d. per day.
GEORGE ALEXANDER, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.
Splendid position facing the sea.
BOARDING TERMS
from 10s. 6d. per day.
According to the position of rooms selected.

BUXTON.—The PEAK THERMAL ESTABLISHMENT. A High-class Hydropathic Hotel. Mineral water and other baths. Resident physician. Electric light. Passenger lift. Magnificent public rooms. Excellent cuisine. Table d'hôte 7 p.m., separate tables. Terms moderate.—Telegrams, "Thermal, Buxton."

CALLANDER & TROSSACHS HYDROPATHIC.—Splendid Drives. Good Fishing. Lawn Tennis. Golf.
Terms from £2 12s. 6d. per week.
Apply to the MANAGER.

CHESTER.—QUEEN RAILWAY HOTEL, connected with the General Station by covered way. Porters in scarlet livery on the platforms attending trains day and night. Billiards. Lifts to all floors. Telegraph office in the Hotel. Telegraphic address, "Queen, Chester." Telephone, No. 27, Chester Exchange. H. T. GOULD, Manager.

EDINBURGH.—CLARENDON HOTEL.—The finest site in Princes-street, opposite the Castle. Perfect sanitation. Table d'hôte, separate tables. English management. "The most economical first-class Hotel in Scotland." Strongly recommended. Boarding terms. Apply for tariff.

FOLKESTONE.—BATES' HOTEL, West Cliff Gardens, and LONGFORD PRIVATE HOTEL, The Leas. Oldest established and most select Family Hotels in Folkestone. Reduced terms during Winter and Spring months. Pension (new Coffee-room) at Bates' Hotel.—G. L. HART, Proprietor. Sanitation Certified.

FOLKESTONE.—THE LEAS HOTEL, situated in private grounds, adjoining fashionable promenade. Sea views. Redecorated and newly-furnished throughout. Passengers' lift. Certified sanitation. Excellent cuisine. Moderate tariff.

FOLKESTONE.—ROYAL PAVILION HOTEL, facing Sea. 200 Apartments. Near landing-stage for Continent. Large winter garden. Table d'hote at 7 p.m.
G. SPURGEN, Proprietor.

GAIRLOCH HOTEL, LOCH MAREE, ROSS-SHIRE.—This magnificent hotel is situated amidst the finest Highland scenery in the West coast of Scotland. Accommodation for over 200. Good Fishing. Large posting establishment. Swift steamer from Oban every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

GRAND CANARY.—THE METROPOLE.
Newest and best Hotel.
Delightful position, fronting the sea.
Terms most moderate.

LONDON.—QUEEN'S-GATE MANSIONS, South Kensington, S.W. (close to Hyde Park, Albert Hall, and Imperial Institute), with all the advantages of a first-class residential hotel; public dining, drawing, billiard, and smoking rooms; hydraulic lift to every floor; electric light throughout.—Tariff on application to MANAGER.

LONDON.—The COVENT GARDEN HOTEL, Covent-garden.—Most central FAMILY HOTEL, within five minutes' of Law Courts and Somerset House. Hydraulic lift. Quiet rooms. Electric light. Table d'hôte, 6.0 to 8.30 (open to non-residents). Moderate charges. Night porter. Telegrams, "Replete, London." Telephone 780.—M. A. S. BROWNE, Proprietor.

MALVERN.—The Most Charming Luft-Kuhr Ort in England. THE IMPERIAL HOTEL offers every modern comfort, is surrounded by its own grounds, and commands splendid views. Brine (Droitwich) Baths now open for the season.—For tariff, apply to the Lessee and Manager, F. MOERSCHEL.

MATLOCK BATH.—ROYAL HOTEL.—Hydropathic Baths of every description. Medical Man. Healthful situation; extensive grounds, greatly admired. Large swimming bath. Billiards. Dairy farm. Splendid fishing.—Also NEW BATH HOTEL, with extensive grounds, fishing, &c. &c. Terms very moderate. 'Bus meets all trains.—T. TYACK, Proprietor.

NEWQUAY, Cornwall, The Biarritz of England.—ATLANTIC HOTEL, "the finest Hotel in the county." Splendidly situated. Full view of the Atlantic from Trevose Head to St. Ives. Ocean view from every window. Beaches, caverns, and cliff scenery unrivalled. Bracing climate. Bathing, yachting, fishing. Delightful excursions. Magnificent rooms. Strictly moderate charges.

NORWOOD (UPPER).—The QUEEN'S HOTEL, near the Crystal Palace. Specially adapted Suites of Apartments for families and permanent residents. Winter boarding. Terms from Three Guineas. A limited number of single rooms at 2½ guineas.

PORTRUSH (Giant's Causeway), co. Antrim.—NORTHERN COUNTIES HOTEL. Facing the Atlantic. Bracing air, magnificent scenery; tennis; Golf links, the finest in Ireland; surf and deep sea bathing, sea-water baths. Table d'hôte dinner, from 6 to 8 p.m. French cuisine. Charges very moderate. The HOTEL is UNDER RAILWAY MANAGEMENT.

SALISBURY.—The WHITE HART FAMILY HOTEL, nearly opposite the Cathedral. The largest and principal Hotel in the City. Table d'hôte (two hours each meal) at separate tables daily. Carriages for Stonehenge and other places of interest in the neighbourhood at fixed inclusive charges. Tariff on application to H. T. BOWES, Manager.

ST. LEONARD'S-ON-SEA.—The ALEXANDRA HOTEL, Eversfield-place, due south, facing the sea. Hydraulic lift to all floors. Billiard-room. Conservatory. Electric light in all public rooms. Table d'hote at separate tables, at 7.—Under the Management of Mr. and Mrs. PERCY BEER (Late of Bailey's Hotels, London).

SEA VIEW.—ISLE OF WIGHT, PIER HOTEL. The most modern and best appointed hotel in the island. All public rooms, private sitting-rooms, and greater number of bed-rooms face the sea and pier. Splendid bathing and boating. Royal I.W. Golf Links, ten minutes' walk.
G. ROWLAND ROBERTS, Proprietor.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WELLINGTON HOTEL, Mount Ephraim. Under the distinguished patronage of his Grace the late Duke of Wellington, K.G., the leading nobility and gentry, &c. 422 ft. above sea level, south aspect; elegantly furnished; piano in every sitting-room. Cuisine English and French; Table d'hote, large Dairy Farm.—BRABY, Proprietor.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—ROYAL KENTISH HOTEL.—Largest, best appointed, facing the Common, close to Chalybeate Spring and Parade. Table d'hôte (separate tables). Inclusive terms, 12s. per day. Tariff of MANAGER.

All applications for spaces in this List should be made to the ADVERTISEMENT MANAGER,
"TRUTH" BUILDINGS, CARTERET STREET,
QUEEN ANNE'S GATE, S.W.

BRISTOL HOTEL,

Burlington Gardens, London, W.

(Between Bond-street and Regent-street, and close to Piccadilly).
Lighted by Electricity throughout. New Hydraulic Lift to all floors.

THE CHOICEST OF WINES. FRENCH CUISINE OF HIGHEST CHARACTER.

SEPARATE ENTRANCE TO RESTAURANT IN CORK STREET, OPEN TO NON-RESIDENTS.

Luncheons at fixed price of 4s.; Dinners at 10s. 6d. or à la carte.

Private Rooms for Parties of Four or more.
NO SUPPERS.
TELEPHONE No. 3,507.

LANGHAM HOTEL,

PORTLAND-PLACE, LONDON, W.

Situated in the most fashionable, convenient, and healthy locality. Artesian Well Water. Electric Light throughout. Moderate Tariff.
Table d'Hote 6 to 9.
Under the Management of WALTER GORDEN.

THE MANAGER, IMPERIAL HOTEL, ABERDEEN (patronised by the Royal Family), begs to call the attention of old customers and intending visitors to the fact that it is through no fault of his that their Porter or Books is not visible on the arrival of the trains, but because the Palace or Station Hotel Company have monopolised the right to have their porters within the barriers at the station to the exclusion of those of the other hotels in town.

THE GROSVENOR HOTEL

BELGRAVIA, LONDON, S.W.

Well known for Wedding Breakfasts and Dinner Parties.

TABLE D'HÔTE OPEN TO NON-RESIDENTS.
Covered Communication to three Railway Stations.
The only Terminus Hotel of the Brighton Railway Company in London.
Electric Light throughout.

THE

BURLINGTON RESTAURANT,

169, Regent Street, W.

The most recherché 5s. Diner Parisien in London.

Luncheons and Dinners à la carte.

ST. JAMES'S PARK, S.W.

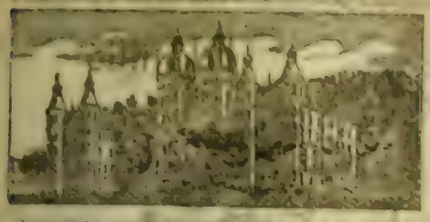
QUEEN ANNE'S MANSIONS.

(QUEEN ANNE'S GATE, OPPOSITE ST. JAMES'S PARK STATION).

Finest view. Most central position. Near Houses of Parliament, Victoria, and Charing Cross. Suites of Rooms, Furnished or Unfurnished, having all comforts and privacy of home, at moderate outlay compared with expense of keeping house. All servants supplied and catering done by the Management. Rents include attendance, electric light, lifts, hot and cold water, &c.
Address, MANAGER.

ILFRACOMBE.—The RUNNACLEAVE Private HOTEL. 120 beautifully-appointed rooms. Recreation-hall, to seat 500, with fitted stage; carriage, yacht, tennis, photographic dark room, billiards, and in-door skating rink, free of charge until August. Chef de cuisine. Moderate tariff.

HOTELS, &c.



Peebles Hydropathic.

Largest & Finest Hydropathic in Scotland.

Beautifully situated on the River Tweed, 20 miles south of Edinburgh. Over [illegible] Grounds, extending to [illegible] Golf Course. Large Gymnasium. Bedrooms are very large and airy. Magnificent Country. Splendid drives. Terms from £3 3s. per week.—For rooms apply to the MANAGER.

SOUTHPORT. PALACE HOTEL. — Summer Season. Charming Seaside Family Resort. Extensive grounds. Electric light. Terms. Golf links. Splendid baths.

BUXTON, DERBYSHIRE.

THE PALACE HOTEL.

This large and elegantly appointed high-class Hotel contains upwards of 200 rooms. The hotel occupies the finest position in Buxton, and is surrounded by its own grounds of six acres. Ground-floor sitting rooms and bed-rooms. Magnificent public rooms. American elevator. Table d'hôte at separate tables.

A. CROSS, Manager.

OATLANDS PARK HOTEL, Walton-on-Thames (17 miles from London, Waterloo Station), formerly the favourite residence of H.R.H. the late Duke of York, charmingly situated in its own extensive picturesque grounds: family suites, large airy bedrooms, home comforts, table d'hôte, lawn-tennis. Board terms, from 12s. per day. Stabling. Postal address, Weybridge.

ALBANY HOTEL (ROBERTSON TERRACE), HASTINGS.

Finest position on the whole sea front. Enlarged and superbly furnished. Only H. & C. with Electric Light in every room. Passenger Lift. Dining, Drawing, Reading, Writing, Smoking, and Billiard Rooms. Tab. d'Hote 7 p.m. Moderate Tariff. No charge for attendance.

C. A. SCHWABE, Manager.

GRAND HOTEL, JERSEY.

LARGEST AND BEST APPOINTED HOTEL IN CHANNEL ISLES, AND IN THE FINEST SITUATION IN JERSEY.

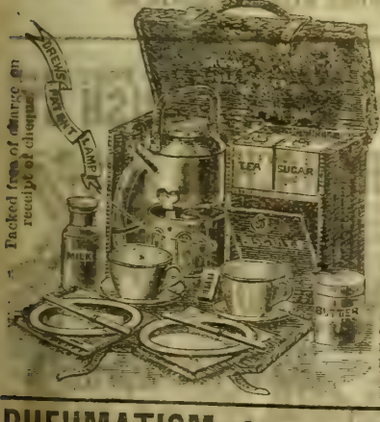
Directly facing the Channel. Best Sands and Safest Sea Bathing opposite the Hotel. Magnificent Public Rooms. Swimming Bath. Tennis Courts, &c. TABLE D'HOTE DINNER at 7 p.m. (separate tables) "best in Jersey." Terms Moderate (inclusive or à la carte).

Telegrams—"Grand, Jersey." SYDNEY ROGERS, Manager & Secretary.

ILFRACOMBE. — ILFRACOMBE HOTEL. — Unrivalled sea frontage and open surroundings. Seven lawn-tennis courts. Large swimming bath. New lounge hall. 250 rooms.—Tariff of MANAGER.

DREW & SONS, PICCADILLY CIRCUS, LONDON, W.

PATENT "EN ROUTE" TEA BASKET



Two-person size, complete, as sketch, with Silver Plated Kettle Regd. Spring Screw Cap, £3. 17s. 6d., or all fittings Silver Plated, £4. 10s.

Four-person size, Plain Metal £4. 14s., in all Silver Plated, £6. 10s.

N.B.—Either of these "En Routes" fitted with Drews' Patent Railway Attachment, lid and tall tray. Two-person size, 7/6; Four-person size, 10/6 extra to above prices.

NOTE.—All "En Routes" are now fitted with Drews' new patent sponge-packed lamp, with entirely new system of burner, specially adapted for travelling purposes, being superior in every way to the old lamp and boiling kettle more quickly. These lamps fit all Drews' baskets and can be had separately. Polished Brass, 5/-; Polished Nickel, 7/6.

RHEUMATISM, &c., CURED BY MELANOCA,

THE GREAT ENGLISH OIL OF PEPPERMINT CURE,

AFTER EVERY REMEDY HAS FAILED.

See this paper, July 27th, page 174, for its wonderful effects.

Cures Headache, Neuralgia, &c., immediately applied. First application relieves the very worst cases of Rheumatism, Sciatica, Lumbago, &c., and never fails to effect a permanent cure in a few days.

Send your address for full particulars, post-free, from THE MELANOCA COMPANY, MITCHAM. Hundreds of Testimonials.—Quote No. 25.

MILD INDIAN CIGARS. OBTAINABLE EVERYWHERE.

BAHADUR

ALDRIDGE'S.

40

"THE AGE" OXFORD COACH HORSES

(The property of Messrs. W. J. Gurney & Son)

Will be SOLD without Reserve, next Wednesday, August 23.

Catalogue forwarded

W. & S. FREEMAN.

HYDE PARK AND PORTMAN ESTATES. — Messrs. [illegible] have [illegible] the Select Furnished and Unfurnished Residences TO BE LET and SOLD, may be inspected daily at the Auction and Estate Offices, Addison House, Hyde Park Square (the corner of Albion Street), W.

HOMBURG. — VILLA QUELLENHOF, 91, Kaiser Friedrich Promenade, opposite the Park, and close to the Spring and new Bath House. With or without board. Terms moderate. Good English reference. English spoken. Address, A. SALERERI, Proprietor.

EDINBURGH SCHOOL of COOKERY and DOMESTIC ECONOMY, LIMITED, 3, Atholl Crescent. Nineteenth Session begins SEPTEMBER 4th. Single lessons and courses. Teachers trained in Cookery, Laundry Work, Sewing, and Dressmaking. Special training for young ladies for Housewife's Diploma. Boarders received. Teachers sent to County Council and other Classes. See Prospectus.

TREATMENT OF INEBRIETY.

Dalrymple Home,

Rickmansworth, Herts.

For Gentlemen under the Act and Privately.

TERMS—2 TO 5 GUINEAS.

Apply to—R. WELSH BRANTHWAITE,

Medical Superintendent.

SCOTTADIE

115 & 115a REGENT STREET

LONDON W.

THE ROYAL SCOTCH WAREHOUSE

For
Coats & Ulsters.
Travelling Cloaks.
Carriage Rugs.
Travelling Wraps.
Shawls. Mauds.
Shetland Shawls.
Shooting Stockings.
Scotch Tweeds & Homespuns for Suits & Gowns.

Telegraphic Address—Scott Adie, London.

AUSTRALIA and NEW ZEALAND. — NEW FAST PASSENGER ROUTE, viâ Vancouver, by fastest Atlantic steamers (any line) to Montreal or New York; thence viâ Canadian Pacific Railway, taking in the grand scenery of the Rockies, only actual trans-continental line running through trains under one management Atlantic to Pacific. Many optional routes, including Niagara and Chicago. Break of journey allowed.

New steamships, 5,000 tons each, of New Zealand and Australasian S.s. Co., largest, fastest, and finest running from American Continent to Australasia, leave Vancouver about as follows:—

S.s. WARRIMOO ..... September 16th,

S.s. MIOWERA ..... October 16th,

monthly thereafter, calling Honolulu, Brisbane, and Sydney. Electric light, good cuisine, exceptionally large cabins.

For pamphlets and berths apply to PASSENGER DEPT., CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY, 67 and 68, KING WILLIAM STREET, LONDON, E.C.; 7, James-street, Liverpool; 103, Market-street, Manchester; 67, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow; or to JAMES HUDDART, 22, Billiter-street, E.C.

NORWEGIAN YACHTING CRUISES

(FORTNIGHTLY) FROM NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.

Shortest route to Norway. Only one night at sea.

By the ALBION STEAMSHIP CO.'S (Ltd.) Fast and Splendidly-fitted Yachting Steamer

"MIDNIGHT SUN" (Captain NIVISON, R.N.R.), 3,020 tons, 2,560 horse-power.

Fares from 12 Guineas, including a sumptuous table.

NEXT SAILINGS—JUNE 17; JULY 1, 15, 29; AUGUST 12, 26; SEPTEMBER 9.

All applications for Berths to be made to the Yachting Steamer "MIDNIGHT SUN" Passenger Office, 4, Lombard-street (Tel. Add., Tourist), Newcastle-on-Tyne. Write for Itineraries.

THE ROYAL WEDDING PERFUME.

H.R.H. The Duchess of York has graciously accepted a supply of "ATKINSON'S WHITE ROSE," describing it as a "Charming Scent."

It is the "sweetest of sweet odours." Atkinson's is the only genuine.

Of all Chemists, Perfumers, and Dealers, and of the Manufacturers, 24, Old Bond Street, London.

SPÉCIALITÉ:—THICK LEGS & THIN FEET.

A Want Long Felt, met at Last.

GOLF, SHOOTING, and CYCLING

STOCKINGS!

HOMEKNIT.
Free from all Seams.

Made of pure long staple Scotch Wool, full length, broad ribs, double heels and toes, most comfortable in wear, guaranteed to give satisfaction.

Colours: Navy Blue, Black, Light and Dark Grey, Heathers, and Fancy Mixtures.

ALL SIZES—1/9, 2/3, 3/6.

Spécialité:
THICK LEGS and THIN FEET, 2/6, 3/6.

THE HIGHLAND CHECK,
(As Illustration.)
Hand-Knitted, for Cycling, Golf, or Shooting, 3/6 & 4/6
Thick legs and thin feet 5/6
Postage, 3d. per pair; 2 pairs, 4½d.

Terms: Strictly Cash with Order

A. W. GAMAGE,
126, 127, 128, 129, HOLBORN, E.C.

"The Cup of the Prince, the Peer, and the Peasant."
"The most popular and healthful Beverage of the Century."

By Her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent.

"MERSANO"

A SPARKLING NON-ALCOHOLIC WINE.

Recommended by all the leading medical faculty as the only perfect and health preserving table drink. The most welcome friend in every sick room, and indispensable on every table.

CERTIFICATE OF HONOUR and GOLD MEDAL have been awarded for the special excellence of "Mersano."

Wholesale from Local Agents in all parts of the Kingdom. Any difficulty with local supply, communicate with the Patentees:—

Forbes, Maxwell, & Co., Ltd., Aberdeen.

SAMPLE BOTTLE POST FREE NINE STAMPS

6d. per Bottle.

To be had Everywhere.

ASK FOR DR. RIDGE'S

The Perfect Food for Children and Invalids.

Patent Cooked FOOD.

CAUTION. All the Genuine Packets and Canisters are enclosed in White Wrappers, the words DR. RIDGE'S PATENT COOKED FOOD are printed boldly thereon, so that none need be deceived or mistaken.

PREPARED AT THE ROYAL FOOD MILLS, LONDON, AND SOLD RETAIL BY ALL LEADING CHEMISTS AND GROCERS THROUGHOUT THE KINGDOM.

FARADAYS' FITTINGS

Electric Light Works

3 BERNERS ST. W

PUREST IN ENGLAND.

BOURNE TABLE WATERS

SODA, SELTZER, LITHIA, POTASH, LEMONADE, GINGER ALE, ETC.

Supplied in 6 Dozen Cases Carriage Paid by

Analysis, &c., on Application.

R. M. MILLS & CO., BOURNE, LINCOLNSHIRE.

West-End Agent, D. WHEATLEY, 16A, North Audley-st., W. City Agents, ALEX. D. RAE & CO. (late Hardy & Co.), Chemists, 23, Fenchurch-street, and 6, Railway-place, E.C.;
And of all CHEMISTS, WINE MERCHANTS, &c.

CARTER 6A, NEW CAVENDISH ST.

ILLUSTRATED PRICE LIST POST FREE.

PORTLAND PLACE, LONDON, W.

LITERARY MACHINE

For holding lamp, meals, &c. in any position over an easy chair, bed or sofa. Deliciously luxurious. A most useful gift. PRICES from £1.1s.

INVALID COMFORTS

Walking Machine for the lame

Adjustable Couches and Beds, £2. Exercising Chairs £5. 5s. Reclining Boards £1.1s. Commodes £1. Leg Rests 10s. 6d.

Carrying Chairs, £1. Bed Tables 7s. 6d. Crutches 10s. 6d. Folding Couch Chairs 10s. Bed Rests 10s.

Easy Chairs £2. 10s. Commode Chairs £2. 10s.

BATH CHAIRS

From £1. 5s.

SELF-PROPELLING CHAIRS

£2. 2s.

Invalid Carriages

Perambulators

Rubber Tyres

From £1. 10s.

JOHN CARTER, 6a, New Cavendish St., Portland Place, London, W.

Telegrams—BATH CHAIR, LONDON. ILLUSTRATED PRICE LISTS POST FREE.

"JAP" CARPETS

We have just received a shipment of Carpets and Rugs of Japanese Manufacture from our Agents in Hiogo, and as we are able to sell them at a very low price, we offer them to our Customers in preference to submitting them to the Wholesale Trade. They are novel and artistic in design and colouring, and of thick pile.

CARPETS.

8 feet long	by 6 feet wide	... ...	28/- each.
10 „	9 „	... ...	50/- „
12 „	9 „	... ...	63/- „

RUGS.

3 feet long	by 1 ft. 6 in. wide	...	2 6 each.
4 „	2 feet wide	... ...	5/- „
6 „	3 „	... ...	8/6 „

A FEW MIRZAPORE CARPETS, 9 ft. by 6 ft. ... 27/6 each.
KURD RUGS, 5 ft. by 3 ft. ... 5/9 „
BANGALORE RUGS, 6 ft. by 3ft. ... 5/- each
KURD CARPETS, 9 ft. by 4 ft. 6 in. ... 21/- „

Catalogues of all the best Floor Coverings free.

TRELOAR & SONS

LUDGATE HILL, LONDON, E.C.

TO CONNOISSEURS.

ST. EMILION - - - - CLARET - - - - 18/- per dozen
MEDOC - - - - - CLARET - - - - 15/6 per dozen
ST. GEORGE'S - - - CLARET - - - - 13/- per dozen
Price List of other CHATEAU CLARETS, from 21/- to 74/- per dozen posted on application. LE MONNIER & CO., JERSEY.
CARRIAGE AND DUTY PAID.

SURPLICE SHIRT.

MADE TO MEASURE.
MADE ON THE PREMISES.
GENTLEMEN'S Complete OUTFITTERS.

PRICE LISTS ON APPLICATION.

SAMPSON & Co.
268, 270, OXFORD STREET
LONDON, W.

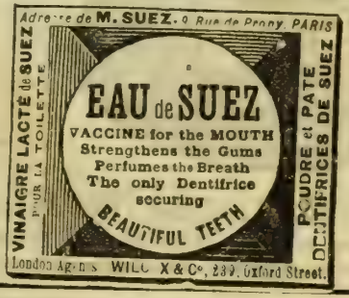
PATRONISED BY H.I.M. THE EMPRESS OF GERMANY.

THE NOTED
"IPSWICH" POTTED MEATS.

Nothing can be better for the Yachting, Fishing, or Picnic Basket.

Sole Maker—R. SEAGER, IPSWICH.

Ask your Grocer.



Cravenette

Is the name given to all goods Waterproofed by the Cravenette Co., Ltd.

It is no malodorous air-tight material like rubber-coated Cloths, giving one a Turkish bath with one's own vapours. Nor is it a fabric covered with a thin fragile scale of water-repelling chemicals which crack and crumble with wear, giving the cloth a dusty look, and destroying its waterproofing qualities.

Cravenette Waterproofed Coatings, Cloakings, Silks, and all Dress Fabrics are unlike any Waterproof Cloths ever before placed on the market. They are indistinguishable in appearance or odour from the same goods not waterproofed.

They are perfectly porous and consequently hygienic.

They never change in appearance nor in rain-repelling quality.

They may be had in all the newest fabrics both in heavy and light weights. The latter serve also as Dust Protectors, and are cool and indispensable for summer wear.

Always see to it that goods purchased for Cravenette are so stamped. Absence of the stamp may be taken as evidence that the goods are not genuine.

THE CRAVENETTE CO., LIMITED, BRADFORD.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER

Prevents the Hair from falling off.
Restores Grey or White Hair to its ORIGINAL COLOUR.
Being delicately perfumed it leaves no unpleasant odour.
IS NOT a dye, and therefore does not stain the skin or even white linen.
Should be in every house where a HAIR RENEWER is needed.
Ask your Chemist or Hairdresser for

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

Price 3s. 6d. per large Bottle.

Prepared only by the

ANGLO-AMERICAN DRUG COMPANY, Ltd.,

33, FARRINGDON ROAD, LONDON, E.C.

FLORILINE

FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH.

IS THE BEST LIQUID DENTIFRICE IN THE WORLD.

Prevents the Decay of Teeth.
Renders the Teeth Pearly White.
Is perfectly Harmless and Delicious to the Taste.

Of all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the World. 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE TOOTH POWDER.

Put up in Glass Jars, price 1s.

The ONLY Antiseptic Saline.

SALT REGAL

FOR ALL

Bilious and Nervous Disorders,

SUCH AS

Sick Headache, Constipation,
Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion,
Disordered Liver.

At all Chemists throughout the world, in bottles, 1/6 and 2/9.

Office: 49, ISLINGTON, LIVERPOOL.

WHAT IS BEAUTY?

Fresh, Clear, Firm Complexions, and a Beautiful Figure.

ANNA RUPPERT, the Eminent Lecturess, under Royal patronage, can give you all that is required to make you an envied woman. Try RUPPERT'S SKIN TONIC. Harmless, effective, and permanent. Does not require continued use; refreshes and makes any complexion firm and girlish. Nothing magic, but a perfect tonic, used locally.

ARTISTIC MANICURING.—Have your hands and finger nails made beautiful, 4s. 6d.

BEST CHIROPODIST in London; reasonable.

SPECIAL LONG-WAISTED CORSET (perfection), 12s. 6d.

PUREST COMPLEXION SOAP in the world, 1s. (three for 2s. 6d).

BEAUTIFUL Illustrated BOOK, "NATURAL BEAUTY," contains much valuable information. Sent to any address, 4d. in stamps. All advice upon the subject of Face, Hair, Hands, Feet, and Figure given freely. No charge. Consultation with Mrs. RUPPERT daily between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. All clients' names sacred. All letters in perfect confidence. Special treatment for special cases. Don't suffer with red faces, acne, eczema, oily skins, &c. Write at once, for SKIN TONIC has been subjected to the best doctors in England and pronounced harmless and beneficial. 10s. 6d. per bottle; three bottles (usually necessary), 25s. Call or address, the Complexion Specialist,

ANNA RUPPERT,
89, Regent Street, London, W.

Also at: 124, Western-road, BRIGHTON; 3a, Shandwick-place, EDINBURGH; 74, Grafton-street, DUBLIN; 8, King-st., MANCHESTER; Clarence Chambers, Corporation-street, BIRMINGHAM; 66, Marland-place, SOUTHAMPTON; 17, Rue de la Paix, PARIS; BERLIN, VIENNA, MADRID, BARCELONA, CALCUTTA, SYDNEY, &c.

CARPET CLEANING.

CARPETS and TAPESTRIES Cleansed from dust by PURE AIR.

Impossible to damage the most delicate fabric.

Collection and Delivery free.

Send for Prices and Particulars to your Upholsterer, or

The Compressed Air Carpet & Tapestry Cleaning Co.

Brook Green, W. Office: 94, Victoria-st., Westminster.

N.B.—The Trade and Public are invited to visit our Works, and convince themselves of the bona fides of our process.

BENGER'S FOOD.

For Infants, Children, and Invalids.

"Humanly speaking, 'Benger's Food' entirely saved baby's life. He could digest nothing until we began the 'Benger.' He is now rosy and fattening rapidly."—Extract from Private Letter.

GOLD MEDAL AWARDED
INTERNATIONAL HEALTH EXHIBITION.

TINS, 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., 5s., and 10s., OF ALL CHEMISTS, &c.

COALS.—The Marquis of Londonderry supplies SEA-BORNE COAL from his DURHAM COLLIERIES; Londonderry Wallsend, 27s.; Pittington Wallsend, 26s.; Primrose, 25s. 6d.; Seaton Wallsend, 24s. per ton. Cash on delivery.—Seaham Wharf, Nine Elms-lane, Vauxhall.

MAPPIN & WEBB'S PATENT TABLE KNIVES.

SAMPLES & PRICES FREE.

"UNEQUALLED FOR HARD WEAR."

Only London Addresses, 158, OXFORD ST. W. and 2, QUEEN VICTORIA ST. E.C. (FACING THE MANSION HOUSE.)

MANUFACTORY—NORFOLK STREET, SHEFFIELD.

BIRKBECK BANK.—(Estab. 1851). Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane. Two and a-half per cent. interest allowed on deposits, repayable on demand. Two per cent. on current accounts, calculated on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £100.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, can be obtained, post free, on application to FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

MEMBERS OF THE STOCK EXCHANGE are NOT ALLOWED to ADVERTISE for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than their own principals.
Brokers or Agents who advertise are not in any way connected with the Stock Exchange, or under the control of the Committee.
List of Members of the Stock Exchange who act as Stock and Share Brokers may be obtained on application to
FRANCIS LEVIEN,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.
Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

LONDON AND COUNTY ADVANCE AND DISCOUNT COMPANY, Limited.—Cash advanced from £10 to £500, without preliminary fees or deductions for interest, for short or long periods, repayable by easy instalments, at moderate rates, upon approved security. Bills Discounted. Forms free. Offices, 57 and 58, Chancery-lane, W.C.—JOHN STONE, Secretary.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT

PURELY VEGETABLE. Perfectly Harmless. Will reduce from two to five pounds per week: acts on the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into Fat. Sold by Chemists. Send stamp for pamphlet.
Botanic Medicine Co., 2, New Oxford-street, London, W.C.

TOO FAT. Dr. CORDON'S Elegant Pills cure STOUTNESS, rapidly and certainly. State height, weight, and send 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., or 11s. to DR. GORDON, 24, Hart-street, Bloomsbury, London.

ALL FAT PEOPLE

can safely Reduce Weight and cure Corpulency permanently by taking TRILENE TABLETS (Regd.) for a few weeks. They are small, agreeable, harmless, and never fail to IMPROVE both HEALTH and FIGURE without change of Diet. An English Countess writes: "Your Trilene Tablets act admirably." Send 2s. 6d. to THE TRILENE Co., Sole Proprietors,
70, FINSBURY PAVEMENT, LONDON.

THE GREAT QUESTION OF HEALTH.
WHAT TO DRINK?
PITKEATHLY TABLE WATER.

As a remedial agent in cases of sluggish liver, plethoric states of the system, chronic affections of the organs of respiration and circulation, gastric derangement and biliousness, it has been pronounced by medical men of high authority as most efficacious.
"I use the Aërated Pitkeathly largely, and value it."—Dr. MATTHEWS DUNCAN.
SOLD EVERYWHERE.
London: INGRAM & ROYLE, 52, Farringdon-st., E.C., and at Liverpool.
" WM. BEST & SONS, 22, Henrietta-street, Cavendish-square, W.
Sole Proprietors, REID & DONALD, Perth.

THE LATE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD,
SIR MORELL MACKENZIE,
OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,
MISS EMILY FAITHFUL,
THE LATE GEN. W. T. SHERMAN, and many other persons of distinction, have testified to the remarkable efficacy of Himrod's Cure for Asthma.
Established nearly a Quarter of a Century.
Prescribed by the Medical Faculty throughout the world. It is used as an Inhalation and without any after bad effects. A free Sample and detailed testimonials free by post. In tins, 4s. 3d. British Depôt—46, Holborn Viaduct, London; also of NEWBERY & SONS, BARCLAY & SONS, LYNCH & CO., J. SANGER & SONS, W. EDWARDS & SON, JOHN THOMPSON, Liverpool, and all wholesale Houses.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."
CLARKE'S
WORLD-FAMED
BLOOD MIXTURE
"CLARKE'S BLOOD MIXTURE is entirely "free from any poison "or metallic impregnation, does not contain any injurious "ingredient, and is a "good, safe, and useful "medicine."
ALFRED SWAINE TAYLOR M.D., F.R.S., Lecturer on Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology.
Warranted to cleanse the Blood from all impurities from WHATEVER cause arising. For Scrofula, Scurvy, Eczema, Skin and Blood Diseases, and Sores of all kinds, its effects are marvellous. It is the only real specific for Gout and Rheumatic Pains, for it removes the CAUSE from the blood and bones. Thousands of testimonials. In bottles, 2s. 9d. and 11s. each, of all Chemists. Sent for 33 or 132 Stamps, by the Proprietors—THE LINCOLN AND MIDLAND COUNTIES DRUG CO., LINCOLN.
BEWARE OF WORTHLESS IMITATIONS.

£20 TOBACCONISTS COMMENCING. Illd. guide, post-free, "How to open respectably £20 to £1,000." Tobacconists Outfitting Co., 186A, Euston-rd., Ldn. Mngr. H. MYERS, Est. 1866

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES TO PRIVATE INSURERS.
THE IMPERIAL INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED. FIRE. Est 1803, 1, Old Broad st., E.C., & 22, Pall Mall, S.W. Subsd. Capital, £1,200,000. Paid up, £300,000. Total funds, £1,650,000. E. COZENS SMITH, Gen. Man.

THE EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY OF THE UNITED STATES.
LONDON OFFICE: 81, CHEAPSIDE, E.C.
ASSETS OVER £21,000,000.
SURPLUS EXCEEDS £8,000,000.
This Society originated the Tontine System of Life Assurance, under which the premiums paid form a lucrative investment, and not an expense, affording provision for old age as well as immediate family provision in the event of death.
ABSOLUTE SECURITY. LOW PREMIUMS. LARGE PROFITS.
Before assuring elsewhere, send for Prospectus and Illustrative Pamphlets.
A. MUNKITTRICK, Manager for Great Britain and Ireland.

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE
63, Threadneedle-street, London, E.C.
FOUNDED 1710
THE OLDEST PURELY FIRE OFFICE IN THE WORLD.
SUM INSURED IN 1892,
£391,800,000.
(FIRE.)

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.—Holborn Bars, London.
EVERY DESCRIPTION OF LIFE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITY BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
REVERSIONS PURCHASED.
Invested Funds, £16,000,000.
The last Annual Report can be obtained on application to the Secretary.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE COMPANY, Limited,
No. 10, ST. SWITHIN'S LANE, LONDON, E.C.
General Accidents. | Personal Injuries.
Railway Accidents. | Death by Accident.
C. HARDING, Manager.

MYSORE GOLD MINING COMPANY, LIMITED.
PROVISIONAL CERTIFICATES bought and sold by THE COUPON AGENCY, LIMITED, 20, Bucklersbury, E.C.

CASH ADVANCED PRIVATELY.
UNION DEPOSIT BANK.
No. 17, KING WILLIAM ST., Charing Cross, London, W.C.
(ESTABLISHED 1867.)
ADVANCES MADE in TOWN or COUNTRY at a FEW HOURS' NOTICE, Without Public Enquiries, for Short or Long Periods,
From £30 to £5,000,
To Ladies and Gentlemen, Merchants, Farmers, Traders, or any responsible persons upon their
NOTE OF HAND ALONE.
ALL TRANSACTIONS STRICTLY PRIVATE.
Also upon security of Furniture, Stock-in-Trade, Reversions, Deeds, Leases, Life Policies, Legacies, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Farm Stock, &c., without mortgage expenses, from one to 15 years, repayable by easy instalments, or so long as the interest is paid, the capital may remain.
NO SURETIES REQUIRED.
Distance no object. No delay, and no unnecessary expenses charged.
FIRST LETTER OF APPLICATION IMMEDIATELY ATTENDED TO.
A Gentleman sent direct from the Bank to carry out all advances.
Current accounts opened in accordance with the usual practice of other London Banks.
Prospectus gratis, or post free on application. Personal visit preferred.
Interest allowed on deposits, 4½, 5, and 6 per cent.
Apply to the SECRETARY.

JOHN SHAW, STOCK & SHARE DEALER.
HEAD OFFICE:—
WARDROBE CHAMBERS, DOCTORS' COMMONS, LONDON, E.C.
BANKERS:—
CAPITAL AND COUNTIES, Ludgate-hill, Long Acre, Piccadilly, and Brighton Branches.
LONDON AND MIDLAND, Newgate-street and Tooley-street Branches.
DIRECT PRIVATE TELEGRAPH WIRE between LONDON and BRIGHTON Offices.
FULL PARTICULARS of SPECIAL ARRANGEMENTS for DEALING sent post free on application.
COVER SYSTEM.—The loss is limited, the profits are unlimited, and there is such an independence in acting that the principle must and does recommend itself to business men—indeed, it is the only method on which they deal—for speculative accounts.
£5 COMMANDS £500 STOCK.
£10 COMMANDS £1,000 STOCK.
£50 COMMANDS £5,000 STOCK.
£500 COMMANDS £50,000 STOCK, and so on in proportion.
NO OTHER LIABILITY WHATEVER.
JOHN SHAW, STOCK AND SHARE DEALER,
LONDON, BRIGHTON, MANCHESTER, AND DUBLIN.

PLAYER'S NAVY CUT.

BEAUTIFULLY COOL AND SWEET SMOKING.

Sold only in 1-Ounce Packets, and 2, 4, 8-Ounce, and 1-lb. Tins, which keep the Tobacco in fine Smoking condition.

Ask at all Tobacco Sellers, Stores, &c., and take no other.

SMOKERS ARE CAUTIONED AGAINST IMITATIONS.

The GENUINE bears the Trade Mark—"NOTTINGHAM CASTLE"—on every Packet and Tin.

PLAYER'S NAVY CUT CIGARETTES, in Packets containing 12, And Tins of 24, 50, and 100.

"NO BETTER FOOD EXISTS."

London Medical Record.

This Food, which is malted by a patented process, should be tried whereve other nourishment has not proved entirely satisfactory. It is already cooked—requiring neither boiling nor straining.

Allen & Hanbury's Infants Food

A nutriment peculiarly adapted to the digestive organs of Infants and Young Children, supplying all that is required for the formation of firm flesh and bone. Surprisingly beneficial results have attended the use of this Malted Food, which needs only to be tried to be permanently adopted.

Medical testimony and full directions accompany each tin.

Price 6d., 1s., 2s., 5s., and 10s.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

WRITE FOR THE NEW PATTERNS.

HY. PEASE & CO.'S SUCCESSORS

PURE

WOOL SERGES

FOR SEASIDE AND AUTUMN WEAR.

In Light Weighted Yarns for Ladies' Yachting Costumes, Seaside and Travelling Dresses. Gentlemen's Boating and Tourist Suits. Stouter Yarns for Boys' and Girls' Rough Wear.

The latest productions in Tweeds, Serges, and Homespuns, Diagonals, Bengalines, Whipcords, Hop Sack Cloths and Habit Cloths, Shot Effects in Fancy Worsted Serges, and entirely New Weavings of the World-renowned Darlington Gold Medal Merinos, Cashmeres, and Cross-warp Serges.

Any article not approved exchanged within seven days. Carriage Paid on all orders to any railway station in Great Britain, and to Dublin, Belfast, Limerick, Cork, and Waterford.

Henry Pease & Co.'s Succrs.

The Mills, DARLINGTON.

PEARS

·ich· dien·

SOAP MAKERS

BY

Special Appointment

To HER MAJESTY

The Queen

and HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS The

Prince of Wales.

OUR PUZZLES.

RULES.

1. The sum of £2 2s. will be given every week for the best ENIGRAM, CONUNDRUM, LIPOGRAM, BOUTS RIMÉS, or whatever the announced subject of the competition for the week may be.

2. The Puzzle Editor reserves the right, however, of dividing the above sum between two or more competitors, or of withholding the prize, should exceptional circumstances render such a course desirable.

3. The decision and award of the Puzzle Editor must be considered final and irrevocable, and, for obvious reasons, no appeal from his critical judgments can be entertained.

4. In every instance the prize will be given in money, subject to no condition whatever, except the publication of the winner's real name and address in this journal.

5. Competitors will be allowed eleven days for the composition and despatch of their efforts; but all such communications must, at the latest, be received at the TRUTH OFFICE by the first post on the morning of the second Monday succeeding the publication of the subject for competition.

6. Not more than one Prize will be given a Quarter to the same competitor.

7. ALL NEW CONTRIBUTORS ARE REQUIRED TO FORWARD WITH THEIR FIRST ANSWERS THEIR REAL NAMES AND ADDRESSES FOR REGISTRATION; such names and addresses will not be published except in the case of Prize-winners.

8. The nom-de-plume chosen by competitors should not exceed 12, and must under no circumstances consist of more than 14, letters.

9. COMPETITORS MUST ON NO ACCOUNT CHANGE THE NOMS-DE PLUME THEY HAVE ONCE ASSUMED.

10. On the announcement of the Prize-winner's nom-de-plume, the successful competitor must write and make formal application for the Prize, stating the address to which the cheque must be sent. Any competitor failing to do so within three months of winning the Prize will forfeit all claim to the same.

11. No communications can be received on post-cards, by telegraph, or by hand. They must all be sent by the time named above. All post letters addressed—

PUZZLE EDITOR OF "TRUTH," CARTERET-STREET, QUEEN ANNE'S-GATE, S.W.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 754.—SHAKESPEARE ON "LAWN TENNIS."

ADA (real name and address will be given next week)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	£0	14	0
NEWNHAM	,,	,,	,,	...	...	...	...	...	0	14	0
CANI	,,	,,	,,	...	...	...	...	...	0	14	0

 Through an oversight, I made an erroneous announcement last week. I find that Ada's quotation was also sent by Newnham and Cani, so that this Prize will have to be divided into three equal parts.—THE P. E.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 755.—COOLING STANZAS.

NETHERBY (real name and address will be given next week)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	£1	1	0
SEA DEW	,,	,,	,,	...	...	...	...	...	1	1	0

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 756.

It has been decided to give the prize for this competition to AWFUL WARRIOR, whose verses were published in TRUTH for August 10. I would at the same time mention for commendation the verses sent by Eboracum, X. Q. Q., Harpiot, Netherby, Sartor, Moe, Offa, Plumepierre, Kathleen, Excelsior, Tanchion, Almaviva, and Vicar.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 760.

A frequent contributor to the Puzzle Pages has written to me the following letter:—"Dear Mr. Puzzle Editor,—I want your advice. I have a fortnight's holiday awaiting me, and I calculate that I must content myself with spending £20 at most during the trip that I hope to make. Now what I want to know is, how I can turn my time and my money to the best account in acquiring relaxation and health? It may be well to add that I am young (26), fairly energetic, a resident in London, and have seen very little of my own country, and nothing at all of the Continent. Will you, then, be kind enough to give me your counsel on this important matter? and oblige.—Yours faithfully,

"A FREQUENT COMPETITOR."

Let me say at once that I do not feel competent to advise my correspondent in so important a subject. But it has struck me that by appealing to the general body of TRUTH competitors information may be gained which will prove useful, not only to "A Frequent Competitor," but to many other readers of this page. It is proposed, therefore, to offer the usual Prize of Two Guineas for what shall be considered

THE BEST ANSWER TO THE QUESTION PROPOUNDED BY THE CORRESPONDENT WHOSE LETTER IS PRINTED ABOVE; THAT IS TO SAY, IN WHAT WAY CAN A FORTNIGHT AND £20 BE SPENT TO THE BEST ADVANTAGE UNDER THE CIRCUMSTANCES NAMED?

All answers, which must be made as brief and practical as possible, must reach me by the morning of Monday, August 28 next, at the latest.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

PLUMEPIERRE.—I regret the misprint. "Quatet," in the first line of your stanza, should, of course, have read "quatit."

M. M. W.—Very many thanks.

COLLERS.—No such puzzle has been given in TRUTH.

LISTER.—Thanks for your letter. I had already noted the omission of the word "full" from line 4; and the substitution of "now" for "new" in line 5.

E. C. L.—Your lines were not disqualified.

THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 757.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS.—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

PARODIES, NOT EXCEEDING 240 WORDS IN LENGTH, OF THE STYLE OF MR. RUDYARD KIPLING.

EXTRACT FROM AN UNWRITTEN STORY BY THE AUTHOR OF "SOLDIERS THREE."

"Mulvaney," sez he, "the chaplain's throubled at the men don't attend the second service." Now," he sez, "tis not in my line to give what o calls a word in season, but I would like to gratify Mr. Townsend. Can you see your way to doing anything?" "Yes, sorr," sez I. Wid that I tuk a plug f tobacco and three fingers of whisky and went for think ut out. (You didn't know the chaplain as as, sorr?). The saints reclaim him, for 'tis a pity a ood man should be d——d all for a difference of pinion concarning the Blessed Vargin. Fwell I ought ut out, and between this an' that, twelve en stayed next Sunday and twelve the Sunday ter. 'Twould all have been well but for the aplain himself, for 'twas he that spoiled the thrick r bein' over grateful. Comin' off parade, he stops e Major, speaking low, but Curzon, he sez out ud, "'tis none of my doin'," sez he, "'tis Mulvaney ou've got to thank." "And so I will," sez he, "for word in season may save many sowls. But I would ave you know, Sergeant (I was Sergeant thin) that ney must come willin'." I would not have the men erced." "'Tis all right, sorr," sez I, wishful to atisfy him, "there will be no throuble wid the en. I told thim it should count as fatigue." But was not right . . .—Outsider.

WHOLESOME TALES FROM THE PLAINS.

It was the ball night, and the station, after simering for weeks, effervesced, like the "Simpkin," id boiled over. Everything reached its crisis. acillating Subs. proposed, made desperate by a mperature like Yehaunum, which neither unkahs nor thermantidotes could palliate. Deoted wives stipulated for the promotion of their usbands from the "Powers that were"—and got But the köil warbled sweetly, and the deodars at inviting shadows beyond the moonlit randahs, where, at his charmer's feet, the Boy om Home pleaded with the fervour of youth and a thermometer at 110 deg. "Get it for me," Mrs. Foxvine said, "and I'll love you always; otherwise—I must try to forget you." Alas! Delilah was not the last of her race! Her parting words were: "Good boy! To-morrow, then." Outside, Private Murgatroyd discoursed on the Boy from Home, saying: "That's a swate lady-like crathur, but he'll be afther spoilin' his complexion soon, I'm thinkin'." "He's game, though," responded Atkinson. "You should 'a seed 'im when that there elephant shikarred 'im t'other day." The morrow brought the Chota Bursat, and Mrs. Foxvine fled to join her husband at the Hills, settling her little accounts first. Her note said, "Thanks so much. Good-bye." The Boy looked peaceful enough that night, though. "Dead?" said his Colonel, horrified. "And mortgaged his pay for two years!" "Dead-drunk," replied the Doctor, briefly. "That burnt letter could explain why, I dare say."—Heron.

GLOSSARY:—Simpkin, Hindustani for champagne. Yehaunum, Hades. Thermantidotes, window-fittings for creating currents of cooled air. Köil, the Indian nightingale. Deodars, a species of cedar tree. Shikar, chase, hunting. Chota Bursat, the small rains preceding the monsoon.

FROM "THE JUNGLEPORE MIRACLE."

I laped over ould Coffeeskin's shlapin' black carkis, doubled up the stair, an' through the jooled curtain beyant. Holy mother av Moses! There was meself on a bit av a low platform, in the face av the congrigation, all salaamin' double before a big thafe av a Bingal tiger, standin' wid his back to me, divil take his bad manners! Faith, I nivir stopped to shalute the company, but dhropped on the sate av me trousies benathe the hinder inds av him, prayin' blessins backwards, on the ondacint conspicuity av the widdy's livery; an' consecratin' all the fat fryin' on the tiger's high althar to the privit consumption av the holy Vargin, conditionin' she'd get me clear out av this shcrape. Thin the praste, in a whole blache-green av white linen, howlin' glory—be loud enough to soften the heart av a green gooseberry, let alone a tiger's wid a bellyfull av sthraw, ups an' stritches out his arrams to me. Wid wan heave I tuk the ould man-eatin' effigy aff his glue futhoulds. Thin wid a roar to terror-sthrike the whole British Army (always barrin' Bobs Bahadur, that's a tough little man, an' knows whin there's more sound than sinse in a tin-kettle), I shprang clear into the midst av the knalin' naygurs on the flure, wid the tiger on me back. A yell like forty dozen coortin' cats—a scutther—an' silince. Thin—but that is another story!—Netherby.

And the yellow whisky fiend stood at his side, and he was blind, blind, blind; for he was only a man, a man of human blood—blood that, dried in the scorching sun, you can scrape to powder, like the bloom of a brown sugar-stick. Poor devil. He had been reading of the Indian Service. They do now. He mumbled about (keep your seats! it's the same tale) Bulblarney and Craisie, and slobbered "Gorum ba' 's time." They called him Great Scott Simpkins. His boots were off. They don't use Pear's soap on active service. Chuggle, chuggle went the rains. He reached over the punkah for a box of tin soldiers, and lit a Vevey Fin. I gave him that. "Oh, I don t care a dim what the Sergeant says, and the Corporal he can t find me" (to the tune of the Girl not in Front), came a voice from the tent-peg, and was immediately followed by the owner. Six feet four, moustache eighteen ounces. Scotkins sprang to meet him; he had had a soda. "Hullo Kid, how's the game?" "Well, you've got twelve months' leave, lucky skunk," answered K. "Have a peg," said Great, &c. He's dead now; but he got home, and murmured in Molly's ear:—"We Belong," "Sweet Dreaming Faces," "He had 'em again." His epitaph runs thus:—

I fought my fit
And had to git,
But my author's grit.

Garvinette.

TAILORS THREE; OR, THE DAGSBYS AND THE LAW-KNOCKER.

There had been a rat hunt which had lasted for thirty happy, howling hours. When it was over we were thirsty, so we adjourned to the hut under the Pont Neuf. When the snap of the shears on the wire of the champagne bottles was done, we fell into conversation. There was a soldier once who was shut up in a wine-cellar: but that is another story. So is this: Tedsloyd had just delivered himself of a tale in which there was something about himself and a sweater in an astrakhan collar. "So a' slit's back cap from waist to nape, and a' was in smitcher's t' matter o' six months." Macblarney woke up at this. He had been "playing wid the butt" on the back of an elephant in the Lowther Arcade. "Phwat is ut, sorr?" said he, handing me a pair of shears. "'Tis the only snippers that I love. Shure, 'twas thim I tuk wid me whin I cut over Pegg Boosey and lathered Arteris here whin he was dramin'. Lay thim by till the reck o' the canvas has gone off 'em, and thin kape thim bright wid wash leather." "Ow," whined Arteris, in a kind of low chant, "I'm pinin' for the slums, and the stink o' the mud under Waterloo Bridge." "Shut up, little man," said Macblarney. "Shure, 'tis the widdy's own tallypone, sorr, that will be playin' umbrageous——" Cutter Dagsby: "Yes; Baillin's coming (aside) with his patent measuring-tape." Mrs. Dagsby (hiding her face in the cotton-box): "The remnants—the inevitable remnants." . . . . "As ganger, if the boss be so moved to favour the unworthy. For I have nine little pigs, and some pigeons in the back kitchen." "Eleven o'clock, gentlemen!"—Mulu.

'Twas in India (of course it was) and around the mess-table the officers were congregated. Drinks were rapidly disappearing with the facility known only to residents in tropical countries. Suddenly the Major called out to a young ensign who, in a reclining attitude, was busily engaged thinking of nothing. "Don't move," cried the Major. "Keep perfectly still for the sake of your young and budding life." Like a statue sat the young man, but, being a slim young man, we cannot say he looked like a model of Hercules (there wasn't muscle enough). Expectantly he waited, thinking probably the Major was joking. The latter, beckoning to an attendant for a saucer of milk (we wonder whether they get it pure in India), placed it on the floor, and forthwith there glided towards it a cobra-de-capello, who had been squirming up the ensign's leg. The Major fired, and the Major's bullet shattered the head of the intruder, and all was over. "Major," said the trembling ensign, "You have saved my life. Shake!" They shook.—Alchdoubleu.

A NEW-YORKER IN LONDON.

Here I am, just in the zenith of a London season, when fashion's men and women are working day and night to make the season pay. After being tossed about for seven days on the grey herring-pond, there is nothing more delightful than to spend a few summer days and nights in this biggest of all big cities. You move along so easily, unless the slippery asphalted roads or some dropped orange-peel suddenly change your perpendicular position into a hopeless horizontal one, or a bicycle smashing you up. No Irish policemen here as in New York, but the lampposts just as groggy. What are those poorly dressed, half-starving people rushing to that window for? "All the winners" by telegraph. "Hooray!" they shout. Orme added another few thou. to the millions of his noble but melancholy owner. There was another racer a little while ago when the benevolent Jabez made tracks with his Liberator swag. Costermongers' and other street-sellers' cries everwhelming. Everything is red here, as if to set the sun on fire: Post-office vans, pillars, fire-engines, soldiers' uniforms, women and children's dresses, sun-shades—all blazing away. Muscular exercises everywhere. Street-fights, cricket, football, boxing, and cock-fights sub rosa. Home-fights many. About a fortnight ago the House of Commons had again taken up this favourite old pastime. No iced drinks here. Hot grog all the year round. Lots of preaching and hobbies of all kinds—teetotallers, vegetarians, Sabbatarians, anti-smokers, anti-vaccinators, anti-vivisectors, modern-thought men, Shakers, Quakers, Lost-Ten-Tribe men, &c. Underground Railway fearfully crowded, two persons for each seat. I have seen the Queen and the Prince of Wales. Victoria is small and stout, not particularly gracious. Who can tell where the Royal shoes pinch? Albert Edward, comfortable, jolly, best of friends with all the crowd, who shout "Hooray!" and cheerfully pay their taxes. But who comes here along Piccadilly, white waistcoated, flower buttonholed, wearing gally his eighty-three years, and to whom we all uncover, though some well-dressed women hiss. Surely it is none other than England's G.O.M. We go up and introduce ourselves. Very pleasant is the old man, friendly greeting and inquiry about America, and so we pass on.—John Boldiu.

"THE NEW WIRE MAT."

FELTEN & GUILLEAUME'S

GALVANISED

PATENT 'SPIRALIUM' WIRE MAT.

Practically indestructible

Write for Prices of this and their 'CONVOLVULUS' Wire Mat to

Sole Agents: W. F. DENNIS & Co., 11 Billiter St., London E.C.

CAMEO

CIGARETTES

A PHOTOGRAPH IN EVERY PACKET.

A SEPARATE MOUTHPIECE FOR EACH CIGARETTE.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

THE MILDEST OF MILD INDIAN CIGARS are

OAKES & Co.'s SUPERS

NO. 3,

THE PAGODA BRAND. QUALITY & FLAVOUR UNEQUALLED.

The Cheapest and Best INDIAN CIGAR in the Market.

SAMPLE BOX of 100 SENT to ANY ADDRESS for FIFTEEN SHILLINGS

OAKES BROS. & CO., 46, NEW BROAD-STREET, SOLE IMPORTERS.

JAEGER

PURE WOOL

FRINGED RUGS

From 15s. 6d. to 42s.

TRAVELLING RUGS,
CARRIAGE RUGS,
PLAIDS AND WRAPS.

LONDON DEPOTS:—3 and 4, Princes-street, Cavendish-square, W.; 30, Piccadilly, W.; 30, Sloane-street; 456, Strand, W.C.; 42 and 43, Fore-street, E.C.; 85 and 86, Cheapside, E.C.; 158, Fenchurch-street. Brighton: 59, East street. Leeds: 23, Commercial-street. Aldershot: 13, High-street.

TAMAR INDIEN GRILLON

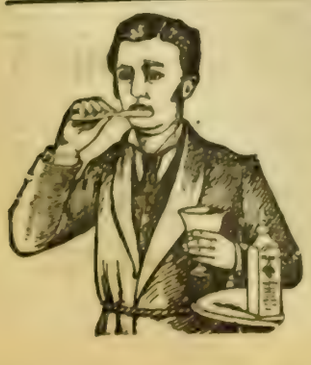
Very agreeable to take.
A LAXATIVE AND REFRESHING FRUIT LOZENGE FOR

CONSTIPATION,

HÆMORRHOIDS,
BILE,
HEADACHE,
LOSS OF APPETITE,
GASTRIC AND INTESTINAL TROUBLES.

Box 2s. 6d., stamps included.
Sold by all Chemists and Druggists.

E. GRILLON,
69, Queen-street, Cheapside, London



AN AROMATIC FRAGRANCE

is imparted to the mouth by the use of Sozodont. It is beyond doubt th cleanest, purest, and best tooth wash ever offered to the public. No lad ever used Sozodont without approving of its cleansing and purifying properties, an the flattering testimonials that have been bestowed upon it by eminent Dentists spea volumes of praise for its merits.

SOZODONT

though efficient and powerful is absolutely harmless, for it contains neithe mineral nor acid; it is wholly vegetable in its origin.

Vinolia Cream

ITCHING
ITCHING
ITCHING
ITCHING
ITCHING
ITCHING

FACE SPOTS
FACE SPOTS
FACE SPOTS
FACE SPOTS
FACE SPOTS
FACE SPOTS

FOR THE SKIN IN HEALTH AND DISEASE.

"For Acne Spots on the Face, and particularly for Eczema, it is undoubtedly efficacious, frequently healing eruptions and removing pimples in a few days. It relieves itching at once."—BABY.

1/1½, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per box.

"Vinolia" Powder (for Redness, Roughness, &c.), 1/-, 1/9 per box.

HOT MINERAL BATHS OF BATH.

Daily yield 507,600 gallons F. at 120.

FOUNDED BY THE ROMANS IN THE 1ST CENTURY.

ΑΡΙΣΤΟΝ ΜΕΝ ΥΔΩΡ.

BATHERS DURING 1890—97,299.

These Baths are unrivalled in Europe for luxury and extent, and contain all that modern improvements can provide for the comfort and relief of the invalid or the enjoyment of those in health.

Reclining, Deep, and Swimming Baths. Thermal Vapour Baths, for Painful conditions of Joints, &c. Douche, Inhalation, Aspiration, Pulverisation, &c., and Ear, Eye, Throat, &c. The Aix les Bains Massage System and Doucheurs and Doucheuses.

The Medical profession sends patients who suffer from Gout, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Neuralgia, Paralysis, Dyspepsia, Eczema, and other skin affections.

Letters to the General Manager will receive every attention

TORPID LIVER. HEADACHE.

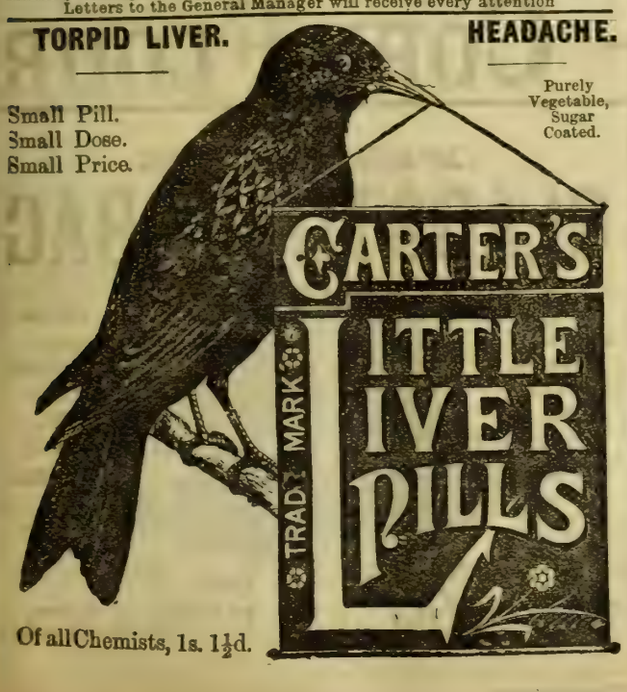
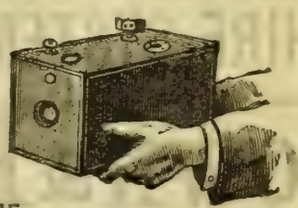
Small Pill.
Small Dose.
Small Price.

Purely Vegetable, Sugar Coated.



Of all Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

The Camera that takes the World!



THE

KODAK

No previous knowledge of Photography necessary.

"YOU PRESS THE BUTTON, WE DO THE REST,"

(Unless you prefer to do the rest yourself)

AND THE PICTURE IS FINISHED.

Price from £1 6s.

EASTMAN PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS CO. LD., 115-117 OXFORD-ST., LONDON, W.

SEND FOR PRETTY, ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, POST FREE.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

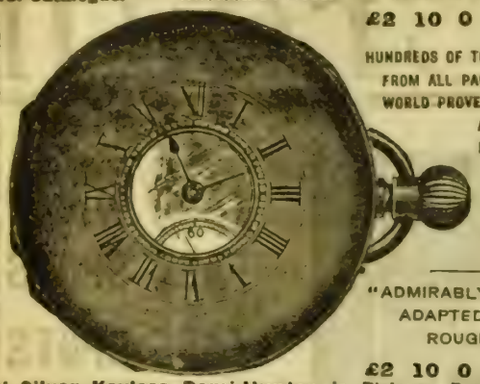
WORLD'S FAIR route to Chicago.
JAPAN and CHINA.—Fastest, finest, and only twin-screw Royal Mail Steamers on Pacific Ocean leave Vancouver every three weeks.
AROUND the WORLD Trips for £125.
SUMMER TOURS through Canadian Lakes and "Rockies."
FREE FARMS and Cash Bonus for Settlers.

For Tickets and Free Guide Books, apply Passenger Department, Canadian Pacific Railway, 67 and 68, KING WILLIAM STREET, LONDON, E.C.; 7, James-street, Liverpool; 105, Market-street, Manchester; 67, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow.

Midland Counties Watch Co., Vyse-street, BIRMINGHAM.

Send for Catalogue. Wholesale Prices. Send for Catalogue.

CATALOGUES CONTAINING OVER 1,000 ILLUSTRATIONS POST-FREE UPON APPLICATION TO ANY PART OF THE WORLD.



£2 10 0

HUNDREDS OF TESTIMONIALS FROM ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD PROVE THE VALUE AND EXCELLENT TIME-KEEPING QUALITIES OF OUR WATCHES.

"ADMIRABLY ADAPTED FOR ROUGH WEAR."

£2 10 0

Gents' Silver Keyless Demi-Hunter, in Plain or Engine-turned Cases, a thoroughly reliable timekeeper. £2 10s. 0d.

Purchase from the Manufacturers at a saving of 25 to 50 per cent.

25s.

LONDON OFFICE AND SHOW ROOM: 15, QUEEN VICTORIA ST., E.C. (Near Mansion House.)

"THE CHEAPEST THOROUGHLY RELIABLE SILVER WATCH EVER MADE."

Gents' Silver Watch, finely finished movement, crystal glass, timekeeping qualities guaranteed, 25s. Ladies' ditto, ditto, 25s.

25s.

LONDON OFFICE AND SHOW ROOM: 15, QUEEN VICTORIA ST., E.C. (Near Mansion House.)

SEND FOR CATALOGUE CONTAINING HUNDREDS OF TESTIMONIALS OF THIS AND OTHER WATCHES. Gratis and Post Free to any part of the World.

Cheques and P.O. Orders to be made payable to the Company's Manager, Mr. A. PERCY, Birmingham.

"WORTH A GUINEA A BOX."

BEECHAM'S PILLS.

LARGEST SALE IN THE WORLD.

A WONDERFUL MEDICINE for all Bilious and Nervous Disorders, such as

SICK HEADACHE, CONSTIPATION, WEAK STOMACH, IMPAIRED DIGESTION, DISORDERED LIVER, and FOR FEMALE AILMENTS.

Prepared only by the Proprietor, THOMAS BEECHAM, St. Helen's, Lancashire.

Sold by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Dealers everywhere, in Boxes 9½d., 1s. 1½d., & 2s. 9d. each. Full directions with each box.

BEECHAM'S TOOTH PASTE.

Will recommend itself; it is efficacious, economical, cleanses the teeth, perfumes the breath, removes tartar, and prevents decay. It is composed of the best known ingredients for neutralising the acids of the mouth, preventing all deleterious deposits upon the teeth, and is a pleasant and reliable dentifrice.

BEECHAM'S TOOTH PASTE is put up in collapsible tubes. Of all Druggists, or from the Proprietor, for ONE SHILLING, postage paid.

PIANOS ON THE THREE YEARS' HIRE SYSTEM.

This system is carried out extensively, liberally, and equitably by CHARLES STILES & CO., 40 and 42, Southampton-row, Holborn, W.C. The pianoforte becomes the absolute property of the hirer at the expiration of three years, or may be returned at any time, at the option of the hirer. The rates charged are the same as for ordinary hire, and no addition is made to the price. PIANOS, GRAND and UPRIGHT, new and second-hand, by BORD, BECHSTEIN, and other high-class Makers, at from 10s. 6d. to 100s. per month. Lists and all particulars will be forwarded post-free on application to STILES & CO., 40 and 42, Southampton-row, Holborn, London, W.C.

BROWN & POLSON'S

Has 35 Years' World-wide Reputation. CORN FLOUR

IZOD'S PATENT CORSETS Are the Best.

Prepared by a New and Special Scientific Process.

Medical opinion recommends them for THE HEALTH.

Public opinion all over the world unanimous that they are unsurpassed for COMFORT, STYLE, AND DURABILITY. Sold all over Europe, and everywhere in India and Colonies. Name and Trade Mark, Anchor, on every pair and box. Ask your Draper or Outfitter for IZOD'S make; take no other, and see you get them, as bad makes are often sold for sake of extra profit. Write for our sheet of Drawings.

E. IZOD & SON, 90, Milk St., London. Manufactory: LANDPORT, HANTS

— PURGATIVE WATER. —

LLORACH RUBINAT.

Intestinal Complaints, Obesity, and Clears Complexion.

E. GALLAIS & CO., 90, PICCADILLY, W.

FISHER'S GLADSTONE BAG

18-in. Brown Cowhide, PLATED, £6. SILVER, £7. 10s. FITTED COMPLETE.

18-in. Brown Cowhide, PLATED, £6. SILVER, £7. 10s. FITTED COMPLETE.

CATALOGUES FREE.

FISHER, 188, STRAND.

Printed for the Proprietor by WYMAN & SONS, Limited, Great Queen-st. W.C. and published at 10, Bolt-ct. Fleet-st. E.C. in the Parish of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st. Queen Anne's-gate, S.W.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 869. Vol. XXXIV. Thursday, August 24, 1893. Price Sixpence.

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor should be sent direct to the Editorial Offices, Carteret-street, S.W., and not to the Publishing Offices in Bolt-court, Fleet-street.

No communication can be dealt with in the current issue of Truth if received later than the First Post on a Monday.

ENTRE NOUS.

ONE of the morning papers, in a somewhat highflown notice of the late Sir Arnold White, states that the "mysteries" connected with the will of the Prince Consort "were locked in his faithful bosom." There were no "mysteries" in connection with the Prince Consort's will, except that the Queen (to whom the whole of the Prince's property was bequeathed) would not allow the will to be proved in the ordinary form, nor has it ever been deposited at Somerset House.

While the Court is at Balmoral, the Grooms-in-Waiting on the Queen will be Lord William Cecil, Mr. Alexander Yorke, Major Legge, Sir Fleetwood Edwards, and Lord Edward Pelham-Clinton respectively.

Lord Acton, who is now at Osborne as Lord-in-Waiting on the Queen, will cease his attendance on the day of her Majesty's departure for Scotland. There will be no Lord-in-Waiting while the Court is at Balmoral, so that Lords Brassey, Monkswell, Hamilton of Dalzell, Drumlanrig, and Camoys will all miss their turns when the Court comes south to Windsor in November.

A house is being built in the grounds at Balmoral, within a few yards of the Castle, for the exclusive occupation of the Queen's Munshi and Indian Secretary, Hafiz Abdul Karim, who has been over at Bombay since her Majesty returned from Florence. This new house does not increase the "amenities" of Balmoral from the picturesque point of view.

The Prince of Wales is expected to arrive at Braemar from the Continent about September 21. The Prince will stay with the Duke and Duchess of Fife at New Mar Lodge, until October 7, when he comes south in order to attend the Second October Meeting at Newmarket.

A weekly contemporary announces that Princess Maud of Wales is just going to pay a visit to her late governess, "now married and living in Devonshire." Princess Maud has gone abroad with her mother, and has no more intention of visiting Devonshire than of going to Pekin, and her late governess left that county some time ago and is now living in the neighbourhood of London.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught, who leave Portsmouth next week, are to take up their residence at Bagshot Park towards the end of October. It is to be hoped that the Duke does not propose to "work" the Aldershot command from Bagshot.

I learn that the intended visit of the Grand Duke of Hesse to the Queen at Balmoral has been abandoned, as H.R.H. has been ordered to take a course of waters at Bad-Nauheim, where Princess Christian is staying, and he will reside there for several weeks. The Grand Duke Ernest is by no means in strong health, and he has been much shaken by an accident which he recently met with at Darmstadt while playing tennis

---

The Emperor and Empress of Russia and their family are to arrive at Copenhagen next Saturday, and the Princess of Wales is expected there from Norway. The King and Queen of Denmark's party at Fredensborg Castle will also include the King and Queen of Greece, the Duchess of Cumberland, and the Duke and Duchess of York. The Prince of Wales is expected to arrive at Fredensborg from Homburg about September 11

The Duke of Cambridge is to leave Homburg this evening or to-morrow on his return to England. H.R.H. will be the guest of Lord Wharncliffe at Wortley Hall during Doncaster race week, and he has several visits to pay in Yorkshire and in Scotland during the next month.

Changes are taking place at Buckingham Palace, where both the Inspector and the Housekeeper have just been pensioned off. Mr. Collins, who has resigned the office of Inspector, has been a member of the Household since the reign of George IV., and he has apartments at Kensington Palace. The post, which is worth £500 a year, with a residence and numerous perquisites, has been given by the Queen to Mr. Taylor, the Inspector at Holyrood Palace. Miss Thornton, the Deputy Housekeeper, has been in the Queen's service for nearly half a century. Her place is worth £110 a year, with board and lodgings. The Housekeeper at Buckingham Palace supervises not only the servants who are permanently employed there, but also the Queen's "travelling staff" of domestics, who move about wherever their services may happen to be required. All the servants, except the members of the Queen's "personal" household, are paid by either the Lord Steward or the Lord Chamberlain.

The annual Horse Show held in August by the Royal Dublin Society, at Ball's Bridge, near Dublin, has grown to be an event of such importance that, even before the week devoted to it, large crowds arrive in the Irish capital. At the end of last week most of the hotels were already crowded, notwithstanding the great heat. Dublin, however, from its nearness both to sea and mountains, never gets hot like London. There are very few days on which refreshing breezes from either the one or the others do not temper the heat of the sun.

Whether at Christmas-time or in Midsummer, race-meetings are in season in Ireland; in fact, there is no month of all the twelve months of the year in which they are not held in some part of the country. On Saturday, the vigil of the Horse Show week, the races at Leopardstown drew together a large number of the sporting world. Irish Society in general was also largely represented in the enclosures and on the stands. The weather was brilliant, with, at times, more than enough of breezes from the surrounding mountains.

The following experience may convey a useful hint to travellers in Switzerland. A lady travelling with her daughters wrote to the proprietor of the Beau Rivage Hotel, Interlaken, to know if they could have rooms on the second floor. They received an answer by telegraph that rooms would be reserved as desired. On arrival, they found that the rooms reserved for them were on the third floor. On their refusing to take these, and preparing to depart, the landlord demanded 50 francs. They declined to pay, whereupon he refused to allow their luggage to be removed. They went to a lawyer, but had to pay the 50 francs before the luggage was released. At this period a male relative appeared on the scene, and sent a message to the landlord that unless the 50 francs were repaid by a specified time, an action would be commenced, which led to the money being at once returned. I hear of a similar trick being played upon English travellers at Chamonix. It seems clear, however, from the foregoing narrative, that such demands are not likely to be persisted in if firmly resisted.

Why is the Club train from London to Paris or to Cologne so empty? It starts at a most convenient hour, and it is faster than any other. There are, I presume, two reasons. The first is that there is an extra charge of five shillings; the second is that a small boat conveys the passengers across the Channel. I should fancy that ordinary fares and a large boat would fill the train. People are so made that—although probably the difference in price may be of small importance to them—they dislike the difference, whilst the internal arrangements of many are so fashioned that a lively little boat for the Channel passage disagrees with them, or at least they fancy that it may. Financially the Club train is, I believe, not a success; but, before taking it off, I would, were I one of the railway magnates in authority, try the two changes that I suggest.

The international train services between London and Cologne are open to improvement. If a person starts by the 11 a.m. train he has to kick his heels at Brussels for several hours, and only arrives at Cologne at 5.50 a.m., at which hour he also arrives by the Club train. From Cologne, should he wish to go to Frankfort or further south (which is the case with most tourists), he must either take a slow train or wait for the 9.45 express, in either case reaching Frankfort at about the same time. Surely this might be amended. There would be no great difficulty in arranging that a passenger starting from London at 3 p.m. might reach Frankfort at 10 a.m., and get to Bâle in the afternoon. In summer the German railroads would gain by this arrangement, for many tourists would betake themselves to Switzerland by the Rhine route were the train service better managed.

Sleeping-cars on the Continent are, as most people know, dearer than in England. This is because the Continental railway Companies do not have sleeping-cars of their own, and charge the sleeping-car Company a heavy tax for each passenger using them, in addition to the ordinary fare. This is an absurdity, for the rolling stock of the railway Company is saved by the sleeping-car being substituted for it. I do not, however, so much complain of this, as of the railway Companies insisting that a person taking two places, i.e., a cabin to himself, has to pay not only double sleeping-car fare, but also double ordinary fare. Now, many people object to being shut up in bed with a stranger in a cabin, and it seems to me that, as a matter of convenience, a passenger ought to be allowed to take a cabin to himself, if it so pleases him, by paying double sleeping-car fare. One of the objections to the two in a cabin is that the berths are so arranged that, when one wishes to go to bed, the other is forced to follow his example.

The train of the future is the corridor train. In a few cases this has been adopted in England; on the Continent it is only, as yet, used in Austria. In that country, sleeping-cars are not needed, for the two seats in a compartment opposite to each other pull out until they form a bed by meeting. A tip to the guard generally secures the two seats, but I should prefer that a passenger could secure them by some reasonable extra payment.

In no country in the world is railroad travelling so cheap as in Austria and Hungary, since the zone system has been adopted. The railroads earn far more by these cheap fares than they did before the reduction was made. And it is a matter of surprise to me that, with this experience of the monetary advantages of cheap fares, the plan is not tried elsewhere. There may be, and there no doubt are, many able railroad administrators; but, taking them collectively, they are a conservative set of asses, regardless alike of the true interests of their shareholders and of the comfort of their customers. I never travel by a railroad without wishing that I were just born; for I am convinced that the next generation will have many advantages over us in the matter of travelling. In all such things it is truly wonderful what a difficulty our old friend Common sense has in making headway.

For the Truth Hotel List, see page 400 in the present issue.
For Amusements, see page 405.

Boscombe, the pretty eastern suburb of Bournemouth, will receive a substantial rise in the world by the opening of the sumptuous Hôtel Burlington, on the site of Sir H. Drummond Wolff's former residence, Boscombe Towers. The hotel occupies a magnificent situation, with a grand view of the Channel to the South, while the back rooms look into the pine woods, or over them to the New Forest. In its internal arrangements and fittings the new hotel is fully worthy of its position, and as it will be under the same management as the Burlington Hotel in Cork-street, its prosperity is not a matter about which there will be any doubt. With this addition to the accommodation of the place, it behoves the natives to apply their minds with renewed energy to the question of providing amusement for their visitors.

Brighton, whatever her other shortcomings, offers unrivalled attractions to visitors in the matter of churches; and considering how many strangers are within her gates on Sunday, this is only as it should be. Yet another addition to the church accommodation of the town is being taken in hand at St. Michael's Church, which is at last to be completed, after a lapse of thirty years from its foundation. St. Michael's, which stands on the highest ground at the west end of the town, is already a conspicuous feature in the landscape, but is destined to become yet more so, for the new buildings—which include a north aisle, erected as a memorial of Mr. Val Prinsep's mother—are to be of exceptional height and solidity. Great praise is due to the Vicar (the Rev. C. Beanlands) for the resolution with which he has pursued the original design of his church, in the face of almost insurmountable obstacles, and it is to be hoped that he will find many sympathisers ready to assist in meeting the heavy outlay which is now being incurred.

With reference to the band question which is agitating Folkestone, I have received a letter from Mr. Harrison, the Town Clerk, informing me (1) that the Committee appointed to administer the Band Rate is entirely composed of members of the Corporation, and (2) that there are to be in all thirty-nine concerts to September 29, and others in October, if funds permit. With regard to the last point, the statement that there would be fourteen concerts was an accidental error for which I am solely responsible. I still think, however, that the town is not getting as much as it might have got for its money, and the Town Clerk seems to admit that the result is not altogether satisfactory by making the following excuses for it:—

"The question whether the Band Rate should be spent on military concerts, or in the engagement of a special civil band, is a perfectly fair and reasonable one, and has been fully considered by the Committee; and your informants know perfectly well that it had been found to be impossible to do otherwise this season, beyond engaging military bands, owing to the Band Rate of 1d. (applied for to Parliament by the Corporation) being limited by factious opposition to 5d., and the very late period of the year at which the Band Rate Act received the Royal assent; and the Committee, always acknowledging that this question was deserving of careful discussion, have felt compelled to defer that consideration till the coming year.

"Factious opposition" is the name usually given to opposition by the faction which is opposed. If the Town Clerk, being, as he appears, desirous of enlightening me as to the merits of the dispute, will kindly inform me what the cost of procuring the Band Rate Act has been, I shall be in a better position to judge whether the opposition to the Act, which he styles factious, was reasonable or otherwise. I have been led to understand that the money spent on this Act would have been sufficient in itself to provide a band for two or three seasons. I should like to hear from the Town Clerk whether that statement has any foundation, and, if it has, why the alternative course of raising the Mayor's salary, and arranging with him to pay the band, or some other such expedient, was not adopted. The difficulty has been met in this way in other places, and if this course had been taken at Folkestone, not only would it have saved a heavy expenditure, but it would have obviated that unfortunate delay in making arrangements for this year which the Town Clerk deplores.

An incident which happened at Scarborough the other day is hardly calculated to encourage visitors to that attractive resort. A Mr. Turnpenny, a respectable gentleman from a Midland town, who was on a visit to the place, and a Mrs. Eaton, a widow lady, who formed one of his party, were pounced upon by the police on a charge of pocket-picking. This occurred on a Friday, and they were locked up on Friday night. On Saturday they were released on bail until Tuesday, when the charge was heard and dismissed, with expressions of regret on the part of the Bench "that the pleasure of their visit should have been marred by the unfortunate incident." The police do not seem to have had a particle of evidence against them, and the citizens of Scarborough may be advised, if only for their own sakes, to cultivate a little more intelligence amongst their constabulary—or else a little less energy.

Visitors to the Isle of Skye at this season of the year will do well to beware how they comport themselves on the "Sawbath." It seems that the hospitable natives of that region, when they see a stranger who holds other views than their own on the meaning of the Fourth Commandment, think nothing of "heaving half a brick at him." A foreign tourist tells me that he recently experienced this treatment at Portree, while taking a photograph in the town on Sunday morning. The missile whizzed past his head, and on his expostulating with the individual who had thrown it, the latter announced his intention of kicking over both the artist and his camera, though he did not carry out this threat. It appears from this, therefore, that "Thou shalt not take photographs on Sunday" is the latest clause which Sabbatarian zeal has added to the Decalogue.

C.O.M. WHISKY.—This well-known Brand, 50s. per case [illegible]
C.O.M. WHISKY. every Ra[illegible]
C.O.M. WHISKY. Dame-st., Dublin, Proprietors C.O.M. brand.

A Lesson from the Hot Weather.
By One who has Learned It.

My fellow-sufferers, attend!
Last week's fierce heat is at an end.
The glass, which then in sun and shade,
Such very startling records made,
In Piccadilly stands no more
At heights suggestive of Lahore;
The sleep we wooed so long in vain,
Comes to our weary eyes again.

Sunstroke, which on its victims fell
Alike in Putney and Pall-mall,
Pro tem. has left us; and one thinks
Of other things than cooling drinks;
But, fellow-sufferers, beware!
We soon may have again to bear
The sweltering heat-wave of last week;
Again for coolness have to seek.

What shall we do, then, in such case?
How shall we try the heat to face?
If we have learned the lesson well,
Taught by the fate which us befell,
'Twill be our first, our chiefest care,
To see at once to what we wear;
From head to foot to overhaul
What we our "summer clothing" call.

The hard high hat of course must go,
The swathing scarf, the throttling bow,
The useless vest, the hot cloth coat,
The stiff, starched collar round our throat;
The polished boots that draw the heat,
These must be taken from our feet;
The board-like cuffs that chafe the wrist,
These, never wanted, won't be missed.

Then, moved by reason, let us choose
A pair of limp, cool canvas shoes;
A suit of flannels, soft and white;
A "Panama," wide-brimmed and light;
And, thus attired, go on our way,
Careless what fools or snobs may say,
And ready to defy anew
The heat and Mrs. Grundy too!

Sir Francis Jeune is taking the waters at Carlsbad, and Lady Jeune, who is now at Arlington Manor, their place near Newbury, is going shortly to Scotland to visit her sister, Lady Tweeddale, at Brahan Castle, Ross-shire.

During Lord Aberdeen's absence in Canada, his place as Lord-Lieutenant of Aberdeenshire will be filled by Sir John Clark, of Tillypronie. Lord and Lady Aberdeen are to leave Liverpool for Quebec in the Allan steamer which sails on Thursday, September 7, and they will visit Lord and Lady Derby at Knowsley Park before their departure from England.

No one is more glad than I am that Miss Borthwick is about to be married, and no one wishes more joy to the happy pair. But I regret very much that the auspicious event should be made the occasion for a number of ill-advised busybodies to go touting for subscriptions to a wedding present among those who do not share my cordial feelings towards Sir Algernon Borthwick and his family. It is the more to be regretted, as the wedding present appears to be essentially a political demonstration. The circulars in connection with it are issued from the office of the Kensington Conservative Association, and state that it is desired in this way to mark the public appreciation of the Parliamentary services of Sir Algernon Borthwick. The Kensington Liberals, strange to say, do not appreciate these services at all, and they naturally resent being asked to give their money for such a purpose.

The papers have in many cases been wildly astray in their notices of the Dowager Lady Midleton, whom they described as having been "a true grande dame," and "a prominent figure for many years at Court and in Society." Lady Midleton was quite unknown in London Society, as she never mixed in it at any period of her life, which was passed in the country, at Bath (where her husband was rector for many years), at Wells, and at the Exeter Deanery, and during the last twenty years she had lived at Richmond. Lady Midleton, who was universally beloved and respected, was a very good woman, truly religious, and most munificent in her almsgiving of all kinds.

Mr. "Frank" Bland, who died a few days ago, was for many years one of the most intimate friends and most constant associates of Charles Dickens, of whom he was the confidential medical attendant, and he acted in the same capacity for Wilkie Collins for more than thirty years. He was a very clever man in his profession. Mr. Bland's close connection with Dickens made him a well-known figure in many literary and theatrical circles, and he was always very popular in society. He had considerable influence over Dickens, and in May, 1869, he came prominently before the public in connection with the sudden stoppage of his patient's public readings, which were then in the height of their popularity. Dickens had then been for some time in failing health, and he reported such alarming symptoms in his letters that Bland rushed down to Preston, and found him on the very brink of a paralytic stroke.

Sir Edward Hamley was a man of consummate ability, and thoroughly practical. He was far and away our most eminent writer on the art of war, and French, Germans, Americans, and Russians have all studied and warmly praised his professional works. Sir Edward Hamley also wrote some excellent novels, and he was a regular and brilliant contributor to Blackwood's Magazine. He was shamefully treated after the Egyptian War of 1882, when he won the battle of Tel-el-Kebir, but did not get the credit which was his due from Lord Wolseley, who had designed another arrangement with a view to the glorification of the Duke of Connaught. It is lamentable that so able a soldier should have fallen a victim to the jobbing of the Horse Guards gang.

Mr. Duncan Macpherson, who died on Thursday at Findynate House, his place in Perthshire, came pro minently before the public a few years ago in consequence of his pertinacious attempts to stop people from passing through Glen Doll, the result being that, after much litigation, the right of way was established. Glen Doll path was the ancient cross-country route from the lowlands of Forfarshire and Deeside, and continued access to it was much desired, as the scenery is very beautiful, and it is a favourite resort of botanists and geologists, who find there a rich harvest. Mr. Macpherson, who was a younger son of Mr. Macpherson of Drumnagask, passed nearly thirty years in Australia, where he made a very large fortune as a sheep farmer and land speculator. He returned to Scotland in 1882, and purchased estates in Forfarshire, Perthshire, and Midlothian, all of which were greatly improved by him. Mr. Macpherson took no part in public affairs, but devoted himself entirely to the management of his various properties. He was a very shrewd man of business.

The Imperial, East Cliff, Bournemouth.—Position, appointments, and cuisine unsurpassed. 100 rooms. Luxuriously furnished. Electric light. Private omnibuses meet trains. Telegraphic address, Imperial, Bournemouth.—Chas. A. Reingpach, Manager.

Why not cultivate your hair? Encourage it and strengthen it or, if your hair is grey or white, the natural colour can be restored by a few applications of Mrs. S. A. Allen's World's Hair Restorer.

A paragraph has gone all round the papers, which originated with an evening journal, which states that Lady Tryon "has refused to accept the pension of £600 a year to which she is entitled as an Admiral's widow." As a matter of fact, the pension of an Admiral's widow is £120 a year, which is usually increased if the officer has been killed in action or drowned while on service; but it certainly would not exceed £200 a year. Any such pension, moreover, is only conferred upon a widow whose private means are limited, and every one knows that Lady Tryon has a large income. It is a common delusion that such pensions can be claimed as a right, but it is utter nonsense.

The best bags of the season have been made in the West Riding of Yorkshire. Lord Ripon's party of six guns had a series of grouse drives on Monday sen'night over the Dallowgall Moors, which are a few miles from Studley Royal, and they killed about 630 brace, although the birds were very wild and by no means so numerous as usual. On the Tuesday there were drives on Harper Hill, and between 400 and 500 brace were bagged.

The Duke of Devonshire's party of seven guns, at Bolton Abbey, had five days' shooting over the Hazlewood, Barden, Campsey, and Rylstone Moors, and they killed about 1,100 brace of grouse. Lords Rowton, Hindlip, Lurgan, Stanley and Charles Montagu, and Mr. Chatham were the guests.

Somewhat remarkable results have attended the labours of the Crofter Commissioners in the Orkney and Shetland Islands. On one of Lord Zetland's estates the rents have been reduced 24 per cent., and 31 per cent. of the arrears have been cancelled. On another of Lord Zetland's properties the rents have been reduced 31½ per cent., and 79 per cent. of the arrears were cancelled.

The volume entitled "Memorials of St. James's Palace," upon which the Sub-Dean of the Chapels Royal has been engaged for several years past, and which will be published in the autumn, ought to be very interesting, as all the private archives in the Lord Chamberlain's Office have been placed at Mr. Sheppard's disposal as well as the Chapel Royal records, and he has, therefore, been privileged to overhaul a great mass of quasi-private papers containing much curious information.

The Primate has presented the Rev. Henry Venn, who is a grandson of the famous Evangelical Rector of Clapham, to the important living of Minster, Kent, which is worth about £700 a year with house, and which has become vacant by the resignation of the Rev. Albert H. Sitwell, who was presented in 1869 by Archbishop Tait.

The rectory of Rawmarsh, Yorkshire, which is worth about £400 a year, with house, has fallen to Lord Herschell by the death of the Rev. Sir William Mahon, who had held this living forty-nine years, having been presented by Lord Chancellor Lyndhurst in 1844.

Professor Fuller's dreadfully sudden death is sincerely and widely regretted, and his loss will be very keenly felt by his parishioners and neighbours. Professor Fuller was a man of great learning, and he was an admirable writer, and had made very valuable contributions to "The Speaker's Commentary," and similar works. He held the Chair of Ecclesiastical History at King's College, and for the last nineteen years he had been Vicar of Bexley, a living which is worth about £600 a year, and in the gift of the heirs of the late Lady Sydney.

The Rev. Edward John Selwyn, who died last week, had for twenty years held the Primate's living of Pluckley, Kent, and he was previously well known as the very able and most successful Principal of Blackheath School, a position which he held for sixteen years. He was a fine scholar, and a man of marked administrative capacity. Mr. Selwyn was one of the best known, most zealous, and most popular parish clergymen in Kent, and his death is very widely lamented, particularly by his large circle of personal friends. The rectory of Pluckley, to which Mr. Selwyn was presented by Archbishop Tait, is worth upwards of £600 a year.

Bishop Clifford was one of the most popular Roman Catholic ecclesiastics in England. He was a man of great learning and a most accomplished antiquarian. His charming manner, his excellent conversation, and his wide sympathies made him everywhere a persona grata, and in the diocese of Clifton, where he was well known, he was universally beloved and reverenced. He had held his Bishopric for nearly thirty-seven years.

I understand that it is not correct to say that the late Canon Wade had anything to do with the foundation of the House of Charity in Soho. The real founder was the late Dr. Henry Monro, and Canon Wade was merely asked to join the Committee as the Rector of the Parish.

CHINA AND GLASS. — Messrs. GOODE, Artists and Designers, solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

The following advertisement, it need scarcely be said, is taken from the Morning Post. The Rector of Halton, it seems, does not hold with the Scriptural maxim, "Put not your trust in Princes." In this he no doubt shows all the wisdom of the serpent, for there are among the "nobility and gentry" only too many who will consider that the privilege of being educated with "a Young Prince" outweighs any other educational advantages:—

Rev. H. A. Grantham, Rector of Halton, Bucks, wishes to receive four pupils, sons of nobility and gentry, as companions to a Young Prince.

I hear that the public are still prevented, in the name of the Dowager-Duchess of Athole, from walking round the outside of Dunkeld Cathedral. Two visitors, who desired to inspect the exterior of the building just before the morning service a Sunday or two back, were stopped, with divers threats, by a pair of hirelings, apparently placed there for the purpose by the Duchess. This has been going on for a long time, for it must be two or three years since I published a similar complaint on the subject, one of the parties "warned off" on that occasion being the late Mr. Cecil Raikes—then Postmaster-General—so that the Dowager-Duchess is no respecter of persons. The Dowager seems to keep guard over this sacred spot much as Miss Betsy Trotwood used to preserve the green in front of her cottage from the intrusion of donkey-boys. But in this case the usurpation is several degrees more offensive, and it is an astonishing thing that the natives of the locality should submit to it.

The following is an extract from a letter signed "A Priest," in the Church Times. It would be interesting to know what the country clergy think of this ingenious idea, and also to have the opinions of the squires and the eldest sons of the gentry upon it:—

Could not the country clergy do good social work by getting their squires to confession, or by excommunicating the eldest sons of the gentry until such time as they choose to do some hard work, or by preaching a course of sermons on the "Duty towards your Neighbour," applying it in its literal sense to rich and poor alike?

Lady Jeune writes to me as follows. I feel sure that her appeal will come home forcibly to all who have suffered—and I suppose that everybody has more or less—under the intense heat of the last week or two. More especially should the hard case of the children of the London poor commend itself to the charity of those who have the means to escape from town at this season:—

May I appeal once more to your readers for a little extra help for my holiday fund? The fund is getting very low, and I am inundated with petitions for money to send more children away. The oppressive heat of the last few days has increased sickness and weakness among the children, and the pathetic appeals I receive on all sides are really innumerable. I cannot send any more children away unless I get more money. We have all been suffering from the heat, but under mitigated circumstances, and I feel sure that those who have been able to enjoy their holiday without any discomfort will gladly help to send away a few children who have spent theirs in the hot-smelling, stifling courts and alleys of London, where their little faces have got pinched and wan, and their strength exhausted by the overpowering heat of this unusual summer. May I ask them once more for help to send some of these poor little people away?

Meanwhile, I have received the following amounts towards Lady Jeune's Fund:—R. C., 10s.; R. Whittington, £1. 1s.; H. Elliott Fox, £1; G. S. C., 5s.; E M. Hollings, 10s.

Intense disgust is felt, and is being very freely expressed, in India at the appointment of Colonel Bisset as Director-General of Railways. Colonel Bisset has held no appointment in the Public Works Department for eight years past. He possesses no exceptional qualifications which justify his being brought back, after an absence which must necessarily place him out of touch with those of whom he is to take command. On the contrary, even if military officers are to be regarded as having an exclusive right to the post, there are at least two Colonels R.E. in the Department eminently fitted for it. Colonel Bisset's return means that a number of officials will be disappointed of steps of promotion which they have well earned, and such a result is prejudicial to the morale of the Service as well as unjust to the parties who suffer. Lord Kimberley should think twice before allowing this job to become an accomplished fact.

I gather from the opinions of experts on the subject, that the reform carried out by the establishment of an Army Pay Corps is likely to leave open some grounds for grumbling, especially among the men in the lower ranks who have been complaining of the slowness of promotion. One "Disappointed" individual writing to me on this subject, states that after he has been seven years in the Army and three years in the Department, the effect of the new regulation will be to keep him for five years more before he obtains the maximum of 3s. 6d.; while a man considerably junior to himself both in the Army and the Department, coming under a different section of the Warrant, will reach the maximum after only four years in the Department and five in the Army. It seems to me that this growler is rather in the position of the labourers in the Gospel, who objected to the eleventh-hour man receiving the same pay as themselves. At the same time, when a Department is being reconstructed, and concessions made all round, I should have thought that the men who have borne the burden and heat of the day have a claim to benefits before the eleventh-hour men.

An officer writes from Simla:—

Thanks to you and to Sir Henry King, officers who, like myself, have attained to "Colonel's allowance" are now permitted to draw it in gold through their London agents, and to have it remitted to them in India at the current rate of exchange. But there is a small class of unfortunate and helpless widows and orphans of military officers out here who are still treated as unjustly as we were. I have no relatives or connections among this ill-used class, but, since through your efforts my own class has benefited, I feel bound to bring to your notice the fact that these widows and orphans are not allowed to draw in gold through their agents in London the small pensions for which their husbands or fathers have subscribed, unless they themselves go to England. If they remain in India, they are given very much less than the gold value of their pensions.

I am not quite sure that I know precisely to what class my correspondent refers, but from the last two sentences I take it to be the class whose pensions can be drawn either in England in gold or in India in rupees—the respective amounts having been fixed before the fall of the rupee. As the purchasing power of the rupee in India has not altered materially, I cannot quite see the hardship of this arrangement; since, presumably, these pensioners are living on their means and have no occasion to remit cash to England. If, however, it is seriously desired that they should enjoy the Colonel's privilege of drawing the pension in gold in England by their agents, and having it remitted to India at the current rate of exchange, I see no reason why they should not enjoy this privilege.

Family Washing only.—Collection and delivery twice daily. For families leaving Town, work delivered day following collection, and with three days' clear notice, household work collected and delivered prior to families arriving in Town. Under new management.—Belgrave Steam Laundry, 196, Ebury-st., Belgravia, S.W.

The concession now tardily made by the Indian Government in regard to remittances home by members of the Civil and Military Services is a much more important matter. That officers and Civil servants have got all they would have liked I do not suppose; but that they have got all that they could reasonably expect I strongly hold; for, hard as is the burden cast on the Anglo-Indian official by the fall of the rupee, equally hard is it that this burden should be transferred from his shoulders to those of the impoverished native taxpayer.

On the subject of the growls of the Army Medical Staff, a correspondent writes that "the grumbling and discontent (sic) is designed simply to keep the Medical Staff a preserve for the Irish Schools, and to frighten off the London men." This strikes me as what is called "thin." That there is a preponderance of Irishmen among Army doctors no one knows better than I do; but in what sense is the Department a "preserve"? Competition is open. If, therefore, Irishmen predominate it must be either because they show special aptitude, or because the other nationalities do not care to compete. In either case it is unnecessary for Irishmen to grumble in order "to frighten off the London men." My experience (which in this direction is as good as anybody's) is that there is as much grumbling among English doctors as Irish, and only the other day I reproduced a service gibe which described the Department as "a Scotch preserve." I am informed by the same correspondent that "the War Office Clerk has very little to do with the management of the Army Medical Staff." I am sorry that I cannot accept this information; but I claim to know as much about "the War Office Clerk" as my correspondent—probably a good deal more.

Another military correspondent writes thus on the subject of Sergeant-Cooks:—

> Aldershot may be an exception, as on that station the Sergeant-Cook is kept up to the mark by the Cooking Staff, and the uncertainty as to when and by whom his cook-house may be visited, but in less important stations his office becomes almost a sinecure; and so long as his cook-house is clean when the Orderly Officer pays his daily visit, and the meat fairly cooked, he has little else to trouble him.
>
> So far from raising his rank, I would abolish him altogether, and hand over the superintendence of the culinary department to some worthy old soldier who possessed, among other things, the knack of keeping his comrade cooks well in hand; for, after all, it is to the private soldier, cooking for a particular squad or company, and dining himself with them in a barrack-room, that his brother soldiers look for efficiency.

There must be something radically wrong with the regimental organisation where the Sergeant-Cook's office becomes a "sinecure." It has no more business to be so than the office of head cook at a club or a restaurant. The evidence which I have had is that a Sergeant-Cook who does his duty honestly has twelve hours' work a day before him, which seems by no means improbable. My view is that the Sergeant-Cook is the most important officer in a battalion; next to the Colonel, and every improvement in the feeding of the Army will add to his importance. To suggest that because he occasionally does not do or does not know his duty, "worthy old soldiers" should be substituted for Sergeant-Cooks throughout the Army, is about as sensible as to suggest that because there are lazy or incompetent Commanding Officers, all regiments should henceforth be commanded by worthy old washerwomen.

The remarks in TRUTH of the 10th inst. upon the sanitary condition of Aldershot have been more than justified by a virulent outbreak of typhoid fever in the North Camp, three of the cases, if not more, having proved fatal. If I am not mistaken all these cases have occurred among the Cameronians, whose scandalous removal to the deserted North Camp huts, after the riotous attack on their barracks by men of the Cavalry regiments, I denounced a few weeks ago. In a double degree, therefore, these poor fellows are the victims of War Office blundering, and I would not willingly stand in the shoes of the officials on whose heads rests the blame of their death.

Although there was some exaggeration in the stories current last week as to the casualties amongst the Volunteers at Aldershot, it is certain that there was a great amount of suffering, and, as the Secretary for War admits, at least one death. Mr. Campbell-Bannerman stated in the House, on the authority of Sir Evelyn Wood, that all precautions were taken to save fatigue to the Volunteers. But the men tell a different story, and the accounts of their marching and manœuvring hour after hour in the sweltering heat, with the resulting exhaustion and sickness, are far from pleasant reading. As the Lancet points out once more, in such an exceptionally hot season as we have just experienced, marches should, as far as is practicable, be undertaken in the early morning or in the evening, and the troops should march in the most open order possible. But the necessity of observing this common-sense rule never begins to make an impression on the military mind until the hot season is finishing, and the mischief has been done.

I understand that it is not correct that Sergeant-Major Kenyon, of Exeter Depot, is actually in possession of the meritorious service medal. He is merely a candidate for that distinction. The opinion, therefore, taken by the higher military authorities as to his claims has yet to be seen. In view, however, of what I have said in another column regarding the Depot Sergeant-Major of the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, it is to be presumed that Kenyon will have the medal as a matter of course. By comparison with his comrade at Bodmin, he is indeed an exemplary soldier.

An incident which occurred the other day at a Sergeants' Mess in London throws a useful light on the influence wielded by the Sergeant-Major over his comrades. A Mess Meeting was held in the absence of the Sergeant-Major to consider the question of a forthcoming rifle meeting. A Colour-Sergeant took the chair, and stated that the Sergeant-Major would be unable to attend if they went on one particular day. Thereupon, the meeting decided, by eighteen to two, that they would attend on that day. At this moment the Sergeant-Major appeared on the scene. Some one suggested that the vote should now be taken again. This was done, and the meeting forthwith, by fifteen to six, reversed their previous decision, and decided to go on a day when the Sergeant-Major could attend. From this it would seem that the presence of this officer caused twelve men to change their minds.

"TOILET LANOLINE" softens, clears, and preserves the skin, and should be used in every household. "Toilet Lanoline" protects the skin from the effects of exposure, and adds to the natural beauty. In collapsible tubes, 6d.; in small boxes, 3d., from all chemists and druggists. Wholesale depôt, 67, Holborn-viaduct. The genuine bears the trade-mark, "Lanoline."

With regard to the punishment of an N.C.O. at Hamilton Depot, to which reference has been made in the last two numbers of TRUTH, I think it right to say in justice to all parties concerned, that I have received a further communication which puts a different aspect on the offence of the Colour-Sergeant who was punished. I am told that the "few words" which this N.C.O. was having with his wife took the form of a serious assault and that as it occurred at night the incident occasioned a considerable disturbance. How far the lady herself may have been to blame I am not in a position to say; but on such evidence as I have I entirely admit that the Sergeant-Major was right in doing what he did, and I should hesitate to say that the Colonel was wrong in doing what he did.

A Devonshire correspondent writes:—

There is no foundation whatever for the announcement, which appears in Vanity Fair, that the Government will probably acquire Woodbury Common, between Exmouth and Ottery, "with a view to the extension of the recent manœuvres;" nor is it true that any such purchase has been "strongly recommended" by certain military experts. The whole story is a pure invention. Mr. Mark Rolle has not "hitherto resisted parting with the Common for building purposes," no offers of the kind having ever been made to him; nor, as a matter of fact, is Woodbury Common adapted for any such uses.

In view of the approach of the Indian trooping season, I have been asked to impress upon the authorities the desirability of a little more care in regard to the stowage and unloading of officers' baggage. The most serious ground for complaint is in reference to the unloading at Bombay, where it is the custom to pitch packages of every description overboard into barges, with a drop of some 20 ft. An officer tells me—and no one will doubt it—that he has seen strong packages smashed to matchwood under this treatment, and their contents lost or irretrievably injured; but the Government, as is their wont, repudiate all responsibility for losses so incurred. It is also a common complaint that directions as to luggage being placed in cabins are systematically ignored, while, vice versâ, luggage destined for the hold is considerately placed in the happy owner's cabin. Such carelessness may involve indescribable discomfort and misery for the whole period of the voyage, and there cannot be the slightest excuse for it.

Reluctantly, but firmly, I must decline to discuss further the apportionment of blame for the loss of the Victoria. I make this public announcement, inasmuch as I am still receiving from different parts of the Empire letters either defending Sir George Tryon or setting forth other novel views in connection with the disaster. I do not question that all these communications are distinguished by marked ability; but the loss of the Victoria is now, so far as I am concerned, a matter of ancient history.

A considerable proportion of my weekly correspondence is made up of doleful complaints from parties who have paid fees to employment agencies of one kind or another, and got nothing for their money. No doubt a vast deal of swindling is done under this head, especially on young men (and young women) from the country. In one case that I have lately heard of, a young man in want of a clerkship paid half-crowns to two agencies—one in Holborn and the other in the Strand—and not only got no offer of employment, but was unable to draw any further communication of any kind from the parties who had taken his money. But, unfortunately, not even the most respectable agency can guarantee employment to its patrons, and there are so many of these concerns that it is out of the question for me to attempt an inquiry into their respective merits. The only practical advice I can give to those who have to go to agencies to find employment, is to find out old-established offices which are doing a bonâ-fide business. There are plenty of them.

FROM THE PRIBYLOFF ISLANDS.

'Tis the voice of the Seal,
I can hear it complain—
"They have made regulations
About me again.
The English and Yankee
Have met and agreed
How in future they mean
In my case to proceed.
For weeks, I've been told,
There was learnèd debate,
That the counsel shed tears
As they talked of my fate,
And enlarged on the rules
As to frequent inspection,
By which 'twas declared
I shall now have protection.

"I am bound, though, to add
That I've not, on my part,
Received this 'good news'
With much gladness of heart.
This talk of a close time,
And how they can kill me,
Does not with a feeling
Of gratitude fill me;
For I cannot but feel—
And, in fact, most acutely
That all these restrictions,
Laid down so minutely,
Are only intended
In spirit and letter,
To enable the sealers
To skin me the better!"

A British resident in Spain writes to me very strongly on the practice of appointing foreigners to act as British Vice-Consuls in places where there is a British community many members of which are qualified to fill the post. That this complaint is sound in principle few will venture to deny, and I would respectfully press the principle upon the consideration of our Foreign Secretaries, present and to come. A case in point was a recent appointment at Denia. This post became vacant a few months ago, and was applied for by three members of the English colony; but it was given to a Spanish gentleman related to the previous Vice-Consul. On a question being asked in the House of Commons with reference to the appointment, Sir Edward Grey stated that the new Vice-Consul is a British subject; but I understand that there is no foundation for this statement. The gentleman is a member of an influential Spanish family, and his appointment was no doubt due to the influence of his family, brought to bear through the British Ambassador at Madrid.

It will astonish a good many Englishmen, I imagine, to hear that in India municipal revenues are still raised by octroi duties. The table given below shows the scale on which such taxes are levied at Simla. Why is such a state of things maintained? The rulers of India know, of course, that these duties are bad in theory and odious in practice; but nothing apparently will persuade the Anglo-Indian official that the principles of government accepted by Englishmen at home can have any application to the peoples ruled by Englishmen abroad:—

Schedule of Octroi Duties leviable in the Municipal Town of Simla, sanctioned by notification in Part I. of the Punjab Government Gazette of February 12, 1880, and July 18, 1889:—

Articles.	Dues Payable.
Class I.—Articles of Food and Drink for use of Men and Animals.
Grain of all kinds, and flour	Pies 6 per maund.
Sugar, white loaf or crystallised ...	Re. 1 ,,
Sugar, brown, crystallised	As. 12 ,,
Sugar, raw, gur, shakkar, molasses, and treacle	As. 8 ,,
Sparkling wines	As. 8 per gallon.
Still and plain wines and spirits ...	As. 4 ,,
Beer and porter	As. 2 ,,
Oilman's stores	Rs. 2 per cent.
Potatoes	As. 3 per mule load.
,, ...	As. 1 per cooly load.
Class III.—Articles used for Fuel, Lighting, and for Washing.
Lamp oil of all kinds, except kerosine	As. 8 per maund.
Class VI.—Tobacco.
Tobacco, Purbia	Rs. ,,
,, Calcutta	Re. 1 ,,
,, Country	8 ,,
Class VII.—Metals, and Articles made of Metals.
Iron, manufactured, corrugated sheets, &c.	Re. 1-8 per cent.
1 per cent. on piece goods of all descriptions and textile fabrics.

The following curious side-light upon Missionary enterprise is supplied to me from the Punjab:—

I notice in your paper a reference to the cost of converting Jews. It reminds me of the cost of converting the heathen in these parts. The Missionaries at Kangra have been at work since 1846, and have converted in that time one adult. The Moravian Missionaries at Lahoul have been at work about the same time and have converted one Lahouli and one Ladaki (adults). Of course they do better business with infants, some of whom are voluntarily brought to the mission by their parents, while others are sold in times of scarcity. You will be interested to hear what becomes of them. The children are brought up, of course, in the tenets of Christianity. When they arrive at marriageable age a board forthwith assembles and decides which maiden shall be given to which youth. The marriage is then consummated. Thus more little Christians are bred, just as you would fox hounds or horses, and so the Church of God increases. This is an entirely new view of the propagation of the Gospel in foreign parts. But why, I would ask, cannot this method of multiplying the saints be practised as well at home as in partibus infidelium?

The Canadian snobocracy have discovered what they regard as a serious blot on the escutcheon of the new Governor-General. It has leaked out that Lord Aberdeen is engaged in fruit-growing in British Columbia, and that he is about to establish a factory on his farm for canning fruit, and, Ottawa Society being of a very exclusive character, it is feared that the revolting intelligence may seriously interfere with his lordship's social surroundings. One newspaper which has been sent to me remarks that it will create no great surprise "if Ottawa's select few turn up their noses at Aberdeen because he runs a fruit cannery."

I wonder whether the fanatics who are all for stopping Sunday trade in every shape have ever given any thought to the results to the very poor in weather such as we have just been having. What must be the condition of bread, meat, and vegetables kept in a small sleeping apartment—with probably two or three people in it—through such nights as were experienced last week? A pleasant mode, truly, of preparing food for Sunday's dinner! At the best of times the closing of shops on Sunday is a hardship to those who have no convenient means of storing their food, and it ought to be mitigated by allowing retail traders to do business for an hour or two in the morning whenever they are willing to do so.

A correspondent writes:—

In this last decade of the nineteenth century, a town without either gas or water, and having a Mayor and corporate body together with a population of something like 5,000, is an anomaly not often come across. Yet such a state of affairs prevails at the present time in the ancient borough of Morpeth. The town's water-supply, never up to much at the best, has entirely failed. During the past two weeks the people have been dependent upon a single bore hole in the Market-place, from which the water has had to be pumped and then conveyed in barrels to various parts of the town. At its source the water had a slight taste of iron, but after its journey in the water-carts the taste much resembled that of the water taken for medicinal purposes at renowned watering-places. As it is only with the greatest difficulty that sufficient water can be obtained for purely domestic purposes, one may judge whether or not a bath is a "luxury." To add to the inconvenience, the Gas Company have intimated the fact that, owing to structural alterations at their works, they will be unable to light the streets for at least a month yet.

Notwithstanding the fact that the borough of Morpeth, politically speaking, is all "light and leading," it must be said that, for the nonce, municipal muddlers seem to have turned it into a place of darkness and retrogression.

The Master of the Bridgnorth Workhouse has appealed to the Guardians to relieve him of responsibility in connection with the vagrant wards. He pathetically explained that at present he runs a risk of being tried for manslaughter; for, owing to the inadequate accommodation, he is obliged to put so many tramps in a bed that some of them may be suffocated. A truly Bumble-like solution of the difficulty was suggested by the Rev. G. E. Morris. Why should not the master refuse admission when the house was full? The master protested that he was bound to afford relief, but Mr. Morris's colleagues thought it such a good idea that they instructed a committee "to look up the law." The fact that vagrants turned away from the workhouse would be sent to gaol for sleeping out does not, of course, enter into the consideration of the Guardians. Perhaps the Local Government Board may have something to say on the subject.

Rational Dog Feeding.—Give wholesome and nutritious food (Spratt's Patent Meat Fibrine Dog Cakes). Do not give tit-bits and dainties because your dog, like a spoilt child, prefers what suits his palate. See that the Dog Cakes are stamped "Spratt's Patent" and a "×," as cheap and innutritious imitations are often substituted for extra profit. Pamphlet on Canine Diseases post free, Spratt's Patent, Limited, Bermondsey, London.

The Malvern Hills.—Most delightful of English Watering-places. Air pure, dry, invigorating. Lowest death-rate (certified), pure water, perfect sanitation. Matchless scenery, charming walks and drives, hunting, golf. Frequently visited by Royalty.

An energetic advocate of reform in Folkestone Bumbledom has furnished me with a series of photographs, showing the kind of accommodation that is considered good enough for the casual poor at Elham Workhouse. It is highly probable that if Mr. Fowler had had the advantage of seeing these views of the stable, the dead-house, the pigsty, &c., he would not have felt inclined to accept without further inquiry the statements of the Guardians which were embodied in his reply to Mr. Hogan the other day. Mr. Fowler appeared to be under the impression that vagrants are only sent to the stable in times of exceptional pressure on the wards. As a matter of fact, the stable is occupied by vagrants almost every night; in the day it appears to be given up to a horse. Probably also Mr. Fowler was not aware that this stable has a dead-house adjoining it at one end and a pigsty at the other; that the "specially prepared platforms" on which the men sleep are four pieces of board nailed together, and raised four inches from the ground; and that the "mattresses" are calico bags filled with straw. The platforms and mattresses are a recent introduction, and are only sufficient for twelve men. When that number is exceeded, as it constantly is, the rest have to lie on the bricks.

That such a state of things should be allowed to continue month after month is a disgrace, not only to the Elham Guardians, but to the Local Government Board, whose duty it is to interfere. The officials in Whitehall, however, seem to be completely hoodwinked by the Guardians. When complaint is made of the hardship inflicted upon the poor in having to walk the six miles from Folkestone to the Workhouse, the Guardians reply that they send those who are aged or infirm by train, and in cases of extreme indisposition provide accommodation in the town. This explanation is apparently satisfactory to the Local Government Board. Its real value may be judged from the fact that, as I am credibly informed, out of more than 20,000 casuals dealt with during the last five years, not fifty have received the special treatment on which such stress is laid.

A Carmarthen correspondent has drawn my attention to some interesting figures which show how the Tory Lords-Lieutenant of Wales have packed the Magisterial Bench with men of their own politics. The worst offender appears to be Lord Ormathwaite, in Radnorshire. Of the hundred J.P.'s in that county only three are Liberals. In Monmouthshire the Duke of Beaufort has nominated 163 of his Party friends to the Commission of the Peace, as compared with eleven Liberals. In Brecknockshire, where Sir Joseph Bailey is Lord-Lieutenant, there are 114 Tory and ten Liberal Magistrates, and in Cardiganshire the numbers are 113 and seventeen respectively. The one Liberal Lord-Lieutenant mentioned in the return is Lord Kensington in Pembrokeshire, and even in that county ninety-six Tories have been raised to the Bench as against thirty-eight Liberals. But, of course, this scandalous state of things is not confined to Wales. In practically every county in England the Tories have the same virtual monopoly of the Bench. Thus I find that in Herefordshire there are 208 Tory Magistrates and only seven Liberals; in Shropshire there are four Liberals and 200 Tories; in Hampshire twelve Liberals and 234 Tories; in Nottingham five Liberals and 115 Tories; in Wiltshire sixteen Liberals and 186 Tories; in Kent twenty-four Liberals and 315 Tories—and so the proportion continues throughout the list of counties. It is in face of such figures as these that the Lords-Lieutenant have had the effrontery to tell the public that politics do not influence their appointments.

With the commencement of the Long Vacation the Benchers of the Inner Temple have begun the rebuilding of the old houses in Hare-court. The work is not started a moment too soon, as these old houses are some of those in the Temple to which I recently referred as being almost entirely without any sort of sanitary conveniences.

A Barrister who claims to speak with authority takes exception to the criticism of the Bar Association in TRUTH of the 10th inst. It so happens that I derived my former opinion about the Association from a barrister whom I also regard as a witness of truth. I am consequently not prepared to surrender it offhand. Here, however, is the account of the matter given by Barrister No. 2, and I hope it may be correct, for there can be no doubt that the objects which the Association has in view are of the best:—

> The Bar Association is in no way a rival of the Bar Committee, but stands in relation to that body in much the same position as the Reform League did to the unreformed House of Commons. It is an Association directed to the development of the Bar Committee, by increasing its powers, its representative character, and its machinery. Several members of that Committee are supporters of the Association because they believe that the former is a valuable instrument, and is capable of being greatly improved. Nearly all the leading Seniors and Juniors of the Common Law side have promised to support the Association, but the members of the Chancery Division have not yet been canvassed.

Doubtless many of my readers will recollect a libel action which was brought against me some years ago by Mr. Lewis Simmonds, who came out of the case second

"TRUTH" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for the Continent, America, and the Colonies (India and China excepted) is, 3 months, 7s. 7d.; 6 months, 15s. 2d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 4d.; and to India and China, 3 months, 8s. 2d.; 6 months, 16s. 4d.; and 12 months, £1. 12s. 6d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the MANAGER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

SANITARY SURVEYS.—Fee for inspection and Report in London, 2Gs.—The Sanitary Engineering Co., 65, Victoria-st., Westminster.

best. The following extract from the report of a public examination in the Croydon Bankruptcy court last week will probably be found of interest :—

William Henry Longuehaye stated that in 1888 he borrowed of a Mr. Lewis Simmonds £200 on a bill of sale. The agreed rate of interest was 40 per cent. per annum. The capital was to remain. In the first two years he paid £160 interest, and in the next fifteen months £177, which included interest and law charges.

Mr. Registrar Fox : Then you paid back £337 ?

The Debtor : I should say more.

The Registrar : At all events, deducting £50 for which you were security for your brother, you paid back the amount of the capital and £87 besides, yet Mr. Simmonds, who is the petitioning creditor, says that £250 is still owing. You paid £287, and then there was a judgment for £469, which makes £756 total of the debt unpaid. The £200 loan has grown into £806, of which a sum of £200 is returned as "secured." I like to get to the bottom of these things, as some day there may be an application to prosecute in one of these cases.

Mr. D. E. Williams, the Cefn Magistrate whose action in regard to public-house licences has been the subject of some questions in Parliament, has been interviewed by the Western Mail. He stated that he had never granted a new licence, and never would, and that he would never sanction the transfer of a licence to a woman. With all respect to Mr. Williams's views, this declaration seems to me tantamount to a refusal to exercise the discretion with which the Legislature has invested him. The duty of a Magistrate in regard to licences is to hear and dispose of each application on its merits, just as he would any criminal charge brought before him. If, owing to the views which he has conscientiously formed, he says, "I will never grant any application for a new licence, no matter what grounds are assigned for it;" or, "I will never grant a licence to a woman," he is in precisely the same position as if he said (on conscientious grounds), "I will never grant a summons against a Roman Catholic," or, "I will never convict a teetotaller of larceny." A Magistrate has the same freedom as any one else to form and express his opinions; but clearly, if he holds views which prevent him discharging Magisterial duties as they were intended to be discharged, he is bound to resign his office.

Where this Mr. Williams got the idea that women are necessarily unfit to carry on the business of licensed victuallers I do not know; but it is an error which could only be made by one with little experience of the insides of public-houses. Not long since, I read some of the most sensible remarks on public-house management that I have ever come across, in a letter addressed to me by a lady publican, who herself hailed from the Principality. Some portions of it I published in TRUTH, thinking that it contained useful reading for some of the less level-headed apostles of temperance. I have no doubt that this Madame Boniface has done more for the cause of temperance in her neighbourhood than many rabid propagandists. On my own experience, I can assert that some of the best-managed and most comfortable inns in England are owned by women. Still more true is this of France, where one sees everywhere the landlord occupying a back seat, while his wife manages the house. Only a theorist devoid of all practical knowledge of the subject would pledge himself never to grant a licence to a woman.

Apropos to a recent reference in TRUTH to the amount of perjury in Birmingham law courts, a correspondent gives me his experience of a very similar state of things at Manchester, more especially on judgment summonses against County Court debtors. The following evidence might with advantage be submitted to the House of Lords Committee on the Debtors Act :—

In this town solicitors' clerks, boys of 18 or 19, are sent to conduct cases, and I have frequently myself heard them giving evidence as to the debtor's means, and asking for committal orders. An order of this kind usually means that the debtor's friends must find the money or off to prison he goes. . . . If the debtor is decently dressed and has a few friends who for old acquaintance' sake offer him little kindnesses, ask him to dinner, take him for a ride, or give him a cigar, the lawyer's task is an easy one. He has only to swear that he has seen any little circumstance of this kind, and forthwith the order is granted. I have known such orders made on evidence of this nature, where the debtor was utterly impecunious, and both the creditors and the solicitor knew him to be so.

Last week a schoolmaster named Cope was summoned at Rugby Petty Sessions for assaulting a little girl nine years old. He caned the child because she did not pay attention to her work, and the severity of the punishment was demonstrated by four black bruises on her shoulder and two on her arm. His defence was that he only gave her "an ordinary caning." The Bench expressed the opinion, in which most people will concur, that he "went too far," but, nevertheless, they dismissed the summons on payment of the costs. Why the Bench should have stultified themselves in this way it is difficult to understand; for, as the defendant "went too far," he ought to have been convicted. For the sake of his pupils, however, it is to be hoped that he will be sufficiently warned by the case to moderate the vigour of his "ordinary caning."

A well-informed correspondent has written me in reference to two Torquay cases—one of begging, the other of cruelty to a horse—which appeared in my "Pillory" a fortnight ago. He points out that Torquay, like other towns having a large number of villa residents, is one of the happy hunting-grounds of the professional tramp; in fact, he has become such a nuisance that a Mendicity Society has been established for his suppression. With this object, residents and shopkeepers are supplied with the Society's tickets, one of which entitles a beggar or tramp to a loaf of bread, while, if the case seems a deserving one, further assistance is given. Such a system being in operation, there is no excuse for mendicants waylaying people and extorting alms, and I readily admit that it is the duty of the Magistrates to punish those who so offend. As to the other case which was pilloried, I am glad to learn that the Torquay Bench do not generally err on the side of leniency in regard to charges of cruelty to animals, and that it is their almost invariable practice to inflict imprisonment for the ill-treatment of women, unless there are very strong extenuating circumstances. If they will continue to act upon the excellent principles set forth by my correspondent, the Torquay J.P.s will be in little danger of an appearance in the Pillory

MAJOR HOWE & Co.'s fashionable Boots and Shoes (ready-made or to measure) for Ladies, Girls, and Gentlemen.—16, Coventry-st., W.; 100, Strand, W.C.; 81, Gracechurch-st., City; 13, Queen Victoria-street (Mansion House), London. (Klenrusha, Polish.)

The following is my Legal Pillory for the week. Without exhibiting any features of exceptional interest, it presents the customary instructive contrast between the lenity of the treatment accorded to defendants guilty of savage and blackguardly assaults on men, women, and children, or atrocious cruelty to dumb animals, and the unbending severity with which the Great Unpaid continue to visit orchard robberies and other petty larcenies and acts of vagrancy. In consequence of the tropical heat an unusual number of homeless and penniless wanderers have preferred to spend the night in the open air rather than in the stuffy casual wards. This is a very natural preference, but a monstrous law makes "sleeping out" a crime, which muddy-minded Magistrates delight to punish with hard labour. The folly and harshness of the law and of those who administer it have surely never been better illustrated than at Colchester, where a man who had sought a cool bed in a ditch was committed to prison for fourteen days:—

Willenhall Police-court. Before Messrs. Josiah Tildesley and J. T. Hartell. Joseph Wright, convicted of assaulting his wife by striking and kicking her. The Bench thought it a serious assault. Fined 20s. and costs.

Willenhall Police-court. Before the same Bench. James Legge, charged with vagrancy. Committed for 21 days in default of paying 20s. and costs.

Colchester Police-court. Before Messrs. W. Buck, C. H. T. Marshall, G. Moore, E. Worts, and J. B. Daniell. Henry Osborne Langley, charged with having assaulted his wife. He was under recognisances at the time. Ordered to find further sureties to keep the peace; in default one month.

Colchester Police-court. Before the same Bench. William Fisk, charged with sleeping in a ditch and being without visible means of subsistence. Committed for fourteen days in default of payment of a fine and costs.

Aldershot Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. F. H. Fitzroy, H. Foard Harris, and Major Newcombe. Horace Bedford, soldier, charged with indecent conduct with Jane Hill. Fined 21s.

Aldershot Petty Sessions. Before the same Magistrates. Jane Hill charged with indecent conduct with Horace Bedford. Six weeks.

Bootle Police-court. Before Messrs. T. A. Mack and J. P. M'Arthur. William Aynsley, charged with assaulting Mary Spiers. She was thrown down, striking her head against the pavement, and savagely beaten about the head and face, becoming insensible. Fined 20s. and costs.

Ilkeston Petty Sessions. Before Alderman W. Tatham and Mr. J. Ball. George Antliffe, charged with stealing peas and flowers from a garden. Twenty-one days.

Campden Petty Sessions. Before Canon Bourne, Mr. T. S. Shekell, and Mr. R. N. Chadwick. Frederick Herbert, a tradesman, charged with assaulting two little girls. He gave them a penny each "not to tell." Fined £2. 10s. in each case.

Ross Police-court. Before the Rev. E. B. Hawkshaw, Captain E. M. Allen, Mr. H. C. Moffat, and Dr. Strong. Frederick Healy, George Guy, and Frederick Hoare, charged with stealing apples from an orchard. Three weeks each without the option of a fine.

Bullingdon Petty Sessions. George Thorne, of High Wycombe, charged with cruelty to a horse. He beat the horse over the head and neck with an iron bar, and then knelt on its head till it was dead. A veterinary surgeon said the torture inflicted must have been very great. Fined £1, and £2 costs. Allowed a month to pay.

Bath City Police-court. Benjamin Bullock, pauper, charged with misbehaviour by climbing over the boundary wall of the workhouse; also with taking a quart of beer into the workhouse premises. Seven days.

Warrington Police-court. Before Messrs. John Fairclough, J. Geddes, and Councillor Fleming. John Allen, convicted of assaulting his wife, whom he struck in the eye, knocked down, and kicked. Ordered to pay costs and bound over.

Stone Police-court. Before Messrs. J. G. Child and G. Wedgwood. James Holding and Samuel Timmis, bootmen, charged with stealing a quantity of fruit from a garden. Fourteen days.

Herefordshire Cider & Perry, six distinct varieties. Gold Medal, Paris, 1888. The Bishop of Ely writes, 1892, "Your Cider & Perry are excellent." List from H. P. Bulmer & Co., Rylands, Hereford.

Wantage Petty Sessions. Before Colonel Colebrooke Carter and Mr. J. J. Eyston. Jonathan Tame, charged with cruelty to a mare, by withholding proper and sufficient food from July 14 to August 14. Fined £2. 6s.

Warwick Police-court. Before Alderman Stanton and Mr. W. Coltart. John Newton, charged with stealing 2 oz. of tobacco. Fourteen days.

Leek Police-court. Before Messrs. J. Robinson, W. S. Brough, A. Nicholson, H. Davenport, and Colonel Phillips. Alfred Fisher, charged with assaulting John Lindop, and John Brunt, charged with aiding and abetting. Fisher knocked Lindop down and then kicked him, breaking his arm in two places. Brunt egged him on. Fisher fined £5, Brunt 50s.

Smethwick Police-court. Joseph Henry Dabman, aged 15, charged with loitering with intent to commit a felony. The only evidence against the prisoner was that he walked down the street with two other youths at 12.40 a.m., and that they ran away when they saw two policemen. Fourteen days.

Paisley Sheriff-court. Before Hon. Sheriff Caldwell. David M'Killop, convicted of assaulting his wife by cutting her on the hand, beating her with his fists, and kicking her. Fined 20s.

Axbridge Police-court. Before the Rev. J. A. Yatman, Messrs. C. L. F. Edwards and C. J. Simmons. James Holbrook, George Norris, and William Rex, colliers, charged with poaching. Two months each.

Lisburn Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. W. T. Stannus, T. Dunlop Gibson, R.M., and J. Crossin. Mary Jane M'Kee charged with stealing a pint of whisky. One month.

Larne Police-court. Before Mr. David Nelson. Eliza Scott charged with vagrancy. One month.

East Harling Petty Sessions. Before Sir G. C. Nugent, Bart., Major Keppel, and other Magistrates. Thurston Gower and Harry Gower, charged with sleeping in a loft. One month.

Lynn Police-court. Before the Mayor. John Spencer, charged with sleeping out under a boat in the market-place. Fourteen days.

I am curious to learn the precise extent of the ill-usage which a wife must undergo before she can obtain a judicial separation at the Thames Police-court. Last week a brute named Edwards was convicted of assaulting his wife. It was proved that he struck her a blow in the eye, forced her against a wall, and punched her in the side with such violence that she became insensible and was removed to the London Hospital. Ten days afterwards she still suffered great pain and could scarcely walk. It was further stated that the defendant had previously assaulted the woman, that less than a fortnight before he had been bound over to keep the peace towards her, and that for upwards of two years she had had to maintain him and their children because he would not work. Mr. Mead correctly characterised the assault as a bad one and passed a well-deserved sentence of six weeks' hard labour; but at the same time declared that the case was "not sufficiently strong" to enable him to grant a separation. Truly a choice exposition of Magisterial inconsistency and injustice! It simply means that the unfortunate Mrs. Edwards must submit to another savage attack, and, perhaps, be carried again to the hospital, in order to secure legal protection from her amiable spouse.

It is always gratifying to see a stand made against Magisterial impertinence. At Poole Police-court last week a man was summoned for being drunk and disorderly, and Mr. Budge, solicitor, appeared for the defence. This was indicated in the ordinary way, but the information did not satisfy Mr. Norton, J.P., and he asked Mr. Budge whether he was representing the Licensed Victuallers' Association. Mr. Budge replied that he appeared for the defendant. Thereupon Mr. Norton turned to the defendant, and inquired whether he had retained Mr. Budge. As a matter of fact, the defendant nd retained Mr. Budge. But the Magistrate's question, fter he had received one assurance on the point, was rossly improper and offensive, to say nothing of the rejudice in regard to such cases which it revealed. I am leased, therefore, to notice that Mr. Budge did not allow he incident to pass until he had entered a strong protest, nd told Mr. Norton that a more impudent question was ever put from the Bench.

As a tribunal for the perpetration of injustice, a Royal rish Constabulary Court of Inquiry seems fully equal o the average Court-martial. Such a Court, consisting f two District-Inspectors, was recently held at Taghmon, Wexford, to investigate a charge against Sergeant W. J. Byrne of having written three letters "to the prejudice f morality and the discipline of the force." It was lleged that the letters were addressed to Maggie Ennis, servant in the employment of Mr. J. Joyce, Clerk of he Petty Sessions, and an ex-Head Constable, and that hey were found in the girl's bedroom. Mr. Joyce leposed that the letters, which were signed "W.," struck him" as being in Byrne's handwriting, and two olice officers "believed" they were. This was practically ll the evidence—if it can be called evidence—in support f the charge.

The Court declined to allow the accused to be examined, ut he handed in a written statement declaring that the etters were forgeries, got up to ruin him, and the girl Ennis was called, and positively denied that she had ever eceived the letters, or that there had ever been any mproper relations between her and the Sergeant. She sserted, moreover, that Joyce had asked her to make an ppointment with Byrne, so that he could be watched; nd the girl's mother said Joyce told her "he would do is best on Byrne." Incredible as it may appear, the esult of these proceedings is Sergeant Byrne's dismissal rom the force, in which he has served for twenty-three years. As a Wexford correspondent puts it, if men are to be discharged on mere suspicion or on the "belief" of unskilled witnesses as to handwriting, nobody in the Service can be safe.

Judging from what took place at the meeting of the Glossop Watch Committee last week, that body itself needs to be closely watched. The Chief Constable submitted a report by one of his sergeants of a disturbance at an hotel in which the Chairman of the Committee (Captain Partington, J.P.), the Chairman of the Guardians, and other "gentlemen of the borough" were implicated. It was very much like an ordinary tavern row, most of those concerned being "far gone in drink," and the police being "pushed in all directions." Captain Partington's share in the affair was indicated by the statement that he "got hold of Goddard by the front and tie, and they began pulling each other about." If the offending parties had been working men the Chief Constable would, of course, have taken proceedings against them on his own responsibility. As they were not, he brought the matter before the Watch Committee—Captain Partington presiding. The Committee disposed of it by resolving that the report lie upon the table, and the Captain facetiously observed that it would do "to be read that day twelve months." This airy method of dealing with the business may suit Captain Partington and the select circle of the "gentlemen of the borough," but it is hardly likely to satisfy the rest of the inhabitants.

In regard to Angus Maclean and his "British and Foreign Association," I have received since my last reference to the matter letters from the following gentlemen advertised as "Honorary Members":—Mr. Henry Arthur Jones, Mr. Sydney F. Hoffnung, the Hon. Horace Hobart Hampden, Professor Alleyne Nicholson, and M. Paul Blouët. What all these gentlemen say amounts to this; that they have either no recollection of ever having subscribed to Maclean's Association, or that having been induced to subscribe years ago, they had forgotten its existence, and supposed, the journal having ceased to appear, that it was defunct. They now authorise me to say that they are no longer connected with Maclean, and that he has no authority to make use of their names. Should Maclean hereafter venture to issue any of his old circulars he will now have to eliminate the greater number of his former patrons. The "British and Foreign Association" has, in fact, ceased to exist, and any further attempt to obtain money in its name should be promptly made the subject of criminal proceedings.

My attention has been called to a very curious fact. Hobbs, the friend of Jabez Balfour in his prosperity, and now, in his adversity, the intimate of her Majesty's prison officials, was, like his patron, a very pious man. Among other good deeds, he gave a peal of bells to a Congregational Church in Croydon. These used to play with remarkable accuracy and precision. Strange to say, since Mr. Hobbs found himself in the dock, they have gone utterly wrong, and, in spite of all efforts, remain so to this day. I commend the matter to the attention of the society relating to spooks.

Mrs. George Hewson, of Ennismore, Listowel, is collecting in this country money and gifts in kind on behalf of distressed Irish ladies and children of the landlord class. To this there can be no objection whatever. But Mrs. Hewson also posts with her circulars tickets for a lottery which she is promoting "for one sad case." To this there is every objection. Lotteries are illegal in this country. The gambling instinct consequently cannot be invoked for the benefit of distressed English or Scotch women and their children (of whom there are quite enough), and it is a monstrous thing that distressed Irish people should have this advantage over distressed English and Scotch people.

I gather from the form of Mrs. Hewson's letter, which is a printed circular, with the names of Mrs. George Hewson and the lady to whom it is addressed written in, that this is in reality a circular, issued by some association, which benevolent ladies undertake to send out with their names upon it. In that case doubtless large numbers have been received in this country, and the recipients would do well to bear in mind that they are not, as they purport to be, isolated appeals from the individuals whose names appear on them, but part of an effort to raise money which is being engineered on a large scale.

In preparation for the approaching sporting season, ladies and gentlemen should visit Ulster House, Conduit-street, W., where their orders for every kind of garment will have prompt and careful attention.

By the way, I regret to see that the lottery for the benefit of the Church of SS. Augustine and John, Dublin, to which I have several times referred, is still being advertised by circulars in England and Wales. It is by no means creditable to those engaged in charity and Church work in Ireland that they should have recourse to methods which reduce them to the level of the touting, and often disreputable, agents of Continental lotteries.

I print the letter which appears below for the instruction and amusement of my lady readers. The postscript in particular affords striking evidence of what our domestic servants are coming to. It is only a short step from this to being asked to forward testimonials to character from your former servants:—

Cornwall, August 10.

Madam, I heard from Mrs. —— that you are in want of a nurse. I write to ask how many children you have, and what wages you give, and if you have your nursery waited on, and what you wish your nurse to do. I lived in my last place nine years; I left as I wanted a change. I have been taking £26 a year with all found. With my last baby I had the nursery waited on; before that I had a nursery-maid. If you think I shall suit you I shall be glad to hear from you soon.—I remain, Madam, yours obediently, Mary ——.

P.S.—How long did your last nurse live with you, and why did she leave?

My appeal for information as to the length to which ladies' back hair has been known to run has brought me evidence of one authentic case which completely eclipses the record of the friend of my friend at the Reform Club. In this instance the lady's hair measures 7 ft. 4 in. The fact is authenticated in the most satisfactory way by the certificate of a gentleman at Richmond, who is, I see, privileged by special appointment to dress several of the Crowned Heads of Europe. I do not know whether the lady in question is altogether to be envied, for two yards and a half of back hair must be a somewhat embarrassing adornment. Nature is, indeed, most capricious in the distribution of her favours; for, while this lady would, perhaps, gladly spare a few feet of her tresses, I happen to know several who are put to considerable expense in order to supply their deficiencies in this direction.

People who imagine that the age of serfdom is gone should study a copy of an agreement between a Wiltshire farmer and a labourer which has been published in Land and Labour. The labourer is engaged to serve for one year "more particularly in the capacity of cowman, but also in any work that may be required of him;" and he is to be "always at his work, at all hours and times required by the master or his agent." The labourer may thus be called upon to work eighteen hours out of every twenty-four, and the agreement provides that twopence may be deducted from his wages for every fifteen minutes that he absents himself by being late in the morning or otherwise. It is also set forth that he is to milk not less than ten cows at a milking, and that if any cow be found to be only partially milked a fine of half-a-crown may be imposed. For fulfilling these and other conditions, such as abstaining from the use of profane language—which this kind of servitude would be apt to provoke—he is to be remunerated at the handsome rate of seven shillings per week for the first half of the term and eight shillings for the second. Yet there are people who wonder why Hodge is discontented with his lot!

Concerning "Silly Season" Correspondence.

O Editors! d'you think it meet
To mark the Silly Season
By a negation so complete
Of common-sense and reason?
D'you think it wise, amidst this heat,
Suggestive of the Tropics,
Your brains to rack to find a pack
Of Silly Season topics?

Most subjects may, 'tis true, possess
A faddy or a "viewy" side,
But is it worthy of the Press
To make a jest of suicide?
The things most valued by our race
To flippantly disparage?
And, just to cheaply fill up space,
To make a mock of marriage?

Is it discreet to columns fill
With correspondents' vapouring?
To give a page to make a stage
For 'Arry's brainless capering?
To air the silliest conceits
That ever pleased the gapers?
And day by day, to make them pay,
To prostitute your papers?

No, no, if "copy" 'tis you lack
When London's season dwindles,
Are there no rogues you can attack,
No gross and open swindles?
Can you not seize the chance to make
Some effort philanthropic?
And end, for journalism's sake,
The "Silly Season Topic"?

I have received a good deal of correspondence with reference to recent remarks in Truth on the patent-medicine tax. No one, so far as I can see, can produce an intelligible argument in favour of the tax, while the objections to it are legion. I have much pleasure, therefore, in again recommending this impost to Sir William Harcourt for summary execution in his next Budget. The duty is theoretically unsound, as being an indirect tax on articles, many of which may be classed as necessaries. In practice, it is open to the further objection that the Government stamp, by which the duty is collected, creates in the minds of the ignorant the impression that the articles so distinguished are in some way approved by Government. There is no such tax at present in force, so far as I can learn, in any other civilised country, and the Americans, who formerly enforced one like it, have given it up. The only possible

Rimmel's Toilet Vinegar has for over half a century sustained its high reputation as an indispensable toilet requisite. Delightfully cooling to the skin.—96, Strand; 180, Regent-st.; 64, Cheapside.

Pfungst Frères' Extra Quality Champagnes.—This select brand can be supplied through any Wine Merchant, or by the Agents, J. L. Pfungst & Co., 23, Crutched Friars, E.C.

reason for maintaining it is the difficulty of supplying its place, and to a Radical Chancellor of the Exchequer that ought to be no reason at all, so long as the burden of taxation stands, as it does, in need of readjustment all round.

Unless we are to ignore every principle of Christianity of civilisation, and of justice, the Imperial Government must keep an eye on that speculating buccaneer, Mr. Cecil Rhodes. He managed to get a mining concession from Lobengula. This he converted, by the connivance of the Imperial Government, into a charter giving him a sort of lordship over Mashonaland and Matabeleland, the consideration being that he should make two Dukes life Directors of his Company. What he proposes now is set forth in a letter from the Times correspondent at Cape Town. It would seem that the fact of the existence of Lobengula is exercising a deterrent influence on speculators, and only Mr. Rhodes' friends are prospecting for mines, whilst there is a "conviction that within the zone hitherto reserved by Lobengula from the free observation of prospecting parties, important gold-bearing reefs and alluvial deposits exist." Lobengula and his people are, therefore, to be treated in the following way:—One thousand sharpshooters, armed with magazine rifles and having with them several machine-guns, are to be turned loose. In such a campaign, observes the correspondent, our losses would be nil; for we should "keep to the open country, and constantly harass the enemy by repeated attacks, and delivery of well-directed volleys, always keeping beyond the range of assegais." The operation, it is estimated, would cost about half a million, and owing to the rich gold deposits, it would probably prove highly remunerative.

In plain language, the meaning of all this is, that Lobengula owns a gold-bearing country, and objects to our taking the gold. Therefore he and his people are to be shot down, when we shall be able to loot the gold. The correspondent, however, explains that the Matabeles are to be killed, because it is monstrous that any Mashonas in the employ of our missionaries in Mashonaland are to incur the risk of being shot by Lobengula's Impis.

To me, the worst feature in our South African buccaneering is the hideous hyprocrisy beneath which we veil our greed for gold. It is like Mr. Jabez Balfour appealing to Heaven to witness the philanthropy that actuated him when engaged in financing. The South Africa Chartered Company is one of the worst Companies—in its financing aspect—that ever existed. It ought never to have obtained a Royal Charter. It, unfortunately, did so, and, as we have by granting it accepted responsibilities, the least thing that we can do is to take care that a gang of financiers do not murder thousands of Matabeles, living under their King, in order that the gang may get hold of some gold reefs, and bring them out as rotten Companies.

FIELALBO.—Cleans buff gloves, belts, liveries, girths, shoes, &c. Perfectly white. Guaranteed not to rub off. Supersedes pipeclay.—FIELALBO Co., 31, Francis-street, Woolwich. Sample free.

The plan of campaign of the Unionists is now openly avowed. In their contention that the Home Rule Bill was so complicated, and involved so many issues of detail, that an entire session ought to be devoted to it, there was, I admit, some force. But they now go further, and announce that, so soon as the Lords have thrown out the Bill, the House of Commons is functus officio, and that consequently they will do all in their power to prevent legislation, good, bad, or indifferent, in order to force an immediate appeal to the constituencies. This practically means that the House of Lords, in which there is a permanent Tory majority, may, by its action, oblige a Liberal Government, supported by a Liberal majority in the Commons, to dissolve Parliament, whenever the moment seems opportune to the Tory Party. Such a pretension cannot be entertained for a moment. But if the Tory party has the courage of its opinions, it ought to insist upon the Lords throwing out every Bill sent up to it by a House of Commons that it has condemned to dissolution. If the Lords will do this, I for one, shall not regret it, as it will be, not one nail, but the last nail, that is required to close the coffin which will be the last home of that Hereditary Legislative Chamber.

That the Home Rule Bill will be carried in the Commons and thrown out in the Lords is admitted. What then? It is clear that, as the bold policy of creating Peers in order to overcome the resistance of the Lords will not be adopted, the issue will be thrown back upon the electorate. But this will not be the only issue at the General Election. Assuming that the decision is for us, will the Lords accept it, or will they say, as now, that, owing to the many issues submitted, the elections, although in our favour, were not distinctly in favour of Home Rule? If so, how is the question to be decided? Are we for ever to pass Home Rule Bills and to see them thrown out by the Lords?

Of course, were the country practically united for Home Rule, the Lords would have to yield. But this is not the case at present, and, looking to probabilities, it is not likely to be the case at the next General Election. For this there are several reasons. The electoral man is a selfish animal. It is almost impossible to arouse enthusiasm in constituencies for what concerns others, and not themselves. Many, to their credit be it said, would give Home Rule to Ireland as a matter of abstract justice. Many deem that the country would collectively be benefited by placing the relations between the two islands upon a basis acceptable to Ireland. Many would wish the question to be settled in order to afford time for British legislation. Nevertheless, the result of the last election showed that there were more in Great Britain against Home Rule than for it; and I cannot help thinking that the plea that the voice of Great Britain should be potent in such an organic change in our Constitution as is involved in Home Rule will exercise a very powerful effect on the British electorate; that, in fact, the merits of the change will be merged in the question whether any change ought to take place without the assent of Great Britain.

This is why I so greatly deplore the Bill not granting immediate and full Home Rule, instead of reserving the main essential of Home Rule to the Imperial Parliament for a term of years. We thus deprive ourselves of the advantage of that craving for finality which secured us many votes at the last Election. A Home Rule Act, which renders it probable that during a term of years the Imperial Parliament will not be much more free to devote its time to British legislation than it is now, cannot create any great enthusiasm amongst those who would grant self-government to Ireland in order to ensure a clear field for domestic legislation in Great Britain.

I sincerely hope that the next General Election will result in an overwhelming majority for Home Rule. But it is obvious that, as sensible men, we must contemplate the possibility of the reverse happening. To take for granted that what we wish must occur is only worthy of fools. What, then, ought to be done? We ought to declare at once for Home Rule all round, and go to the Election with this cry.

In Ireland, Home Rule is a more pressing and immediate necessity than in the other parts of the United Kingdom, and whilst we should be prepared to grant self-government to Ireland, even if it be not desired by England, Scotland, and Wales, yet we ought to make it clear that our aim is to have four local Parliaments, with one Parliament sitting at Westminster, and limiting its functions to Imperial matters. Should we win the Election—as I believe that we should with this programme—it ought to be understood that we should proceed at once to give effect to it.

Nothing is more easy than to point to difficulties of detail in giving self-government to one portion alone of the United Kingdom, and retaining the other portions under an Imperial Parliament, which would be charged with all local affairs except those of Ireland, and also with many Irish local affairs, and in which the Irish would sit and vote on British local affairs. On the other hand, these difficulties would disappear were each component portion of the United Kingdom to have its own local Parliament. Mutatis mutandis, we might adopt the Federal system of the United States. The local Parliaments, like the State Legislatures in America, would be absolute masters in regard to all local matters within their respective areas. The Imperial Parliament would be absolute master within the matters reserved to it. There would be a Judicial Court pronouncing between the Imperial and the local Parliaments, should any conflict of interpretation arise. To say that such a system would disintegrate the Empire would be absurd; for experience has shown in America that, far from exercising a disintegrating influence, it unites an Empire. For my part, I should not object to the American "Referendum," were any change in this Constitution proposed.

What is our present position? We have an Upper House, which has become Tory in the party sense of the word, and the membership of which is utterly at variance with the most elementary ideas of democracy. We have a House of Commons that is so overcharged with work that business can almost be brought to a standstill by insisting that everything submitted to it shall be properly done. Our political Constitution, indeed, is little better than a pernicious farce; it has outlived its time. Instead of lauding this Constitution, we ought to laud our own excellences as a nation, because we somehow manage to get on under it.

I am a local optionist, but what can be more ridiculous than that the vexed liquor question in England should be solved by Irish votes; that England should impose upon Scotland an Established Church, although not one Englishman in ten thousand knows what this Established Church is; and on Wales an Established Church, to which the vast majority of Welshmen are bitterly antagonistic? Absurdities such as these might be multiplied by the thousand. And when we know that they might all be rendered impossible by a little boldness and common-sense, I refuse to believe that my country men are not prepared to deal with them in accordance with common-sense.

Our mania for long was to find stability in a system of government in which the monarchical, the aristocratic, and the popular elements balanced each other. The two first, however, have ceased to be ruling factors. The monarch is nominis umbra. The aristocracy is no longer powerful, as it was when its members were great territorial magnates, with a right derived from birth to a place in the councils of the nation. With few exceptions their wealth has disappeared, they are not even locally important, and their Legislative House has to be recruited from brewers who have pocketed millions by converting their breweries into some more or less rotten Company, from financiers who have financed themselves into wealth, and from Parliamentarians more painstaking than distinguished. Democracy has swallowed up its two opponents, and out of Democracy we must evolve the balance.

This can only be done by drawing a line between what is Imperial and what is local. We must educate all into being citizens of the whole country by making them citizens of parts of the country. The edifice should be built up from the village—the villager master of all village affairs, the inhabitant of a county master of all county affairs, the Englishman, the Scotchman, the Irishman, and the Welshman master of the respective affairs of each of these national divisions, whilst the Imperial Council of the nation should be the crowning of the capital. To me it is a matter of surprise that Conservatives do not perceive how stable a political edifice would thus be reared, and that Radicals do not perceive that centralisation makes men rather machines than self-governing citizens.

Hereford is a straw, but straws show which way the wind blows. I never regard it as wise to blink facts. A fool's paradise is, to my thinking, the very worst of habitations. The Liberal Party has been in power for a year, and it certainly has not confirmed its position in the country. Why is this? At the commencement of the Session it brought in a vast number of Bills, without apparently considering that with Home Rule to be carried there could not be time to pass the major portion of them. As a matter of tactics I thought this a mistake, for it excited false hopes amongst those who do not know the time difficulty of passing many Bills in a Session. The payment of members might have been secured by provision being made for it in the Budget. This would have been a Radical bird in the hand. But the Radicals were told that, whilst they might, if they pleased, have a proviso inserted in the Budget securing payment to those Members who were without private means, payment to all could not be granted. The Radicals declined what they considered would make an invidious distinction amongst members. But why were they given the choice between this invidious distinction or nothing?

A resolution was carried affirming that County Magistrates ought to be appointed irrespective of the so-called right of the Lords-Lieutenant to select them. The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster acted on this resolution. The Lord Chancellor has not given full effect to it, but appears to think that Lords-Lieutenant are sacred beings, whose likes and dislikes ought to be respected in regard to magisterial appointments.

In our foreign relations, we have taken no step to carry out the assurances given by Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Morley before the General Election in respect to our position in Egypt, whilst we have assumed responsibilities in Uganda against the possibility of which we protested when the Conservatives were in power. Finally, we have a Home Rule Bill which withdraws from the Irish Legislature for a term of years the most essential elements of Home Rule, and leaves these to be discussed during this term ad nauseam by the Imperial Parliament. The Bill of 1886, which gave form to the views of Mr. Gladstone, has thus been whittled down. Why? This has not lessened the opposition of those opposed to Home Rule, whilst it has diminished the enthusiasm of those who hoped for a full and final settlement of the question.

The proof of the pudding is in the eating. If we have not improved our position, but rather the reverse, our tactics have been bad, if our principles have been sound; and as it is in battles, so it is in politics—a good cause without good tactics goes to the wall. We must amend our tactics next Session if we are to regain the lost ground. Instead of trying to drive a dozen omnibuses through Temple Bar, we must bring in our Bills one after the other, and doggedly stick to each Bill until it goes up to the Lords. The Session ought to last eight months; allow three for Estimates, Budget, and current business, there would remain five for Bills. One month would suffice for fair and full discussion of each Bill. If we are able to send up to the Lords five important Bills, giving legislative effect to the Newcastle Programme, we should, I am convinced, be in a position to face a General Election without fear for the result. The Bills, however, must be no half-measures, but Radical to the core. If the Lords seek to amend them, we must accept none of their whittling-down amendments, but throw on the Lords the responsibility of having hindered the Bills becoming law.

STAR & GARTER HOTEL, Richmond Hill, S.W. High, dry, & healthy. Famed for its Guild and Corporation banquets, wedding breakfasts, balls, &c. Unrivalled winter residence.—CHAS. JAMES Manager.

SCRUTATOR.

"TAKASHIMA'S SWEETHEART."

READERS of TRUTH will be glad to hear that the article which I published under the above head last week has not been written in vain. After its appearance, I received a visit from a legal gentleman representing the Japanese Legation, who informed me that the Minister, Viscount Kawase, having seen the article, and thereby for the first time become really aware of the facts, was most anxious that justice should be done in the matter. As regards my suggestion that the Minister's protection should be withdrawn, and Takashima be handed over to the English law, it was pointed out that even if this were done, and an order made against Takashima for the maintenance of the child, it would be impossible to prevent the man defeating the ends of justice by returning to Japan. The force of this I, of course, recognise. To avoid such a result, Viscount Kawase proposes, in a most generous manner, to himself offer "Helena D." some reparation for the wrong that has been done her. The precise form that this reparation shall take remains to be determined by further negotiation. In the meantime, however, I think it right to make the position of affairs public, in order to show the very prompt and liberal manner in which the case has been taken up at the Japanese Legation. By next week I shall hope to be able to report that Takashima's sweetheart is out of her troubles—so far as, in the nature of the case, it is possible that she should be.

THE SCANDAL AT BODMIN DEPOT.

The case against Quartermaster-Sergeant Wilson, to which several allusions have been made in TRUTH, has ended for the present in the prisoner being reduced to the rank of Corporal. The circumstances, however, out of which this particular charge arose ought not to be lost sight of at this point. Two charges were preferred against Wilson of "conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline." They were founded on a letter addressed by him to the Officer Commanding the Depot on July 10. The first charge was that in this letter he "improperly accused Sergeant-Major John Johnstone, Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, of continued robbery of the Sergeants' Mess, whereas the irregularities connected therewith as regards the above Warrant Officer, after having been made the subject of a Court of Inquiry, had been formally disposed of by superior authority." The second was that in the same letter he used the following "disrespectful and highly improper language towards Captain and Adjutant Ralph James Wilbraham: 'The Sergeant-Major has been satisfying the vindictive spirit of the Adjutant.'" As already mentioned in TRUTH, the Court found the prisoner guilty on both charges. On such reports of the evidence as I have yet seen, the finding is most difficult to understand, and I am glad to hear that it is to be appealed against. I do not propose, however, to discuss here the merits of the verdict or of the sentence, for my view is that the trial was a farce, and, under the circumstances of the case, was bound to be a farce. On this point the reader will be in a better position to form an opinion when I have stated more in detail what those circumstances were.

Wilson has been in hot water more or less continuously since the early part of this year, when an allusion was incidentally made to his case in the article in which I first endeavoured to point out the worst shortcomings of Depot management. The Court of Inquiry, which is referred to above as having disposed of the imputations on the Sergeant-Major, arose out of charges then preferred by Wilson in a letter to the General Officer Commanding the Western District. Wilson took the irregular step of addressing the General, on the ground that the representations which he made to the Commanding Officer of the Depot were abortive. He was, in the first instance, placed under arrest for the technical offence of making a representation to the General otherwise than through the authorised channel. The Court of Inquiry, however, which resulted from his allegations, found that everything was practically as he had stated it. A more disgraceful catalogue of scandals could hardly be imagined. The Mess accounts had been most irregularly kept, and in places bore evidence of falsification. The Sergeant-Major had been receiving commissions systematically from tradesmen who supplied the Mess, which was, perhaps, the least of his offences, for I fear the practice is all but universal. He was in debt in the town, and had borrowed money from the bank, and one tradesman—he seems to have been a publican—had written to the Adjutant respecting his indebtedness. What was far more serious, he had borrowed money all round from the members of the Mess, and evidence was forthcoming, as might be expected, that those N.C.O.'s who were in his debt were favoured at the expense of their comrades. This matter had been brought to the notice of Colonel Swiney, the then Commanding Officer, so far back as July, 1890, by one of the Colour-Sergeants, who made a report in consequence of the Sergeant-Major having attempted to borrow half-a-crown from another N.C.O. on parade! Colonel Swiney strongly reprimanded the Sergeant-Major on this occasion, but he seems to have made no attempt whatever to ascertain whether such practices were continued. It is proved conclusively that they were. The Colour-Sergeant who reported the matter in 1890 (when he called four N.C.O.'s to prove his statements) gave the following evidence:—

Q. Did you think when the report was made that unequal justice was being weighed out by Sergeant-Major Johnstone?—A. Yes. Those were the grounds of my complaint to Colonel Swiney.

Q. Were the N.C.O.'s to whom the Sergeant-Major owed money more favoured than others?—A. I considered they were, and I made my report.

The official most favoured with Johnstone's applications for assistance was the Mess Caterer. An N.C.O. who formerly held that office deposed as follows:—

Q. Did Sergeant-Major Johnstone ever borrow money from you?—A. Yes. Once during that time he asked me to lend him £1. I told him I had no money of my own, and only Mess money, and that I could not lend.

Q. Do you think that the refusal of this money by you prejudiced you with the Sergeant-Major?—A. Yes. For instance, I was late for parade. I was brought up in front of the Adjutant, whilst other N.C.O.'s, equally late, were not brought up.

Q. For how long has this ill-feeling been going on between you and the Sergeant-Major?—A. The Sergeant-Major showed no ill-feeling towards me until he tried to borrow money from me, and after that I could do nothing right.

More damning evidence could hardly be given. This occurred as far back as 1887. The Sergeant-Major continued, by his own admission, to borrow money of the Mess Caterers down to April, 1892. Apparently it was usually the Mess money, for Johnstone was closely pressed as to whether his notes of hand were not accepted in lieu of cash when the accounts were balanced, and he asserted that he always repaid his advances in cash before the monthly settlements. An I O U of his, however, to the Mess Caterer, dated April 30, 1892, was put in evidence, and was proved to have been handed to the Mess President in lieu of cash in June, 1892. This circumstance was reported by the Mess President to the Officer then in command, which may possibly explain why the Sergeant-Major's April borrowing was the last one.

Such were the main points affecting Sergeant-Major Johnstone, brought out at the inquiry in March. To my mind they conclusively establish that the Sergeant-Major had grossly abused his trust and his authority, and that he is a man totally unfit to remain in the position he holds. No one capable of forming an unbiassed opinion on the facts will hesitate to concur in this view. On the other hand, Quartermaster-Sergeant Wilson proved his allegations up to the hilt. He is therefore entitled to the credit of having committed a technical offence (thereby taking a most serious risk upon himself) for the purpose of exposing the gravest irregularities in the public service. For such action he is entitled to the gratitude of the public, and of all who have the best interests of the Service at heart. Now, observe the consequences of his action to himself and the Sergeant-Major, respectively. For Wilson, the Court of Inquiry was the beginning of several months' systematic persecution, culminating in a trial by court-martial, degradation, and the ruin of an honourable career extending over seventeen years. On the other hand, so far as the Sergeant-Major is concerned, the whole of these disclosures at the Court of Inquiry have passed practically unpunished. The utmost that I can find to have happened to him is that Colonel Gillies, who has recently succeeded Colonel

CAUTION. The Goldsmiths & Silversmiths' Company, 112, Regent-street, W., beg to state that they have purchased the whole of the business of the Goldsmiths' Alliance, Limited (A. B. Savory & Sons), late of Cornhill, but the stock being old and unsuitable for the Company's trade was disposed of to the Public by Auction at Christie's, and any statement to the contrary is inaccurate and misleading. The Company, having also bought the dies of the Goldsmiths' Alliance, Limited, is the only firm in a position to supply the Goldsmiths' Alliance patterns.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. Restores the colour. Renews the growth. Arrests the fall. Cleanses the scalp.

Swiney in the command of the Depot, "read over to him the General's decision." What that "decision" may have been I do not know; it is sufficient that it left Johnstone in full possession of his rank and honours, and free to use all his power to crush the man who had exposed him.

Concerning Wilson's treatment since the Court of Inquiry it is necessary to give a few details in proof of what I have said as to the impossibility of his receiving a fair trial at Bodmin. At the close of the Inquiry he was, of course, released, but with a reprimand, as though he had really committed a serious offence. In the Depot he was henceforth a marked man. Before the end of May he was made a prisoner on the ground of an offence which had been charged against him in November, 1891, the guard report on the matter having been mysteriously found and sent to Colonel Swiney for further inquiries. In point of fact, Colonel Swiney had dealt with the offence, such as it was, at the time by administering a reprimand, and making no entry of it. After twenty-two days under arrest on this trumped-up charge, Wilson was released without a word of explanation. A month later he made his new complaint to the Colonel respecting the state of things at the Depot, and was ordered for Court-martial. His treatment pending the trial—of which some particulars have already been given in TRUTH—appears to have been marked by every conceivable exhibition of petty and contemptible spite, and twice he successfully invoked the protection of the General. In the meantime similar treatment was being meted out to nearly all the men who had given evidence against the Sergeant-Major. Within a few days of the Court of Inquiry, one Colour-Sergeant who had given some interesting evidence, and who had not had a crime against him for eleven years, was severely reprimanded, on the evidence of the Sergeant-Major and Quartermaster, and packed off to join the Home Battalion in Ireland. Another Colour-Sergeant, one who had given evidence about the borrowing of money, and who had still two years to serve at the Depot, was quickly sent after him. A Sergeant and a Lance-Sergeant followed the same way. A Quartermaster-Sergeant, who had given important evidence, applied for his removal to a post in London; another man purchased his discharge, and so on. Thus by the time of Wilson's trial most of the men who had taken any part in the exposure of the Sergeant-Major's iniquities had been got rid of. Striking evidence was given at the trial by one or two as to the position at the Depot of Wilson and those who had given evidence on his side. From the following samples it will be seen that Wilson himself was practically boycotted all round, even his own friends being afraid to speak to him:—

Colour-Sergeant Keat said the members of the Sergeants' Mess had spoken but very little to the prisoner since March last. He did not himself, because he did not think it would be to his advantage, a Sergeant having been sent away a few months ago because he was friendly with the prisoner. . . . .

Edward Gent, formerly a Lance-Sergeant and assistant in the Orderly-room until May last, when he took his discharge by purchase, said his reasons for purchasing his discharge were that he would not join the service Battalion in Dublin, as ordered, having been previously promised by Colonel Swiney that his name should be registered for the Army Pay Department. He had never committed himself in the Depot or in the Regiment. [He was a man holding a First-class Certificate of Education, and had never been before an officer for an offence during his Army Service.] The only reason he could suggest for his proposed removal was that he had given evidence in the recent Court of Inquiry, which opinion was confirmed on the morning he applied for his discharge, when Colonel Gillies sent for him and told him he was only removing him for his own benefit, because he was labouring under the evil influence of the prisoner. . . . .

Sergeant Poulter said that he was sent away in May last from the Depot to the Home Battalion. He was in the habit of speaking to Quartermaster-Sergeant Wilson, but the demeanour of the other Non-Commissioned Officers was not very friendly. He believed that was the cause of his removal.

Colour-Sergeant Riddle said that since March last his (witness's) treatment had been bad. He attributed it to the fact that in March last, when he was escort in charge of the prisoner, he attached something to some papers at the request of the prisoner. . . . Prisoner since March last had barely been spoken to in the Sergeants' Mess.

That in the face of such a state of things as this Wilson had little chance of finding men to come forward in the Depot in support of his further allegations against the Sergeant-Major, requires no argument. The result of the trial under such conditions was a foregone conclusion. But perhaps the most astounding point in this part of the case is the evidence as to the attitude of the new Commanding Officer, Colonel Gillies. One statement on this head will be seen above, in the evidence of Lance-Sergeant Gent. In the case of the Quartermaster-Sergeant whose voluntary removal to another billet in London has been mentioned, Colonel Gillies was proved to have written the following memorandum in support of his application:—

To Assistant-Adjutant-General.—Quartermaster-Sergeant Hamblyn, Army Pay Department, is a firm supporter of Quartermaster-Sergeant Wilson, Orderly-room Clerk, 32nd Regimental District, who has caused and still is causing much trouble here. I therefore beg most strongly to recommend this application.

If it is clear that Wilson and all who had acted with him in March were placed under a rigorous boycott, it is here proved that the Commanding Officer was countenancing and assisting the operation. What is the meaning of these words, "has caused and still is causing much trouble here"? Some explanation is due from Colonel Gillies on this point. At the time of this memorandum, as at the time of the Colonel's speech testified to by Gent, there was nothing whatever against Wilson, except that he had rendered a valuable public service by exposing a course of scandalous misconduct. That his Commanding Officer should in an official communication describe this as "causing much trouble," and that he should deliberately set himself (as he has admitted he did) to hound out of the Depot all who had assisted Wilson in the performance of this service, is one of the worst features in a scandal which reflects nothing but discredit upon every one of the military authorities who have had to deal with it.

There is one other matter which I would gladly pass over, but some reference to it is necessary to complete the exposure of the utter demoralisation of this Depot, and the shameful remissness of the Officers who have had the facts before them. One of Wilson's allegations investigated at the Court of Inquiry in March imputed immoral conduct to the wife of the Sergeant-Major. Evidence was given of such conduct in the Sergeants' Mess, under the most disgraceful circumstances which could well be imagined. The facts were not, so far as I can perceive, disputed. They have been officially treated as established, a private soldier who was implicated in the allegation having been on this very ground removed from the Depot. The lady remains to this moment in her husband's quarters. Now, I am no Puritan. Rather than the first, I would be the last to cast a stone at any woman whose frailty has been thus exposed. But this is a matter which has to be looked at from the point of view of discipline as well as that of abstract morality. From that point of view it is necessary to consider the position of the Sergeant-Major in a Regiment, and of his wife among the other inhabitants of the married quarters. I confess that the continued residence of Mrs. Johnstone at Bodmin after the evidence given at the Court of Inquiry fills me with amazement, and conflicts with every principle which I should have supposed would be applied to the presence of women in Barracks. Henceforth the least that can be expected is that the attitude taken by the Commanding Officer at Bodmin and the General Officer Commanding the District towards this amorous lady shall be adopted throughout the Army towards all officers' wives whose virtue proves unequal to the strain of military life; for there is far less need for a stern moral code where ladies of Commissioned rank are concerned than among those actually resident in Barracks. I am told that the other day when the proceedings at Wilson's Court-martial closed, and the finding against him was made known, the Sergeant-Major's lady was at her window with her friends, and jeered at the prisoner as he was removed. I doubt not that she is of Colonel Gillies' opinion, that Wilson is a pestilent fellow, "who has caused and is causing much trouble here." And with this dramatic tableau of Virtue triumphing over her persecutors, I cannot do better than close the history of Quartermaster-Sergeant Wilson's efforts to purify a Regimental Depot.

HOUSE DRAINAGE.—Sanitary work of every kind contracted for.—The Sanitary Engineering Co., 65, Victoria-street, Westminster.

The moral of the whole business is written large upon it. The first lesson I take to be, that it is the duty of a man set under authority to shut his eyes and hold his tongue in regard to all misconduct on the part of those above him, no matter how iniquitous in itself or how detrimental to the best interests of the Service and of the country. Any attempt on his part to secure the ends of justice, though he prove his case up to the hilt, will assuredly involve him in permanent inconvenience and ultimate ruin, it being the rule at present accepted and acted upon by officers of all rank in the Army that no breach of regulations, no professional misconduct on the part of one in authority, is so "prejudicial to discipline" as the conduct of a junior who presumes to expose his misdeeds. The other lesson of the Bodmin scandal, read by the light of recent occurrences at Exeter, Hamilton, and other places which have been from time to time referred to in Truth, is that under the present system the Regimental Depots tend to become sinks of iniquity and hotbeds of corruption. The state of things at present prevailing in many of them is not only intolerable in itself and contrary to all the best traditions of the Service, but must exercise a disastrous effect upon the whole Army, more especially in view of the fact that the Depots are supposed to be the training schools of all the Infantry recruits. Again, therefore, I appeal to the Secretary of War, with this object lesson before him, to institute a searching and independent inquiry into Depot abuses, and the best means of remedying them.

DOCTORS AT SEA.

It was recently remarked in Truth that "when the next Merchant Shipping Act is passed, it would be a great thing for sailors if provisions were enacted securing to the ship's doctor some measure of authority independently of the captain." From several communications addressed to me on the subject, I find that I am not the only person who has arrived at this conclusion, and the bearings of the subject are so important that I propose to point out somewhat more in detail the nature of the reform which is obviously required. Ships' surgeons, so far as I have had an opportunity of judging their views, are unanimous in testifying that, except for the purpose of doctoring passengers and crew, they have no power or influence in regard to the health and comfort of those on board. Nor is this any matter for wonder. If there is anything wrong in regard to the sanitation of the ship, the owners ultimately and the captain immediately are responsible for it. Except in the very rare case where the captain is at fault, and is allowing something which the owners do not approve of, a doctor has little prospect of doing any good by reporting to the owners; and even in that one case he may easily find that the captain has more influence with the owners than he has. In every other case, the doctor who protests either to owners or captain against sanitary evils of any kind, is simply in the position of remonstrating with an evil-doer upon the error of his ways. That is usually a useless proceeding, but in the case of a ship's surgeon it is likely to be worse than useless. For a ship's surgeon is the servant of the owners, and the subordinate of the captain. When he makes a complaint, therefore, he is casting an imputation upon his own employers and upon his own superior officer. Unless owners and captains are angels trading in the character of men of business, they will naturally regard him as impertinent and insubordinate; and the most probable result of his indiscreet efforts will be his own dismissal from the service, with a character by no means likely to secure him employment elsewhere.

That this is in practice a frequent result of a ship-surgeon's efforts on behalf of passengers and crew I can myself vouch. From time to time doctors have come to me for help under such circumstances, and I should have been very glad to ventilate their cases were it not that the same causes which make the doctor powerless go very far to tie the hands of the journalist who desires to assist him. He is one man, and usually a poor one, fighting against many, and those with money at their backs. Nothing is easier than to deny his statements and to misrepresent his actions; nothing is more difficult than to prove and justify them, the only evidence on which he can rely being that of seafaring men and travellers, who are usually at the uttermost ends of the earth at the moment when their testimony is required. The only occasion on which I have ever been called upon to pay substantial damages in respect of any statement made in Truth was in connection with certain allegations as to what occurred on board a certain ship. The experience which I gained on that occasion led me to resolve that never again would I commit myself to any specific statement of a similar nature. I mention this to explain why I refrain from giving illustrations of what I have said above. I may mention, however, that Mr. Charles Leet, F.R.C.S., published some time back in pamphlet form his experiences in the service of three of the foremost Liverpool lines of steamships, and his statements alone—which were substantiated by correspondence and other documentary evidence, and which, so far as I know, have never been challenged—are sufficient to show the absolute impotence of a surgeon, even in the service of Companies of world-wide reputation. What is the case on the ships of smaller owners, trading to out-of-the-way places, may easily be imagined. In one instance, which came under my notice a year or two back, a surgeon was driven out of the employ of one of the smaller Oriental lines for endeavouring to protect some of the crew against the most brutal treatment. In referring to this subject last month, I gave the experience of a surgeon on board a Cape steamer, who had the courage to protest against various abominations, and even against a violation of the regulations of the Board of Trade. This medico was only insulted for his trouble. Such things are going on almost every day.

The remedy is obvious. A ship's surgeon should be in a position to snap his fingers at the owners and the captain, and to exercise an effective control over all matters relating to the health of passengers and crew. This can only be done by making him a representative of the Board of Trade, commissioned to report directly to that body on all matters within his jurisdiction, and responsible to them alone for the performance of his duties. The most effectual way of carrying this out would be the organisation of a Medical or Health Department of the Board of Trade, the head of which would act as medical adviser to the Board. I do not suggest that the surgeons should be paid officers of the State; but they should be, as now, qualified medical men, specially licensed by the Board of Trade, so that the Board would always have the power to deal with them if they failed in the discharge of their duties. The important point is that the doctor should be in direct communication with the Board. As a matter of theory, under the present Acts the ship's surgeon is supposed to report to the Board of Trade; but how this theory works in practice is shown in the pamphlet of Mr. Charles Leet, to which I have referred above. In their orders to ships' surgeons in the Atlantic passenger trade, the Board of Trade request a report at the end of each voyage on certain specified points, among others the following:—

> Has the ship been disinfected? (after any cases of infectious or contagious disease).
> Was the ventilation sufficient? If not, state where it was defective.
> Were any complaints made by the emigrants? If so, state what complaints, and what steps were taken in each case.

This report, the Board direct, shall be addressed to the Emigration Officer. In Mr. Leet's case, the Company give their own instructions to the surgeon, purporting to over-ride those of the Board of Trade. They direct him to furnish the Emigration Officer in future with "the following particulars," and the list which follows omits all the questions quoted above. Finally, as though to ensure that their instructions shall be carried out, and not those of the Board of Trade, they order that the report shall be sent in the ship's despatch-box under cover to the General Manager of the Company. Mr. Leet attempted to transmit a report direct to the Board, and was peremptorily ordered by the General Manager to sit down and write another. When one of the foremost Shipping Companies in the world acts in this way, what is to be expected of an unscrupulous or impecunious private owner?

There are two interests to be safeguarded in this matter: First, that of passengers; secondly, that of sailors. The former—setting aside emigrants, who are pretty well looked after—are the least in need of protection, because they can look after themselves, and make their voices heard, and are only temporary occupants of the ship. The sailors are always there, and are in a great measure helpless. What is necessary in the interest of passengers is efficient means of dealing with infectious diseases, effective disinfection, wholesome water supply. These requirements apply equally to the crew; but the latter need in addition security that they have proper sleeping accommodation (both in the matter of space and ventilation), wholesome food, proper sanitary appliances, and proper treatment (including exemption from work) when they are ill. For these purposes an officer is required on board ship with analogous powers to those of an Officer of Health on land, and with further special powers for the protection of sailors. There is, of course, a danger here that such an officer, instead of being, as now, a mere cipher, will be such an important personage that he will be courted and conciliated, not to say "squared." This should be prevented by systematically checking his reports, and by continually removing him from ship to ship. On the whole, however, the public may feel a fair amount of confidence in the integrity of medical men invested with such powers; and, even taking the lowest view of them, an honest majority would speedily work a complete transformation in some of the worst aspects of life at sea.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

THE LATE DR. CHARCOT.

DOCTOR CHARCOT'S life was one of uninterrupted good fortune. He was of la petite bourgeoisie by birth, but received the best education Paris could afford him. His father, a struggling carriage-builder, was not satisfied with sending him to a high school, but placed him also under the tuition of the most accomplished literary man and Professor of the time, M. de Villemain. His lessons were not lost on Charcot, and in his after-life they greatly helped to establish his reputation. Charcot's clinical lectures were models of clear and strong style, and had the beauty ensuing on those qualities. His was a many-sided mind. If he had studied music, and made composition his profession, he would probably have excelled in it. No great artist used his pencil with more talent. As a connoisseur he had but one equal—Rochefort. As a scientist he had in his special line no parallel, and, for his fame, he died in the nick of time, just as he was beginning to be an obstructive. His resemblance to Napoleon was remarkable. He accounted for it by saying that Napoleon was the god, and much more, of the Liberal bourgeoisie to which his father and mother belonged for ten years before his birth. They looked upon him as a hero and a martyr. Charcot was, I should imagine, more like Julius Cæsar in disposition than Napoleon. Nobody was fonder of a high class of epicureanism, and nobody was more capable of sustained hard work. His application to professional duties and other work that grew out of them was unflagging from the time he took his degree, forty years ago. The splendid collection of paintings and curios amid which he lived, and the other luxurious conditions of wealth which were his, did not soften his fibre. At six o'clock in the morning he was at his desk engaged in recording the observations of the day before, and thinking out the indications of theories which they presented to his mind. Charcot was, however he might be out of sorts, never too ill to absent himself from the hospital where the best part of his life was passed, and the greater part of his medical experience gathered. It has a population of 7,000, and is to the aged, the mad, and the incurably hysterical women what the Hôtel des Invalides used to be to old soldiers. As he grew famous he may be said to have concentrated the eyes of the world on that abode of sorrow. He had to take measures latterly to keep out the fashionable world, who came from idle curiosity to see him stimulate those miracles in which hagiology abounds. The Church compared him to the Magians of Pharaoh, who imitated the prodigies accomplished by Moses and Aaron. I never heard of him making the blind see or the dumb hear, but he ordered cripples to rise and walk, and they did so. His private practice became enormous, though to keep it down he demanded enormous fees. A thousand pounds was thought not too much for going to Milan to consult with the physician of the Emperor of Brazil when poor Dom Pedro was lying there at death's door. But no rich patient ever caused him to forget the poor creatures from whom he gathered his knowledge. If his manner with them was rude and dry, and if he was sometimes remorseless in his experiments, he was full of pity for the permanent burden of affliction which it was their lot to bear. He had cases in the Russian Imperial family, but they were given the option of coming to Paris to be under his treatment, or of waiting until he was taking his autumn holidays for himself to go to Russia. Charcot, from being so much with neuropaths, began to see neurosis everywhere. He found it in Zola's uncleanness, and in the Mysticism and Symbolism and Sâr Peladanism of which for the last few years we have heard so much. He was not sure that it did not prevail in Wagner's music, which, he remarked, unhinged those who took it in. The German Emperor was as a "case" an object of his deepest and most watchful interest. It was rather disappointing to him that he continued to keep general paralysis at a distance.

Charcot generally asked neuropaths, who came to him for advice, whether they drank, took intoxicating drugs, smoked in excess, or had mad forbears. Only three persons in his long experience confessed on some of these points—unless first under the influence of the will. The neuropath, he found, thought himself or herself faultless. Men he also found were subject to hysteria. Its premonitory symptoms were overriding egotism. Whenever he saw any symptoms of paralysis, or some extraordinary capacity, say, for arithmetic, or music, or languages, he was seized with an unamiable longing to get hold of the brain of the person n whom he discovered the disease of abnormal faculty, and see whether it was localised there. A certain Dr. Burq or Burk—a man of genius whom the owls of the faculty took for a madman—was the first person who put Charcot on the track of electro-therapeutics, hypnotism, and other strange things into which he peered during the last fifteen years. The Salpétrière was opened to Burq by Charcot as a field for experiments. But the great professor might not have done this if the other had not been suffering from a peculiar paralytic affection; and the idea presented itself to him of getting Burq, who thought he could not live long, to present his brain for the museum. He then saw that the supposed lunatic was on the right course, and (must it be said?) he picked his brains. Burq was forgotten and effaced in the glory of him who drew his mantle to himself, and he made no bequest of his brain to him. It was in a railway carriage that Charcot received the news of Burq's death from Dr. Dumontpellier. "What," his immediate inquiry was, "has he done about his brain?" "It is buried with the rest of the body." "The monster!" And then, "It must have been a rare brain, both in its normal and abnormal aspects. There was also a paralytic twitch in the face, the like of which I had never seen. I longed to know exactly how it originated." On saying this the illustrious doctor, looking black as Erebus, sunk into a corner of the carriage, and did not open his mouth for the rest of the journey.

Charcot scouted the old Greek idea that divine light often enters through the chinks of cracked brains. I wonder what he would have said could he have foreseen that on the morning on which he was found dead two of his "subjects," agitated and weeping, came from opposite wards into the matron's room. They had had fearful dreams. He was dead, for they dreamed they saw him a corpse. The housekeeper had that moment had by telegram the first news of the event.

We have been quivering with indignation, though I don't see why we should, at the news of the Prince of Naples accepting an invitation to witness the coming manœuvres of the German Army in Alsace-Lorraine, while Prince Henry of Prussia would be watching those of the Italian Fleet off Genoa. Twenty-three years have passed since the Treaty of Frankfort was signed. However well the French may remember that Alsace-Lorraine was theirs before 1870, they should not expect the memory of other countries to be so fresh on the subject. It was hoped here that cholera might prevent the princely chassé-croisé, the King and Queen of Italy having but one son, whose precious life must not be exposed to the danger of being cut off by an epidemic. But it was not so. Prince Henry has gone to Genoa, and the Italian Prince is coming to be present at the house-warming of Urville, the new country residence of the Emperor near Luxembourg, where the Princess Feodore, youngest sister of the Empress, is to be also a guest, and may become a fiancée. The Prince is to be present, in the uniform of the 13th Hessian Regiment, at a banquet and ball at the Bezirks Presidenz at Metz—an event which must cause no little annoyance here, and give more value in the eyes of the French to the "Russian alliance."

A Stuttgart friend tells me how it was the Prince of Naples came to be invited to Alsace-Lorraine. No love has ever been lost between the reigning families at Berlin and Stuttgart. Queen Olga kept an icy attitude to the last towards the Hohenzollerns. The present King rather inclines to imitate her. He and the Emperor had a battle Royal about the manœuvres, the King refusing to let them interfere with the harvest in his State. He stood out so hard that at length the Emperor decided they were to take place in the Grand Duchy of Baden, where there are more forests than arable land. The harvest in the plain skirting the right bank of the Rhine is gathered usually early, and there and in the Black Forest a Baden and a Würtemberg Army Corps were to simulate campaigning. This was done without consulting the Grand Duke. He took offence and telegraphed to Berlin that he was master of his own house, and had ordered the Commander-in-Chief of his Army not to let the Würtembergers come into Baden. This was a nice kettle of fish. There was no way of getting out of it unless by arranging for the Badeners and Würtembergers to manœuvre in Alsace-Lorraine. Hence the sudden orders sent to prepare there for the manœuvres on an unusually great scale. The invitation to the Italian Prince was sent long previous to these wranglings, and he thought that he was to keep on the right bank of the Rhine. The Grand Duke of Baden is a man of sense and of wide culture. His weakness is to like to appear a great potentate. I never saw a greater fuss made about a Sovereign at a railway station than there was about him one day that he came to Heidelberg when I happened to be there. Troops were under arms, chamberlains in uniform were in attendance, flunkeys were drawn up, and a grand carriage was in the courtyard. A red carpet was unrolled a few moments before he appeared. There was military saluting and stiff, respectful bowing, which he, being dressed as a General, returned stiffly in military fashion. He was devoted to his father-in-law, who had a kindly, unassuming way of taking people; but he ill brooks the ways of his Imperial nephew-in-law.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

CONFIRMED Cockney that I am, dear Lady Betty, the suffocating heat has driven even me to the country. Perched several hundreds of feet above the level of the sea, surrounded by miles of faintly-scented firs, far removed from anywhere, from anybody, and from anything, I am proportionately desolate. London is overcrowded with people; the country is very much more overcrowded with insects. Compulsory practical zoology is not by any means enjoyable. Persecuting midges, irrepressible ants, prowling beetles, centipedes, curly earwigs, spiders, tiny creatures with shot-scaled backs, insects no bigger than dots—the variety and the quantity of crawling, creeping, hoppy monstrosities are positively bewildering. I shall for the future, however, be satisfied to take these upon faith, dried, scientifically classified, and pinked with pins in a museum. My present experiences of mites and bites are altogether too disturbing. Even at meals I have to defend each morsel against a cloud of wild wasps that buzz ferociously as they attack the food. And this they call "rest"!

The animal kingdom, indeed, has welcomed me with over-flattering effusion. A well-fed, well-bred young Londoner appears to be a decided delicacy to the insect world. In his "Holy Russia," Sir Donald Mackenzie Wallace describes how a Caucasian châtelaine tortured her page-boy to death by turning him into a human pincushion, and piercing his bare body with myriads of pins. In a modified manner my present plight somewhat resembles his. Or, should it be explained upon the principle which made the Midlands miner call out, "I say, Bill, 'ere's a stranger; 'eave 'arf a brick at 'is 'ead"? No wonder that country people rise so early as they do! Knowing what I know now, I would excuse them if they never went to rest at all. A "Society for the Protection of Animals," indeed! What is sorely required here is a society for protection from animals. Even fresh air may be bought too dearly, and death from suffocation would be preferable to being devoured alive by microscopic midgets grotesquely designed with unnecessary legs. As if a mite barely raised the millioneth part of an inch above the ground could possibly fall even if it had but one leg! Then they grow a hundred!

But my greatest surprise is not only the quantity but the aimless activity of the ants. Resting anywhere beneath the trees I am surrounded at once by hundreds of ants with black heads, slender yellow waists, and big black bustles, that hurry over and under the dead pine needles and climb on to the fallen cones terribly busy about nothing. But however busy they may be they have every one of them time to spare to look round and nibble the stray stranger.

* * * * *

Up till now, from all accounts, Homburg has suffered, as most other places have this season, from the general depression. The arrival of the Prince of Wales there will, however, certainly attract a large number of those who derive pleasure from the mere contemplation of Royalty, and the empty tables upon the Terrace of the Kursaal may be expected, therefore, not to remain unused for long, now that the Prince has commenced his "cure." Whether the waters of Homburg do more good than does the regular life which it is the custom to lead there, is a question that the experts must be left to decide. But leaving the waters out of the question, a very satisfactory English substitute for Homburg might be found at my present retreat, which has the advantage of being only a little more than an hour and a-half from London. Not being a City man, and having hit upon a good thing, I do not intend to disclose my treasure to the world; nor do I propose that others shall enter into partnership with me in my fortunate find. It is sufficient to say that —— is several hundreds of feet above the level of the sea, that it is surrounded by miles of moor and pines, that the scenery is exquisite, that the air is excessively bracing, and that it is, moreover, almost as unknown as if it were twenty-four hours away from Hyde Park Corner. An enterprising "exploiter" who should purchase land here, erect a kursaal after the style of those German institutions, set up a good band, and establish a "health resort" organised upon the system followed at Homburg, could not fail, I imagine, to make a fortune. A considerable element in the success of Homburg is, that whilst the life there is quiet, the authorities contrive to contribute through the kursaal an element of brilliancy which no similar place in England has as yet succeeded in establishing. However, the precise whereabouts of —— shall remain a secret which wild omnibus horses shall not drag from me.

Many British patients, and especially Lord Rosebery, will lament the loss of the celebrated Dr. Charcot, who died suddenly on Wednesday last at Morvan. The late Dr. Charcot had of recent years become the chief European authority upon disorders of the nerves. It will be remembered that at the time when Mr. Gladstone was forming his present Ministry, Lord Rosebery consulted Dr. Charcot before accepting office as Minister for Foreign Affairs. Only a few weeks ago the late Dr. Charcot visited England, having been commissioned by the French Government to examine Dr. Herz at Bournemouth, and to advise whether it would be dangerous or otherwise that this person should be removed to Paris for trial upon the charges made against him in connection with the memorable "Panama scandals." The instant that it became known that the late Doctor was expected in London innumerable applications were addressed to him for professional advice, but in every case he declined to attend, and his whole visit to England barely extended over twenty-four hours.

The resources of Ulster House, Conduit-street, enable Messrs. BENJAMIN, in cases of need, to execute orders in 24 hours.

The Morning Post, the Daily Telegraph, and several other papers announced on Monday last that "Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of York attended by Lady Greville," &c., &c., &c., left London for York Cottage. This error has so frequently been made of late that attention should be called to it. By "Lady Greville" is, of course, intended Lady Eva Greville, daughter of Lord Warwick, the newly appointed Lady-in-Waiting to the Duchess of York. Lady Greville is a totally different person, being the wife of the present Lord Greville.

The Trustees of the Dysart estate, it appears, propose to erect buildings upon the picturesque wild waste lands that stretch from the Star and Garter Hotel at Richmond down to close upon Ham House. The Dysart trustees may propose to do this as much as they please, but there can be very little doubt that the interference of Parliament would be called for if they ever attempted to give active effect to it. The view from Richmond Hill is both a metropolitan and national natural heirloom, and no number of trustees will ever be permitted to destroy this. All the same, the good people of Richmond must remember the proverb that "Heaven helps those that help themselves"; and though we have all of us a share in this property, it is for them for obvious reasons to enter into the thickest of the fight against its destruction.—Believe me to be, yours very truly,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

THE Stewards of the Jockey Club have published their official list of race fixtures for 1894, and they have most decisively ignored the request of several of the members of the Newmarket division that the order of the meetings might be as nearly as possible the same every year. As a matter of fact, there are many more numerous and more important alterations than usual in this list, and it seems that the interests of the various gate-money meetings are the paramount and absorbing object of the Stewards in making their arrangements. It is quite right that Kempton Park should have ten days, and that ten days should also be given to Sandown Park, but it is ridiculous that such a hugger-mugger affair as Portsmouth Park should be granted seven days. Six are given to Lingfield, which is an entirely new fixture; and the list was already of such inordinate length that any additions to it might surely have been dispensed with. Hurst Park has seven days, but only six are given to Gatwick, which is the most deserving and the best-managed of all these new meetings. The exuberant liberality of the arrangements for most of the gate-money meetings can only be attributed to the fact that relatives or friends of members of the Jockey Club are actively interested in them.

The season begins on Easter Monday (March 26), and that day is given to Kempton Park and Newcastle, Lincoln being postponed until Tuesday, and this meeting has been cut down to two days. It is a great pity that the Liverpool meeting was not similarly reduced. The second week has Northampton restored to its old days, of which it was most unfairly deprived this year, and it is followed by Croxton Park and Warwick. The third week has no fixtures of any importance, and the fourth is taken up with Epsom (April 17 and 18) and Sandown Park, while in the North there is a one-day meeting at Carlisle. The fifth week of the season has the Newmarket Craven Meeting, followed by Derby, and then (May 1) comes Chester, followed by Kempton Park. Why these two meetings should have been brought forward to precede the Newmarket First Spring it is impossible to understand. The Two Thousand week is placed just before Whitsuntide, and there are the usual holiday meetings on Whit Monday and Tuesday, while Manchester, which is given four days, ought certainly to have been reduced to three. Newmarket Second Spring comes on May 22, and is followed by a two-day meeting at Kempton Park. Bath and Salisbury, which came after Epsom last year, are now brought forward a fortnight, and they clash with York and Doncaster. A one-day meeting at Hurst Park is a most unseasonable fixture for the Saturday in Epsom week, and the same day in Ascot week is given to Alexandra Park. Brighton, which is postponed six weeks as compared with this year, being put off until after Epsom, is followed by Lewes. The week after Ascot, which meeting begins on June 19, has Newcastle and Sandown Park, and then follows the Newmarket First July (on July 3) and Kempton Park. Stockbridge takes three days of the next week, and then (July 17) comes the second meeting at Newmarket, which is followed by Sandown Park. Gatwick, Liverpool, and Leicester fill the week before Goodwood, which does not begin until July 31. Then comes a series of meetings arranged as they were for this year, but Doncaster is a week later (September 11), so that Manchester takes three days of the following week, and there is only an intervening week between Doncaster and Newmarket, when the First October Meeting begins on September 25, the Second October on October 9, and the Houghton Meeting on the 23rd. As to the "back-end" meetings, the first week has Lincoln and Northampton, and in the second (instead of Leicester and Liverpool, as this year) come Lewes, Liverpool, Lingfield, and Hurst Park. It is really scandalous that the Liverpool Meeting should have been given a fourth day. The next week is divided between Leicester (for which two days would have been an ample allowance) and Derby, and in the last week of the season, which finishes on November 24, come Warwick and Manchester.

The Two Thousand will be run on May 9, the Manchester Cup on May 18, the Derby on June 6, and the Leger on September 12.

Following the example of the Jockey Club, the Grand National Hunt Committee have produced an official list of cross-country fixtures, which reminds one of "all the contortions of the Sibyl without one particle of her inspiration." It is in the highest degree absurd, foolish, and presumptuous for the Grand National Hunt people to attempt to fix the dates for all kinds of Hunt and Regimental meetings, the managers of which must be guided by purely local considerations in making their arrangements. The Grand National Hunt authorities had better make haste to hark back and revoke their fatuous arrangements, or they will assuredly get into trouble.

Sir Hugo has been struck out of all engagements, so it may be taken for granted that he will never again be seen on a racecourse. I do not know whether Sir Hugo has met with an accident, but whatever the cause of his collapse it is very much to be regretted, and it is most vexatious for Lord Bradford, as he was growing into a magnificent horse, and looked like being a good stayer, and he had one valuable engagement which seemed to be a certainty for him. He was in next year's Hardwicke Stakes at Ascot, in which he might have met La Flèche and Isinglass, and that rich race now looks like falling to Mr. McCalmont's horse if he trains on.

Sir Hugo will go to the stud next season, and he is to stand at Weston Park, his owner's place in Shropshire, and his fee is to be 150 gs., which is not a high figure for a Derby winner in these latter days, but which would have been regarded as outrageously exorbitant ten or fifteen years ago, considering that for several years Isonomy's fee was only 50 gs., and Bend Or and St. Simon each commenced at 50 gs.

The feature of the very successful Stockton meeting was the complete and ignominious collapse of the horses owned by Lord Zetland and Mr. Lowther, whose colours having been so successful at Redcar (where they won five races out of twelve) were expected to be quite invincible last week. That Lord Zetland ought to have won the Wynyard Plate with the well tried Galingale was palpable to every one who saw the race, but his filly is evidently very far from being a flyer. Chin Chin ran very badly, and she is either out of form or else she has been preposterously overrated. It is quite certain that if Chin Chin had run at Kempton Park she would have been literally lost by Delphos, and if she was all right last week she must be a long way removed from the first-class. Lord Durham, who is staying at Marienbad for the benefit of his health, won two races, and the successes of his popular colours were received with enthusiasm by the crowd, who also loudly applauded the three victories of Lord Londonderry's animals. Lord Durham's St. Ignatius, about whom there had been a great deal of talk at Newmarket, grievously disappointed the expectations of his friends, and he is evidently very moderate, and so is Lord Londonderry's Hiawatha, although he did manage to win a race. Royal Marine, who had the character of being the best of Lord Zetland's two-year-olds, and who had been for some time in reserve for the Hardwicke Stakes, was made a great favourite for that race, but he ran very badly indeed, and Lord Durham won with War Sprite, a filly by Galopin, that had won a fair trial. It is clear that, with a very few exceptions, the two-year-olds of this season are a common lot, for they seem to be all heads and tails, and if there are any dark flyers in reserve we are not likely to see them out until the Newmarket October Meetings.

I saw it stated the other day that the running in the Great Northern Leger had disposed of Canning's Doncaster prospects; but surely nobody out of Earlswood would ever have thought for a single moment that Sir Robert Jardine's horse could, under any circumstances, have the most remote chance of even a place in the Leger after his lamentable exhibition at Goodwood. Canning may very likely make a good four-year-old, and the best policy to adopt with him would be to throw him up for the remainder of the season. Queen of Navarre gave Canning a stone and a clever beating, and she now appears likely to win the Park Hill Stakes at Doncaster and the Newmarket Oaks. She was a very smart filly last year, but fearfully uncertain. Inferno, who early in the year was cackled about as likely to turn out a promising Derby outsider, has woefully degenerated, for a T.Y.C. Handicap, which he managed to win at Stockton, is his first success since he won a race at Redcar more than twelve months ago.

Marcion has been made favourite for the Cambridgeshire, and I hear that 16 to 1 has been taken about him, which seems an inconceivable price, considering that the weights have not yet been published. It is apparently thought that Marcion cannot be handicapped out of the Cambridgeshire, but there is a very much better lot of horses entered than was engaged in that race last year. Marcion, moreover, looks like developing into a grand four-year-old, and under the circumstances I should not fancy that Mr. Vyner will care to knock him about in handicaps. Major Egerton will find it very difficult indeed to adjust the weights of the "flyers" in the Cambridgeshire, as he must handicap them fairly with each other, and yet give the great legion of moderate horses a chance.

After Goodwood, Marly was extolled as being about the best horse in training over five furlongs. He is, no doubt, very speedy indeed when he likes to do his best, as was clearly demonstrated in the race for the Stewards' Cup, when he "chopped" half the field, but Marly has inherited the truly infernal temper of his sire, Energy, and he is evidently a most dangerous horse to back. Last week, at Deauville, long odds were freely betted on him for a five furlong race, but he was easily beaten for no other reason but that he would not try. It may be hoped, for the sake of the British backers, that M. E. Blanc will keep Marly in France after this.

If Raeburn goes on all right during the next month it is the intention of the Duke of Portland to start him for the Lancashire Plate at Manchester, as it is thought that he may have a chance of beating Isinglass over an easy mile, and with 10 lb. the best of the weights. The race, which is run on September 23, is worth £8,000, of which the winner gets £6,100. Ravensbury looks like stopping Raeburn's way in the Triennial Produce Stakes at Newmarket, and the Duke of Portland's horse is not likely to beat Médicis in the Champion Stakes, but he certainly ought to be able to win the Royal Stakes on the first day of the Second October Meeting, in which a wretchedly bad lot of horses are engaged, and the race will be worth £690, even if only two start.

There will be racing next week at Derby and at Sandown Park, and some good sport may be expected at both meetings. On Tuesday the principal race at Derby will be the Champion Breeders' Foal Stakes of £1,000, the entry for which fills five pages of the book Calendar, and the owners' subscriptions amount to £995, so that only £5 has to be given from the fund. Chin Chin, Hornbeam, Grong, Millom, Strike, Xury, Grania, Government, Hiawatha, and the colt by Hampton out of Illuminata, are the best known of the animals engaged; but Lord Rosebery's colt certainly will not run at Derby, as he is in reserve for the Champagne Stakes at Doncaster. Government has so great an advantage in the weights with previous winners that he ought to win the race easily unless there was some most egregious blundering about his trials. A number of moderate two-year-olds are left in for the Harrington Stakes on Wednesday, and, in the absence of Xury, Hiawatha may be able to win, as he has escaped a penalty for his victory at Stockton. The Breeders' St. Leger of £1,000 (the owners' entrances amount to £695) has a huge entry, including Harbinger, Son of a Gun, Quickly Wise, Low Moor, Royal Harry, Cairnton, Le Nicham, Harfleur II., Fealar, Sweden, Queen of Navarre, and Marcion. In the probable absence of Marcion, and as the distance is a mile, I shall predict the victory of Le Nicham, who is a smart horse over this distance, and if he is beaten it will be by Queen of Navarre.

The September Stakes of £500 at Sandown Park is a three-year-old race for which fifty-eight animals are left in, including Phocion, Watch Tower, Queen of Navarre, Nobleman, and Peppercorn, of which list (in the certain absence of Lord Ellesmere's Leger horse) I prefer Peppercorn. The entry for the Michaelmas Stakes includes Government, and he ought to win this race if he is kept for it, instead of being started for the more valuable event at Derby. Coldwell, if he is all right, might be able to win the Abbey Stakes.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—As I anticipated, very little movement has taken place in the Stock markets during the past week, holiday influences and fears of dear money causing operators to hold back, while the uncertainty of the outlook in the United States accentuates the weakness. The Yankee position, in fact, is the pivot upon which the general market turns.

Stock Exchange Prospects.

The Settlement was concluded without any hitch, the account was shown to be greatly reduced, and the position here is undoubtedly sounder than it has been for a long time, the weak speculative elements having almost altogether been eliminated. Had not the spectre of dear money been raised by further large gold shipments to the States, we should now be in smooth waters financially as far as this country is concerned, but it is evident that the precarious position in Yankee-land cannot be remedied without some further spasm in our Money Market. The gold which has been poured into that country has, so far, had very little effect upon the currency famine in the chief centres, in fact, it seems that New York has not been able to secure much of the precious metal because Chicago, Philadelphia, and Boston have been keenly competing for it. Again, I say that much depends upon the position which will be taken up by the Bank of France, and only if that institution parts more freely with gold to the States, can a further advance in the Bank rate here be averted. Home securities as well as Foreigners have been under the influence of the monetary outlook, the Kaffir Circus also losing the moderate recovery which had made itself felt. Thus the immediate future depends more than ever upon the course of events in America. At a given point the distrust which has caused the hoarding of currency in the States, will no doubt disappear, and the large shipments of gold now in progress may bring about this much desired change. But the unconditional repeal of the Sherman Silver Act would contribute more than any other event to re-establishing confidence, and although the silver Senators are indulging in a good deal of bluster, I am still in hopes that a strong vote in the House of Representatives may bring them to reason.

Home Rails.

Notwithstanding the scarcity of stock shown at the Settlement (as illustrated by a backwardation of ¾ on Brighton "A," ⅜ on Midlands and North-Eastern, and ¼ on Great Western) quotations in this department have not been maintained. The coal strikes, poor traffics, and the prospects of a fresh advance in the Bank rate furnished, of course, sufficient reason for the final weakness, which was accentuated in Midlands as being most heavily hit by the coal troubles. The Great Western and North-Eastern, however, retained a small advance, reckoning, of course, the dividends off. Great Eastern have been in fair request, the traffic being fairly satisfactory. The passenger movement on the line is being fostered with great care, and the East coast seaside resorts served by the line are reported to be filled to overflowing with visitors. Were it not for the coal strikes and the agricultural depression, we should already at present see that development of the line in which many of the permanent shareholders have so strong a belief. The Sheffield Company is suffering severely from the effect of the coal strikes upon the local industries, and an incipient improvement in Sheffield "A" has been nipped in the bud. On the scarcity disclosed at the Settlement, Brighton "A" were pushed up by a little "Bull" clique, which had been formed for the purpose of cornering the "Bears," of whom there are many. They succeeded in lifting the price to 151¼, and would probably have been able to engineer a further rise had not the further large withdrawals of gold, and the consequent fears of dearer money, been too much for them. A relapse to 148¾ has been the result. The Bank Holiday traffics of the Brighton Company and of most other lines has been disappointing (the total decrease in passenger traffics on all the lines being about £36,000), probably because many of the "trippers" had taken advantage of the previous fine weather to take their outing. The continuance of the brilliant sunshine should, however, eventually make up for this falling off. I have already stated that with September the comparison in the case of the Brighton line will be with smaller returns. I repeat my recommendation to buy "Berthas" for investment, but not to speculate in them just now. Dover "A" improved to 75 in sympathy with the sister stock, but they were knocked down again by the same untoward circumstances. The Scotch stocks have hardened on purchases from the North, especially North British, the inference being that the dividend will be more satisfactory than has of late appeared probable.

The Hoarding of Currency in the States.

It is useless to speculate upon the outcome of the deliberations of Congress at present sitting at Washington on the question of the repeal of the Sherman Act. The outlook varies from day to day, and much of the talk of the silver men is mere bounce. It may, therefore, still be hoped that the unconditional repeal, which would undoubtedly be the wisest measure, may come about; but the present week will furnish some indication of probable results. The currency famine in the States, which is at present forcing heavy gold exports from Europe, is another difficult point. It is, of course, due to hoarding. Savings banks and all other banks, Trust Companies, railway and other corporations, and individuals, particularly large employers of labour who need currency to pay wages, are all hoarders of money, so as to be prepared for emergencies. No wonder, therefore, there is not currency enough to go round and that it commands a high premium over certified checks, or that the banks in one city find it difficult to collect in actual money from those in any other city. That many banks are clearly responsible for the existing currency famine is shown by the statement of the National banks of the State of Pennsylvania outside the cities of Philadelphia and Pittsburg. They held at the time of the last statement (July 12), 25½ per cent. reserve, or 10½ per cent. more than the legal requirement. There are 597 National banks in the State and not one has failed. There is no way of ascertaining how many of these banks have recruited their reserve at the expense of the large banks in the financial centres, but with some Chicago National banks carrying 40 or 50 per cent. reserve instead of the 25 per cent. required, and the National banks of interior cities carrying 25 per cent. instead of 15, no further statement is required to explain the existing stringency in the Money Market. If the banks set the example of hoarding, it is not at all strange that the public think it advisable to do likewise. It now transpires that a number of savings banks which had prided themselves upon their ability to stand any run, have been brought up sharply by Superintendent Preston, who has called their attention to the fact that they are illegally hoarding cash on hand, and that the idle deposits in some banks are larger than is permitted by Section 118 of the Banking Act. This state of things will, of course, mend as soon as confidence returns, and the large supplies of gold from Europe should in the course of the present week take some effect in this direction. In fact, the New York Bank statement just issued shows already an increase of 4,750,000 dols. in the specie held.

Yankee Rails.

Apart from the renewed scarcity of currency in the chief financial centres the announcement of a receivership for the Northern Pacific has been the leading "Bear" point in the Yankee market. I have frequently criticised the management of this Company, when still under the control of Villard, and, although the latter resigned the Presidency some time ago, he left a most unsatisfactory state of things behind him. The Northern Pacific collapse was, however, found to have been discounted, and after the announcement, a moderate rally set in for these stocks. Receiverships, in fact, do not at the present time inspire so much terror, as they are caused by the exceptional stringency of the Money Market, and do not exactly indicate, as they did formerly, that the position is rotten or that assessments will be necessary. Whether further receiverships will have to be faced must depend upon the course of money matters in the States. The Union Pacific seems to have been in the greatest danger, while the Atchison Topeka and Santa Fé has apparently got through the trouble. President Reinhart has, of course, talked confidently all along, but that is no proof in the case of American Railroad directors who have so frequently denied the possibility of receiverships on the very eve of the collapse. It may, however, be worth while to give the following extract from the report of an interview with President Reinhart which appeared in the Chicago Herald a fortnight ago:—

It is fairly criminal that such unfounded rumours should be spread broadcast in regard to the condition of Western roads. The hope of a little temporary gain by some Wall-street pirates has led them to positively claim that the Union Pacific, the Missouri Pacific, the Atchison, and other roads were going into a Receiver's hands. Last year we earned a net surplus of 2,500,000 dols., after paying all expenses and charges. That means we must have a decrease in earnings approximating over 400,000 dols. a month in order to endanger interest payments and other charges. Up to date then, to put any of these payments in jeopardy, we must have shown a comparative decrease of nearly 3,000,000 dols. The actual decrease is 180,000 dols. to date. In other words, our payments are absolutely certain, even if, for the balance of the year, we show a decrease of 900,000 dols. a month, an absolutely impossible amount. On July 1 we paid out 3,700,000 dols. cash in interest and charges, and have no other large sum to pay until January 1. Would we have paid out that vast sum if there were any danger of a receiver? Our floating debt is not troubling us. It is not due in a day, or a week, or a month, but is spread out over six months. I firmly believe we will show an increase in net earnings on the year's operations. There is practically no decrease so far, and any further decrease until September will be more than made up after that month. The present depression was foreseen and prepared for by us. A thorough and far reaching plan of consolidation has brought about a large saving in expenses.

What is perhaps more important than this utterance is, however, the fact that cablegrams received yesterday from New York state that the Atchison Company has made arrangements for the extension for five years of the 9,000,000 dols. Guarantee Fund notes falling due in November. Under these circumstances, the present quotations of the various Atchison bonds must appear very cheap, and so are also the various substantial American Railroad shares, such as Louisville, Milwaukees, Illinois Central, &c. By the way, it is now officially announced that the scheme of consolidation of the Baltimore and Ohio South-Western with the Ohio and Mississippi Railway has been declared effective by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, and that formal meetings of the shareholders of the two consolidated Companies will be held at Cincinnati on October 21 to confirm the consolidation, the union to take effect on November 1. The success of the consolidation being thus assured, prices of Ohio Prefs. and Ordinary ought to advance from the present very low level, the more so, as the net profits of both Companies continue to show large increases. In reply to a number of inquiries for American Railroad bonds which combine under the present adverse conditions reasonable safety with a satisfactory yield, I may mention the following:—

Bonds.	Price @	Yield per annum. £ s. d.
Mohawk and Malone Four per Cent. Bonds, guaranteed by the New York Central Railroad. Interest, March 1 and September 1, due 1991	102¾xd.	4 0 0
Manhattan Railroad Four per Cent. Bonds, Interest, April 1 and October 1, due 1990..	95	4 9 1
Willmar and Sioux Falls Five per Cent. Bonds, guaranteed by the St. Paul M. and M. Railroad and Great Northern Railroad. Interest June 1 and December 1, due 1938...	106	4 18 0
New York Ontario Refunding Four per Cent. Bonds, Interest March 1 and September 1, due 1992	83xd.	5 0 3
South and North Alabama Five per Cent. Bonds, guaranteed by Louisville and Nashville Railroad. Interest February 1 and August 1, due 1936	101	5 2
Chesapeake and Ohio Four and a-Half per Cent. Bonds. Interest March 1 and September 1, due 1992	72⅜xd.	6 8 2

Really gilt-edged bonds are, of course, New York Central and Hudson River Four per Cent. Gold Debenture Certificates at 104. From the above little list a yield of from 4 to 5 per cent. can be obtained with all reasonable safety, and the Chesapeake and Ohio bonds, although not gilt-edged, are certainly cheap. By the way, an example has been made by the Governors of the New York Stock Exchange of Mr. H. G. Weil, who has been suspended for one year owing to the circulation of false rumours. This is the extreme penalty short of expulsion, and it is the first time it has been imposed since, some years ago, a member was proved guilty of dividing commissions. As Mr. Weil is the only Board member of the firm, the house is practically excluded from the privileges of the Exchange for a full year. The charges were not made public, but Mr. Weil really was tried upon the general charge of circulating reports and of conduct detrimental to the interests of the Exchange. This mode of punishment might with advantage be administered to the London syndicate of liars.

The Grand Trunk Outlook.

The announcement by the Grand Trunk of a dividend at the rate of 2 per cent per annum for the half year ended June 30, against 2½ per cent. for the corresponding half of 1892, was in accordance with the market estimate, but the outlook is distinctly unfavourable, the last weekly traffic showing a decrease of £3,014, which is explained by a footnote, according to which the "freight movement is checked by the financial situation and want of confidence." My readers will recollect that I commented a few months ago very unfavourably upon the prospects of the Grand Trunk Company, and my anticipations have been only too completely borne out. The following communication from a member of the Stock Exchange, who is not a Grand Trunk jobber, bears upon this point:—

In two communications which appeared in your issues of April 13 and April 26 were discussed the dividend prospects of the various Grand Trunk of Canada issues for the current year. As the figures for the half-year ending June 30 are now available, I will, with your permission, place before your readers my estimate of the probable dividend to be received by the so-called Four per Cent. Guaranteed stock, any distribution on even the First Prefs. being quite out of the question.

Deficiency on the guaranteed dividend for 1892, ½ per cent. on £5,219,749		£32,623
Deficiency for the six months ending June 30 as compared with the same period of 1892, ½ per cent. for the half-year on the Guaranteed, being at the rate of ¼ per cent. per annum: viz., 2 per cent. against 2¼ per cent.	£6,527
On the Chicago and Grand Trunk a deficiency of £40,900 against a surplus of £5,700	46,600
On the Detroit and Grand Haven a deficiency of £22,500, against £13,600 ...	8,900
		62,027
		£94,650
Total deficiency to end June		£94,650
Gross increase on main line and branches for six weeks to August 12, £19,148, say nett	£10,000
Estimated gross increase for remaining twenty weeks to end December £64,000, say nett	32,000
Deduct therefore		42,000
Estimated deficiency on "Guaranteed" dividend for year		£52,650

Equal to exactly 1 per cent., making the dividend 3 per cent., against 3⅜, which was paid last year.

Keeping the above figures in view, and bearing in mind that this unfavourable result is arrived at in the great exhibition year, I think even so determined an optimist as a Grand Trunk "Bull" will have great difficulty in discovering that First Preferences have any but the remotest chance of ever receiving a dividend again, and, for myself, I think a receivership a more likely contingency.

The appreciation by the market of the present unpromising position has been shown by a decline in the Guaranteed stock to 58, and in the First Prefs. to 42, this being a fall of nearly 5 points since the carry-over on Monday. Leaving my correspondent's threat of a receivership aside, I must confess that in view of the precarious financial position in Montreal, which the local Banks are trying to meet by importing gold, and the Exhibition disappointment, the outlook is not rosy; and even after the heavy fall the First Prefs., without the ghost of a chance of a dividend, are not a tempting purchase.

Foreigners and South Americans.

Apprehensions of dearer money have not been without their effect upon those inter-Bourse securities which, while standing at comparatively high prices, are under the suspicion that the finances of their respective Governments are in a critical state. Portuguese and Greeks have been through the mill, Spain and Italy have their troubles still to come Spanish have, therefore, declined 1, to 61¾, during the last few days, while Italians have lost 2, at 83½, and I should be surprised if a further fall could be obviated.

There has, on the other hand, been a moderate recovery in Argentine Government stocks, the Funding loan being quoted at 61½, chiefly owing to the more determined action of the new Cabinet in carrying out the proclamation of a state of siege throughout the country. This should facilitate the pacification. Argentine Railroad stocks are well maintained at their low quotations. According to a report sent out by the Directors of the Cordoba and Rosario Railway, nearly three-fourths of the preferred shareholders have consented to their share in the sum of £9,962, paid by the contractors under their interest-guarantee, being applied towards the payment of the Debenture interest now falling due, as far as it is not covered by the earnings of the road. The Directors propose to pay half the Debenture interest, due September 1, in cash, and to issue deferred warrants for the balance, such warrants to carry interest at 5 per cent., and to be redeemed out of any net earnings which may be available at the end of each financial year after providing for the Debenture interest. As this Company is making rapid progress, and shows continued large traffic increases, this practically means that the debenture-holders will eventually receive full interest as well as arrears in cash, and the present price of the Debentures must be considered extremely cheap. Peruvian Corporation stocks have recovered again, especially the bonds, which have risen 2½, while Mexican Government bonds have advanced to about 56. There has been no improvement in silver to which the greater firmness of these so-called silver securities can be attributed, but prices had undoubtedly been unduly depressed, and it is now stated that the next Mexican coupon will in any case be paid in full. Brazilians are firmer, and Chilians have hardened on a marked recovery in the exchange. Uruguay have passed through the usual fitful movements and are fractionally better on balance. The settlement of the City of Rosario Six per Cent. loans is at last approaching as the contract concluded ad referendum will be submitted to the bondholders on Thursday. Five coupons in arrear will be funded into Six per Cent. Currency bonds, and, as I foreshadowed some time ago, the interest on the original bonds will be paid, instead of in gold, in currency up to 1900, when gold payments will be resumed. It follows that the return to the bondholders will depend upon the course of the gold premium, which will, however, be undoubtedly be downwards. The Municipality of Cordoba does not appear to have got so far yet on the road to qualified honesty.

Kaffir and American Mines.

Hardly had the Kaffir Circus evinced signs of an incipient revival when the fresh scare in the Money Market caused a relapse. Thus, although the position, especially of the Witwatersrand Mines, is extremely favourable, prices are drooping again, even such promising shares as New Primrose and Glencairns standing only at 3⅝x.d. and 31 respectively. Meyer and Charlton, Rietfontein, and Village Main Reef have been especially flat. Afrikanders remain at 1⅛ to 1¼, Buffelsdoorn at 1¼, and advices from both these Klerksdorp Mines are excellent. African Gold Recovery shares have improved in Glasgow to 42s. 6d. Transvaal Land Companies have been adversely affected by a fresh relapse in British Chartered of South Africa. At the decline of the latter shares my readers will not have been surprised after my recent remarks, but why Oceana or other Transvaal shares should suffer in sympathy, it is difficult to understand. Oceana affairs especially are looking very prosperous. A meeting of the Oceana Coal Company was held on Friday when the resolution to alter the name of the Company to the Oceana Transvaal Coal Company, Limited, was unanimously confirmed. It was a mere technical matter, as a Company exists in South Wales under the name of the "Ocean Coal Company," and it was feared that confusion might be caused by the similarity of names. It will be remembered that the purchase money for the Coal Company goes as to ⅔ to the Oceana Development Company, and as to ⅓ to the Oceana Company. The directors have received advices since the issue of the prospectus that a further borehole has been put down on the Farm Modderfontein and two seams of coal struck; one 3 ft. thick at 56 ft., and the other 5 ft. 6 in. thick at 77 ft., the property thus being shown as extremely rich in black diamonds, which are so important to the development of the Transvaal. With the exception of a fractional recovery in Broken Hill Proprietary shares, Australian Mining shares show little change. Aladdins are steady at 1⅜, Wentworth Priority at ⅝-¾, Kilkivan (19s. paid) at 6s. to 8s. The confirmation by so high an authority as Mr. Skertchly, the well-known mining engineer, of the statement previously made by Mr. Bull, that over 100,000 tons of tailings of very considerable value are available on the Caratal Mine has led to renewed large dealings in these shares, which are quoted 9d. to 1s. For the benefit of those who have not fully grasped the importance of this announcement, it may be useful to mention that recent assays of these tailings yielded results of from 1 oz. 3 dwts. to 1 oz. 10 dwts. of fine gold per ton, and that the liquidator of the Company, Mr. Good, has stated that on this basis 50,000 tons treated by the cyanide process would give a net produce of 50s. per ton, or £125,000, so that 100,000 tons of tailings would work out to £250,000 net yield, a sum several times larger than the present capital value of the Caratal shares. The fact that Mr. Skertchly advises the treatment of these tailings by the cyanide process, therefore, holds out the prospect of big profits to the shareholders, who may, in addition, look to the mine itself as likely to supplement returns materially. Holcomb Valley shares are unaltered at 1s. fully paid, but cablegrams reporting first results by the machinery now at work may come to hand any day. If these are favourable, a sharp advance will come about, as the scarcity of the shares in the market is increasing, several operators, apparently, having taken liberties with them.

Tall Talk in Western Australia.

The view is generally held here that the mother country has been too lavish in its treatment of the Australian Colonies, and that it would have been much better for British investors if they had not granted such unlimited confidence to their Australian kinsmen as to deposit millions upon millions sterling in Australian Banks which have recently come to grief, if they had not bought shares in these Banks at high prices, and if they had not granted loans to a very pretty tune to the various Governments. But it seems that this impression is radically wrong, and that the mother country has in reality inflicted grievous wrongs upon these Colonies. At all events, if the Perth Daily News is to be credited, Western Australia has grave grounds of complaint. In discussing a Bill authorising the Government to issue Treasury Bills whenever they are in need of funds to carry on the business of the Colony, my contemporary gives vent to the following extraordinary sentiments:—

> It is also highly desirable that the Government should be armed with other powers of "raising the wind" in cases of need and emergency, otherwise than through the doubtful and indeed discredited means of recourse to the London Money Market for a loan. The system of local borrowing is one much to be encouraged, as by this means we do not send the interest out of the Colony, and we are spared the degradation of the Colony's good name, and the lowering of its reputation through the manipulation of a lot of greedy brokers and wire-pullers and the vapourings in the financial press of "hireling scribes," who are almost entirely ignorant of the countries whose resources and development they disparage and affect to scorn. The sooner Australia is altogether independent of the Home financiers and finds the money for her own development the better. We have paid far too high a price for British money, which is most readily and cheaply forthcoming for rotten South American States and Republics and for the warlike needs of semi-barbaric and often hostile powers in Europe. We are, indeed, deriving the reverse of an advantage from our connection with the Mother Country, which has proved an unkind parent to Australia in the day of her adversity, and has shown she is not to be relied upon. The Treasury Bills Bill is a very necessary and excellent measure, and we must trust that its ultimate effect will be to altogether prevent recourse being had by this Government to the London lender, who charges exorbitantly, lends grudgingly, and can say nothing that is good of us.

Western Australia has obtained various loans in this country, of which some £1,800,000 is still outstanding. The Colony began to borrow on Four and a Half per Cent. Debentures at £96. 12s. per cent., but has placed more recent issues of Four per Cent. inscribed stock at 108¾ and 100¼ per cent. I have yet to learn that these are onerous terms for a colony with a very small population to borrow on. But the utter absurdity of these remarks will be readily understood when I state that Western Australia has recently been begging the London and Westminster Bank to bring out the balance of their last loan in London. Then, again, with regard to the tall talk of the Perth Government organ about Western Australia finding the money for her own development, it should be stated that when applications were sought a short time ago in the Colony for Treasury Bills, the public subscribed only £3,435, and the Government, out of the "Savings' Bank Deposits," made up the handsome sum of £20,000, in itself a financial stroke of a very questionable order. But perhaps the most audacious statement made by my contemporary is that the mother country had proved an unkind parent to Australia in the day of her adversity. This to British depositors of many millions sterling in Australian Banks, which have since suspended payment, with the result that the money is locked up for years, must appear cruel irony, the more so as the runs on the Banks were invariably started by the Australian depositors, who have had the advantage over home depositors all along, owing to the shorter periods of their deposits. Instead of an unkind parent, it is here, therefore, clearly the question of an ungrateful child, and if this is the feeling generally entertained by West Australians towards Englishmen, it is as well that it should be known in the "old country." Whether Australia has turned the corner, or whether she will take some years to recover her equilibrium I would not undertake to say. Of the various Colonies, Queensland and New Zealand are, in my opinion, by far the best, as there is a backbone to these two countries that the others lack. Western Australia is very poor in resources, as in the number of inhabitants, but phenomenal finds of gold have recently been reported, luckily for her—for in the gold alone her future lies. And it may be hoped that in the interest of Western Australia English money and English management can be attracted to work the gold mines. If, on the contrary, the mother-country should permanently refuse to embark any more money in the Colony, the outlook would be gloomy indeed, notwithstanding the Treasury Bill makeshift and the grandiloquent utterances of the Perth Government organ. But I do not see why a Colony should indulge in such serious aspersions upon the mother-county and the London market, whilst all the time they are begging for a fresh loan and a quotation on the London Stock Exchange for their Municipal Waterworks Company.

My Letter Box.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

Government, &c., Bonds.

Tirnova.—The present downward career of Italians is distinctly in harmony with my repeated predictions. Why did you not sell long ago? O. S.—If you wish to invest in Australasian Inscribed Stock, Queensland and New Zealand are the best.

Banks, Trusts, and Financial.

J. A. M.—Both are sound banks, and you had better divide the investment between both. Crieff.—You have been very foolish to part with your money. Your best course is to write again and again on the chance of getting it. W. A. B.—You should avail yourself of an opportunity to get out of this Australian Land Company. House.—Have nothing to do with this concern for the present, but send me a prospectus, when I will advise you. A. B. S., Birmingham.—Please to forward a prospectus and terms of the policy. W. F.—You should take deposit receipts for the whole of your deposits in preference to shares. The documents have been returned.

Home Rails.

R. O.—You should not speculate in Brighton "A," which are just now greatly affected by the monetary position. As an investment the stock is very suitable. Consul.—The "Heavies" are affected both by the money outlook and the coal strikes, and the position is not, therefore, encouraging just now.

American and Foreign Rails.

J. C. K.—Under ordinary circumstances this guarantee would provide a considerable safeguard, but the tension in the American Money Market renders it less effective, especially as there is so much talk about the Pacific lines. E. K.—The chief reasons of the decline are the general depression, and the fear, premature so far, of Government interference. Chef.—All depends upon the monetary position in New York and Chicago, but it is now stated that the dividend will be paid in cash. I should hold, as all is already amply discounted in the low price. I cannot, really, undertake to reply by letter. Sussex.—Anything that can happen to these Companies is already discounted in the very low price of the stocks, which, on an improvement in the monetary position, will again rise. Hold. Comet.—Yours is a very fair selection for investment, and I see no reason for selling any of the American bonds, Nos. 1 to 8, under present circumstances. There is a fair prospect of improvement in the Brazilians of 1889 (9); the Bank shares, Nos. 10 12, are first class. No. 13 is doing well. No reason to sell Nos. 14 and 15 now. The two American Railroad bonds mentioned will do very well for further investment, as will also some of those mentioned under "Yankee Rails." P. P.—Nashville, Florence, and Sheffield Five per Cent. bonds are a good permanent investment, and still worth the price you gave for them. The other two bonds have declined, but should be held now. No reason to sell Great Eastern now, unless you wish to obtain a higher immediate yield, in which case Brighton "A" would pay you better. Calgary.—No, I should not recommend investment in these Canadian Railroad bonds. The American Railroad bonds mentioned in my letter under "Yankee Rails" are preferable. Marah.—1. The Grand Trunk Company is doing very badly, as you will see from the remarks in my letter of to-day. You had better invest the money in one of the American Railroad bonds mentioned under "Yankee Rails." 2. Of these three Australian stocks Queensland are the best. 3. Impossible to tell. Under the circumstances, you had better not buy Brighton "A." F. S. E.—Ottoman Railway from Smyrna to Aidin, £20 shares stand at 12. I do not look for a rise in the near future. Write to the English Association of American Bond and Shareholders respecting the Montreal and Sorel bonds. The Boy.—Certainly you should accept the interest as proposed; this Company will eventually pay cash in full. J. T. R.—Certainly hold No. 1 for a recovery. As affairs in Chili are improving, the Company No. 2 ought also to do better. 3. Hold the American Rails No. 3; they will recover again in the time named. A Young Widow.—1. Although I never recommended Northern Pacific Second Mortgage bonds, I should advise you to hold now. 2. No, do not sell these. You are quite right to stick to your Erie Seconds. Sussex.—You should hold the American stocks for a recovery, which will come about when the present crisis is passed. H. R. S., Victoria-street.—It would obviously be preferable if you would number the fourteen different stocks upon which you seek my advice. Unglücklich.—There is no fear concerning the interest on the First Mortgage bonds. You may safely await an improvement. The risk of a receivership is also passing away. See under "Yankee Rails."

Mining Shares.

R. P.—I can hear nothing concerning the Socorro and Santa Maria Mines. As the secretary writes that "no reports have for a considerable time been received from the mines, and that, in fact, the Companies are without funds for anything, and practically in liquidation," it is evidently one of the cases in which directors and promoters wish the ill-fated concerns to quietly go to sleep. If you will send me the original prospectus and last balance-sheet I will look into the matter. I cannot reply by letter. J. C.—The Sapphire and Ruby Company of Montana is not prospering, as any one who read my comments on it from the outset would have known. A circular has just been issued to the shareholders on work done and prospects. Glasgow.—1. I have always expressed an unfavourable opinion of Tetuans. 2. Yes, prospects of Caratals are good, and you should buy more to average your old holding. Constant Reader, Holstein.—Hold both the South African Mining shares, they will recover with the rest of this market. Ulsterman.—Caratals have been repeatedly sold at 1s., and I do not think that you have been overcharged, but the commission is too heavy, it ought to be reduced by one half. J. C., Barrow-in-Furness.—I do not recommend any of the South African Mining shares. Nos. 1—4. Beware of these private tips. M. A.—1. Yes, you might make the exchange into Caratals. 2. No catch. 3. A fair investment for a small amount, but I should prefer Buffelsdoorn. 4. Do not average until I tell you. Bina.—Whenever the Mining Market improves, all the shares mentioned by you will recover, especially Glencairns. Argyle.—1. Will rank for dividend at the next distribution. 2. Not yet, expected in a couple of months. 3. Yes. 4. The Glencairn should pay early dividends. 5. Something like £12,000 has been paid off. 6. I cannot tell which will pay first dividend, but both Buffelsdoorn and Afrikander are good Mines. The subscribed capital of the former is only £40,000. 7. I do not think they are a catch. A. Y. Z.—You should hold the Mining shares for a recovery. You have done well to buy Holcomb. N. H. F.—1. The amount of the Cravens Caledonia dividend is correct. 2. Yes, I think they will recover, but do not average yet. 3. Shortly. 4. Hold all these shares for an improvement. You might buy some Caratals in addition.

Minton's (Limited). Minton's China.—A visit to Messrs. Mortlock's extensive collection in Oxford-st. and Orchard-st. will conclusively prove the superiority of taste and lowness of price for which this house has been so celebrated during the last century.

Industrial Companies.

Optimist.—I do not think much of the investment. Bungalow.—This investment does not appear to have reached the stage at which investment in the shares is safe. The purchase would be extremely speculative, especially as there is no market for the shares. Bally-ghadarsen.—In the present position of the licensing question investment in British Brewery Companies is not, perhaps, without some risk, but I suppose you have formed your opinion as to this. Of the seven Companies named, Nos. 1, 4, and 6 appear to be the best. I should not like to commit myself to a recommendation of the seven Industrial Companies named, but the Debentures of No. 1 and the Companies Nos. 6 and 7 should be reasonably safe. Desolate.—There is no market for the Automatic shares. Try to sell them through the Secretary. You have done quite right to buy Holcomb Valley shares. Favourable news may come to hand any moment. Plymouth.—I do not like this concern. Sell if you can. M. R.—I think you might risk holding.

Mixed Investments.

C. F. W.—These shares are a fair investment for a small amount, but no catch, and there does not seem to be any early prospect of a rise. Rix.—Brighton "A" will give you over 5 per cent., and you might also spread the investment over some of the American Railroad bonds mentioned under "Yankee Rails." H. H. H.—I know nothing of the Comet Publishing Company or of Messrs. Peddie & Johnson, late of Wine Office-court, Fleet-street; but suppose that it is owing to some oversight that they have not executed your order for books accompanied by postal order. Constant Reader, Ramsgate.—Guinness Five per Cent. Debenture stock at 123 should suit you. E. P. V.—Some news of the Mining Company's new property in the Mozambique territory is expected shortly. The other Company cannot be doing well in the present state of affairs in the United States. A. B.—No reason to sell Nos. 1, 2, 4, or 6. I do not care much for No. 5, or for the Canadian bonds, Nos. 3 and 7; in fact, I have always warned my readers against Qu'appelle Long Lake bonds (7). I have never recommended Mexican National bonds (8) but should not sell now after the fall. Hold Nos. 9 and 10 for the present, Sell the mines No. 11. If you had followed my advice you would have sold No. 12 before the collapse. Hold No. 13. R. C. P.—On the whole yours is a fair selection for permanent investment. No reason to sell Nos. 1–6 now. There seems no undue risk in connection with the Fire Assurance Company No. 7. Certainly hold the American Railroad bonds Nos. 8, 9, 12. No use to sell No. 13 now. Hold also No. 10, but No. 11 is doubtful—see remarks on the Grand Trunk Company in my letter. No reason to sell No. 14 to 26, as the risk is so well distributed. Your proposed new trust for £1,000 may be commended under the circumstances. The purchase advised in your recent letter of Brighton "A" and Brunner, Mond seems judicious, but I do not think much of cable property. T. B. D.—The Trust proposed by you for the investment of £5,000 (Buenos Ayres Great Southern Five per Cent. Prefs., Queensland Three and a-Half per Cent. Inscribed, Brighton "A," and Midland Ordinary) is quite suitable; but instead of Erie First Mortgage bonds you should select one of the American Railroad bonds mentioned under "Yankee Rails."

Various Investments.

Silver has suffered a moderate decline—to 34d.—during the week, but remains on the whole steady. Rupee Paper, on the other hand, has declined to 66¼, owing to a sudden change of front executed by the Government, which allotted India transfers at the low rate of 1s. 3¼d. So far the attempt of the India Council to maintain the parity of the Rupee at 1s. 4d. has been singularly unsuccessful, and it looks almost as if they were at their wit's ends what to do next. The rumours which have been current as to the probability of an early re-opening of the Indian Mints are, however, no doubt unfounded, as the Government once having taken the momentous step which has wrought so much havoc in our markets, will, no doubt, allow a reasonable time to elapse before discontinuing the experiment. So far as the improvement in silver securities is based upon the hope of a reversal of the policy of the India Council, it is not well founded. I do not know who is responsible for the vacillating policy which obtains at present at the India Office, but it is, undoubtedly, working most serious mischief. When the new departure as regards the closing of the Indian Mints and the fixing of the value of the Rupee was enacted so suddenly, I had occasion to comment upon the manner in which this measure had been exploited for their own gain by those who were in receipt of early and privileged information as to what was coming, and if there is any redeeming point about the change of front now executed by those who pull the strings it is the fact that these privileged speculators do not reap the large profits on their purchases of Rupee Paper which they had anticipated. Whether the closing of the Indian Mines and the fixing of the rupee were judicious measures the future only can show. They have, so far, precipitated a severe crisis in all silver securities and caused losses to be counted by millions sterling to the business community. But once the fatal step was taken, energetic measures should also have been adopted to give this new policy a fair trial, and rather than drop the parity of the Rupee to 1s. 3⅛-¼d. again after a few weak attempts to sell India Council Bills and Transfers, even a fresh Indian Sterling Loan might have been resorted to, so as to tide over the present period of uncertainty. Public opinion both here and in India condemns the latest departure taken by the India Office as paralyzing commercial and financial transactions, and working untold mischief. Having once fixed the minimum value of the Rupee at 1s. 4d., the perpetrators of this monstrous muddle ought at least to have stuck to the principle they had decreed until it was possible to judge of results. Mexican Rails have improved sharply on "Bear" covering, and in anticipation of a few good traffics, several cargoes having arrived at Vera Cruz. Colonial Government stocks and the shares of the three surviving Australian Banks have shown steadiness. I am glad to see that the Brush Electrical Engineering Company continues to prosper, a further dividend at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum having been declared on the Ordinary shares, in addition to the interim dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum already paid for the half-year ended December 31, 1892. The following communication has reached me with regard to the unfortunate London and General Bank:—

> After waiting nearly twelve months, the unfortunate shareholders of the London and General Bank have had another dividend doled out to them by the Official Receiver, making 8s. in the pound. The original statement of accounts showed good debts exceeding £200,000, besides £93,228 of uncalled capital, to meet liabilities of £194,349. Thus far, only one-half of the calls have been paid, and not more than £27,028 of the debts have been realised. Strange to say, the amount of the latter is £1,600 less in the statement just issued than it was in the previous one three months ago. Bankruptcy bookkeeping needs an esoteric training to comprehend it. On the other hand, as usual, the expenses are mounting up. They were £1,607 in May. Now they are £2,803. At this rate, in another two years and a-half, when the last dividend may be looked for, the expenses will have swollen to nearly fifteen thousand pounds. The Official Receiver takes care to retain a balance of £5,661. No interest is allowed for this, at any rate to the creditors. It forms part of more than half a million of money belonging to helpless creditors in some two hundred Companies now being wound up. If the Bank had been placed in the hands of a private trustee, all the liabilities would have been discharged ere this.

If the circumstances are as stated by my correspondent things are clearly not as they should be.—Your affectionate uncle,

MOSES.

All Rights Reserved.

QUEER STORY;

A CASE OF CHOLERA.

THE following story comes to English ears probably now for the first time. The facts embodied in it occurred some time ago; but for the sake of a certain great family involved, strenuous efforts were made to hush them up, and they have now only just reached me from a private source. They are, however, so instructive, and emphasise so strongly the barbarities which are still possible in a European country, in this nineteenth century, that I cannot forbear making them public, although, out of respect for my informant's wishes, I shall be purposely vague and misleading in the localisation and nomenclature.

In a far away corner of the great empire of ——lies a small township, which we will call P——. At the time of which I write it was even less accessible than it is now. And the inhabitants, farmers and peasants for the most part, knew little, and cared less, about anything beyond their own small neighbourhood. Not one in a hundred of them had ever been so far as the nearest big town of N——: and certainly not one in a thousand had achieved the journey to the metropolis. Indeed, a man who had been there and back was regarded in the light of a great traveller, and was treated with marked respect accordingly.

The particular district in which P—— is was then ruled by a Deputy Governor, Count Y——, who was virtually sovereign of the place, and who in the eyes of the inhabitants was a personage of more importance than the Emperor himself. The Count was a just ruler, and merciful according to the standard of his country; so that he was generally liked by the people of his district. But the Countess, his second wife, did not share his popularity at all.

There was some reason for this. In the first place, she was beneath her station, being daughter of a wealthy tradesman in P——, and the people were jealous of her elevation. In the next, she was an upstart by nature as well as by circumstance, and took pleasure (as such upstarts will) in the mere fact of airing her authority. Fortunately, however, for the district, her husband was a strong man, and held the reins of government tight in his own grasp. So the Countess had little opportunity of carrying out her tyrannical inclinations, except on the few dependants of her household, whose life she certainly did her best to make a burden to them.

One of these unfortunates, in particular, a young girl named Myra, came in for an excessive share of the Countess's tyranny. The girl was pretty, even beautiful, and far more accomplished than her mistress, which was one reason for ill-treating her. But another and stronger one lay in the fact that the Count admired her and lost no opportunity of paying her attentions.

The social ethics of the country saw nothing very reprehensible in that. Conjugal fidelity on the part of husbands was a rara avis in the upper circles, at least; and wives were free to console themselves without scandal, that is, if they observed the ordinary rules of prudence. But Countess Y—— was too jealous to accept a divided allegiance complacently. And as she could not punish her husband, who cared not one jot for her reproaches, and only avoided her when she betrayed ill-humour, she vented her spleen upon Myra.

It was whispered in P—— that her ladyship had no true right to feel such violent jealousy; for that she, too, sought consolation abroad. And the name of Doctor Q——, her medical adviser, was talked of in this connection. He was a youngish, handsome man, of vulgar birth, but with a pleasant address and engaging manners, who spent a good deal of his time at "the Castle," (as the Governor's residence was styled), and undoubtedly enjoyed her ladyship's confidence and esteem. But doctors, especially young doctors, always occupy a delicate position in regard to their female patients; and scandals against them are so easy to circulate and so hard to rebut that they should only be received with the very greatest suspicion.

It so happened that at this time an alarming epidemic of cholera was raging through the southern division of the empire. It had not yet reached P——, but it was steadily making its way in that direction. And stringent orders had been received by the District Governors from the Minister of the Interior in regard to precautions against, and provision for, the much dreaded scourge. Pursuant to these orders, which bore the Emperor's own sign manual, Count Y—— started on a fortnight's tour of his Province, to superintend measures in the various townships, having first made all arrangements in P——, in case the cholera might appear there during his absence.

For a few days after the Count's departure, all went well. But then one morning a rumour quickly spread through the startled and terrified inhabitants of the township that a case of genuine Asiatic cholera had broken out in their midst, and had been immediately removed to the special hospital outside the town, set apart by the Governor for the purpose, and under the medical control of Doctor Q——.

Notices were shortly issued from the Castle confirming this rumour, and warning the inhabitants not to approach within a certain distance of the isolated hospital. Severe penalties (which lay in the discretionary power of all Governors in that despotic country) were threatened against any who should disregard the warning. But these were scarcely needed, for all were far too much afraid of catching the awful disease to go any nearer than they could help to the infected building.

In a place as small as P——, where every one knew every one else, details, even of a trifling character and relating to unimportant persons, soon got abroad. And it was not long before it was known that the case had occurred in the Governor's own household, and that the victim was Myra N——, maid in waiting to the Governor's wife. In that country people were suspicious. God knows they had had good reason to be so. And now they talked and whispered among themselves, with many dark hints, when they learned that the first victim of the cholera was—who she was.

In the tap-rooms of the town hostelries, when the liquor began to untie men's tongues, these dark hints assumed, on that first night when the facts were known, a more unguarded form. Mine host of the "Golden Fleece," who was a cautious man, and feared, not only for his licence, but his liberty, by many a whispered hush and hasty frown, tried to restrain his less prudent customers in their talk, though with not much success, for there were too many present, and they were too much excited, to be so easily silenced.

Now mine host had noticed something, which in the crowd and crushing of the tap-room had scarcely been observed, and certainly not treated as important by any of the others; and this was the presence of a total stranger among them. The latter had come in quietly, about the middle of the evening, and was smoking his pipe and drinking his beer, almost unobserved, in the chimney-corner; and by-and-by he got up, and took his departure as quietly as he had entered.

There was nothing at all remarkable about him, except, perhaps, his broad shoulders and powerful frame. But he seemed anxious, for some reason, to avoid observation; for he walked at a great pace, through the least frequented streets, and did not slacken his pace until he was well outside the town. It was moonlight, and the dark outline of the Cholera Hospital, on an eminence a mile distant, stood up very clear against the sky. Possibly the stranger knew nothing of the notice issued that day from the Castle. At any rate, he turned his steps straight for the plague-stricken house.

When he reached it, he knocked loudly on the door. His summons was acknowledged by the opening of an upper window, and a demand, in a woman's voice, who he was and what he wanted.

"I am a Government Inspector of Hospitals," he replied, authoritatively, "and I request immediate admission."

"But that is impossible, sir," was the reply. "Countess Y—— has given strict orders to admit no one, on any understanding whatever."

"Perhaps!" the stranger retorted. "But I am acting under warrant of a greater authority than the Countess. I bear the Emperor's commands to inspect cholera hospitals, and you will refuse me admittance at your peril."

The woman was obviously both impressed and frightened by his sternly uttered words, for, after a little further parley, and exacting from him a solemn pledge that he was what he professed to be, she came down and opened the door. An old crone she was of seventy and upwards, with bent shoulders and a wrinkled face, dressed in the shabbiest and most humble style.

"Are you the only nurse here?" inquired the stranger eyeing the hag with a sort of disdainful scorn.

She replied in the affirmative.

"Then how many patients have you?"

"One; an't please your honour."

"Male or female?"

"Female."

"Conduct me to her immediately."

The old woman scarcely hesitated; for she saw that the Inspector was no man to be trifled with; but turned round and hobbled up the stairs before him with the candle and so into the room where the patient lay.

A Fair Beautiful Skin.—By washing with Sulpholine Soap the natural tint and peach-like bloom of a perfect complexion is ensured.

As they approached the great, old-fashioned bedstead, which was almost the only furniture in the room, the Inspector took the light from his conductor, and, going to the bedside, surveyed the patient critically. His brows contracted and his lips compressed themselves as he did so; but he did not speak a word—only set the candle down on a wooden table near, and proceeded to examine the girl more closely.

She seemed like one dead already. Her glossy black hair, tossed and strewed about the pillow in wild confusion, emphasised the ghastly pallor of her face, and were it not for the feeble moans of pain that now and again escaped her lips, a casual onlooker might well have imagined life departed.

After a silent examination of ten minutes the Inspector turned to the old crone, and demanded, with a certain fierce emphasis,

"Woman—do you know anything about cholera?"

"N—n—o, sir," she stammered, evidently frightened by his tone. "I never came across a case before, sir." But they couldn't get a nurse because of the infection, and I am poor, and the high pay attracted me. And Doctor Q——, he said that all I had to do was to carry out his instructions; and that I have done to my very best ability—I have, indeed, sir. I've given his medicine regular, every three hours—— "

"Let me see this medicine," he interposed, sternly.

She brought him a half-full bottle from the mantelpiece, and handed it to him. He pulled out the cork, just smelt the medicine; then, without more ado, opened the window and flung the bottle out.

"What have you done, sir?" ejaculated the old woman, with a dismayed cry. "What will Doctor Q—— say to me when ——."

"Never mind!" the Inspector broke in. "Have you mustard in the house? Tell me!"

"Mustard, sir? Yes!"

"Then bring me some, quick; and a jug of warm water."

The old woman, whose expression showed her to be equally divided between fear and amazement, hobbled off to execute his command, and soon returned with what he wanted.

He at once made a solution of mustard and water, and, with skilful, gentle management, contrived to open the patient's lips and pour a considerable quantity of the fluid down her throat. . . . In a very short time the natural result followed; and the old crone hailed it with another cry of dismay.

"Oh, sir," she said. "And Doctor Q—— told me that sickness was to be checked by every possible means."

"Indeed!" he answered, with a curious smile. "And this Doctor Q——; when will he come next?"

"Early to-morrow morning, sir."

"And I have heard that the Countess is so brave as to risk infection by visiting the patient?"

"Yes, sir. She was here to-day; and she will meet the Doctor here to-morrow."

"Good! I shall wait here till they both come."

"You wait here all night?" exclaimed the old woman, who, was, however, too much surprised already to feel much further wonder at any announcement on the Inspector's part.

"Yes," with another curious smile. "My having reversed the doctor's treatment may get you into trouble. I shall stay and bear the burden of his wrath myself."

* * * * * *

It was about eight o'clock next morning; and the patient, who had been watched and tended most carefully all night by the Government doctor, was already beginning to show marked signs of revival, when the sound of wheels outside announced an approaching carriage.

"It is the Countess, and Doctor Q—— is with her," cried the old crone, with a pale face, as she peeped out of the window.

"Good," said the Inspector. "I shall conceal myself behind yonder bed-curtain, and shall appear when I see fit. Take care you do not betray my presence. Now, go down and let them in!"

In a minute or two, the Countess and Doctor Q—— entered the sick-chamber. The latter immediately went up to the bedside to examine the patient, and was clearly taken aback to find her so much stronger and better. He muttered something, however, about this sudden increase of vital force being really a bad sign—"a last flare up of the expiring frame"—and, turning to the nurse, asked whether the patient had taken the medicine regularly through the night.

"No; she has not!" interposed the Inspector, in a stern, angry voice, as he strode from behind the curtain. "And you know that if she had, she would be lying dead before us now."

The doctor, startled beyond control by this sudden apparition, uttered a cry of dismay, and, turning ghastly pale, in vain made an effort to speak. But the Countess, whose spirit was far stouter than her confederate's, faced the intruder boldly:

"Who are you?" she cried, furiously. "What are you doing here? Do you know that you have violated our express edict? But you soon shall know it to your cost, rascal; for I will have you locked up in jail and whipped this very day!"

The stranger's eyes flashed fire, and his face grew all ablaze with wrath:

"Woman—adulteress—poisoner!" he thundered, in a voice that seemed to make the room shake. "You have talked to me like this—me! when I can crush you like a worm" (stamping his foot) "aye, and I will. For, learn, it is your Emperor that speaks!"

* * * * *

It has long been a matter of common knowledge that the Emperor of —— has a passion for medical study. And we read in our newspapers of that year how he made a round of all the cholera hospitals in his dominion (often incognito), and personally inspected their management and systems. . . . But out of consideration for Count Y—— the above story was hushed up, as such things can be in that despotic country. And it is now published for the first time.

The Emperor has often been decried for his acts of tyranny. Perhaps with justice. But when he packed off Countess Y—— and her paramour, the Doctor, to the mines of L——, without trial or examination, no one, we believe, was in the least indignant.

MUSIC.

GIRL STUDENTS AT MILAN.

A PARAGRAPH is going the rounds stating that the Queen, delighted with the singing of Miss Clara Butt, has resolved to send the young contralto to Milan in order "to complete her education." I have, of course, no present means of determining whether the paragraph is true, but it is very likely to be so—first, because Miss Butt is certainly by far the best vocalist which the Royal College of Music has yet produced; and, secondly, because the young lady's performance of Orfeo and her singing in oratorio called forth well-deserved compliments in the speech of the Prince of Wales. It is also very possible that her Majesty, who, of course, judges music from the light of forty years ago, and can have no possible means of knowing what is now going on in the Art world, may in sheer kindness of heart have decided to send Miss Butt to Milan, which in the last generation was the chief seat of vocal instruction, although it is now nothing whatever of the sort. In this case, however, the ancient dictum that the Queen can do no wrong clearly does not apply. Indeed, any such suggestion as that—despite the £150,000 of money which has been spent upon the South Kensington institution—a young English contralto, trained at the Royal College of Music, cannot be properly taught save in the capital of Lombardy, would be a direct slap in the face to the College authorities. The best teachers have, however, long since left Milan, and have settled in London, Paris, New York, or elsewhere where fees are higher and students are more numerous and wealthy. Since the deaths of the elder Lamperti, Sangiovanni, and Nava, there exist no teachers in all Italy of the rank of Madame Marchesi in Paris, or Henschel, Randegger, Visetti, Shakespeare, or Tosti in London. Since Madame Albani, whose English debut dates back to a period when the present generation were young, there is hardly an authenticated case of a British singer, who, after an Italian training, has been enabled to win a successful career here without finishing her tuition in England. No doubt, in Italy plenty of experience can be gained upon the operatic stage, particularly if the student is willing to pay for it. Mr. Santley tells the story of how for something less than eight shillings he was dubbed in print the legitimate successor of Tamburini. Even in the present day a well-informed writer has placed it upon record that "an Italian début, in most instances, merely means the hiring of a theatre, and engaging a poor support, an orchestra, and a few Italian critics on the best possible terms." Even after this more or less expensive success has been gained, the artist stands no chance whatever of an engagement either in England or America—that is to say, the two countries where salaries rule highest. Sir Augustus Harris in his younger and less experienced days tried a good many Milanese singers, but almost to an individual they suffered severely from the tremolo, or, to adopt the terse language of the impresario, they were "jelly vocalists." An agent would nowadays smile at a débutante who could claim nothing but a Milanese education. Further evidence against the plan of sending young English students to Milan—evidence of a sort, too, which I should imagine would have great weight with the Queen—is afforded in a lengthy report officially made to the United States Government a few months since by Mr. George W. Pepper, American Consul at Milan. Consul Pepper certainly has no interest in decrying the city in which he lives, but in very plain terms he throws discredit upon the private teachers of Milan, hints that the Conservatorium discriminates against any but Italians, and roughly asserts that out of every hundred American girls who are foolish enough to study at Milan, not five afterwards have any chance of a bare living. Even the Corriere della Sera, which takes up the cudgels on behalf of the Milanese, and I may add does it very fairly, makes no attempt to controvert these official facts, but merely pleads that the funds of the Conservatorium are too limited to permit the education of foreigners, and that dishonourable and unconscientious teachers abound everywhere, so that their presence does not disprove the existence of honourable and capable instructors. No doubt there is something to be said in favour of the argument of the Corriere; but considering that able and conscientious teachers are plentiful in London, it would seem the crassest of folly for a young singer of the promise of Miss Butt to try experiments with the dishonourable or other teachers of Milan. Then, again, there is the self-evident necessity of an escort. Miss Butt is a lady of more than common beauty, and it is no reflection upon herself or the Milanese to point out that prudence and the good name which is all-valuable to a woman would suggest the impropriety of the solitary residence of a friendless girl in a foreign city. The experience of more than one artist, including the unfortunate English soprano who committed suicide some little time since, sufficiently indicates dangers which will, indeed, be self-obvious to every man or woman of the world. The case is not yet forgotten of a young lady student in Milan who in due modesty refused the atrocious advances of a wealthy Italian of middle age, whereupon the scoundrel in revenge caused his empty carriage to stop outside her door during the greater part of the night. Blackguards, of course, exist in all countries, and it is satisfactory to learn that this particular Italian scamp was publicly thrashed by some of the young lady's male fellow students, at the head of whom, I believe, was the composer of "The Midshipmite." But Consul Pepper very plainly points out the absurdity of sending girls unaccompanied to a city like Milan, where he states that "young ladies find etiquette forbids them to walk out unaccompanied, and hence are exposed to many annoyances." But, perhaps, the most striking portion of Consul Pepper's report is that which gives details of the cost of living in Milan. It has been admitted by most good judges that girls can be taught quite as well or better in London or Paris than in Italy, and the only advantage in Italian tuition has hitherto been supposed to lie in its cheapness. But Consul Pepper shatters this illusion, and the Corriere della Sera, in fact, admitting that he is right, cordially thanks him for telling his fellow-countrymen the truth. It is, it seems, impossible for a girl to live in Milan with any comfort for less than £8 per month, and even this does not provide for even simple luxuries. Lessons cost at least £4 a month, and this £12 a month even the Corriere declares to be a low estimate, and strongly advises "those who cannot afford the expense to keep away from Milan." The cost of living to an escort or companion, still without the barest luxuries, would be another £8 a month. These, I should point out, are official figures, prepared by the duly-accredited representative of the United States Government, and endorsed by a leading local newspaper, prejudiced, if at all, in favour of Milan. It is a simple arithmetical calculation to arrive at the fact that it would cost a student annually £144 to live alone, subject to many petty or real annoyances, and £240 to live with a companion, without railway travelling, holidays, or any sort of extras. And for all this she will gain a cachet which would be recognised by no British opera-manager, and will in most cases not be able to obtain for her a mere Italian début unless she pays heavily for it. Yet for little more than half the smaller sum the pupil could study under the best masters in the world at the Royal College of Music, or elsewhere in London, and could pay the cost of living with friends, or under kind, careful, and refined conditions at the Alexandra House itself. I have ventured to go into this matter in some detail, not, perhaps, so much for the sake of Miss Butt—because Sir George Grove may be trusted to look after the interests of the most brilliant of all his vocal pupils—as because I have more than once been asked by parents as to the advisability of sending their children to Milan for musical tuition. For certain special branches no doubt there are specialists in various parts of Europe. For opera there is no school better than that of Madame Marchesi, of Paris; for pianoforte better than that of Madame Schumann, of Frankfort, or M. Leschetitzky, of Vienna; or for violin better than Dr. Joachim, at Berlin. But the best all-round musical education can be gained as well in England as elsewhere, while for oratorio London is emphatically the only school.

At the Promenade Concerts the first "Classical" night was certainly not a very brilliant success, mainly because, for some occult reason, Mr. Cowen refrained from forming his programme of classical music. This week, therefore, he has harked back to Wagner for his mid-week attraction. It is, however, only fair to say that some sort of classical work—whether a Haydn symphony, or a Beethoven, a Schumann, or some other concerto—has been included in every programme, and has been far better appreciated by the audience than the lighter pieces.

"The Music of the Eisteddfod from the Period of the Flood to the Invasion of the Romans" is alleged to be the modest title of a work about to be published. Every one knows the story of the Welsh pedigree—it is, if I recollect rightly, of the Mostyn family—in which, after some pages of the family tree, a line is drawn, with the quaint remark, "About this time occurred the Flood." But the music of the Eisteddfod in the days of Noah would be a genuine revelation.

The collapse of music at Chicago gives the Albert Hall the première of Dr. Mackenzie's new oratorio, "Bethlehem." New oratorios of importance are usually first tried at the Musical Festivals, and "Bethlehem" will be the only great work of its sort which has been presented in the Metropolis for the first time in London for many years.

People who do not watch the course of music in the country seem to labour under the impression that because a new oratorio is only heard once or twice in London it is forthwith consigned to oblivion. This, of course, is not the fact. The demand for new choral works in the provinces is very great—so much so, indeed, that Messrs. Novello find it advisable to engrave or print not only the vocal score, but also the orchestral parts. Provided that "Bethlehem" is given in the autumn at the Albert Hall, and is not delayed till the spring, it will probably attain its hundredth performance in England well within the twelvemonth.

I learn by a letter from Mr. Patey that Madame Patey proposes to take her farewell of London on December 12, and afterwards to have a long farewell tour of the provinces. After this, I believe, she proposes to enjoy a long sea voyage.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—The cackle of Woman's Rights advocates over the success of a dozen or so lady competitors in some Oxford or Cambridge Examination as conclusive of the intellectual equality of the sexes, assumes first that such examinations are a test, not of mere industry and intelligence, but of intellect—an unwarrantable assumption; and, secondly, that, even admitting this assumption, the appearance of an occasional giantess proves the average height of the sexes to be equal. The obvious answer to this old woman's logic is that if women cannot hold their own immemorial provinces successfully against men they are little likely to succeed in their invasion of ours. Their own immemorial provinces are music, drawing, cooking, and dressmaking; yet there is not a single female composer of eminence, not a single female painter of the first rank, and but two or three of the second and third; all chefs are male; and to men women must resort even for a perfect fit in frocks—the tailor-made gown. I have been set thinking upon this still-vexed question by two or three books I happened to take up in succession. Hardly had I laid down a pretty set of papers on "Great Characters in Fiction" (1) in which you search in vain amongst a crowd of women-novelists for a single reference to Goldsmith, Fielding, Smollett, Richardson, or Sterne!—than I took up a very clever collection of essays by George Moore, "Modern Painting" (2) and read as follows from his paper on "Sex in Art":—

> In the higher arts—in painting, in music, and literature—the achievements of women are slight indeed; best when confined to the arrangements of themes invented by men—amiable transpositions suitable to boudoirs and fans. . . . . This conclusion is well-nigh forced upon us when we consider what would mean the withdrawal of all that women have done in art. The world would certainly be the poorer by some half dozen charming novels, by a few charming poems and sketches in oil and water colour; but it cannot be maintained, at least not seriously, that if these charming trifles were withdrawn there would remain any gap in the world's art to be filled up. Women have created nothing, they have carried the art of men across their fans charmingly with exquisite taste, delicacy, and subtlety of feeling.

Here follows a biting criticism of George Eliot, which would fling her gentle panegyrist in "Great Characters in Fiction" into a fit of hysterics. Nevertheless, Mr. George Moore's judgment can be impugned only on the ground of the acridity of its expression. But if the elimination of female artists, or even of female Senior Wranglers, would hardly be an irreparable loss to the world, what of the elimination of such woman philanthropists as are chronicled in the Baroness Burdett-Coutts' "Woman's Mission" (3), a series of Congress papers by eminent writers prepared for the Royal British Commission, Chicago Exhibition? Here you have work which the world could ill spare and workers it could hardly replace, and only replace by women. Most of it men could not even attempt, while the little of it they could attempt would need for its maintenance and for its assured success the nice tact, the sensitive sympathy, the untiring patience, and the divine devotion of women. It is a touching and astonishing record of work done, as Nature does it, slowly, silently, secretly, under the still sunlight and dews that fall in the darkness. Of half of these noble "charities that soothe and heal and bless" you have never heard the name, and still less are you likely to have heard the names of their modest founders. At their own doors they have found their "Mission," and in their own womanly way of gentle, quiet, patient persistence they have carried it out, yet the total results are beyond price and praise. But the total results, however considerable absolutely, are relatively inconsiderable compared with the numberless and pitiless needs crying aloud for such ministrations in every great town in England, Scotland, and Ireland. "Crying aloud" is an ill-chosen phrase, since the vast mass of this misery is dumb. Has the pathos of the expression "gone under" ever struck you? After an agonising struggle with the waves, in which you die many times before death, you sink and there is no cry out of the depths to tell where you have gone down. It is not often that any one re-emerges and survives to tell the tale as it is told in the artless and interesting "Life of an Artizan" (4), which I have just been reading. More than once in the naïve narrative you come across passages like this describing in a matter-of-fact way a matter-of-course state of things:—

> An unprecedentedly severe winter set in, and from lack of food and fire we suffered very severely. One night we thought our youngest child was dying from the unavoidable exposure to cold and want, and we had to break up one of our few remaining articles of furniture in the dead of the night as fuel to warm the child back to life. For two days not a particle of food had passed our lips, and for nearly a fortnight in this bitterly cold weather we had slept on the bare boards huddled together to keep us warm as we could.

Why did he not apply to the Guardians? you ask. He answers foolishly, you will say; yet such folly must be reckoned with when the cream of our artizans is in question:—

> I was severely blamed that I did not apply to the parish for relief, but I would rather have died from sheer starvation than, being so young, have degraded myself by making such an application.

Yet more heart-harrowing are the dumb despairing miseries of the labourer as described in a most interesting, instructive, and opportune book, Mr. Richard Heath's, "The English Peasant" (5). As you read again and again you are moved to cry, "Where are these civilising and Christianising and charitable agencies, the landlord, the lady bountiful, and the parson of each parish, of whom you hear so much at elections?" Christian and charitable! Are these landlords even commonly honest in their dealings with these peasants?

> Few things have more helped the mass of English peasants than the freedom they had enjoyed to use the common lands. From about the middle of the last century commenced that wholesale private appropriation of common property which has so largely helped to complete the ruin of the English peasant. Between 1710—the date of the first Inclosure Act—and 1760, only 334,974 statute acres were enclosed, while in the century which followed, more than seven millions of statute acres have been added to the cultivated area of Great Britain.

What have these land-grabbers returned the labourers for the loss of these commons? Not even hovels to pig together in.

> At Langtoft, two miles from Baston, a man was found living in a miserable house of three rooms, with his wife, her mother, and five children. The bedroom was a garret, the walls of which, leaning to, formed a ridge at the top, with a dormer window in front. "Do you live here to be near your work?" "No, men have to trail a long way to work." The man was working in Braceboro', six miles from home, and came back to his family every night! He lived there because he could get a tenantable cot, and was glad of it at any price, anywhere, in any condition. A girl belonging to one family of nine children was asked how they all got into one small bedroom, and she replied

(1) "Great Characters in Fiction." Edited by M. E. Townsend. (London: Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.)

(2) "Modern Painting." By George Moore. (London: Walter Scott, Limited.)

(3) "Woman's Mission." A Series of Congress Papers on the Philanthropic Work of Women. By Eminent Writers. Arranged and Edited with a Preface and Notes by the Baroness Burdett-Coutts. (Royal British Commission, Chicago Exhibition, 1893.) (London: Sampson Low, Marston & Co.)

(4) "Lights and Shadows in the Life of an Artizan." By Joseph Gutteridge, Ribbon Weaver. With a Preface by William Jolly, F.R.S.E., F.G.S. (Coventry: Printed and Published by Curtis and Beamish.)

(5) "The English Peasant." Studies, Historical, Local, and Biographic. By Richard Heath. (London: T. Fisher Unwin.)

(6) "The Labour Movement." By L. T. Hobhouse, M.A. With a Preface by R. B. Haldane, M.P. (London: T. Fisher Unwin.)

that they had to lie like pins, heads and tails, next each other. In Grainthorpe a case was reported to the Board of Guardians in which the father, mother, and seven children were found in one room with only one bedstead, all ill of fever, no window, except one in the roof.

But the labourer and the artizan have now got into their own hands the power to redress their own grievances. How will they use it when they have realised their possession of it? Who is it says, "Nothing is more terrible than ignorance with spurs on"? As a help to the education of our masters Mr. Hobhouse has published a suggestive book, "The Labour Movement" (*), which puts its socialistic remedy clearly and succinctly, if not convincingly.—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours very sincerely, DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—I wrote you last week from the Hague, which we were very sorry to leave, but father was obliged to be back in town for a few days in this week. I suppose you are pretty hot down in the country during this heat wave, but you really cannot imagine what it is like in London. The very sight of so many thousands of simmering fellow-creatures is in itself sufficient to make one feel frightfully hot, and, in addition to this, are the blistering pavements, the warmth of which when the sun is on them can be plainly felt through one's summer shoes. As to dress, one rather inclines to wish for the costume of the ladies of the First Empire, which was probably the scantiest ever known in civilised countries. We have hunted up all our thinnest gowns, and have gone in extensively for muslin blouses. Silk is too hot for wear. We find linen far from cool, though a suit of it looks delightfully so. This appearance is delusive, however. Linen is a non-conductor, and causes the body to be retentive of its own warmth.

There are some puzzles in London life that no one can ever make out. For instance, on one of the most broiling days of this most broiling week, we met a fairly well-dressed girl who was wearing a fur-trimmed jacket. It was difficult to form a guess as to why she should do so. We constantly feel puzzled about little things like this in our walks abroad. We sometimes see handsome sealskins on women in shabby shoes all worn down at one side, and hats of the most unkempt description. In Regent-street, only the day before yesterday, we saw a really handsome mantle of black satin and lace on a woman whose other garments—bonnet, gown, boots, and gloves—would have been dear at half-a-crown the lot. These are some of the incongruities of Metropolitan life.

We have been so tremendously hot that we have simply declined to get into our gloves when going out shopping. We tried in ever so many shops for old-fashioned lace "mitts," as they used to be called, which come up to the knuckles, but they are not to be had now. Mentioning this to our Aunts Tabitha and Jemima, whom we were helping to pack up for their yearly sojourn by the sea, they produced, after some searching, a few pairs of the most lovely old lace mittens, and presented them to us. What treasures some old ladies have stored away in wardrobes, and hidden in closets that breathe of lavender directly the doors are opened! One pair of these is in old lace of the most cobweb-like texture, and in a lovely mellow tone of soft cream colour from old age. Another pair is in Valenciennes, and there are two or three pairs in Chantilly. We feel quite cool and comfortable in these, old-fashioned as they are, and fervently wish they would come in again so that we might display our treasure-trove.

As to the attire of men, it is, like our own, of the most unorthodox description. Our legislators have, for the most part, abandoned the use of waistcoats, and appear in the House (which is intolerably hot, we are told, notwithstanding the excellent system of ventilation by pumping in supplies of pure air) in cummerbunds of various colours, or in bands of gathered black silk which hook up the back, and have pockets in front like the discarded waistcoats. I described these to you some time ago, when I saw them at Sampson's, and should not be at all surprised if the extraordinary heat should bring them into general use. After all, you know, the waistcoat is rather a senseless, inconsistent article of dress. The fronts of it are made of cloth, more or less warm, and the back is in thin lining. As for protection in cold weather, it is cut away just where the throat and chest are most likely to need it. Its pockets are its only real reason for existing.

Many of the postmen, cabbies, and omnibus drivers and conductors are wearing puggarees, so intense is the heat of the sun just now. I believe there is even some talk of putting the poor policemen into pith helmets. They must feel the heat of their present headgear very much. It is a stupid, hideous thing, anyhow.

There is plenty of room for tea on the terrace of the House of Commons now, when almost every one is out of town. You cannot imagine what a delightful place this is for that most enjoyable of meals. Our legislators are by no means cast generally in a stern, hard mould, as one might imagine who had not seen them in their hours of ease. Nowhere are such hearty bursts of laughter heard as on this terrace, and many of our members are quite as much boy as man. It is most enjoyable to sit at a little table and look on at what is passing immediately round us, and at the wonderful river flowing by with its varied freight, its puffing little steamers bowing to the bridges as they shoot under the arches, its laden barges, and a small boat now and then. It is good to be there at the sunset hour, and watch the effect of the changing light upon the water. What a different thing is tea under such conditions as compared with the cup one hastily and hurriedly imbibes in the neat but dreary room devoted to ladies' use upstairs near the Cage!

Mrs. Fourstars was saying the other day that whereas it is considered rather an excellent characteristic in a man to retain some element of boyishness on to middle age, and past it, a woman who exhibits youthful characteristics at the same age is regarded as reprehensibly flighty. The man is called "fresh, buoyant, and young at heart," while the woman is condemned in the awful word "kittenish." Is it not unfair? There is no reason why a woman should not feel as young at fifty as a man does at his jubilee; in fact, there is often more reason why she should. Women do not destroy their health, their figure, and their complexion with a daily succession of "drinks," as many men do. They don't damage their system with many cigars, nor do they indulge, as a rule, in the indolence that leads a man to hail a hansom rather than walk even a short distance. But if women look young, they are condemned all the same if they behave as if they retained any of their youthful freshness of feeling. Mrs. Fourstars says that when she sees her children enjoying a merry game of ball, she often feels that she could join in and be as pleased with the amusement as even the youngest of them. But if she did, those who happened to see her would probably at once condemn her. They would be quite pleased to see a father of some forty years or so enter into the game with his youngsters, but would vote the mother an elderly idiot; and yet a little lively exercise would be even better for her than it is for him, who has probably been out and about during the day, while she has been at home for hours looking after the household.

This reminds me to tell you that a friend of ours who advertised for a servant the other day, had rather an unpleasant experience in consequence. The very first who called in reply to the advertisement asked, on leaving, that her fares from where she was living might be paid, a request to which Mrs. Blank acceded. As she seemed an excellent servant, our friend went to see her late mistress on the following morning, and found that no such name or address was known in the locality. On her return home, after this expedition in the heat of a broiling day, she found another applicant waiting to see her, and was weak enough to pay her fares, too, on the woman representing that she had come from a long distance after the place. Before going to make inquiries about her, however, she telegraphed to the address given, and in the course of a couple of hours heard through the post-office that no such name or address was to be found.

COSTUMES FOR SCOTLAND, &c.—Messrs. REDFERN beg to announce that they have designed some very practical Gowns for ladies visiting Scotland, either for Shooting, Travelling, Golfing, &c., to which they invite an inspection.—27, New Bond-street, W.

I wonder how swindlers of that kind could be reached, and what would be done to them if discovered and prosecuted? It is particularly horrid of them to practise this sort of fraud, because by doing so they prevent ladies from paying the expenses of genuine servants who can ill afford railway fares, or even the few pence for omnibuses. We are told that it is a very common form of fraud, so that it is quite possible that these women make quite a comfortable little income by watching the advertisements, and calling on those who inserted them.

I want to describe to you the prettiest dress I have seen for a long time. The material is pale grey cloth of very light, fine, soft make. The skirt is plain, but is lined with rose-pink silk, and has a flounce inside the hem of the same colour and material as the lining. It is worn over a pink silk petticoat, frilled to match. A very pretty pink silk blouse, with a jabot of old lace, is worn under a short-basqued coatee of the grey cloth, which is open in front. The pink sleeves of the blouse show under the grey ones from the elbows to the wrists. The hat worn with this is of sunburned straw with a trimming of black velvet, and a couple of black ostrich tips, and one pink rosette at the back. Grey gloves and a grey sunshade lined with pink are the et-ceteras.

Do you call that a pretty dress? Both Maud and I fell deeply in love with it.

Here are several nice ways of cooking artichokes. Try some of them:—

Having boiled the artichokes, divest them of their leaves, trim the bottoms, and place a little mustard and cress in each; cut 4 anchovies and 2 gherkins into fine dice, add to it the minced breast of a cold chicken. Mix it with a small quantity of mayonnaise sauce, and put a portion in each artichoke; cover with a thin disc of aspic jelly; decorate the surface with hard-boiled white of egg and truffle. Arrange them on a dish-paper, and garnish with watercress.

And here is another way:—

Prepare the artichokes as directed in the preceding recipe, and season them with a little oil and vinegar. Pound 4 oz. of cold chicken with 1 oz. of butter, a dessertspoonful of cold white sauce, and a seasoning of salt and pepper; rub it through a wire sieve, put it into a paper cornet, and press a little of the purée on to the centre of each artichoke, put a little minced tomato salad on the top, ornament the edges with a piping of Montpellier butter, finish the top with a sprig of chervil, and arrange them on a bed of green salad. The Montpellier butter is made in this way:—Blanch a good handful of parsley with a few sprigs of tarragon and chervil, and a sprig of thyme, by plunging them for three minutes into boiling water, immerse them in cold water, and squeeze them dry in a cloth. Now put the herbs into a mortar with the yolk of a hard-boiled egg, a tablespoonful of capers, 2 boned anchovies, a pinch of salt and cayenne pepper, and 2 oz. of butter; pound the whole thoroughly together, adding a dessertspoonful of tarragon and a few drops of chili vinegar by degrees; ascertain that the seasoning is palatable, then rub it through a hair sieve.

Another pretty dish is made by spreading the artichokes with Montpellier butter, then arranging alternate strips of white chicken, gherkin, and anchovy on the surface, and dishing each one on a round piece of fried bread. Garnish with picked watercress.

Artichokes dressed in this way make a superior entrée:—

Prepare the artichokes as already described. Then cut in dice some cooked chicken, tongue, and truffle, mix it with a little white sauce and the raw yolk of an egg. Put a portion in the middle of each artichoke, cover it entirely with chicken or veal forcemeat, smooth it with a palette knife dipped in hot water, decorate with crescent-shaped pieces of truffle, cover with a buttered paper and steam (without allowing them to boil) for half an hour. Dish them on a steamed border of forcemeat, pour a little white sauce round, and garnish the centre with green peas.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

MARIANI WINE

This incomparable COCA WINE is an aid to intellectual exertion, and is indispensable to brain-workers and others who suffer from Debility, Exhaustion, Mental Depression, Dyspepsia, Sleeplessness, Voice Fatigue; also to promote Convalescence. Written Testimonials from over 2,000 Physicians. "A powerful rejuvenator and renovator of the vital forces." Sold by Chemists, Grocers, and Stores, or delivered free by Importers, WILCOX & CO. 239, Oxford-st., London. 4s. per bottle, or 45s. dozen. Be sure and ask for MARIANI WINE.

MOURNING FOR IMMEDIATE WEAR.

Messrs. JAY'S

Large and well-assorted STOCK includes a choice and varied selection of COSTUMES, MANTLES, and MILLINERY, suitable for any degree of Mourning, and ready for IMMEDIATE WEAR. Orders to special instructions are executed in a few hours, and Ladies are Waited Upon in any part of the country without any extra charge whatever.

JAY'S,
REGENT STREET, LONDON.

JOHN EXSHAW and CO.'S BRANDIES

The great reputation No. 1 Brandy has obtained in India has induced J. EXSHAW & CO. to now supply direct to the English Public.

No. 1	66/- per doz.	Very Old Liqueur	140/- per doz.
Liqueur	84/- ,,	Magnificent Old do.	175/- ,,
Fine Liqueur	96/- ,,	Grand Champagne	200/- ,,

SAMPLES FORWARDED.

CHAMPAGNES.

Jules Champion & Co.'s 1889 (in Bottles only)	68/-	per doz.
Moet & Chandon's Dry Imperial 1884 (in Bottles only)	105/-	,,
Ditto ditto ditto 1889 (in all sizes)	84/-	,,
Lebeau & Co. (in Magnums and Bottles only)	54/-	,,

CLARETS.

Ch. La Croute 1889	24/-	per doz.
Ch. Brane Cantenac 1889	36/-	,,

(Bottled at the Chateau).

SOLE AGENTS for the United Kingdom

POWELL, TURNER, & CO.

28, King-street, St. James's, S.W. & 23, Finch-lane, City.

TASTERS TO H.M.'s WAR OFFICE
And GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY.

Telegraphic Address: "PEREIRE, London." Telephone No. 3,575.

CRITERION GRAND HALL.

THE SPIERPON ORCHESTRA.

THIS WEEK

MISS CISSIE TURNER,

VOCALIST.

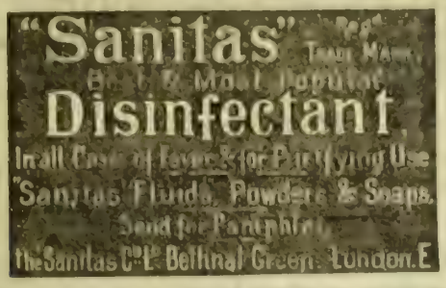
RECHERCHE DINNERS AND SUPPERS

AT 5/- & 7/- 6 to 9.30.

AT 4/- 11 to 12.30.

No Charge for Attendance. Separate Tables. Lift from Grand Vestibule to Grand Hall. Constantly Varied Programme and Musical Novelties.

"SANITAS" KILLS ALL DISEASE GERMS



"SANITAS" IS NON-POISONOUS, FRAGRANT, AND DOES NOT STAIN.

Mr. HELBRONNER, Ld.

300 & 302, OXFORD STREET, W.
ECCLESIASTICAL AND DOMESTIC EMBROIDERERS.
Weavers of Dress Silks,
Decorators, Upholsterers, &c.

LADIES' HOSIERY.

Ladies requiring stockings for comfort, elasticity, and wear-resisting qualities should ask for the Patent TRIPLE SPLICED INSTEP HOSE, which are undoubtedly the best produced. They are made in Cotton, Lisle Thread, Summer and Winter Cashmere, Spun and Pure Silk.

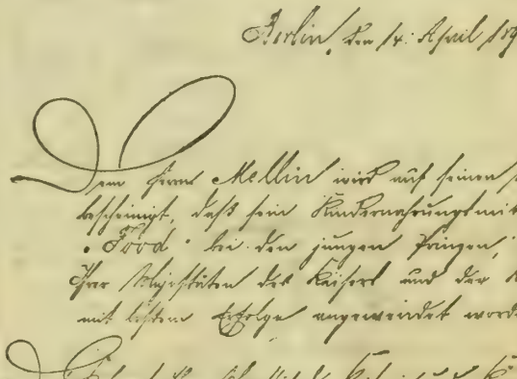
Each pair is stamped with the Registered trade mark, "MUSA DYE," and "PATENT TRIPLE SPLICED INSTEP HOSE, No. 20,778" on sole of foot.

To be obtained of all the best Hosiers and Outfitters in the United Kingdom.

Ladies experiencing any difficulty in obtaining these goods are requested to write to the patentees, who will forward them the address of the nearest vendor. This will ensure their having the genuine article.

Wholesale only of the Patentees:
DEBENHAM & FREEBODY,
Fletcher Gate, Nottingham.

UNIQUE TESTIMONIAL
FROM
HER IMPERIAL MAJESTY THE
EMPRESS of GERMANY



TRANSLATION.

Berlin, April 14th, 1893.

At Mr. MELLIN'S request, it is hereby certified that his "Food" for Children has been used with the best results by the young Princes, Sons of their Imperial Majesties, The Emperor and Empress.

The Cabinet of Her Majesty the Empress and Queen.

AN ILLUSTRATED PAMPHLET ON THE FEEDING AND REARING OF INFANTS.

A PRACTICAL AND SIMPLE TREATISE FOR MOTHERS,
Containing a large number of Portraits of Healthy and Beautiful Children; together with Facsimiles of Original Testimonials which are of the greatest interest to all mothers, to be had with Samples Free by Post, on application to

MELLIN'S FOOD WORKS, STAFFORD ST. PECKHAM, S.E.

(The Original Firm Established 1810.)
Mappin Brothers

By Her Majesty's Special Warrant.

Queen's Plate is the finest Electro-Silver Plate in the World. Has stood the test of over 80 years, and is supplied direct to the public by the actual Manufacturers from Queen's Works, Sheffield.

"Queen's" Plate.
(PROTECTED)
For TABLE FURNISHING, &c.

Mappin Brothers' Trade Mark Corporate is on all Manufactures in Queen's Plate and Cutlery.

Only London Show Rooms: 220, REGENT ST., W.; & 66, CHEAPSIDE, E.C. (Next Sir John Bennett's.)

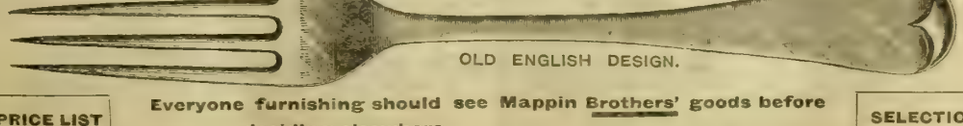
OUTFITS OF "QUEEN'S" PLATE.



"QUEEN'S" TABLE CUTLERY.

ILLUSTRATED PRICE LIST and SAMPLES POST-FREE.

Everyone furnishing should see Mappin Brothers' goods before deciding elsewhere.

Inspection invited at the London Show-Rooms.

SELECTIONS of Goods forwarded to the Country on APPROVAL.

CHATTO & WINDUS, PUBLISHERS.

"THE SCALLYWAG."

GRANT ALLEN'S New Novel, "THE SCALLYWAG," will be Ready in 3 vols., crown 8vo, at every Library, on September 5.

A THIERS' GREAT HISTORY.

History of the Consulate and the Empire of France under Napoleon. By L. A. THIERS. Translated by D. FORBES CAMPBELL and JOHN STEBBING. An entirely New Edition, reset in a handsome type, with the Steel plate Illustrations. Complete in 12 demy 8vo vols., 12s. each. The FIRST VOLUME will be ready immediately, and the publication will proceed at the rate of one volume a month.

 A Prospectus, with Specimen Page, will be sent upon application.

"To Let," &c. By B. M. CROKER, Author of "Pretty Miss Neville," "Diana Barrington," &c. Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s.; cloth limp, 2s. 6d.

The Gun-Runner. A Romance of Zululand. By BERTRAM MITFORD. With a Frontispiece by Stanley L. Wood. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"This story of African romantic adventure is powerfully conceived, and the interest of the reader is never allowed for a moment to flag."—Glasgow Herald.

A Dog of Flanders, and other Stories. By OUIDA. With 6 Illustrations by E. H. Garrett. (Uniform with the Illustrated Edition of "Bimbi.") Small 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

A Trying Patient, &c. By JAMES PAYN, Author of "By Proxy" &c. With a Frontispiece by Stanley L. Wood. Crown 8vo, cloth extra 3s. 6d.

Dr. Pascal. By ÉMILE ZOLA. Author of "The Downfall," "The Dream," &c. Translated by ERNEST A. VIZETELLY. With an Etched Portrait of the Author. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"M. Zola's latest book, which is the crown and the conclusion of a series of twenty volumes, stands as being in some respects the most powerful, the most dramatic, and the most pathetic."—Times.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, Piccadilly, W.

NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES.

AS A MAN IS ABLE.

By DOROTHY LEIGHTON.

In Three volumes.

Vanity Fair. "We seem to have struck a vein of clever new novelists lately. Here is another work that is quite as interesting as 'Dodo,' which we had the pleasure of reviewing [illegible] a week or two ago."

THE COUNTESS RADNA.

By W. E. NORRIS.

In Three volumes. Second Edition.

THIRD THOUSAND.

THE HEAVENLY TWINS.

By Madame SARAH GRAND,

In Three volumes.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE HEAVENLY TWINS."

IDEALA. By MADAME SARAH GRAND. Fifth Edition. 3s. 6d.

HEINEMANN'S INTERNATIONAL LIBRARY.

THE JEW. By J. I. KRASZEWSKI. Translated from the Polish. With an Introduction by EDMUND GOSSE. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; Paper, 2s. 6d. The Jew has the adventurous interest of 'Gil Blas' and the [illegible] of Dostoieffsky.

FROM WISDOM COURT. By HENRY SETON MERRIMAN and STEPHEN GRAHAM TALLENTYRE. With 30 Illustrations by R. CATON WOODVILLE. 3s. 6d.

"The Opposition in The Spectator. It is the book to take upon a punt, to carry to the [illegible] to read on a [illegible]; a holiday book par excellence, of a sort which is not forgotten when the return to work."

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

NOW READY.

The SEPTEMBER No. HARPER'S MAGAZINE,

CONTAINING:

A GENERAL ELECTION IN ENGLAND.
ILLUSTRATED.

THE LETTERS OF JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

RIDERS OF EGYPT
ILLUSTRATED.

THE LOST MILLIONS OF PEROTE.
ILLUSTRATED.

A GENTLEMAN OF THE ROYAL GUARD.
ILLUSTRATED.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS, ONE SHILLING.

Messrs. WM. BLACKWOOD & SONS' LIST.

NEW BOOKS.

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED.

MILITARY TOPOGRAPHY. Illustrated by Practical Examples of a Practical Subject. By Major-General W. E. MONTAGUE, C.B., P.S.C., Late Garrison Instructor; Intelligence Department, &c. With 41 Diagrams. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED.

STRAY SPORT. By J. MORAY BROWN, Author of "Shikar Sketches," "Powder, Spur, and Spear," "The Days when we went Hog-Hunting." 2 vols., post 8vo. With 50 Illustrations, 21s.

"It is his appreciation of variety, his power of vivid description, and his obvious delight in all the minor incidents of sport, in the art which consists in working for circumventing and killing your game in a fair way, that the chief charm of his book lies. . . . Some of the most delightful of his papers are those in which he tells of his experiences by the rivers and burns of the north-east of Scotland."—Scotsman.

Works by the Late
GENERAL SIR E. B. HAMLEY, K.C.B., K.C.M.G.

THE OPERATIONS OF WAR EXPLAINED AND ILLUSTRATED. Fifth Edition, Revised throughout, 4to, with numerous Illustrations, 30s.

NATIONAL DEFENCE; Articles and Speeches. Post 8vo, 6s.

SHAKESPEARE'S FUNERAL, and other Papers. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THOMAS CARLYLE: An Essay. Second Edition, Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

LADY LEE'S WIDOWHOOD. New Edition, Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

OUR POOR RELATIONS. A Philozoic Essay, with Illustrations, chiefly by ERNEST GRISET. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

For Aches and Pains.

ELLIMAN'S Universal EMBROCATION

"An Excellent Good Thing." One Shilling and Three Halfpence.

SERGEANT.—"ELLIMAN'S I WILL HAVE, OR I WILL HAVE NONE.

LUMBAGO.

From a Justice of the Peace.

"About a fortnight ago a friend advised me to try your Embrocation, and its effect has been magical."

STRENGTHENS THE MUSCLES.

From "Victorina," "The Strongest Lady in the World."

"It not only relieves pain, but it strengthens the nerves and muscles.'

SORE THROAT FROM COLD.

From a Clergyman.

"For many years I have used your Embrocation, and found it most efficacious in preventing and curing sore throat from cold.'

BRONCHITIS.

From Mr. R. J. Callis, 5, Trelawn-terrace, Hendon. January 26th, 1891.

"My two children, two and four years old, were attacked, last November, with bronchitis. The Doctor could give them little relief, and finally it appeared in an aggravated form. At last I thought I would try your Embrocation, and, I am pleased to tell you, with gratifying results. They are both well now, and I have no hesitation in saying through using your splendid Embrocation."

PREPARED ONLY BY

ELLIMAN, SONS, & CO.

SLOUGH, ENG.

1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. Of all Chemists.

BACK HURT.

From Mr. J. A. Dickson, 170, Belsize-road, South Hampstead, N.W., May 29th, 1891.

"A month ago, whilst playing a somewhat rough part, I fell and hurt my back. The next morning I could not move, but I sent for a bottle of your Embrocation, and had it well rubbed in, and in two hours could get up, and by the time the bottle was empty was cured."

CYCLING.

From L. Fabrellas, St. Sebastien, Spain.

"I am a member of a Cycling Club here, and can testify to the excellent results to be obtained by using your Universal Embrocation."

RHEUMATISM.

From A. Barton, Esq., The Ferns, Romford.

"I write to say that had it not been for Elliman's Embrocation I should have remained a cripple up to the present moment."

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, LIMITED.

FOUNDED IN 1842.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE (either New or Second-hand) of the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum. LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for books exchangeable by the Library Messengers) from Two Guineas per annum. COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum. N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage. LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

TOWN AND VILLAGE CLUBS SUPPLIED ON LIBERAL TERMS.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books Gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the Leading Books of Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand, at greatly Reduced Prices. LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; and 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C. (Mansion House End).

A NEW NOVEL BY A NEW WRITER.

Just Published, in 3 vols., Crown 8vo, 31s. 6d. At all Libraries.

THE HEIRLOOM

By T. DUTHIE-LISLE.

MRS. WIGGINS' LAST SUCCESS.

Second Edition, Crown 8vo, Illustrated, Tastefully Bound, 3s 6d.

A Cathedral Courtship

And Penelope's English Experiences.

Baron de Book Worms wrote in Punch:—"There is only one word that will fittingly describe 'A Cathedral Courtship'—IT IS DELIGHTFUL."

Daily News:—"Both stories are idylls. . . . From the first to the last the volume is full of life, humour, and colour."

Athenæum:—"Humour, vivacity, and freshness written on almost every page."

London: GAY & BIRD, KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND, Publishers and Agents for American Books.

On August 26 (Sixpence), New Series, No. 123.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE FOR SEPTEMBER, containing "WITH EDGED TOOLS," Chaps. 9 to 12—"A NEW RIVER"—"THE FIRST ENGINEER"—"THE MAN IN THE GREEN TURBAN"—"AN AMERICAN LOCK-UP"—"MY NURSERY REVISITED"—"CHARACTER NOTE: INTELLECTA"—"A WIDOW'S TALE," by Mrs. OLIPHANT, Chaps. 8 to 10.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterloo-place.

Now Ready. Foolscap 4to, 252 pp., Illustrated, Cloth, Gilt edges. 10s. 6d. net. THE

EARLY DAYS OF MARLBOROUGH COLLEGE;

OR, PUBLIC SCHOOL LIFE BETWEEN FORTY AND FIFTY YEARS AGO.

To which is added A Glimpse of Old Haileybury; Patna during the Mutiny; A Sketch of the Natural History of the Riviera; and Life in an Oxfordshire Village.

By EDWARD LOCKWOOD, Indian Civil Service (Retired).

Author of "The Natural History of Monghyr."

"A lively and interesting description of the School in its infancy."—Morning Post.

"We feel almost tempted to call Mr. Lockwood the Gilbert White of the Riviera."—Publisher's Circular.

SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & CO., Limited.
FARMER & SONS, 295, Edgware-road, London.

STERILITY IN WOMEN: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. By J. B. RYLEY, M.D., M.R.C.S., London.—A New Illustrated Edition of this work is Now Ready. Price 3s. 6d.; post-free 3s. 8d. London: HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand.

ESTATES, AUCTIONS, &c.

ALDRIDGE'S.

"THE MAGNET" COACH HORSES.

On Wednesday, August 30, Will be SOLD, without Reserve,
(The Property of J. W. CHRISTMAS, Esq.),

36 HORSES,

Which have been working the MAGNET (London and Reigate) COACH During the Season. All warranted to answer description given in Catalogue, which will be forwarded on application to

W. & S. FREEMAN.

On view MONDAY, AUGUST 28.

HYDE PARK AND PORTMAN ESTATES.—Messrs. FREDERICK A. MULLETT, BOOKER, & CO.'S Registers of the Select Furnished and Unfurnished Residences, TO BE LET and SOLD, may be inspected daily at their Auction and Estate Agency Offices, Albion House, Hyde Park-square (the corner of Albion-street), W.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent Gratis. The List includes Private Asylums, &c.—Address, Mr. G. B. STOCKER, 8, Lancaster-place, Strand, W.C.

TREATMENT OF INEBRIETY.

Dalrymple Home,

Rickmansworth, Herts.

For Gentlemen under the Act and Privately,

TERMS—2 TO 5 GUINEAS.

Apply to—R. WELSH BRANTHWAITE,
Medical Superintendent.

TWO NEW VOLUMES OF THE PSEUDONYM LIBRARY.

28. THE SINNER'S COMEDY. By JOHN OLIVER HOBBES. Fourth Edition.

29. CAVALLERIA RUSTICANA, and Other Tales of Sicilian Peasant Life. By GIOVANNI VERGA.

Paper, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, 2s. each.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster-square, E.C.

Price Sixpence.

THE HARROGATE MINERAL WATERS and HOMŒOPATHY. A new Analysis. Reprinted from the Monthly "Homœopathic Review."

Published by E. GOULD & SON, London, and can be purchased at any Booksellers'.

PALL MALL MAGAZINE.

SEPTEMBER NUMBER READY AUGUST 25. (EDITED BY LORD FREDERIC HAMILTON, M.P., AND SIR DOUGLAS STRAIGHT.) PRICE ONE SHILLING.

BIMETALLISM: A STUDY.

"THE CASE FOR SILVER." By W. H. GRENFELL, Esq., Ex-M.P. for Hereford.

"THE CASE FOR GOLD." By WILLIAM WALDORF ASTOR. By SIR F. LEIGHTON, Bart., P.R.A., Engraved by BISCOMBE GARDNER.

OTHER CONTENTS.

DUTCH PEASANT GIRL. Coloured Frontispiece. From an original painting by Miss E. G. COHEN.

THE TRUE LEGEND OF THE ZEPHYR AND THE ROSE. By the COUNTESS OF CORK AND ORRERY. Illustrated by E. M. JESSOP.

THE SERE, THE YELLOW LEAF. Part I. By Madame SARAH GRAND. Illustrated by W. H. MARGETSON.

AT ANCHOR—TAKING IN STORES.

RUSSIAN JEWRY. Part I. By HALL CAINE. With Illustrations drawn from Types of Russian Immigrants at the London Docks by Miss E. COHEN.

AN IMPERIAL CITY. By SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN, K.S.I. With Illustrations by H. BREWER and FRANCES MARY.

DICK DENHOLME. By J. KEIGHLEY SNOWDEN. With Illustrations by J. GULICH, and a full page Engraving by BISCOMBE GARDNER.

THE LOUVRE OF NAPOLEON. Part III. By Mrs PARR. With Illustrations from Dr. Parr's Collection of Old Prints.

ROME IN AMERICA. By RAYMOND BLATHWAYT. Illustrated with portraits of the Roman Hierarchy in America.

"THE CHILDREN'S PLAYGROUND." From an original drawing by ROBERT BARNES, R.I., engraved by J. R. SMITH.

A DUTCH EXTERIOR. By W. L. ALDEN. With Illustrations.

PEOPLE WE HAVE MET. No. 3.—"The Sportsman." From an original drawing by "RAB."

A NEW EXPLOSIVE. By ROBERT BARR. Illustrated by A. RITCHIE.

THE CALL TO DUTY. From an original drawing by G. L. SEYMOUR.

SOCIETY: THE REMNANT. By Mrs. LYNN LINTON.

THE PARTRIDGE. By "A SON OF THE MARSHES." With Illustrations by G. E. LODGE.

CLARINDA'S BEAUTY. By NORMAN GALE. Illustrated by Miss VERA CHRISTIE.

WITHOUT PREJUDICE. By I. ZANGWILL. With Thumb-Nail Sketches by L. BAUMER.

PALL MALL MAGAZINE DRAWING COMPETITION (No. III.). "THE PRINCIPAL INCIDENT OF THE SUMMER HOLIDAYS." As anticipated by (a) Paterfamilias. (b) Materfamilias. (c) Edith (aged Nineteen). (d) Dick (aged Fourteen). By Mr. H. STRATTON, Mr. W. J. URQUHART, and Miss VERA CHRISTIE.

Obtainable at all Railway Bookstalls and Railway Bookstalls in Great Britain and Ireland. Editorial Offices: 18, Charing Cross-road, W.C.; Publishing Offices: London: GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, Limited, Broadway, Ludgate Hill, E.C.; Manchester: GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, Limited, 16 John-street, New York: The International News Company; Toronto: The Toronto News Company; Montreal: The Montreal News Company.

AMUSEMENTS.

ADELPHI THEATRE. A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers. A New Drama of Real Life by Henry Pettitt entitled A WOMAN'S REVENGE, Every Evening, at 7.30. Messrs. Charles Warner, Charles Cartwright, Herbert Flemming, Evelyn Hardinge, John Carter, and F. W. Gardiner; Misses Elizabeth Robins, Mary Raby, F. L. Forster, and Fanny Brough. Box plan at theatre. Telephone 7644. Open at 7.30.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.—Manager, F. J. HARRIS.—Every Evening, at 8.15, MOROCCO BOUND. John L. Shine and Charles Danby; Misses Violet Cameron and Letty Lind. Preceded, at 7.45, by Rex Harley, the Inimitable Mimic of Popular Actors. Box-office 10 to 10. Doors open 7.30. Matinee Saturday next.

ALHAMBRA THEATRE. Open 7.45.—Two BALLETS, Operatic Music, and Varieties. At 8.40, the New Grand Romantic Ballet, in Four Tableaux, entitled FIDELIA. At 10.30, CHICAGO, and Grand Ballet of Nations. Frequent Change of Programme. Telephone 3,986.

THE EMPIRE.—Leicester-square.—Grand Programme.—Two Grand Ballets, Second Edition of ROUND THE TOWN and KATRINA. Unqualified success. Unrivalled VARIETY ENTERTAINMENT. Magnificent Orchestra. Doors open at 7.45. No free list.

LONDON PAVILION.—Grand and Unsurpassed Programme. Dan Leno, Marie Leyton, James Fawn, Bessie Bellwood, Mons. Ganivet, Sisters Macarte, Charles Godfrey, Kate James, Little Chip, Minnie Cunningham, G. W. Kenway, Florrie Gallimore, Tom Leamore, Jennie Valmore, Charles Bignell, Nellie Navette, Tiny Websters, Evans and Luxmore, Selbini Troupe, Flo Hastings, Ada Lundberg, the Leonards, Arthur Rigby, Brothers Hoon.—EVERY EVENING. Doors open at 7.30. Admission from 1s.—Manager, Mr. EDWARD SWANBOROUGH.

TIVOLI, Strand, London.—Cool and Well Ventilated.—Open EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, and SATURDAY MATINÉE, at 2.30, with a STAR PROGRAMME, embracing every Artiste of note now in London.—Manager, Mr. VERNON DOWSETT.

NIAGARA FALLS in WINTER.
Finest Sight and Coolest Place in London.
NIAGARA HALLS, St. James's Park Station.
DAILY, 10 to 10 p.m. Admission 1s. Children 6d.
Tickets, including admission, all Dist. and Met. Ry. Stations.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker-street Station, in connection with all railways. Through bookings at all Metropolitan stations.—Magnificent Group containing Portraits of H.R.H. the Duke of YORK, H.S.H. the Duchess of YORK. Royal Tiger Hunt. H.R.H. the Prince of Wales in the howdah; Juno, the famous war elephant, charging a tiger. Political Celebrities, Cabinet Ministers past and present. Grand Scenes and Tableaux. Music all day. Refreshment Bars, &c. Chamber of Horrors, Portrait Models of Thomas Neill, Frederick Deeming, Mrs. Pearcey, &c. Admission, 1s.; Children under twelve, 6d. Chamber of Horrors, 6d. Open from 10 to 10.

THEATRE ROYAL COVENT GARDEN.
Sole Lessee, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS
Musical Director, Mr. [illegible]
EVERY EVENING at 7.30,
[illegible]

EARLY SINKINS PROMENADE CONCERTS THIS and EVERY EVENING at 8. [illegible] the Finest in London, and the Only Concerts at the Theatres. CONCERTS STEDMAN'S CHOIR of [illegible] Vocal and Instrumental Artists. [illegible] duction of Second Part. Admission Orchestra Stalls, [illegible]

EARL'S COURT EXHIBITION
OF
GARDENING AND FORESTRY.
THE GARDEN OF LONDON.
OPEN DAILY, 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.
ALL ROADS LEAD TO EARL'S COURT.
BAND of H.M. SCOTS GUARDS. The EXHIBITION BAND, GRAND ORGAN, STRING BAND.
ILLUMINATIONS. Fête of Thousands of Electric Globes and Venetian Lights, arranged with regard to effect.
FERNERIES, FOUNTAINS, WATERFALLS.
ADMISSION ONE SHILLING. SEASON TICKETS (Half Price), 10s. 6d., available for the whole of the remaining days of the Great Building Exhibition of Gardening and Forestry, Cookery and Women's Work, and to one of 2,000 Free Seats at Captain BOYTON'S WORLD'S WATER SHOW.
CAPTAIN BOYTON'S WORLD'S WATER SHOW,
EARL'S COURT.
COOLEST PLACE OF ENTERTAINMENT IN LONDON.
TWICE DAILY at 3.30 and 8, RAIN or SHINE.
Admission to Grand Stand 6d. to 5s., and Private Boxes.

ESTABLISHED 1818.
Ten Prize Medals.
PETER F. HEERING'S
COPENHAGEN
CHERRY BRANDY.
Sold by all Wine Merchants, and at all Bars and Hotels.

LIQUEUR OF THE GRAND CHARTREUSE.
This most excellent Liqueur, the great preventive of Indigestion, and almost certain remedy for sea-sickness, can now be had of all Wine Merchants, and at prices much lower than formerly.
Sole Consignee, W. DOYLE, 35, Crutched Friars, London, E.C.

"JAP" CARPETS

We have just received a shipment of Carpets and Rugs of Japanese Manufacture from our Agents in Hiogo, and as we are able to sell them at a very low price, we offer them to our Customers in preference to submitting them to the Wholesale Trade. They are novel and artistic in design and colouring, and of thick pile.

CARPETS.

8 feet long	by 6 feet wide	... ...	28/-	each.
10 „	9 „	... ...	50/-	„
12 „	9 „	... ...	63/-	„

RUGS.

3 feet long	by 1 ft. 6 in. wide	...	2 6	each.
4 „	2 feet wide	... ...	5/-	„
6 „	3 „	... ...	8 6	„

A FEW MIRZAPORE CARPETS, 9 ft. by 6 ft. ... 27/6 each.
KURD RUGS, 5 ft. by 3 ft. ... 5/9 „
BANGALORE RUGS, 6 ft. by 3ft. ... 5/- each.
KURD CARPETS, 9 ft. by 4 ft. 6 in. ... 21/- „

Catalogues of all the best Floor Coverings free.

TRELOAR & SONS

LUDGATE HILL, LONDON, E.C.

"TRUTH" HOTEL LIST.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HÔTEL MÉTROPOLE.—On the East Cliff, facing the sea, three minutes from East Station. The largest and most magnificent Hotel in Bournemouth. Now open to receive visitors. Inclusive terms from 10s. 6d. per day.
GEORGE ALEXANDER, Manager.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HOTEL MONT DORE.—"The finest Hotel on the South Coast."—L. & S. W. Railway Guide. Adjoining the hotel is a large Winter Garden, containing a covered tennis court, lounge, and a unique Bath Establishment, comprising Turkish, sea-water, pine, and other Baths. For tariff and full particulars, address THE MANAGER.

BOURNEMOUTH.—NEWLYN'S ROYAL EXETER HOTEL. In a beautifully sheltered position and its own private grounds. Only 100 yards from the lovely Pavilion Gardens, and two minutes from the Pier. Accommodation, appointments, and views unsurpassed. Excellent cuisine. Table-d'hôte at 7 p.m. Omnibus at East Station.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.
Splendid position facing the sea.
BOARDING TERMS
from 10s. 6d. per day.
According to the position of rooms selected.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

BUXTON.—The PEAK THERMAL ESTABLISHMENT. A High-class Hydropathic Hotel. Mineral water and other baths. Resident physician. Electric light. Passenger lift. Magnificent public rooms. Excellent cuisine. Table d'hôte 7 p.m., separate tables. Terms moderate.—Telegrams, "Thermal, Buxton."

CALLANDER & TROSSACHS HYDROPATHIC.—
Splendid Drives. Good Fishing. Lawn Tennis. Golf.
Terms from £2 12s. 6d. per week.
Apply to the MANAGER.

CHESTER.—QUEEN RAILWAY HOTEL, connected with the General Station by covered way. Porters in scarlet livery on the platforms attending trains day and night. Billiards. Lifts to all floors. Telegraph office in the Hotel. Telegraphic address, "Queen, Chester." Telephone, No. 27, Chester Exchange. H. T. GOULD, Manager.

FOLKESTONE.—ROYAL PAVILION HOTEL, facing Sea. 200 Apartments. Near landing-stage for Continent. Large winter garden. Table d'hote at 7 p.m.
G. SPURGEN, Proprietor.

FOLKESTONE.—BATES' HOTEL, West Cliff Gardens, and LONGFORD PRIVATE HOTEL, The Leas. Oldest established and most select Family Hotels in Folkestone. Reduced terms during Winter and Spring months. Pension (new Coffee-room) at Bates' Hotel.—G. L. HART, Proprietor. Sanitation Certified.

FOLKESTONE.—THE LEAS HOTEL, situated in private grounds, adjoining fashionable promenade. Sea views. Redecorated and newly-furnished throughout. Passengers' lift. Certified sanitation. Excellent cuisine. Moderate tariff.

GAIRLOCH HOTEL, LOCH MAREE, ROSS-SHIRE.—This magnificent hotel is situated amidst the finest Highland scenery in the West coast of Scotland. Accommodation for over 200. Good Fishing. Large posting establishment. Swift steamer from Oban every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

GRAND CANARY.—THE MÉTROPOLE.
Newest and best Hotel.
Delightful position, fronting the sea.
Terms most moderate.

LONDON.—The COVENT GARDEN HOTEL, Covent-garden.—Most central FAMILY HOTEL, within five minutes' of Law Courts and Somerset House. Hydraulic lift. Quiet rooms. Electric light. Table d'hôte, 6.0 to 8.30 (open to non-residents). Moderate charges. Night porter. Telegrams, "Replete, London," Telephone 780.—M. A. S. BROWNE, Proprietor.

LONDON.—QUEEN'S-GATE MANSIONS, South Kensington, S.W. (close to Hyde Park, Albert Hall, and Imperial Institute) with all the advantages of a first-class residential hotel; public dining, drawing, billiard, and smoking rooms; hydraulic lift to every floor; electric light throughout.—Tariff on application to MANAGER.

MALVERN.—The Most Charming Luft-Kuhr Ort in England. THE IMPERIAL HOTEL offers every modern comfort, is surrounded by its own grounds, and commands splendid views. Brine (Droitwich) Baths now open for the season.—For tariff, apply to the Lessee and Manager, F. MOERSCHELL.

MATLOCK BATH.—ROYAL HOTEL.—Hydropathic Baths of every description. Medical Man. Healthful situation; extensive grounds, greatly admired. Large swimming bath. Billiards. Dairy farm. Splendid fishing.—Also NEW BATH HOTEL, with extensive grounds, fishing, &c. &c. Terms very moderate. 'Bus meets all trains.—T. TYACK, Proprietor.

NEWQUAY, Cornwall, The Biarritz of England.—ATLANTIC HOTEL, "the finest Hotel in the county." Splendidly situated. Full view of the Atlantic from Trevose Head to St. Ives. Ocean view from every window. Beaches, caverns, and cliff scenery unrivalled. Bracing climate. Bathing, yachting, fishing. Delightful excursions. Magnificent rooms. Strictly moderate charges.

NORWOOD (UPPER).—The QUEEN'S HOTEL, near the Crystal Palace. Specially adapted Suites of Apartments for families and permanent residents. Winter boarding. Terms from Three Guineas. A limited number of single rooms at 2½ guineas.

PORTRUSH (Giant's Causeway), co. Antrim.—NORTHERN COUNTIES HOTEL. Facing the Atlantic. Bracing air, magnificent scenery; tennis; Golf links, the finest in Ireland; surf and deep sea bathing, sea-water baths. Table d'hôte dinner, from 6 to 8 p.m. French cuisine. Charges very moderate. The HOTEL is UNDER RAILWAY MANAGEMENT.

SALISBURY.—The WHITE HART FAMILY HOTEL, nearly opposite the Cathedral. The largest and principal Hotel in the City. Table d'hôte (two hours each meal) at separate tables daily. Carriages for Stonehenge and other places of interest in the neighbourhood at fixed inclusive charges. Tariff on application to H. T. BOWES, Manager.

ST. LEONARD'S-ON-SEA.—The ALEXANDRA HOTEL, Eversfield-place, due south, facing the sea. Hydraulic lift to all floors. Billiard-room. Conservatory. Electric light in all public rooms. Table d'hote at separate tables, at 7.—Under the Management of Mr. and Mrs. PERCY BEER (Late of Bailey's Hotels, London).

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—ROYAL KENTISH HOTEL.—Largest, best appointed, facing the Common, close to Chalybeate Springs and Parade. Table d'hôte (separate tables). Inclusive terms, 12s. per day. Tariff of MANAGER.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WELLINGTON HOTEL, Mount Ephraim. Under the distinguished patronage of his Grace the late Duke of Wellington, K.G., the leading nobility and gentry, &c. 422 ft. above sea level, south aspect; elegantly furnished; piano in every sitting-room. Cuisine, English and French; Table d'hote, large Dairy Farm.—BRABY, Proprietor.

THE GROSVENOR HOTEL
BELGRAVIA, LONDON, S.W.
Well known for Wedding Breakfasts and Dinner Parties.
TABLE D'HÔTE OPEN TO NON-RESIDENTS.
Covered Communication to three Railway Stations.
The only Terminus Hotel of the Brighton Railway Company in London.
Electric Light throughout.

BRISTOL HOTEL,
Burlington Gardens, London, W.
(Between Bond-street and Regent-street, and close to Piccadilly).
Lighted by Electricity throughout. New Hydraulic Lift to all floors.
THE CHOICEST OF WINES. FRENCH CUISINE OF HIGHEST CHARACTER.
SEPARATE ENTRANCE TO RESTAURANT IN CORK STREET, OPEN TO NON-RESIDENTS.
Luncheons at fixed price of 4s.; Dinners at 10s. 6d. or à la carte.
Private Rooms for Parties of Four or more.
NO SUPPERS.
TELEPHONE No. 3,507.

ST. JAMES'S PARK, S.W.
QUEEN ANNE'S MANSIONS.
(QUEEN ANNE'S GATE, OPPOSITE ST. JAMES'S PARK STATION).
Finest view. Most central position. Near Houses of Parliament, Victoria, and Charing Cross. Suites of Rooms, Furnished or Unfurnished, having all comforts and privacy of home, at moderate outlay compared with expense of keeping house. All servants supplied and catering done by the Management. Rents include attendance, electric light, lifts, hot and cold water, &c.
Address, MANAGER.

ILFRACOMBE.—The RUNNACLEAVE Private HOTEL. 120 beautifully appointed rooms. Recreation hall, to seat 500, with fitted stage; carriage, yacht, tennis, photographic dark room, billiards, and in-door skating rink, free of charge until August. Chef de cuisine. Moderate tariff.

ALBANY HOTEL
(ROBERTSON TERRACE), HASTINGS.
Finest position on the whole sea front. Enlarged and superbly furnished. Only Hotel with Electric Light in every room. Passenger Lift. Dining, Drawing, Reading, Writing, Smoking, and Billiard Rooms. Table d'Hote 7 p.m. Moderate Tariff. No charge for attendance. C. A. SCHWABE, Manager.

BUXTON, DERBYSHIRE.
THE PALACE HOTEL.
This large and elegantly-appointed high-class Hotel contains upwards of 200 rooms. The hotel occupies the finest position in Buxton, and is surrounded by its own grounds of six acres. Ground-floor sitting-rooms and bed-rooms. Magnificent public rooms. American elevator. Table d'hôte at separate tables.
A. CROSS, Manager.

GRAND HOTEL, JERSEY.
LARGEST AND BEST APPOINTED HOTEL IN CHANNEL ISLES, AND THE FINEST SITUATION IN JERSEY.
Directly facing the Channel. Best Sands and Safest Sea Bathing opposite the Hotel. Magnificent Public Rooms. Swimming Bath. Tennis Courts, &c.
TABLE D'HÔTE DINNER at 7 p.m. (separate tables) "best in Jersey."
Terms Moderate (inclusive or à la carte).
Telegrams—"Grand, Jersey." SYDNEY ROGERS, Manager & Secretary.

THE MANAGER, IMPERIAL HOTEL, ABERDEEN (patronised by the Royal Family), begs to call the attention of old customers and intending visitors to the fact that it is through no fault of his that their Porter or Boots is not visible on the arrival of the trains, but because the Palace or Station Hotel Company have monopolised the right to have their porters within the barriers at the station to the exclusion of those of the other hotels in town.

SOUTHPORT.—PALACE HOTEL.—Summer Season. Charming Seaside Family Resort. Extensive grounds. Electric light. Tennis. Golf links. Splendid baths.

ILFRACOMBE.—ILFRACOMBE HOTEL.—Unrivalled sea frontage and open surroundings. Seven lawn-tennis courts. Large swimming bath. New lounge hall. 250 rooms.—Tariff of MANAGER.

HOTELS, &c.

Perfect Quietude. Perfect Rest Perfect Peace.

The WALTON PARK HOTEL,

Clevedon, Somerset.

(Four Hours from London.)

BILLIARDS. TENNIS.

A City Solicitor writes as follows:—

"When I feel jaded and worn out with the hard work and worries of London life, when the intellect seems clouded, and the temper ruffled at trifles, I run down to Clevedon; there, lying on the rocks by the water side, I can enjoy perfect quietude, perfect rest, and perfect peace; there I can forget the petty worries of everyday life, and believe that life is worth living. With exhilarating air, a cosy hotel, an excellent table, a good bottle of wine, and a kind hostess, I can enjoy what few City men enjoy—the pleasure of existence. I return to London in a few days, a new man, to the wonder of my friends, who know not the secret of my elixir of life."

— Terms Moderate. —

WALTON PARK HOTEL, CLEVEDON.

DREW & SONS, PICCADILLY CIRCUS, LONDON, W.

PATENT "EN ROUTE" TEA BASKET

Two-person size, complete, as sketch, with Silver Plated Kettle Regd. Spring Screw Cap, £2. 17s. 6d., or all fittings Silver Plated, £4. 10s.

Four-person size, Plain Metal £4. 14s., in all Silver Plated, £6. 10s.

N.B.—Either of these "En Routes" fitted with Drews' Patent Railway Attachment, lid and fall tray. Two-person size, 7/6; Four-person size, 10/6 extra to above prices.

NOTE.—All "En Routes" are now fitted with Drews' new patent sponge-packed lamp, with entirely new system of burner, specially adapted for travelling purposes, being superior in every way to the old lamp and boiling kettle more quickly. These lamps fit all Drews' baskets and can be had separately. Polished Brass, 5/-, Polished Nickel, 7/6.

NORWEGIAN YACHTING CRUISES
(FORTNIGHTLY) FROM NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.
Shortest route to Norway. Only one night at sea.
By the ALBION STEAMSHIP CO.'S (Ltd.) Fast and Splendidly-fitted Yachting Steamer
"MIDNIGHT SUN" (Captain NIVISON, R.N.R.), 3,020 tons, 2,860 horse-power.
Fares from 12 Guineas, including a sumptuous table.
NEXT SAILINGS—AUGUST 26; SEPTEMBER 9.
All applications for Berths to be made to the Yachting Steamer "MIDNIGHT SUN" Passenger Office, 4, Lombard-street (Tel. Add., Tourist), Newcastle-on-Tyne. Write for Itineraries.

BRUSSELS and the ARDENNES (Belgian Switzerland), vid HARWICH and ANTWERP, by GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY'S steamers every week day. CHEAPEST CONTINENTAL HOLIDAY.—London, Antwerp, Brussels, Dinant, steamer on the Meuse to Namur and back, 38s. 3d.; London, Antwerp, Brussels (for the Field of Waterloo), and back, 29s.
NEW SERVICE vid the HOOK of HOLLAND, daily (Sundays included).
Passengers leave London (Liverpool-street Station) at 8 p.m., and the principal towns in the Midland and Northern Counties in the afternoon, for Harwich direct. A Dining Car from York. HAMBURG, from Harwich by G. S. N. Co.'s steamers, Wednesdays and Saturdays. Through tickets and tours to all parts of the Continent. Read "Walks in the Ardennes," at all bookstalls, price 6d.—Particulars, apply at 61, Regent-street, W.; or to the Continental Traffic Manager, Liverpool-street Station, E.C.

QUICK CHEAP ROUTE to DENMARK, SWEDEN, and NORWAY, vid HARWICH and ESBJERG.—The United Steamship Coy. of Copenhagen Steamers sail from Harwich (Parkeston Quay) for Esbjerg every Monday, Thursday, and Saturday, after arrival of the train leaving London, Liverpool-st. Station, at 9.3 a.m., returning from Esbjerg every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, after arrival of 9 a.m. train from Copenhagen. Return Fares:—Esbjerg, 53s.; Copenhagen, 80s. 3d. The service will be performed (weather and other circumstances permitting) by the Steamships Koldinghuus and Botnia. These fast Steamers have excellent accommodation for passengers and carry no cattle. — For further information address TEGNER, PRICE, & CO., 107, Fenchurch-st., London; or the Continental Manager, Liverpool-st. Station, E.C.

AUSTRALIA and NEW ZEALAND. — NEW FAST PASSENGER ROUTE, viâ Vancouver, by fastest Atlantic steamers (any line) to Montreal or New York; thence viâ Canadian Pacific Railway, taking in the grand scenery of the Rockies, only actual trans-continental line running through trains under one management Atlantic to Pacific. Many optional routes, including Niagara and Chicago. Break of journey allowed.
New steamships, 5,000 tons each, of New Zealand and Australasian S.S. Co., largest, fastest, and finest running from American Continent to Australasia, leave Vancouver about as follows:—
S.s. WARRIMOO .....September 16th,
S.s. MIOWERA .....October 16th,
monthly thereafter, calling Honolulu, Brisbane, and Sydney. Electric light good cuisine, exceptionally large cabins.
For pamphlets and berths apply to PASSENGER DEPT., CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY, 67 and 68, KING WILLIAM STREET, LONDON, E.C.; 7, James-street, Liverpool; 105, Market-street, Manchester; 67, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow; or to JAMES HUDDART, 22, Billiter-street, E.C.

COALS.—The Marquis of Londonderry supplies SEA-BORNE COAL from his DURHAM COLLIERIES; Londonderry Wallsend, 27s.; Pittington Wallsend, 26s.; Primrose, 25s. 6d.; Seaton Wallsend, 24s. per ton. Cash on delivery.—Seaham Wharf, Nine Elms-lane, Vauxhall.

SCOTTADIE

ROYAL SCOTCH WOOLLEN HOUSE

115 & 115A REGENT STREET
LONDON W

For
Coats & Ulsters.
Travelling Cloaks.
Carriage Rugs.
Travelling Wraps.
Shawls. Mufflers
Shetland Shawls.
Shooting Stockings.
Scotch Tweeds & Homespuns for Suits & Gowns

Telegraphic Address—SCOTTADIE, LONDON.

CAMEO
CIGARETTES

A PHOTOGRAPH IN EVERY PACKET.

A SEPARATE MOUTHPIECE FOR EACH CIGARETTE.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

CARTER 6A, NEW CAVENDISH ST.

ILLUSTRATED PRICE LIST POST FREE.
PORTLAND PLACE, LONDON, W.

LITERARY MACHINE

For holding lamp, meals, &c. in any position over an easy chair, bed or sofa. Deliciously luxurious. A most useful gift. PRICES from £1.1s.

INVALID COMFORTS

Walking Machine for the lame
Adjustable Couches and Beds, £2.
Exercising Chairs £5. 5s.
Reclining Boards £1.1s.
Commodes £1.
Leg Rests 10s. 6d.
Easy Chairs £2. 10s.
Commode Chairs £2. 10s.
Carrying Chairs, £1.
Bed Tables 7s. 6d.
Crutches 10s. 6d.
Folding Couch Chairs 10s.
Bed Rests 10s.

BATH CHAIRS
From £1. 5s.

SELF-PROPELLING CHAIRS
£2. 2s.

Invalid Carriages
Perambulators
Rubber Tyres
From £1. 10s.

JOHN CARTER, 6a, New Cavendish St., Portland Place, London, W.
Telgrams—BATH CHAIR, LONDON. ILLUSTRATED PRICE LISTS POST FREE.

FLORILINE

FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH

Is the BEST LIQUID DENTIFRICE in the WORLD.

PREVENTS THE DECAY OF THE TEETH.

Renders the Teeth Pearly White.

IS PERFECTLY HARMLESS AND DELICIOUS TO THE TASTE.

Is Partly Composed of Honey, and Extracts from Sweet Herbs and Plants.

Of all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the World.

2s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE TOOTH POWDER,

Only put in Glass Jars, Price 1s.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER

Prevents the Hair from Falling off.

Restores Grey or White Hair to its ORIGINAL COLOUR.

Being delicately perfumed, it leaves no Unpleasant Odour.

IS NOT A DYE.

Should be in every House where a HAIR RENEWER is needed.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST OR HAIRDRESSER FOR

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

Price 3s. 6d. per bottle.

PURE IRISH

LINEN SHIRTS

Tailor-Made Direct from Ireland.

Save 30 per Cent.

Made of the most durable Long Cloth, and fitted with the finest Linen Ireland can produce.

MADE TO MEASURE.

FIT AND STYLE GUARANTEED IN THE LATEST FASHION.

Half-a-dozen Pure Irish bespoke Shirts, securely packed, delivered free to any address in the Kingdom for 33/-, 39/-, or 45/-. Foreign Postage Extra.

Sample Shirt to Measure, Post Free for 5/6, 6/6, or 7/6.

Dress Shirts with fine Irish Linen Fittings, Six for 39/-, delivered free. A Sample Dress Shirt to Measure, Post Free for 6/6.

Old Shirts re-fitted with New Irish Linen Fronts, Cuffs, and Neck bands for 2/6 and 3/6 each. Returned Carriage Free. Coloured Shirts, best quality, French Cambric 30/-, Oxford Cloth 33/- per half dozen. Patterns Free. Four fold Irish Linen Collars, best quality, 7/6 per dozen. General Catalogue post free.

For Measure, send size of Collar, Chest, and Height, or an old shirt.

TAAFFE & COLDWELL,

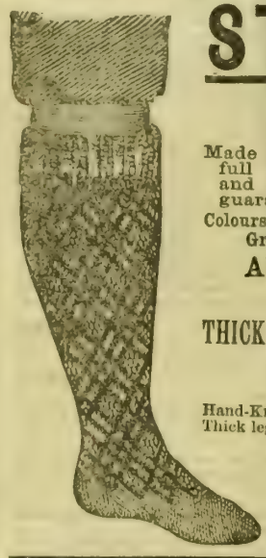
Army Shirt Tailors, 81, Grafton St., Dublin.

SPÉCIALITÉ:—THICK LEGS & THIN FEET.

A Want Long Felt, met at Last.

GOLF, SHOOTING, and CYCLING

STOCKINGS!



HOMEKNIT.

Free from all Seams.

Made of pure long staple Scotch Wool, full length, broad ribs, double heels and toes, most comfortable in wear, guaranteed to give satisfaction.

Colours: Navy Blue, Black, Light and Dark Grey, Heathers, and Fancy Mixtures.

ALL SIZES—1/9, 2/3, 3/6.

Spécialité:

THICK LEGS and THIN FEET, 2/6, 3/6.

THE HIGHLAND CHECK,

(As Illustration.)

Hand-Knitted, for Cycling, Golf, or Shooting, 3/6 & 4/6

Thick legs and thin feet 5/6

Postage, 3d. per pair; 2 pairs, 4½d.

Terms: Strictly Cash with Order

A. W. GAMAGE,

126, 127, 128, 129, HOLBORN, E.C.

THREE GOLD MEDALS.

The Y & N Exquisite Model. Perfect Comfort Guaranteed Wear.

Patent Diagonal Seam Corset

Will not split in the Seams nor tear in the Fabric. Made in White, Black, and all the fashionable colours and Shades in Italian Cloth, Satin, and Coutil; also in the New Sanitary Woollen Cloth. 4/11, 5/11, 6/11, 7/11 per pair and upwards.

CAUTION.—Every genuine Y & N Corset is stamped "Y & N Patent Diagonal Seam No. 116," in oval on the lining.

Sold by Drapers and Ladies' Outfitters in the United Kingdom and Colonies.

ARTISTIC HOMES.

"ABOUT OUR HOMES."

MAPLE & CO. "ABOUT OUR HOMES." (Hazell, 1s.). Maple & Co. will be happy to SEND a COPY of this little BOOK, which contains much interesting information upon DECORATION and other matters in connection with modern furnishing, free of charge, upon application.

BEDROOM SUITES

1000 BEDROOM SUITES

1000 BEDROOM SUITES at from 7os. to £ 100 forming a selection without parallel in the world, in every conceivable variety of style and design, and every description of woods at prices ranging from £3 15s. to £250, thus readily suiting every class of residence. Every one about to furnish should visit the Exhibition of Bedroom Furniture.

MAPLE & CO LTD

TOTTENHAM COURT RD. LONDON

The Largest and most Convenient

FURNISHING ESTABLISHMENT

IN THE WORLD

EASY CHAIRS

FIVE HUNDRED TO SELECT FROM

MAPLE & CO. have always on show an immense assortment of their world-famous, luxuriously comfortable Easy Chairs, Lounges, and Settees, in various shapes and coverings, all ready for immediate delivery, and at most moderate prices. A Comfortable Easy Chair is always an acceptable present.

TURKEY CARPETS

FINE QUALITIES

MAPLE & CO wish to direct special attention to some very choice Turkey Carpets now on show, remarkable both for their exceptionally fine quality and purity of colouring—many being exact reproductions of the most beautiful specimens of XVII. century art.

NEZOOM CARPETS

NEZOOM CARPETS

MAPLE & CO.'s NEZOOM CARPETS (Registered) are now on show, in all the new patterns and colourings. These carpets, being of the finest quality, and made entirely without seam or join, will wear admirably, and all waste in matching is avoided. List of Sizes post-free

The YŌST Typewriter

HAS NO RIBBON.

Awarded FOUR GOLD MEDALS

(Highest Award Wherever Shown)

TRADE MARK (REGD.)

PARIS, MONACO, KIMBERLEY, and LAUNCESTON.

Writes three times as fast as the Pen; makes several copies at one operation.

THE YOST IS BEING UNIVERSALLY ADOPTED. USED BY

ER MAJESTY'S GOVERNMENT. | THE KING OF WURTEMBURG. | THE EARL OF DYSART. | THE BARONESS DE WORMS.
HE EMPEROR OF GERMANY. | THE DUKE OF NEWCASTLE. | VISCOUNT EMLYN. | MR RIDER HAGGARD.
HE INDIAN and COLONIAL GOVTS. | THE EARL OF SEFTON. | THE LATE LORD MAYOR. | DR. NANSEN.

AND THOUSANDS OF COMMERCIAL AND PROFESSIONAL MEN.

THE YOST TYPEWRITER Co., Ltd., 40, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

And at PARIS, MANCHESTER, BIRMINGHAM, LEEDS, LIVERPOOL, GLASGOW, and BELFAST.

Marza Wine.

The Latest, Most alatable & Scientific IRON AND COCA WINE.

PECIAL REPORT IN THE "LANCET," July 1st, 189.

"The Marza Wine is greeable to the palate, nd is valuable not erely as a stimulant ut also as a Tonic, om the presence of a onsiderable quantity Iron, also the prin-ples of the Coca Leaf, hosphorus, and Pep-ne. The formula of Marza Wine is a com-endable one and oughtfully planned."

MARZA WINE IS INVALUABLE FOR CONVALESCENTS, ESPECIALLY AFTER ACCOUCHEMENT, INFLUENZA, &c. OR DEBILITATED MEN, DELICATE WOMEN, GROWING CHILDREN, AND ALL FEELING BELOW PAR.

Marza Wine.

AWARDED THE GOLD MEDAL —FOR— PURITY, PALATABILITY AND EXCELLENCE.

RECOMMENDED BY EMINENT PHYSICIANS FOR

ANÆMIA,
INSOMNIA,
NERVOUS DEBILITY,
BRAIN FAG,
INDIGESTION,
MENTAL DEPRESSION,
EXHAUSTION,
VOCAL FATIGUE,
NEURALGIA, &c.

MARZA WINE makes rich red blood and gives tone and vigour to all the vital organs.

Price 3/9 per Large Bottle, 42/- per doz. Everywhere, or Carriage Paid of THE MARZA CO. Ltd., 19, Wilson Street, London, E.C.

THE MAGIC COMB!!

THE GREATEST DISCOVERY OF THE CENTURY.

No More Sloppy "Hair Dyes," "Restorers," or "Stains."

NO matter what colour your hair is—Grey, Black, or Golden—it can be permanently changed to any colour desired by simply using the "MAGIC COMB." All you have to do is occasionally to pass the COMB through the hair, moustache, or whiskers, when the colour desired will gradually be produced!!

THE COMB IS A MARVELLOUS CHEMICAL COMPOSITION, AND IS WARRANTED TO LAST 5 YEARS.

Notice. It will not stain the skin, but acts solely on the hair, producing the effects right to the roots. The greatest discovery ever offered to the world. Made in two sizes—for the pocket and for the dressing table.

PRICES: POCKET COMBS, 5/-; DRESSING COMBS, 7/6; SENT FREE AND SAFE PER POST. Orders executed in rotation.

NOTE.—The following colours can be produced, no matter what the present colour of the hair is: Black, Dark Brown, Brown, Light Brown, Golden.

Address: MAGIC COMB CO., 120, MILE END ROAD, LONDON.

Dressing and Pocket Combs sent together. 10/6.

FARADAYS' FITTINGS

Electric Light Works

3 BERNERS ST. W

REAL GERMAN HOLLOW GROUND

KROPP RAZOR

NEVER REQUIRE GRINDING.

Black Handle .. 5/6 | A Pair, Ivory Handles, | Duplex Strop 7/6
Ivory Handle .. 7/6 | in Rus. Leather Case, 21/- | Kropp's Strop Paste, 6d.
From all Dealers. — Wholesale: OSBORNE, GARRETT, & CO., LONDON, W.

WOODS' PATENT GALVANISED STEEL WIRE MATTRESSES & BEDSTEADS.

Carriage Paid, and Liberal Cash Discount allowed.

Guaranteed for Five Years.

EXHIBITED CARRYING ONE TON

At LIVERPOOL, MANCHESTER, and other EXHIBITIONS.

SHOW ROOMS:
128, BOLD ST., LIVERPOOL.

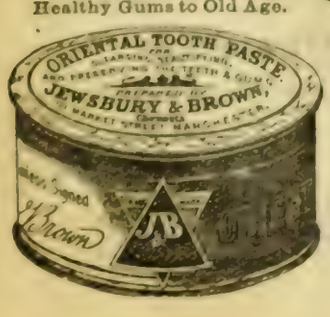
Catalogues and Prices free on application to the

LONGFORD WIRE, IRON & STEEL CO., LTD.
WARRINGTON.

Please mention this Paper.

JEWSBURY & BROWN'S

White, Sound Teeth, Healthy Gums to Old Age.



Oriental Tooth Paste.

CAUTION.—The only genuine is JEWSBURY & BROWN'S.

Pots 1/6 and 2/6. All Chemists.

60 YEARS IN USE.

£500 REWARD.

RHEUMATISM, &c., CURED BY MELANOCA,

The Great ENGLISH OIL of PEPPERMINT Cure,

After EVERY REMEDY has FAILED.

See this paper, July 27th, page 174, for its wonderful effects.
Cures Headache, Neuralgia, &c., immediately applied. First application relieves the very worst cases of RHEUMATISM, Sciatica, Lumbago, &c., and never fails to effect a permanent cure in a few days.

Full particulars FREE on receipt of Address.

The above reward will be paid to anyone proving that our Melanoca is not prepared with genuine ENGLISH Oil of PEPPERMINT, &c., also if the Oil of Peppermint as bottled, and sent out by us at 1s., 2s., and 3s. per bottle, is not genuine English.

THE MELANOCA CO., MITCHAM. Hundreds of Testimonials. Quote No. 25.

CANCIA'S PURE ITALIAN WINES.

RED.

Vino da Tavola..	14s. per dozen.
Chianti Melini... ... ... 18s. and	24s. ,,
Castel Ricaldone (Lavagnino's Shipping)	18s. ,,

WHITE.

Capri White Scala	24s. per dozen.
Sparkling Asti	36s. ,,
Vermouth Cinzano (Tonic). In litre bottles	30s. ,,

To be had of—

R. CANCIA & CO., LIMITED.

GENERAL DEPÔT:—
55, CASTLE STREET EAST, OXFORD STREET, W.
and all Wine Merchants.

AN ALWAYS ACCEPTABLE PRESENT.

An Original Case of MÜLHENS'

CASE OF SIX BOTTLES 12/6

GENUINE NO. 4711 BRAND OF

EAU DE COLOGNE.

THE PUREST & STRONGEST, YET MOST DELICATE EVER PRODUCED.

THE WORLD says: "Anyone desirous of getting a thoroughly genuine Cologne, cannot do better than send for a bottle of the '4711' Double Extract. Once having used it, repetition is a foregone conclusion."

Large selection of Choicest Perfumes, Toilet Soaps, &c. Quintuple Concentrated Extracts, made from Fresh Flowers gathered at Grasse.

Of All dealers in Perfumes, or at the

LONDON BRANCH:
62, NEW BOND ST., W.
(ONE DOOR FROM BROOK STREET.)

Price Lists on application to Mr. C. REUTER, Manager. And at

COLOGNE, NEW YORK, VIENNA, RIGA, and ODESSA.

The ONLY Antiseptic Saline.

SALT REGAL

FOR ALL

Bilious and Nervous Disorders,

SUCH AS

Sick Headache, Constipation,
Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion,
Disordered Liver.

At all Chemists throughout the world, in bottles, 1/6 and 2/9.

Office: 49, ISLINGTON, LIVERPOOL.

ALL FAT PEOPLE

can safely Reduce Weight and cure Corpulency permanently by taking TRILENE TABLETS (Regd.) for a few weeks. They are small, agreeable, harmless, and never fail to IMPROVE both HEALTH and FIGURE without change of Diet. An English Countess writes: "Your Trilene Tablets act admirably." Send 2s. 6d. to THE TRILENE Co., Sole Proprietors,
70, FINSBURY PAVEMENT, LONDON.

TOO FAT. Dr. GORDON'S Elegant Pills cure STOUTNESS, rapidly and certainly. State height, weight, and send 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., or 11s. to DR. GORDON, 24, Hart-street, Bloomsbury, London.

OMINION OF CANADA.

MONTREAL STREET RAILWAY COMPANY

ue of £196,000 Sterling 4% Debentures of £100 each. Redeemable in 1922 rest payable in London at half yearly. First Coupon payable February 1st.

Price of Issue, £98 16s. per cent., payable as follows:

£5 0s. on Application
45 10s. on Allotment
50 0s. on September 15th, 1893.

£98 10s.

he Bank of Montreal is authorised to receive Subscriptions for the above entures, which are secured on the whole of the property of the Montreal-eet Railway Company, and which rank with the existing £600,000 5% Mortgage ds issued in 1886.

his issue is made under Act 49 and 50 Vic., Cap. 86, and has been duly horised under resolutions passed by the Shareholders and Directors on gust 2nd and 3rd, 1893.

he Bonds are for £100 each, payable, Principal and Interest, at the Bank of ntreal, London.

oupons are due on the 1st February and 1st August in each year—the first upon for a full half year's interest being due on 1st February, 1894.

n July 13th, 1893, the Company stated their Assets to be as follows:—Real tate, £80,000; other Property, £50,000.

he Ordinary Stock of the Company is $2,000,000, fully-paid, and the present ted price in Montreal is 169 per cent.

he amount of Debentures may at no time exceed one-half of the paid-up pital of the Company. The Company has no further powers to issue fresh pital.

he Proceeds of the present issue are required for doubling the existing lines, extensions, and for the necessary outlay required for working the whole tem by Electricity.

t the foot will be found an analysis of statements furnished by the Secretary Treasurer of the Company, giving particulars of the present earning power d condition of the undertaking.

pplication must be made on the form accompanying the Prospectus, and ged at the Bank of Montreal, 22, Abchurch lane, London, E.C., together h a deposit of £5 per cent. on the amount of Debentures applied for.

he Subscription List will be opened on Tuesday, August 22nd, and closed on before Friday, the 25th August, 1893.

erip to Bearer will be issued against Allotment Letters and Receipts for the talment due on Allotment, and will be exchanged for Debentures after the al payment has been made.

pplication will be made in due course for a quotation for the Debentures on the London Stock Exchange.

orms of Application may be obtained at the Bank of Montreal, 22, Abchurch-e, London, E.C., or from Messrs. J. & A. Scrimgeour, 18, Old Broad-street, ndon, E.C.

LONDON, August 22nd, 1893.

ALYSIS OF STATEMENTS FURNISHED BY THE MONTREAL-STREET RAILWAY COMPANY.

The Company was organised in 1860, and incorporated on 18th May, 1861, der the name of the Montreal "City Passenger Railway Company," with a pital of $300,000 which was increased to $400,000 in 1873, to $600,000 in 1876, d now stands at $2,000,000 fully paid up.

The original Bye-law or Agreement with the City of Montreal expired in 1885. that year a new Agreement with the City for the use of its streets, and for rther privileges, was entered into by the Company for a period of 25 years om the 12th September, 1885, to the 12th September, 1910, which has since en further extended to 1922.

The new agreement, which expires in 1922, gives the City the right then to quire the road, real estate and equipments, and also at the end of each bsequent term of 5 years after 1922, on the payment of the value thereof, th 10% added, and failing such acquisition by the City, the contract ntinues.

In 1886 the name of the Company was changed to "The Montreal Street ailway Company."

The Dividends paid by the Company for the last 10 years are as follows:—

1883 ... 7%	1884 ... 8%	1885 ... 7%	1886 ... 8½%
1887 ...14%	1888 ...10%	1889 ... 9%	1890 ... 8%
1891 ... 8%	1892 ... 8%

The business of the Company continues to keep pace with the increasing pulation and rapid growth of the City of Montreal, as may be shown by the llowing numbers of passengers carried:—

In 1888	7,727,800
,, 1889	8,239,400
,, 1890	8,627,780
,, 1891	9,837,240
,, 1892	11,631,386

First 6 months of 1893, 7,900,990, as against 4,870,248 for same period 1892.

The total Bonded Debt of the Company, including this issue, will amount to 1,000,000, and there is no floating debt.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

MEMBERS OF THE STOCK EXCHANGE are NOT ALLOWED to DVERTISE for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than heir own principals.

Brokers or Agents who advertise are not in any way connected with the tock Exchange, or under the control of the Committee.

List of Members of the Stock Exchange who act as Stock and Share Brokers ay be obtained on application to

FRANCIS LEVIEN,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.

Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT

PURELY VEGETABLE, Perfectly Harmless. Will reduce from two to five pounds per week: acts on the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into Fat. Sold by Chemists. Send stamp for pamphlet.

Botanic Medicine Co., 3, New Oxford-street, London, W.C.

THE GREAT QUESTION OF HEALTH. WHAT TO DRINK?

PITKEATHLY TABLE WATER.

As a remedial agent in cases of sluggish liver, plethoric states of the system, chronic affections of the organs of respiration and circulation, gastric derangement and biliousness, it has been pronounced by medical men of high authority as most efficacious.

"I use the Aërated Pitkeathly largely, and value it."—Dr. MATTHEWS DUNCAN.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

London: INGRAM & ROYLE, 52, Farringdon-st., E.C., and at Liverpool. WM. BEST & SONS, 22, Henrietta-street, Cavendish-square, W.

Sole Proprietors, REID & DONALD, Perth.

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES TO PRIVATE INSURERS.

THE IMPERIAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED. Est. 1803. 1, Old Broad-st., E.C., & 22, Pall Mall, S.W. Subscribed Capital £1,200,000. Paid up, £300,000. Total Funds, £1,600,000.—F. COZENS SMITH, Gen. Man.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE COMPANY, Limited, No. 10, ST. SWITHIN'S LANE, LONDON, E.C.
General Accidents. | Personal Injuries.
Railway Accidents. | Death by Accident.
C. HARDING, Manager.

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE
63, Threadneedle-street, London, E.C.
ESTD 1710.
THE OLDEST PURELY FIRE OFFICE IN THE WORLD.
SUM INSURED IN 1892,
£391,800,000.
(PTO.)

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.—Holborn Bars, London.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF LIFE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITY BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
REVERSIONS PURCHASED.

Invested Funds, £16,000,000.

The last Annual Report can be obtained on application to the Secretary.

ACCIDENTS OF TRAVEL

AND ALL OTHER ACCIDENTS INSURED AGAINST BY
The Railway Passengers' Assurance Company,
THE OLDEST AND LARGEST COMPANY PROVIDING FOR
ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
64, CORNHILL, LONDON. W. D. MASSY, A. VIAN, } Secs.

BIRKBECK BANK.—(Estab. 1851). Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane. Two and a-half per cent. interest allowed on deposits, repayable on demand. Two per cent. on current accounts, calculated on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £100.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, can be obtained, post free, on application to FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

LONDON AND COUNTY ADVANCE AND DISCOUNT COMPANY, Limited.—Cash advanced from £10 to £500, without preliminary fees or deductions for interest, for short or long periods, repayable by easy instalments, at moderate rates, upon approved security. Bills Discounted. Forms free. Offices, 57 and 58, Chancery-lane, W.C.—JOHN STONE, Secretary.

JOHN SHAW, STOCK & SHARE DEALER.

HEAD OFFICE:—
WARDROBE CHAMBERS, DOCTORS' COMMONS, LONDON, E.C.

BANKERS:—
CAPITAL AND COUNTIES, Ludgate-hill, Long Acre, Piccadilly, and Brighton Branches.
LONDON AND MIDLAND, Newgate-street and Tooley-street Branches.

DIRECT PRIVATE TELEGRAPH WIRE between LONDON and BRIGHTON Offices.

FULL PARTICULARS of SPECIAL ARRANGEMENTS for DEALING sent post free on application.

COVER SYSTEM.—The loss is limited, the profits are unlimited, and there is such an independence in acting that the principle must and does recommend itself to business men—indeed, it is the only method on which they deal—for speculative accounts.

£5 COMMANDS £500 STOCK.
£10 COMMANDS £1,000 STOCK.
£50 COMMANDS £5,000 STOCK.
£500 COMMANDS £50,000 STOCK, and so on in proportion.

NO OTHER LIABILITY WHATEVER.

JOHN SHAW, STOCK AND SHARE DEALER,
LONDON, BRIGHTON, MANCHESTER, AND DUBLIN.

CASH ADVANCED PRIVATELY. UNION DEPOSIT BANK.

No. 17, KING WILLIAM ST., Charing Cross, London, W.C.
[ESTABLISHED 1867.]
ADVANCES MADE in TOWN or COUNTRY at a FEW HOURS' NOTICE, Without Public Enquiries, for Short or Long Periods,
From £30 to £5,000,
To Ladies and Gentlemen, Merchants, Farmers, Traders, or any responsible persons upon their
NOTE OF HAND ALONE.
ALL TRANSACTIONS STRICTLY PRIVATE.
Also upon security of Furniture, Stock-in-Trade, Reversions, Deeds, Leases, Life Policies, Legacies, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Farm Stock, &c., without mortgage expenses, from one to 15 years, repayable by easy instalments, or so long as the interest is paid, the capital may remain.
NO SURETIES REQUIRED.
Distance no object. No delay, and no unnecessary expenses charged.
FIRST LETTER OF APPLICATION IMMEDIATELY ATTENDED TO.
A Gentleman sent direct from the Bank to carry out all advances.
Current accounts opened in accordance with the usual practice of other London Banks.
Prospectus gratis, or post free on application. Personal visit preferred.
Interest allowed on deposits, 4½, 5, and 6 per cent.
Apply to the SECRETARY.

Vinolia (SOOTHING)

(SOLUBLE) Powder

REDNESS
REDNESS
REDNESS
REDNESS
REDNESS
REDNESS

ROUGHNESS
ROUGHNESS
ROUGHNESS
ROUGHNESS
ROUGHNESS
ROUGHNESS

"Superseding the old toilet powders, which are apt to cause acne spots on the face, by blocking up the pores of the skin."—Lady's Pictorial.

1/-, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per box, in white, pink, and cream tints.

THE GREAT SECRET.

How LIPTON'S TEAS have reached a pinnacle of Success NEVER BEFORE ATTAINED by ANY TEA in the WORLD.

LIPTON BRINGS HIS TEAS DIRECT FROM THE TEA GARDENS TO THE CONSUMER.

and is Sole Proprietor of the following celebrated TEA ESTATES, which cover thousands of acres of the best Tea Land in Ceylon, viz.:—Dambatenne Laymastotte, Monerakande, Mahadambatenne, Mousakelle, Pooprassie, Hanagalla, and Gigranella. He has also extensive Export and Shipping Warehouses in Colombo and Calcutta, thereby

ABOLISHING ENTIRELY ALL MIDDLEMEN'S PROFITS.

WHY PAY MORE,

WHEN AT LIPTON'S YOU CAN BUY

THE FINEST TEA THE WORLD PRODUCES

NO HIGHER PRICE. At 1/7 per lb. NO HIGHER PRICE.

RICH, PURE, AND FRAGRANT.

1/- and 1/4 per lb.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Delivered carriage paid for an extra 1d. per lb. to any address in Great Britain on orders of 5 lbs. and upwards.
Samples sent free on application. A GUARANTEE.—Money returned in full if Tea does not give perfect satisfaction in every way.

LIPTON, Tea and Coffee Planter, Ceylon. The Largest Tea, Coffee, and Provision Dealer in the World

Ceylon Tea and Coffee Shipping Warehouses—Maddema Mills, Cinnamon Gardens, Colombo. Ceylon Office:—Upper Chatham-street, Colombo.
Indian Tea Shipping Warehouses and Export Stores—Hare-street, Strand, Calcutta. Indian Offices:—Dalhousie-square, Calcutta.

GENERAL OFFICES: BATH STREET, CITY ROAD, LONDON, E.C. Branches and Agencies throughout the World.

OVER ONE MILLION PACKETS LIPTON'S TEAS SOLD WEEKLY IN GREAT BRITAIN ALONE, AND THE SALE INCREASING BY LEAPS AND BOUNDS ALL THE TIME.

OUR PUZZLES.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 756.—LINES ON THE MODEL OF PRAED'S "GOOD NIGHT TO THE SEASON."

AWFUL WARRIOR (real name and address will be published next week)... ... ... £2 2 0

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 757.

This subject of competition proved, not unnaturally, one of exceptional difficulty; and few competitors attempted it. Of those who tried, it is thought that OUTSIDER proved most successful in his Parody, and the Prize will, therefore, be awarded to him.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 761.

This week, in accordance with what has become an annual custom in these pages, a Prize of Two Guineas is offered for

THE BEST DESCRIPTION OF SOME ENGLISH OR FOREIGN WATERING-PLACE IN TWENTY-FOUR LINES OF RHYMED VERSE, WRITTEN IN THE HEROIC METRE.

With a view of making quite clear what the heroic metre is, I append a couple of lines written in that measure:—

Sweet Shanklin, lovely village, where the fair
Most congregate to revel in sea-air.

There will be no objection, however, to a competitor ending some or all of the lines with two-syllabled rhymes, such as "lonely," "only," "mountain," "fountain," &c., thus increasing the number of syllables in the lines to eleven. No description, however, must exceed twenty-four lines in length; and all answers must reach me by the morning of Monday, September 4, at the latest.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Buildings, Carteret Street, Queen Anne's gate, London, S.W. The answers must be sighted by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on post cards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand; whilst in the case of new competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 ADA, the winner of a third part of Prize No. 754, has kindly requested that the amount due to her may be handed over to Lady Jeune's Holiday Fund. A cheque for 14s. will accordingly be sent to Lady Jeune.

 The real name and the address of NETHERBY, winner of a half of Prize No. 755, are Mrs. Robertson, Netherleigh, Strandtown, Belfast.

 The real name and the address of SEA DEW, winner of a half of Prize, No. 755, are C. D. Higgins, Esq., St. Enoch Station Hotel, Glasgow.

 The real name and the address of CANI, winner of a third part of Prize, No. 754, are A. S. Hewett, Esq., care of Messrs. Richardson & Hewett, 101, Leadenhall-street, E.C.

 The real name and the address of NEWNHAM, winner of a third part of Prize, No. 754, are E. W. Scarlett, Esq., the Post-office, Newnham-on-Severn.

E. G. L.—Thanks for your letter.

THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 758.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS.—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

SUGGESTIONS AS TO THE PLACES AT WHICH IT WOULD BE MOST APPROPRIATE FOR SEVEN NAMED STATESMEN TO PASS THE RECESS.

The Closure-King should seek the Isle of Man,
And show the House of Keys his lock-jaw plan.
To Darwen, golfer Balfour, turn thy mind,
For there, perchance, the missing links thou'lt find.
Eastward Sir William Harcourt straight should run
To worship, as of yore, the rising sun.
Our Joe, who's 'neath a ban, should surely go
To Margate Sands, where twangs the old banjo.
To some hot clime should Morley hurry off,
Don flannels, and his irksome Ulster doff.
Marseilles would be Lord Randolph's best resort—
The Gulf of Lyons should furnish splendid sport.
Tim Healy should repair to famed Gravesend,
For there of Sexton he might make a friend.

M. T. P.

Mr. Gladstone to Brighton, to practise setting his foot down on the piers. Mr. A. J. Balfour to Crossmichael (Wigtownshire), to endeavour to smooth down the ruffled Davitt. Sir W. Harcourt to go to Grasse, with a view to recuperation. Mr. J. Chamberlain to Worms, to perfect himself in the life and death of Herod. Mr. J. Morley to resort to Barking, since the Government is said to be going to the dogs. Lord R. Churchill to Lyons, to pleasantly recall South African adventures. Mr. Tim Healy to Kilmacow (Waterford), to meditate on an improved system of boycotting.—Awful Warrior.

Mr. Gladstone to Peel (Isle of Man), because he changes his skin occasionally. Mr. Balfour to Stonehenge, a nice quiet place, handy for Salisbury. Sir W. Harcourt to Freshwater, he is so fond of it. Mr. Chamberlain to Palestine (Mr. T. P. O'Connor's personally conducted tour). Mr. Morley to Needham, accompanied by the Irish members without whom he can't be happy. Lord R. Churchill to Primrose Hill probably, no correct guess possible. Mr Healy will not leave the House.—Bill Brewer.

Mr. Gladstone in the Heart of Midlothian. Most of his constituents would now gladly confine him there, as a first-class misdemeanant, until the Home Rule craze has become a thing of the past. Mr. Balfour on Arthur's Seat, to be re-named the Seat of the Scornful. How refreshing to look down without palpable arrogance on a Premier, and, vide ista, a quondam leader. Sir W. Harcourt in Normandy, on a pilgrimage to the tombs and ruined castles of his Royal ancestors. Mr. Chamberlain in the Valley of the Usk. Chequered memories of the Table Round would haunt him there. Mr. Morley in Utopia; there alone could he find his ideal Irish statesman, a workable Clause IX., and a second Honest John. Lord R. Churchill at the foot of Arthur's Seat. The grace of humility might be fostered by constant looking up to his exalted henchman, and the Lion's Head would remind him of the Lions' Tale he brought home from S. Africa. Mr. Tim Healy will go, let us hope, to Bray, in Ireland. His voice has too many rivals in the House of Commons.—Eboracum.

Mr. W. E. Gladstone should go to Plymouth, because he is a first-class hand at plying his mouth. Mr. A. J. Balfour should go to Toulon, because he has been altogether too long in his opposition to Home Rule. Sir W. Harcourt should go to Conway, where he may, perhaps, con over a way to take off the penny from the income-tax. Mr. Joseph Chamberlain should go to the New Cut, so that, having already cut himself adrift from the Liberals, he may find out a way to cut himself adrift from the Tories. Mr. John Morley should go to Cowes, as a relief from Irish bulls. Lord Randolph Churchill should go to Cromer, to enable himself to crow more lustily than he has of late. Mr. Timothy Healy should go to Waterloo, as he could there study another plan of campaign.—Almaviva.

It passes the wit of man to find an absolutely appropriate place for Mr. Gladstone. We may either retain him at home, or send him to the Sister Island. In either case, certain incongruities and inconveniences would have to be faced. The first of the incidental questions attaching to retention is whether the full number of post-cards would be allowed him; on what basis, if that number was to be reduced, the reduction should rest. In the alternative scheme, if he goes to the south of the island he finds himself among a garrulous and impecunious race; if to the north, among a race who will not listen to his lessons, in church or out of church. Perhaps, on the whole, a certain gallant Colonel's in Cavan might be the least inappropriate, when the question, if Judas had committed treason in the present century would he have lost his head or his seat, might be satisfactorily settled. Mr. Balfour, on a provincial tour, in a van, with gilt ginger-bread, pretty pictures, and the latest nostrums, viz., "Bimetallic Elixir," "Fair Trade Panacea," and, above all, "Home Rule Pill," to be swallowed next year by John Bull (gilt and sugared, and labelled "Local Government for Ireland"). Sir Wm. Harcourt to the Highlands, to meet his cousins, the Guelphs and Hapsburghs. Lord Randolph Churchill to Gibraltar, to crack a friendly nut with his cousins (some of whom still linger on the Rock. Mr. Joseph Chamberlain to Sir Roger de Coverley's, to meet his cousins, "the gentlemen of England." Mr. John Morley to Abp. Walsh's, where he can borrow his Grace's "Complete Letter-writer," and compare views on "the Currency Question," "Voltaire," "Rousseau," and what Newman meant by saying that he "would not dream of remonstrating" with the Editor of Macmillan's Magazine. Mr. Timothy Healy on a reading party with Mr. Mat. Kenny and Mr. John Deasy. Course: "Mill on the Degradation of Woman," "Burke on the Age of Chivalry," "Sayers on the Noble Art of Self-Defence," "Winslow's Hints on Etiquette," "Campbell on the Hindoos." Tutors: Messrs. Mahoney and MacDermot.—Gerardinus.

Mr. W. E. Gladstone should go to Jamaica and there learn the profession which he so strongly recommends to his fellow-countrymen of jam-maker Mr. A. J. Balfour, having so long taken an interest in crime in Ireland, might well study the Crimea (crime here). Sir W. Harcourt would be reminded of his royal descent by a week or two spent in King William's Town. Mr. J. Chamberlain should, undoubtedly, go to "Taunt-on" as he would not like to forego his favourite occupation till Parliament meets again. Mr. John Morley is recommended a trip to New Ireland to find a short relief from the troubles of the Old One. Lord R. Churchill will do well to go to Billingsgate to lay in a fresh stock of vituperative adjectives, as his own supply must be nearly exhausted. Mr. T. Healy might pursue his congenial occupation of insulting his political opponents by culling a few jibes from Algiers (all jeers).—Yoko.

Gladstone to Isle of May; subject of vacation study, perpetual youth. Morley to Isle of Man; subject for holiday study, evils of Home Rule. Harcourt, Isle of Coll; subject in idle hours, a new method of sus. per coll. for Tory obstruction. Healy to Isle of Mull; amusement for holiday, being up to snuff. Chamberlain to Isle of Muck; to find a pit for the author of the House of Commons riot. Churchill to the Isle of Yell; to practice the shriek of freedom and the Ulster war cry. Goschen to the Isle of Rum; to study after dinner the principle of compensation. Balfour to Isle of Heligoland; to study the philosophy of integrity of Empires.—Coquesigrue.

Mr. Gladstone to Belfast, where his reception would be most "warm," and where collars are so cheap. Mr. Balfour to Homburg, for he's a rare "Homburg"-er at times. Sir W. Harcourt to Australia, for a "solid" Chancellor of the Exchequer is badly wanted in those parts. Mr. Chamberlain to Madras, for no one can "Hindoostan"-d what he'll be up to next. Mr. J. Morley to the West of Ireland, that he "Mayo"-nly de-"Clare" "Ennis"-ort of good order. Lord R. Churchill to South Paddington, for he's a bigger "lion" there than any he saw in Mashonaland. Mr. Healy to Jem Mace's gymnasium to get his muscle "up" for the next Parliamentary session.—Shlowmow.

Balfour we will send to St. Andrew's to pursue his favourite pastime—golf. Sir Randolph Churchill to hunt red deer, the nearest thing he can get to lions. Sir William Harcourt to Scarborough, happy hunting-ground of all true Brummagemites. T. Healy to Ulster, among the Orangemen, as then he will get plenty of fighting. John Morley to Tintagel, to study King Arthur in his ancient home. Gladstone we will send to the Equator—the hottest place we can find.—Comtesse Olga.

Mr. Gladstone to Blarney, Ireland, to get fortified with a fresh stock. Mr. Balfour to Silverdale, Lancashire, to obtain fresh material for amplification of his lecture on Bimetallism. Sir W. Harcourt to Round Oak, to work up further particulars of the celebrated round-table meeting on Home Rule. Mr. Chamberlain to Kilkenny, to read up for future guidance the historical battle of the cats. Mr. Morley to Clare, Suffolk, to bring to a conclusion his treatise on agrarian crime. Lord R. Churchill to East-End of London, for further study of the classic language of Billingsgate. Mr. Healy to Donnybrook, to acquire politeness.—A Daft Scot.

Mr. Gladstone to Washington, because it is "the city of magnificent distances." Mr. A. J. Balfour to the Chateau d'If, because the Island of "If" is the proper place for "philosophic doubt." Sir W. Harcourt to Quito, because he will have the world in equal halves on either side of him, and even a Chancellor of the Exchequer may there be quit o' (Quito) trouble about balances. Mr. J. Chamberlain to Belgrade, because it's the best way to turn over (Tirnova). Mr. J. Morley to Morley, because Morley and "honest John" naturally go together. Lord R. Churchill to Pau, because he will then be able to say, "Lions may lie in that direction but Irun in the other." Mr. T. Healy to Grave, because once there he will be free of the sexton.—Mulu.

Mr. W. E. Gladstone to Bedfordshire to get a good rest. Mr. A. J. Balfour to Mount Darling, because he's everyone's darling. Sir W. Harcourt to the gold and silver mines (Colorado) to study bimetallism. Mr. Joseph Chamberlain to the Needles to study sharp points. Mr. John Morley to Newcastle to teach "compromise at the collieries. Lord Randolph Churchill to Old Head, Orkney, to try and get an old head on young shoulders. Mr. Timothy Healy to Bashan, to compare the bulls there with those of his native land.—M.S.

Mr. W. E. Gladstone to Jericho, as so many seem to wish him there. Mr. A. J. Balfour to St. Andrew's, for golf. Sir W. Harcourt to Iceland, to get an opportunity of cooling down before the next sitting. Mr. John Morley to Mount Fairweather, so that he may enjoy his holiday. Lord Randolph Churchill to Christian. Mr. Timothy Healy to Cyclades (sick ladies).—Victor

Mr. Gladstone [illegible] Mr. Balfour [illegible] by way of becoming perfect in the art [illegible] Sir W. Harcourt to [illegible] Mr. Chamberlain [illegible] Mr. Morley to [illegible] as far as possible from the "Black North." [illegible] R. Churchill to Coventry. Mr. Healy to Chesterfield, to learn politeness.—Bobus.

Mr. Gladstone to the country, which always agrees with him in the end. Mr. Balfour to his [illegible] for an extension of time to redeem his [illegible] Sir W. Harcourt to any watering place (with Log Bungalows). You are a licensed wit and [illegible] Option, Bill! Mr. Chamberlain to Buenos Ayres, to join the other runaway Liberator in raising orchids. Mr. Morley to India, the better to watch the ryot in the paddy fields. Lord R. Churchill to the lighthouse on Tory Island, where he cannot be overlooked by Jingo! Mr. Healy to Behring straits, for practice in catching the great [illegible] when Home Rule comes in.—Baritone.

Mr. Gladstone to France, to study the action of the guillotine. Mr. Balfour to Edinburgh, to make sure of the safety of Arthur's seat, in case he should be rejected at Manchester. Sir Wm. Harcourt to Bray (not after the manner of an ass, but), to study the career of a certain vicar, his political prototype. Mr. Chamberlain to Brazil, or one of its adjacent islands; there he could cultivate his orchids, and *Joannes [Joe and his] Island would not disturb the House of Commons. Mr. Morley to Sweden, where he could see, perhaps with envious eyes, Jonkoping [John coping] with no difficulty. Lord R. Churchill to Dalmeny,† where (even in a Primrose Habitation) his views on the House of Lords might meet with some opposition. Mr. Healy, anywhere, provided he's out of Erin [earin']. Or the whole seven might go to the Pacific Ocean, where they would be far from Ireland.—Bushranger.

* Joannes Island, off the coast of Brazil.

† The seat of Lord Rosebery, whose surname is Primrose.

Mr. W. E. Gladstone to Toulon (Tool-on); to Cape of Good Hope, where one hopes he may lose (like the Cape) even the name of storms. Mr. A. J. Balfour to Linklater, from his love of golf. Sir W. V. Harcourt to Mentone, as he is oft represented with exaggerated chin, or to Alaska Bay to search for the seal suggested by an old cartoon of Punch, where Sir William is represented trying on the Lord Chancellor's wig. Mr. Jos. Chamberlain to Algiers (all jeers) or the Solomon Isles. Mr. John Morley to Cape Resolution. Lord Randolph Churchill to the Balearic Isles, where he may go from Majorca to Minorca, as he seems to be no longer the power he once was in the Tory camp. Mr. Tim Healy to the Loyalty Isles.—Esperanza.

Mr. Gladstone (combining business and pleasure) will study at Donnybrook Fair still more striking measures of applying the Closure. Mr. A. J. Balfour will star it throughout the provinces in his favourite self-composed drama, "The Popular Public Secretary." Sir William Harcourt will be received with Royal honours in America, as the weightiest Cabinet Minister of Europe. Mr. Joseph Chamberlain will remain at home, among the gentlemen of England, until he has screwed down the coffin of Home Rule. "Honest John Morley" will conclude his Irish tour by visiting Tory Island. Charmed by its novelty and solitude, he will console himself for impending loss of office by personally applying Pope's line, "An honest man's the noblest work of God." Lord Randolph Churchill will go to India to patent the best method of shooting tigers from trees. Mr. Timothy Healy will go to Rome for instructions enabling Irish Members to govern Ireland, England, and Scotland. — J. McGrigor Allan.

Mr. Gladstone, cruising between Scylla and Charybdis, to avoid the wreck of present popularity and the engulfing of a great reputation. Mr. Balfour to Hopetoun House, in mental view of the Treasury Bench. Sir W. Harcourt, "my ain fireside," safest from awkward questioning and observations. Mr. Chamberlain, the First Lord's seat on the Treasury Bench, trying if it is so comfortable as he supposes. Mr. John Morley, County Clare, trying to keep order there. Lord Randolph Churchill, Patagonia, where he must look up to somebody. Mr. Tim Healy, Jarrow, to gratify his liking for jars and rows.—Harold

Mr. Gladstone at the Convent of La Trappe, to enjoy the luxury of a new sensation. Mr. A. J. Balfour in America, taking a few lessons from Slavin and Sullivan for the better training of his party. Sir W. Harcourt on one of the Channel Islands, as we need a buffer between England and France. Mr. Joseph Chamberlain in Staffordshire, contemplating a "Potter's field." Mr. John Morley in Essex, studying morals and manners, with a view to Irish improvement. Lord Randolph Churchill in Iceland, as a cooler is required for his "full-blooded" rhetoric. Mr. Tim Healy on the Pacific, for his constitution requires complete change.—Netherby.

Mr. Gladstone should pass his holidays at Axminster (Axe-Minister), to take counsel with himself. Mr. Balfour in Germany, because it is the region of the lynx (links). Sir W. Harcourt in an eating-house as waiter, because he's the coming man. Mr. Chamberlain on an elder-tree (. . . the hat . . . Judas left under the elder tree when he hanged himself. Jew of Malta). Mr. Morley in Cork, because he is keeping the bottled-up hot Irish spirit from escaping. Lord R. Churchill in a grave, because he expects to rise again. Mr. Healy in the Garden of Eden, because he could have no tail to his coat there.—Mona.

Mr. Gladstone to Ryde (to ride his Home Rule hobby), or Southsea (for bubbles), or Crediton (to get "credit on" the many promises made to the electors during the campaign). Sir W. Harcourt will have to try Freshwater or a Newhaven, for the electors will give a majority against Home Rule. He will then hand over (Andover) his portfolio, and wish he had not always sung to the tune of "Ever of Thee, my Gladstone (Hever in Kent). Mr. Morley being a "penman more" than a politician, Penmanmawr would be a good place for Mr. Morley's holidays. When Mr. Gladstone is ejected he will make a wry (Rye) face, and fall into the Slough of Despond. Mr. T. Healy to Littlemore, for when he gets Home Rule he will want more. He may find it a white "Elephant" (and Castle). Or he might try Bognor, in honour of Irish bogs, or Dunmow for bacon. Mr. Chamberlain to Sunderland, for he wishes to "sunder the land" into allotments. When made a Lord Earlstown will suit. Lord R. Churchill to Lincoln, for he wants to add a link on to the chain which binds Ireland to England. Mr. Balfour to "Maiden-lane" to get married, or "Lordship-lane" to become a peer.—Beta.

Mr. W. E. Gladstone at Axminster. The very place for a Prime Minister whose recreation is chopping down trees. Mr. A. J. Balfour at Tees-dale, where he could play golf at ease, and not be teased with politics. Sir W. Harcourt at El Dorado, where he could dream of a big surplus for his next Budget. Mr. Joseph Chamberlain at Florida, where he could study the language of flowers to advantage. Mr. John Morley at Downpatrick, where he could ponder on the best way to raise up Pat in the social and political scale. Lord Randolph Churchill at Lyons, of course, with the proviso that "I" should be in evidence. Mr. Timothy Healy at Coventry, to which well-known place he has oft times previously sent some of his friends.—East Anglia.

Mr. W. E. Gladstone should go to the Straits of Messina to show his skill, and enjoy his old pastime of steering past rocks on which less fearless men are wrecked. Mr. A. J. Balfour to Port Said, and amuse himself by comparing what he said while in office with what he said when out of office. Sir W. Harcourt to Ireland's Eye, for the more he is seen the better he is liked. Mr. J. Chamberlain to Turn Again, an island in the Torres (Tories) Straits. Mr. J. Morley to Scilly Islands, lest his continual flow of wisdom raise him beyond the reach of ordinary men. Lord R. Churchill, Sweden, to (Sweten) his temper. Mr. T. Healy, Iceland, to learn how to keep cool.—Simla.

Mr. Gladstone to the Rocky Mountains, as it would make the rocks rejoice to uphold a Gladstone. Mr. J. Chamberlain to South Queensferry, as it possesses so many children, he could run over kids (orchids). Mr. T. Healy to Cork to be resoled. Mr. A. J. Balfour to Greenland, as surely it would be a place for putting greens. Mr. J. Morley to Pennsylvania, as he lives by his literary work. Sir W. Harcourt to be sent to Crewe so that he might row his own boat.—Training.

Mr. W. E. Gladstone to Hastings, where he may easily read his Bill a third time—at the hotel—and imagine himself William the Conqueror. Mr. A. J. Balfour to North Allerton, because he seems ready to fight the battle of the (double) standard. Sir W. Harcourt to Chicago, as claiming to be the "greatest politician on airth." Mr. J. Chamberlain to Siberia, because of his great gift for applying the knout. Mr. J. Morley to St. John's Wood-road, to meditate on the prospects of Lord's. Lord R. Churchill to Mount Hamilton, California, to study at the Lick Observatory the erratic courses of meteoric bodies. Mr. T. Healy to Timbuctoo, to escape temptation, coat-tails, like other garments being scarce there.—Mos.

Mr. Gladstone, having been likened to Herod should go to Worms. Mr. A. J. Balfour would most probably enjoy his holidays best at "Les Isles de Golfe." (Free translation, Golf Islands.) Sir William Harcourt, having done his best to ruin England during the present Session, ought to proceed to Rouen, France (ruin France). Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, according to the G.O.M., being the Devil's Advocate, should, during his holidays, seek the bubble reputation, not at the cannon's mouth, but at Boca del Diablo (Devil's Mouth, a place in Spain). Mr. Morley, the Chief Secretary for Ireland, should utilise his leisure and go to Larne, Antrim, Ulster (to learn and trim Ulster). Lord Randolph, having seen lions abroad in the Veldt should visit them at home in Aden (a den). All the world exclaims should not "Tim book to Timbuctoo."—Chaucer, Junior.

Mr. Gladstone should go to "the country," because of the alterations in the Home Rule Bill. Mr. A. J. Balfour should go again to Ulster, because he could tell the natives that they have taken him too seriously. Sir W. Harcourt should go to Maine (United States), because he could study the "local veto" in actual working. Mr. J. Chamberlain should retire to Highbury, Birmingham, because he could search among his books for more scriptural allusions. Mr. John Morley should go to Newcastle because the electors would like to hear why the Newcastle Programme has been so neglected. Lord R. Churchill should go to Bradford, because he should ascertain whether he is really wanted there after all. Mr. Tim Healy should go to Coventry, because many people think it is the best place for him.—Leaf Rule.

Answers have also been received from E. N. S., Katrine, Uncle Tom, Sol, Boiled Rice, Allspice, Ivy Leaves, Suckthumb, Robert Blake, Brian Boru, Phœnix, Claymore.

A THIN PAPER EDITION OF "TRUTH" IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

AND CAN BE OBTAINED ON ORDER OF ALL NEWSAGENTS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

To the Continent, America, Australia, New Zealand, or the Colonies (India and China excepted), on the following terms:—

Three Months	£0 7 7
Six Months	0 15 2
Twelve Months	1 10 4

To India, and China, on the following terms:—

Three Months	£0 8 2
Six Months	0 16 3
Twelve Months	1 12 6

And to any address in the United Kingdom—Three Months, 7s.; Six Months, 14s.; Twelve Months, 28s.

Reading Cases for Truth (cloth, extra gilt), price 2s. 6d. Cases for Binding Truth in Half-yearly Volumes, price 3s. 6d.

Post-Office Orders are to be made payable at the General Post-Office, E.C., to Mr. Reg. E. Booker, Truth Buildings, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's Gate, London, S.W. Cheques to be crossed Williams, Deacon, & Co.

CARPET CLEANING.

CARPETS and TAPESTRIES Cleansed from dust by PURE AIR.

Impossible to damage the most delicate fabric.

Collection and Delivery free.

Send for Prices and Particulars to your Upholsterer, or

The Compressed Air Carpet & Tapestry Cleaning Co.

Brook-street, W. Office: 94 Victoria-st., Westminster

N.B. Ten Trade and Private Carriages attend to visit our Works, and convince themselves of the extraordinary perfection of our process.

PHONOGRAPHS.—The Edison-Bell Phonograph Corporation, Limited, give Notice that they are the owners of the British Patents for the Edison-Bell Phonographs; and that Legal Proceedings will be taken against all persons selling, using, or exhibiting Phonographs not obtained from them.

By order,
W. M. CROWE,
Secretary.

Edison House,
Northumberland avenue,
London, April, 1893.

THE Edison-Bell Phonograph Corporation, Limited, of London, have the Sole Right to Sell and Use Edison-Bell Phonographs in the United Kingdom, and all other persons claiming such rights, either as representing me or the North American Phonograph Company, do so without authority.

THOMAS A. EDISON.

£20 TOBACCONISTS Commencing. 1lld. guide, post-free, "How to open respectably with £20 to £1,000." Tobacconists Outfitting Co., 186A, Euston-rd., Ldn. Mngr. H. Myers, Est. 1836.

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL MEDICAL SCHOOL,
PADDINGTON, W.

The WINTER SESSION BEGINS on October 2, with an INTRODUCTORY ADDRESS by Mr. J. F. LANE, F.R.C.S. The ANNUAL DINNER will be held on WEDNESDAY, October 4, at the Metropole, Mr. H. W. FAGE, M.R.C.S., in the Chair.

ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS IN NATURAL SCIENCE,
One of £100 (Will be awarded by Examination on September
Five of £50 (26.

[Two of which are specially open to Students from Oxford and Cambridge.]

Numerous CLASS PRIZES and SCHOLARSHIPS are given by competition at the end of each year, and there are, moreover, annually Sixteen Resident Medical and Surgical Appointments in the Hospital open to Students without payment or charge. There is daily Clinical teaching by the Physicians and Surgeons. Special classes are also held by the Medical, Surgical, and Obstetric staff. The School provides complete preparation for the higher Examinations and Degrees of the Universities.

The Residential College is at present at 37 and 35, Westbourne-terrace, W. Terms may be had on application to the Warden, R. W. ROUNTON, M.D. and B.S. Lond., F.R.C.S.

H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES last December laid the Foundation Stone of the CLARENCE MEMORIAL WING.

The New Building will contain

(1) A NEW OUT-PATIENTS' DEPARTMENT.
(2) LYING-IN WARDS for the reception of Lying-in Women as In-patients.
(3) A RESIDENTIAL COLLEGE for Medical Officers and Students. The latter will then be close to their work and more directly under the influence of the Medical School.
(4) ADDITIONAL SPECIAL WARDS.
(5) A NURSES' HOME.

This will add 160 beds to the Hospital, making 381 in all, at an estimated cost of £100,000.

The prospectus may be had on application to Mr. F. H. MADDEN, the School Secretary.

G. P. FIELD, Dean.
A. P. LUFF, M.D., Sub-Dean.

WINDERMERE HOUSE, BARNES, S.W.

Head Master . . MERVYN E. VOULES, M.A.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR PUBLIC SCHOOLS, ARMY, NAVY, &C.

The School is within three minutes' walk of the station. Convenient trains from the West-end. Small classes and individual attention. Good cricket ground. Organised games. Day boarders have dinner and tea at the school, and prepare their work under the superintendence of a Master. No home lessons. Limited number of boarders received.

For further particulars apply to the HEAD MASTER.

MILD INDIAN CIGARS. OBTAINABLE EVERYWHERE.

BAHADUR

TO CONNOISSEURS.

ST. EMILION . . . . CLARET . . . . 18/- per dozen
MEDOC . . . . . CLARET . . . . 15/6 per dozen
ST. GEORGE'S . . . CLARET . . . . 13/- per dozen
Price List of other CHATEAU CLARETS, from 21/- to 74/- per dozen posted on application.

LE MONNIER & CO., JERSEY.
CARRIAGE AND DUTY PAID.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

WORLD'S FAIR route to Chicago.
JAPAN and CHINA.—Fastest, finest, and only twin-screw Royal Mail Steamers on Pacific Ocean leave Vancouver every three weeks.
AROUND the WORLD Trips for £125.
SUMMER TOURS through Canadian Lakes and "Rockies."
FREE FARMS and Cash Bonus for Settlers.

For Tickets and Free Guide Books, apply Passenger Department, Canadian Pacific Railway, 67 and 68, KING WILLIAM STREET, LONDON, E.C.; 7, James-street, Liverpool; 105, Market-street, Manchester; 67, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow.

TAMAR INDIEN GRILLON

Very agreeable to take.
A LAXATIVE AND REFRESHING FRUIT LOZENGE FOR CONSTIPATION,
HÆMORRHOIDS,
BILE,
HEADACHE,
LOSS OF APPETITE,
GASTRIC AND INTESTINAL TROUBLES.
Box 2s. 6d., stamps included.
Sold by all Chemists and Druggists.
E. GRILLON,
69, Queen-street, Cheapside, London.

Trade "OPTIMUS" Mark

Photographic PRIZES £105 Competition.

Entry Form post free on application.

The Largest Selection of PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS in the World. Best Value Given. Before buying Opera or Field Glasses, Microscopes, or other Optical Instruments, write for CATALOGUE, which is sent POST FREE.

"OPTIMUS" PHOTOGRAPHIC OUTFITS.

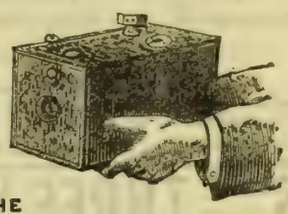
Rayment's Wide Angle, Long Focus, Rack Camera, Three Double Dark Slides, "Optimus" Rapid Rectilinear Lens, Instantaneous Shutter, Tripod, and best Waterproof Case.

For Plates of the following dimensions—

Ins. $4\frac{1}{4} \times 3\frac{1}{4}$	$6\frac{1}{2} \times 4\frac{3}{4}$	$8\frac{1}{2} \times 6\frac{1}{2}$	10 × 8	12 × 10	15 × 12
£10	£12	£15	£20	£23	£30

PERKEN, SON, & RAYMENT, 99, HATTON GARDEN, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON.

The Camera that takes the World!



THE KODAK

No previous knowledge of Photography necessary.

"YOU PRESS THE BUTTON, WE DO THE REST,"

(Unless you prefer to do the rest yourself)

AND THE PICTURE IS FINISHED.

Price from £1 6s.

EASTMAN PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS CO. LD., 115-117 OXFORD-ST., LONDON, W.

SEND FOR PRETTY, ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, POST FREE.

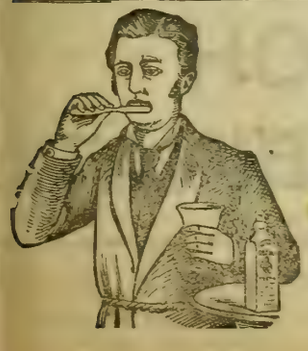
PATRONISED BY H.I.M. THE EMPRESS OF GERMANY.

THE NOTED "IPSWICH" POTTED MEATS.

Nothing can be better for the Yachting, Fishing, or Picnic Basket.

Sole Maker—R. SEAGER, IPSWICH.

Ask your Grocer.



PERSONAL LOVELINESS

is greatly enhanced by a fine set of teeth. On the other hand, nothing so detracts from the effect of pleasing features as yellow or decayed teeth. Don't lose sight of this fact, and remember to cleanse your teeth every morning with that supremely delightful and effectual dentifrice

FRAGRANT

SOZODONT

which imparts whiteness to them, without the least injury to the enamel. The gums are made healthy by its use, and that mortifying defect, a repulsive breath, is completely remedied by it. Sozodont is in high favour with the fair sex, because it lends an added charm to their pretty mouths.

"IS STILL THE BEST COCOA."

SCHWEITZER'S NOURISHING, STRENGTHENING

Cocoatina

Reduced Prices: ¼ lbs., 11d.; ½ lbs., 1/9; 1 lbs., 3/4.

"WORTH A GUINEA A BOX."

BEECHAM'S PILLS.

LARGEST SALE IN THE WORLD.

A WONDERFUL MEDICINE for all Bilious and Nervous Disorders, such as

SICK HEADACHE, CONSTIPATION, WEAK STOMACH, IMPAIRED DIGESTION, DISORDERED LIVER, and FOR FEMALE AILMENTS.

Prepared only by the Proprietor, THOMAS BEECHAM, St. Helen's, Lancashire.

Sold by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Dealers everywhere, in Boxes 9½d., 1s. 1½d., & 2s. 9d. each. Full directions with each box.

BEECHAM'S TOOTH PASTE.

Will recommend itself; it is efficacious, economical, cleanses the teeth, perfumes the breath, removes tartar, and prevents decay. It is composed of the best known ingredients for neutralising the acids of the mouth, preventing all deleterious deposits upon the teeth, and is a pleasant and reliable dentifrice.

BEECHAM'S TOOTH PASTE is put up in collapsible tubes. Of all Druggists, or from the Proprietor, for ONE SHILLING, postage paid.

PIANOS ON THE THREE YEARS' HIRE SYSTEM.

This system is carried out extensively, liberally, and equitably by CHARLES STILES & CO., 40 and 42, Southampton-row, Holborn, W.C. The pianoforte becomes the absolute property of the hirer at the expiration of three years, or may be returned at any time, at the option of the hirer. The rates charged are the same as for ordinary hire, and no addition is made to the price. PIANOS, GRAND and UPRIGHT, new and second-hand, by BORD, BECHSTEIN, and other high-class Makers, at from 10s. 6d. to 100s. per month. Lists and all particulars will be forwarded post-free on application to STILES & CO., 40 and 42, Southampton-row, Holborn, London, W.C.

FISHER'S BEATRICE BAG

LIFT-OUT CENTRE.

£5 SILVER. FITTED COMPLETE.

£5 SILVER. FITTED COMPLETE.

CATALOGUES FREE. FISHER, 188, STRAND.

S. Sainsbury's

Lavender Water

SOLD THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY. Prices, 1s. to 16s. 6d. &c.

MANUFACTORY: 176 and 177, STRAND, LONDON.

ESTABLISHED 1839.

FOR POLISHING METALS, ESPECIALLY BRASS.

THERE IS NOTHING BETTER THAN

"LA BRILLANTINE"

Metallic Powder.

TRY IT, AND CONVINCE YOURSELF.

It is used by the Metropolitan Fire Brigade, the Life, Horse, and Dragoon Guards, &c.

— Sold Everywhere. Boxes 6d. and 1s., post free. —

PROPRIETORS—

J. F. BAUMGARTNER & CO.,

15 (T.), Newman-street, Oxford-street, London, W.

ABSOLUTELY REFUSE IMITATIONS.

— PURGATIVE WATER. —

LLORACH RUBINAT.

Intestinal Complaints, Obesity, and Clears Complexion.

E. GALLAIS & CO., 90, PICCADILLY, W.

Printed for the Proprietor by WYMAN & SONS, Limited, Great Queen-st. W.C. and published at 10, Bolt-ct. Fleet-st. E.C. in the Parish of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st. Queen Anne's-gate, S.W.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 870. Vol. XXXIV. Thursday, August 31, 1893. Price Sixpence.

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor should be sent direct to the Editorial Offices, Carteret-street, S.W., and not to the Publishing Offices in Bolt-court, Fleet-street.

No communication can be dealt with in the current issue of Truth if received later than the First Post on a Monday.

ENTRE NOUS.

In answer to the announcement I made the other day as to the coming Truth Doll Show, I have received applications for Dolls from a number of ladies. What I wish to say to these ladies is that the delay in sending them their parcels arises from a cause over which I have no control. The fact is that, although I ordered the Truth dolls earlier than ever this year, I have not yet been able to get all of them delivered at this office. The large dolls have arrived, however, and most of these have already been sent out; whilst I am expecting the small ones every day. Meanwhile, I shall be very glad to receive any further applications for parcels of dolls, for the number to be dressed this year is larger than it has ever been before; and it would be of great assistance if I could have early intimation of the amount of help on which I can rely. I may add that those ladies who wish to dress the large dolls would do well to apply without delay.

The Queen intends to stay at Balmoral until the middle of November, and will then return to Windsor for a month before proceeding to Osborne for the usual winter residence.

During the next few months the sanitary arrangements at Buckingham Palace are to be overhauled, and I hear that the Estimates will contain an item of £3,000 on account of this work, and another sum will be asked for next year.

The Prince of Wales is to shoot with the Duke of Cambridge at Six Mile Bottom, near Newmarket, during the second week in October, and also later in that month.

The Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha left a sealed letter for the Queen, which was sent to her Majesty by a special messenger. The Duke also left letters for the Emperor William, the Prince of Wales, and the Duke of Edinburgh. The Queen has invited the widowed Duchess to come to England in the autumn on a visit to her Majesty, either at Balmoral or at Windsor Castle, whichever place may best suit the Duchess.

Duke Ernest of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha was on cold terms with his relatives in England long before the death of the Prince Consort. The Duke was offended because his brother's confidential correspondents were the late King of the Belgians and the late Emperor William instead of himself. He was indefatigable in addressing prolix dissertations upon political affairs to Prince Albert, who had no disposition to receive instruction either from his elder brother or from any one else. The Duke expected to be regarded as the head of the family, and wished to play that part de facto; but his attempts at interference were dexterously baffled by Prince Albert, who at an earlier period had succeeded, but not without difficulty, in putting a stop to the meddling of King Leopold, who had intended to act as his nephew's Prospero.

When Prince Albert died, the Duke fully expected that the Queen would constitute him her principal adviser, and that he would be able to play an important part at our Court; but her Majesty did not consult him about anything, and when he volunteered his views she paid no attention to his letters. The Duke protested with great warmth against the marriage of Princess Louise, and then he had a most acrimonious correspondence with the Queen. A new and even more serious cause of offence arose out of Sir Theodore Martin's "Life of the Prince Consort," and the Duke was restrained with difficulty (and only through the personal intervention of the late Emperor William) from publishing a refutation and correction of many statements in that book. A few years later the Duke decided to publish his own "Memoirs," and, having previously declined to give up to the Queen Prince Albert's letters, he exasperated her Majesty by publishing without permission a great deal of confidential matter respecting political transactions in which his brother had been concerned, and, if he had carried out his original intention, a great deal more would have been printed about Prince Albert and his public life than did actually appear.

Duke Ernest was fond of art, science, literature, and music, and he was a most enthusiastic sportsman, and a noted bon vivant. He considered himself to be a man of first-rate capacity, and for many years he seized every opportunity of putting forth his opinions, and interfering generally in political affairs. The old Kaiser humoured

Duke Ernest, of whom he was very fond; but the present Emperor commenced his reign by utterly ignoring his grand-uncle, who therefore ceased his visits to Berlin, and he had carefully avoided meeting his Majesty for several years past.

Empress Frederick, who is taking a course of the waters at Homburg, will go from that place to her château at Cronberg on the Taunus Hills; but her Majesty's plans during the next few weeks depend upon the health of her second daughter, Princess Adolphus of Schaumburg-Lippe, whose first accouchement is expected shortly to take place at Bonn. The Empress Frederick will probably come to England about the end of October in order to pay a brief visit to the Queen before going to Italy to spend the winter at Rome.

The Emperor of Russia is going to confer the order of St. Andrew upon the Duke of York. The St. Andrew, which is the first order in Russia, was founded in 1698 by Peter the Great. It has a light blue ribbon, and the insignia includes a gold collar-chain, and an eight-pointed star, with a blue eagle on it, which the Emperor always presents in brilliants. The Duke will probably be invested by the Emperor personally, during his approaching visit to the Court of Denmark at Fredensborg Castle.

Lord Rosebery, who has just returned from Homburg, has considerably improved his favourite Durdans domain, near Epsom, by purchasing the adjoining estate of Woodcote Grove, which it was feared in the neighbourhood would fall a prey to the speculative builder. Woodcote Grove is a very picturesque property, and it abounds in game.

A very choice and well-developed embodiment of the spirit of landlordism appears to flourish on the islet known as the "Calf of Man." Two visitors to Port Erin hired a boat, got into difficulties out at sea, and after rowing three hours for their lives against a strong current, succeeded in landing just at nightfall on the "calf." They made their way in an exhausted state to the house of the owner of the island, informed him of their position, and received the reply that they were trespassers, that they had no business on his land, and that they had better get into their boat again and be off, without loss of time. It was now dark. As it was a question between drifting to sea in an open boat and facing the wrath of the proprietor, the "trespassers" made free to remain for the night on the beach, whence they were rescued a few hours later. I have heard of South Sea Islanders killing and eating strangers who land on their shores, but it is something new to find that one of the British Isles is in the possession of an individual who warns shipwrecked travellers off his shores under threat of treating them as trespassers.

By an accident which I much regret the name of the late Mr. Frank Carr Beard, the friend and medical adviser of Charles Dickens, was given in last week's TRUTH as "Frank Bland."

Mr. Alexander Crum, of Thornliebank, who died suddenly on the platform of Thornliebank Station on Wednesday morning, was Liberal Member of Parliament for Renfrewshire from 1880 to 1885. He was a Director of the Caledonian Railway and of the Union Bank of Scotland, and held many other public positions. Lord Kelvin was his brother-in-law by his Lordship's first marriage to Mr. Crum's sister, who died many years ago. Mr. Crum married the eldest daughter of the late Bishop Ewing, Bishop of Argyll and the Isles, in the Scottish Episcopal Church. He was much respected, and in his extensive print-works there were never any strikes. He founded, too, a workmen's club, and took a keen interest in everything which brightened his employés' lives.

A Manitoban, now in London, writes to me:—

It may be of interest to you to know that the fruit-canning factory, which this week's TRUTH states that Lord Aberdeen is "about to establish," is already a fait accompli. I do not think that "the Canadian snobocracy" will really allow this undertaking to qualify their respect for the new Governor-General. Those who know Canada best know that it is truly American in its readiness to worship "a real lord."

"A Modern Girl," who has read in the Daily News that "ringlets are to be worn again by ladies," sends me the following lines:—

"What! Go back to ringlets? Impossible quite!
What girl worth the name would become such a fright?
What girl but whose brain most indignantly whirls
At the thought of what's meant by returning to curls?
The papers, the fluids for curling, the tongs,
The meek, mincing air which to ringlets belongs,
And the dozens of things one would have to forego—
What! Go back to ringlets?
Oh, never! Oh, no!

"Just think, if you can, how we strong, healthy girls,
Should play at Lawn-Tennis, if hampered by curls!
Just fancy the state in which ringlets would get
At the end of a fiercely competitive 'set'!
Just think what weak 'service' the notion implies,
And what 'faults' we should make with our curls in our eyes!"
Unless back to Croquet we're ready to go,
Our answer to "Ringlets"
Is "Never! Oh, no!"

Their revival would mean the revival of gush,
The return of the giggle, the pout, and the blush;
The Album once more our approval would win,
We should make horrid mats with the wool of Berlin;
We should hold our heads sideways, and simper, and sigh,
And for sentiment sicken, and languish, and die.
So when back to ringlets we're told we must go,
We answer distinctly—
"Oh, never! Oh, no!"

Once more it seems necessary to repeat my annual notice that I cannot discuss in TRUTH the propriety or otherwise of hotel charges, unless in the most rare and extravagant cases. Whether 2s., 5s., or 10s. should be charged for a dinner, or 7s. 6d., 10s. 6d., or a guinea for edroom, is a question on which I cannot pronounce an inion unless I have sampled the dinner or tested the rits of the bedroom. On one point, however, I have trong opinion. If a person writes for rooms, as one my readers did the other day to the Grand Hotel, westoft, and is told in reply that the rooms ordered ll be reserved, and arrives to find that the rooms erved are situated in some more or less undesirable lging-house outside the hotel, he has every reason to mplain. In point of law, so far as I understand the law, has a right to rooms in the hotel or to compensation breach of contract. And as the practice here referred seems to be on the increase among hotel managers, I ink it would be better if persons treated in this way re to assert their legal rights, instead of merely writing the newspapers.

For the TRUTH HOTEL LIST, see page 460-461 in the present issue.
For AMUSEMENTS, see page 459.

There has been some outcry at Eastbourne against the iming of the Town Hall clock at night, and two mmunications on the subject were read the other day a meeting of the Town Council. One complainant posed that the strident voice of the clock drove itors away from the neighbouring lodging-houses. nother gave evidence as to the annoyance caused to alids, and various suggestions were made as to stopping for a certain time at night. The kind of intelligent d sympathetic consideration which these complaints ceived may be gathered from the following observations one Councillor Francis, who had all the Council but e on his side:—

t was all very well for people to come down there for a week l dictate to the Corporation what they should do. The clock s bought and established there, and by all means let them ep it going. Yield to the people coming down there for a few ys, added the speaker, and neglect the ratepayers, certainly should have thought that the lodging-house keepers no lose their customers on account of the clock are rate-yers, and entitled to be considered; and I should have also ought that ratepayers living in the neighbourhood of e clock are just as liable to be disturbed by it as non-tepayers; and I defy Councillor Francis to explain how e ratepayers would be "neglected" (unless they are in e habit of fixing important appointments for the middle the night) by stopping the chimes, say, from midnight 6 a.m. All chiming clocks at night are abominable isances, perfectly useless, except, perhaps, to one person ten thousand, and a place to which people go for health rest—whether for a week or six months—is the last ere they ought to be allowed.

It is strange how, when some danger threatens, every e is at first excited about it, and how it has only to last people not to trouble themselves respecting it. Last ar, if one person had a stomach-ache in Russia, every one Germany and Italy was thrown into a convulsion of ar and imagined that he would catch cholera the next y. This year there is cholera in Russia, in Hungary, and Italy, with an occasional case in Germany, and no one ubles himself about it. It is accepted as one of the agreeable conditions of human existence that there are some cholera microbes in Europe, that wake up to vitality wherever the drainage is bad, and now and then spread themselves about. This is far more reasonable than the panic of last year. If cholera were raging in a place I should not go there; if I found myself by accident in a town where it was raging I should move off; but to pass one's time running here, there, and everywhere, so as to dodge the microbes is nonsense.

Cold Comfort.

O Lancet, Lancet, what d'you mean
By all this scrutinising?
Why do you so intently lean
To chemic analysing?
Do you intend to never cease
Your testings and your tryings?
To never let us rest in peace,
From your prolonged "Paul Pryings"?

Week after week your best you've done
To put us in a panic,
By hinting at the risks we run
From atomies organic;
Week after week with lively dread
We've heard you darkly mutter
About bacteria in our bread,
And germ-cells in our butter.

Each week produced its novel scare,
And hatched some new suspicion,
Till it was almost with despair
We ventured on nutrition;
For hazards well-nigh past belief
Alarmed the veriest glutton,
What with the ptomaines in the beef
And microbes in the mutton.

So that when came the spell of heat,
And ice 'gainst glass kept clinking,
'Twas with relief we ceased to eat,
And simply took to drinking;
For germs, thought we, in vain will strive
To gain their ends unpleasing,
Since no bacteria can survive
A thorough course of freezing.

But, Lancet, you, alas! once more
Have proved too, too informing,
For organisms, you deplore,
In London ice are swarming.
Thus, should the heat-wave surge anew,
'Twill swamp us altogether,
For how, if we iced drinks eschew,
Can we survive the weather?

The Tay net salmon fishing closed on Saturday night after the worst season which has been experienced for many years, and the tacksmen will be heavy losers, as the rents had been considerably raised owing to the recent good season. Salmon have been very scarce, and there have been no grilse. This ruinous failure is attributed to the operation of the heavy nets, which have lately been very extensively used in the lower waters of the Tay.

Bournemouth.—"Royal Bath." "Hôtel de Luxe of the South." Sea frontage, 1,000 ft.; grounds, 5 acres. Due south. Moderate charges. Tariff on application. Comparison invited. Electric light throughout. Only Hotel on "East Cliff."

A paterfamilias with sons at Harrow calls my attention to a recent article on the sanitary condition of the school in the British Medical Journal, from which it would appear that Mr. Fowler was not altogether accurately informed in the answer which he lately gave in the House of Commons on this subject. I gather that the outbreak of scarlet fever last spring is not altogether a thing of the past; and it is clear from the statements of the British Medical Journal that there is considerable room for improvement in the way sanitary matters are regulated, if not in the sanitary condition of some of the houses. The attitude of the school authorities towards the local Officer of Health also appears to have been everything that it ought not to have been. It seems highly desirable, therefore, that both the residents in the town and the parents of Harrow boys should bring a little pressure to bear on the school authorities with a view of awaking them to a sense of their duties.

The Athenæum, referring to an article which is to appear in the September number of Blackwood's Magazine, describes Colonel McDonald, of Glengarry, who died about 1827, as "the last of the typical Highland chiefs, and the friend of Sir Walter Scott." Lord Cockburn gives the following account of the said Glengarry, writing in 1841:—

> He was famous in his day, and by flattery and the affectation of Highland usages had the good fortune to get Sir Walter Scott to immortalise him in several of his works as a fine specimen of the chieftain. But none knew better than Scott that he was a paltry and odious fellow, with all the vices of the bad chieftain, and none of the virtues of the good one; with the selfishness, cruelty, fraud, arrogant pretension, and base meanness of the one, without the fidelity to superiors, and the generosity to vassals, the hospitality, or the courage of the other."

Colonel McDonald, who called himself "Mac-Mhic-Alaister," ruined his family, and some years after his death his enormous estates in Inverness-shire (which extended from the sea at Loch Hourn to the Caledonian Canal at Loch Oich) were sold to Lord Ward and Mr. Edward Ellice, and the whole property is now owned by Mrs. Edward Ellice, of Invergarry.

The long-expected and much-talked-of "Life of Dr. Pusey," which was commenced by Canon Liddon, and which has been completed by the Rev. J. O. Johnstone, Vicar of All Saints', Oxford, and the Rev. R. J. Wilson, Warden of Keble, is to fill four octavo volumes! It really does seem to me that the compilers of all ecclesiastical biographies would do well to act upon the admirable principles of Dean Burgon:—

> I have long cherished the conviction that it is to be wished that the world could be persuaded that biography might with advantage be confined within much narrower limits than at present is customary. Very few are the men who require five hundred pages all to themselves—far fewer will bear expansion into two such volumes. Of how vast a number of one's most distinguished friends would 40, 50, or 60 pages contain all that really requires to be handed down to posterity.

The Lord Chancellor has made a most excellent appointment to the vacant stall at Bristol. The Rev. S. A. Barnett, of St. Jude's, Whitechapel, is a wealth Broad Churchman, who has devoted many years of h life to the poor people of his parish, in which he has dor a great work. He has been prominent and useful as charity reformer, as an advocate of popular educ tion, and as a Poor Law Guardian. Mr. Barnett widely known as presiding genius of Toynbee Ha He is popular in all circles, being most genial ar unaffected, and he is famous for his excellent table-tal The appointment will meet with universal approval. M Barnett's months of "residence" at Bristol will be Apr May, and June, but it is understood that he is to sper most of the year in that city, which, by the way, is h birthplace.

The Bishop of Winchester has presented Canon Host Rector of Farnham, to the Rectory of Meonstoke, whic is of the net value of about £850 a year, with house, ar which recently became vacant by the death of the Re Charles J. Hume, who had held the living for sixty-or years, having been presented by Bishop Sumner in 183 Canon Hoste is one of the most energetic, popular, an successful parish clergymen in the diocese, and his prefe ment meets with universal approval, but he will be muc missed at Farnham by all classes.

Canon Scott-Holland is to be in residence at St. Paul Cathedral during September, and he will preach o Sunday afternoons throughout the month.

The session of the Church Congress is to commence Birmingham on October 3, and the Primate, the Bisho of Durham, and Archdeacon Farrar are to be th peachers at the opening services. There will be a co cluding service on October 7 in Worcester Cathedral, a which the sermon is to be preached by the Bishop Peterborough, who was for some years a Canon Worcester.

There is a tremendous ferment among the Cheltenha Evangelicals because Canon Bell, the rector, has decide to introduce a surpliced choir into the parish churc This is regarded as "a dangerous innovation," whic manifests "Popish leanings" and "a tendency to Rome. The Low Church people of Cheltenham need not b alarmed, for several years ago a surpliced choir wa introduced into Bath Abbey (another Evangelica sanctuary), and no evil results have followed. Ther are now surpliced choirs in nearly all the large churche which are in the gift of either the Simeon Trustees o the Church Patronage Society.

The Rev. Foster Barham Zincke, who died last week had held the living of Wherstead for nearly half century, and he had been a Chaplain to the Queen sinc

C.O.M. WHISKY.—This well-known Brand, 50s. per case, free to every Railway Station.—ANDREWS & CO., Dame-st., Dublin, Proprietors C.O.M. brand.

STAR & GARTER HOTEL, Richmond Hill, S.W. High, dry, & healthy Famed for its Guild and Corporation banquets, wedding breakfasts balls, &c. Unrivalled winter residence.—CHAS. JAMES, Manager.

7, when he was appointed to that office on the ommendation of Prince Albert, who had such a very h opinion of Mr. Zincke's abilities that H.R.H. was ious that he should become the first Head-Master of llington College; and if he had accepted that post he ld long ago have been seated on the Episcopal Bench. Zincke's admirable series of educational works acted great attention nearly fifty years ago, and he also the writer of some delightful books of travel. was one of the very best parish clergymen in England. s not creditable to the dispensers of patronage that a man should have gone down to the grave without ining any of those rewards which are considered to be appropriate recognition of important and valuable lic services. He was an ardent Liberal, and worked for his party in Suffolk.

---

he vacancy among the Queen's Chaplains-in-Ordinary ed by the death of Mr. Barham Zincke is to be filled he appointment of Archdeacon Sinclair. The next ncy is to go to the Rev. John F. Kitto, Rector of St. in-in-the-Fields.

---

ry great regret has been excited in Dorsetshire by eath of Prebendary Nash, who had held the living of ddle for more than forty-one years. He was one of best-known parish clergymen in the county, having Diocesan Inspector of Schools since 1855, and he opular among all classes, and universally esteemed. unwearied promoter of all good works, Prebendary was particularly zealous in his support of the ty Hospital, and he took a very active interest in ffairs of that excellent institution. The living of ddle, which is worth about £350 a year, with house, he gift of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church.

---

an article published in the Birmingham Gazette, tounding description is given of the state of on Parish Church in the County of Oxford. If, , the story had appeared in any but a staunch nd Church newspaper, I should have been almost d to regard it as too scandalous to be true. g Hornton on a recent Sunday, the writer of the found the churchyard in the possession of boys layed upon broken tombstones and railings, and of who sat smoking his pipe on one grave, whilst his browsed over others. Shocking, however, as the on of the churchyard might be considered, it thing in comparison with the spectacle presented church itself. Not a single complete window be found in the edifice. Pew-doors, torn or l from their hinges, were cast across other pews; and rubbish, fallen from the walls and roof, littered or. Before some brasses on the floor could be examined heaps of nutshells had to be moved aside. In one spot the floor had been rotted away by incoming rain. The cushions upon the altar steps dropped to pieces when picked up, and the communion-rail plainly showed that fowls had utilised the church as a roosting place. Everywhere could be seen the dirty accumulation of many months.

So disgraceful, in fact, is the state of this house of God at Hornton that Divine service is no longer held in it, the schoolroom being used. The scandal is not of recent growth. Thirteen years or so ago, soon after his appointment to the living, the Rev. Charles Heaven, Vicar of Horley with Hornton, issued an appeal for funds, and the article from which I have quoted states that "money was promised and money was collected, but not more than a few shillings seem to have been expended, and such is the state of the accounts that the exact amount the wardens cannot say." That the "sacred edifice" should be allowed to remain year after year in such a condition is, as even my Conservative contemporary admits, a standing shame to the Vicar, his parish, his Bishop, and his Church. From something which has reached me privately on the subject, I should say inquiry is needed at Hornton into other matters affecting the Church besides the gross neglect of the building.

An Aberdeen paper makes some comments very much to the point upon a recent charge of Bishop Douglas to the Synod of Aberdeen and Orkney, in which the following instructions are given as to the proper mode of receiving the Sacrament. I am always averse to criticising the religious opinions of my fellow-men, but this seems to me a good deal more like "anise and cummin" than religion:—

> It is pointed out that the palm, and not the back, of the hand must be presented; that it is entirely wrong to obtrude the tongue; that the head must be lowered to the hand, and not the hand raised to the mouth; that the chalice must be grasped firmly by the stem with the right hand; that it must be steadied with the left hand on the base of the chalice; and that the hand must not be put round the cup or bowl of the chalice.

I hear that at a certain village in the West of England, where the farmers have suffered seriously from the long drought, there was no celebration of the Royal wedding, because the Rector expressed an opinion that the agricultural depression in the parish was so severe that it would not be right to solicit contributions for any such purpose. The farmers were much pleased by the Rector's thoughtful consideration, and they not unreasonably expected that this ecclesiastic would presently manifest his sympathy with them in a practical way by remitting a portion of the tithe rent-charge. A few days before the audit, however, the usual notices came round demanding payment. It was still supposed that a part of the tithe would be remitted, and the farmers were vastly disappointed when on the appointed day they were all required to pay up their full amounts, nor were they even given an audit dinner. The Rector's temporary popularity has not unnaturally departed.

Howe & Co.'s fashionable Boots and Shoes (ready-made or to) for Ladies, Girls, and Gentlemen.—16, Coventry-st., W.; nd, W.C.; 84, Gracechurch-st., City; 13, Queen Victoria ansion House), London. (Klenrusha, Polish.)

THE IMPERIAL, EAST CLIFF, BOURNEMOUTH.—Position, appointments, and cuisine unsurpassed. 100 rooms. Luxuriously furnished. Electric light. Private omnibuses meet trains. Telegraphic address, Imperial, Bournemouth.—CHAS. A. REINGPACH, Manager.

A lady asks me to remind my fellow-citizens who are leaving town of their duty to the cats they leave behind them. I am always glad to do this, having a weakness for cats myself. The most stony-hearted cannot fail, I think, to be moved by the following sad picture, which my correspondent draws :—

> Hundreds of cats are at this moment left to starve in all parts of our great Metropolis. Many are to be seen sitting on the door-steps of their once happy homes, looking in vain for the kind faces of those who once have fed them. The poor creatures are now searching greedily for a dry crust, hunted by boys and worried by dogs, which are set on them by those in the garb of gentlemen. We really find them reduced to living skeletons in all parts of this great city. . . .

Those who desire to alleviate the sufferings of "poor Pussy," should send her to the Cats' Home, College Park, Harrow-road, W., or, if they live on the other side of London, to the Dogs' Home, York-road, Battersea, where, I believe, they will always be taken in on very moderate terms.

I published a letter a few weeks back signed "Jobmaster," making a handsome offer to take parties of poor children for drives in the country free of all expense. As some of those who saw the letter may have thought the offer almost too good to be true, I may mention the experience of one lady who availed herself of it. The lady in question is interested in Bermondsey parish, and asked the firm who made the offer whether they would bring a party of poor children from this district to her house in the pine-woods near Esher. Not only did they drive down a party of fifteen children and give them a most happy day among the pines and heather, but they paid their railway fares to the starting-point at Fulham, and showed other little kindnesses in addition. Although the offer was made anonymously, I see no reason why I should not state that the credit of this kindly action belongs to the Coupé Company, of Britannia-road, Fulham. It seems to me that their example is well worthy of the imitation of other jobmasters, who at this season of the year have roomy carriages standing idle, and plenty of horses badly in need of exercise.

I have received the following amounts towards Lady Jeune's fund for sending poor and sickly London children into the country for a holiday :—A B C, £2. 2s.; D, £25; Corney and Muriel, 10s.; W. L., £1. 1s. (also £1. 1s. towards this year's Toy Fund); Rosslyn Gardens, £1. 1s.; The Ghost, 10s.; H. LL, £5; S., £10; A Mother, £1; L. Granger, 10s.; Rusticus in Urbe, £10; Faith, £1; M. M., £3. 3s.; T. G., £1; B. E. P., £2. 2s.

Reluctantly, but firmly, I must again call attention to the presence at Beverley Depot of two Colour-Sergeants who have long since completed the tour of Depot duty assigned to them by the Queen's Regulations. No doubt both of them are worthy men and gallant officers, but the rules which are made for the rest of the Service must be applied to them also. It has taken me several months to remove certain Colour-Sergeants who were detained under similar circumstances at Hamilton, and I am prepared to devote an equal amount of time, and more if necessary, to their comrades at Beverley; but I trust that the authorities will not make this necessary. It would, I think, conduce to the rigid observance of the Queen's Regulations if, in cases where they are found to have been set at naught, the Officers responsible were punished in some way. Irregularities of the kind described above are, I believe, usually the result of private arrangement between the C.O. of the Depot and the C.O. of the Home Battalion.

The suggestion, which I did my best to dispose of last week, that Sergeant-Cooks should be abolished and their duties transferred to "worthy old soldiers," provokes the ire of one of my military readers, who says that, according to his experience, old soldiers are, of all men, the most unfit to be trusted in such a position. He adds "let any sceptic pay a surprise visit here, and he will find the Sergeant-Cook ready for him with a diet-sheet for any one's inspection, and every meal not 'fairly,' but thoroughly well cooked." I quote this because it comes not from Aldershot or any other big station, but from a Line regiment now in Ireland.

The Broad Arrow announces that in the event of Major and Staff-Paymaster J. Kitson being appointed to the command of the Army Pay Corps, "it is probable that Major C. M. Johnston, from Portsmouth, will go to the Discharge Depot." It so happens that Major Johnston went to the Discharge Depot about ten days ago. The Broad Arrow's probability is, therefore, in this case, a little more probable than usual.

A few weeks back I referred to the costs incurred by Cavalry officers at the autumn manœuvres. I have just had a conversation on the same subject with an officer of a marching regiment, who tells me that he is in very much the same position. The two chief items of expense seem to be (1) the cost of transport for necessaries, which officers have to bear themselves, and (2) the outrageous expense of messing. The first item amounts (per contra) to £60 or more per regiment; the second to 18s. or 2 per head per day. The two items bring the average expenditure per day up to about 25s. So that a subaltern in receipt of 5s. 6d. per day is nearly £1 a day out of pocket.

There are other items of expense which only fall on individual officers. For instance, every member of the Umpire's Staff, and all officers engaged on Staff duty, have to provide at their own cost three horses. Offic are specially selected for Staff duties which might be performed by Warrant Officers for the sake of economy, it being a rule that a Warrant Officer employed on Staff duty is entitled to an allowance of £1 per day, or more, to cover his additional expenses. Thus the General Commanding can cut down the expenses, and gain proportionate credit for himself, by appointing Commissioned Officers in place of Staff Officers.

"Truth" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for the Continent, America, and the Colonies (India and China excepted), 1s. 3 months, 7s. 7d.; 6 months, 15s. 2d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 4d.; and to India and China, 3 months, 8s. 2d.; 6 months, 16s. 4d.; and 12 months, £1 12s. 6d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.'s should be made payable to the Manager, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret street, S.W.

The last arrangement is unfair to everybody. An officer employed on specially expensive duty ought not to be expected, whatever his rank, to meet the expenses out of his own pocket, unless, of course, his regular pay is calculated to cover such emergencies, which it certainly is not in this case. The same argument applies to the cost of transport of an officer's necessary baggage at manœuvres. The question of messing stands on a different footing. What is required here is that the expense should be cut down, which ought to be done by substituting for the ordinary extravagance of a mess something of the Spartan fare that would have to be accepted in the field—I don't mean on a bogus affair like the Egyptian parade, but in a real tough campaign. If manœuvres were reduced in this respect to something like the conditions of actual warfare, I don't believe that any officer worth his salt would object to roughing it for a time in a friendly country, and I am quite sure that all would be vastly better for it.

A bitter growl was poured into my ear the other day by a mounted officer engaged in the autumn manœuvres respecting a senseless order which requires jack-boots to be worn on the line of march and in manœuvring. Those boots are most awkward to walk in, and, as officers usually have to dismount as soon as firing begins, their movements may be seriously hampered by their boots. In addition to this, jack-boots necessitate the carrying of long trees, &c., and consequently make a heavy inroad on the regulation allowance of baggage. I take it that no officer would ever dream of going on service arrayed in these articles, and to require them at manœuvres would seem to be the result of a pig-headed desire to annoy.

I take the following extracts from a very forcible protest, addressed to me by an officer, against the new regulation which excludes Militia Subalterns from competition for the India Staff Corps. What the writer says has so much force that I only regret space will not allow me to give the whole of his remarks:—

It is well known to all who have any experience of the Service that the present system of recruiting the Staff Corps is not conducive to the Service interests of the Indian Empire. The young men generally appointed from Sandhurst are far less efficient at the outset than the large number of regimentally-trained subalterns of the Militia who are prepared to face the ordeal of competitive examination as a test of their superior professional qualifications.

The examination papers now given to Militia officers at their competitive examinations are so difficult that if they were set to the cadets at their final examination on leaving Sandhurst, very few of these young tiros would find their way into the regular forces. As a casual proof of this, I am in a position to state with confidence that the five Militia officers who obtained "Unattached List" commissions for the Staff Corps at the last two Militia Competitions were far superior in military education and attainments to the cadets at the head of the list on passing out of Sandhurst. Again, many of the Militia officers now serving in the Regular Army could easily have entered Sandhurst in the ordinary course, but preferred winning their commissions through the Militia, owing to the better professional training which that channel secured to them; and it is not a little significant that more than half of the officers now in the cavalry have obtained their commissions in this manner. Moreover, a large proportion of the present Adjutants of Regular regiments were Militia officers; while many of the successful candidates for admission to the Staff College have likewise hailed from the Militia and have passed in over the heads of officers who have been cadets at Sandhurst. Besides all this, it is an open secret that Commanding Officers of regiments have at various times reported that officers from the Militia are infinitely more competent than cadets in the performance of all regimental duties as well as in handling troops on the parade ground. . . . . .

It is, therefore, quite as much to the interests of the Indian Native Army as of subalterns in the Militia that the new regulation should be at once cancelled. I would go further, and suggest that more equitable rules than those now in force should be formulated at an early date for the future examination and selection of Unattached List officers as probationers for the Staff Corps. Under these rules, with the view of placing Militia candidates on an equal footing with those from Sandhurst, special half-yearly competitive examinations (for the Unattached List only) should be held at the end of June and December in each year. . . . . .

Some time back reference was made in TRUTH to the mischievous effects of Freemasonry in the Army, and the subject is one which sooner or later will have to receive the attention of the highest military authorities. A strongly-worded complaint on the subject has recently reached me from a regiment stationed at Poona. Among the facts set out are these: A Colour-Sergeant was discovered to have embezzled over Rs.400 from the Sergeants' Mess funds in the course of a couple of months. After being under arrest three days, he was permitted to refund the amount, and dismissed with a reprimand. On the other hand, a Lance-Sergeant, for the very ordinary offence of not relieving his sentries punctually, was deprived of his stripes and placed at the bottom of the roll of Corporals. Other similar inequalities are cited. If, as is asserted, Freemasonry is the sole reason for the discrepancy in these punishments, Freemasonry in the Army is antagonistic to the interests both of justice and discipline.

The Indian military authorities ought to look into the pay of the Warrant Officers in the Commissariat Department. A "Sub-Conductor," as he is called, receives Rs.125 per mensem. A Sergeant—giving him a wife and three children, which is about the average state of things—draws in pay and allowances over Rs.117, and gets his quarters free. The Sub-Conductor, having to pay Rs.7. 8a. for rent, the pay of the Non-Commissioned and the Warrant ranks stand as nearly as possible at the same point; and as the Warrant Officer has the anxiety of looking after his wife and family when he goes on field service, it is a question whether the N.C.O. is not the better off of the two.

The following is sent to me from Glasgow. My correspondent prefers to leave the name of the barracks in obscurity, but it cannot be difficult for the Military authorities to discover the locus in quo, and they will do well, I think, to institute inquiries for that purpose:—

There are certain military stations in the Scottish District which are also favourite seaside resorts. In the barracks at one of these there is an office, which every summer is converted into "married quarters" for the accommodation of the wives and families of Warrant or Non-Commissioned Officers. The bedding for this purpose is lent from the hospital. This proceeding appears to be quite contrary to the Queen's Regulations. Lodgings are plentiful in the neighbourhood, and if you would kindly give publicity to these facts I do not think the authorities would allow such irregularity to continue.

Not long since I mentioned some of the inconveniences arising from the fact that the Telegraph Service at Malta is entirely worked by military operators. The arrangement has its inconveniences from the point of view of the men so employed. For instance, a few weeks back a mistake occurred in the transmission of one word in a message. The clerk who had made the mistake was forthwith arraigned before the officer commanding the company to which he belonged, as though he had committed some heinous breach of military law, and charged with having "wilfully and by gross carelessness" sent a telegraphic message improperly. Being found guilty, he was cautioned that if he repeated the offence he would be severely punished. "Wilfully and by gross carelessness" seems to be a contradiction in terms. It is absurd to suggest that the man "wilfully" made a mistake, and it is by no means certain that the mistake was necessarily the result of carelessness. I do not think that a soldier, who is put to do a telegraph clerk's work, ought to be subject to military discipline if he happens to make a mistake in that capacity. But if he is to be, many persons will probably be of opinion that it would be no bad thing if civilian clerks who make similar mistakes—and they are doing it daily—were visited with equal severity.

Several references have been made in TRUTH during the last twelve months to the complaints of the Telegraph Masters in India with regard to promotion under the present Director-General. I hear that a memorial to the Viceroy on the subject is now being promoted, and I wish it every success. There is nothing like an organised movement of this kind for securing attention to grievances, provided it be tolerably unanimous.

I am told that a man belonging to the East Surrey Regiment, who died at Malta a fortnight ago, after a few days in hospital, had on the day of his admission to hospital been refused permission to go on the sick-list by the officer on duty. As a consequence the man remained on duty all day in great agony, until he collapsed, and was carried to hospital on a stretcher. This is one of those incidents for the facts of which I cannot, from the nature of the case, vouch; but if the above account of it be accurate, the officer referred to seems to require a timely hint for his guidance in dealing with such cases.

Much unfavourable comment has been current in India upon the case of Sergeant-Major Willard, of the Assam Valley Mounted Rifles, who has been remanded to his regiment from the Unattached List, his demand for a Court-Martial being denied. Whether, under the circumstances, he has a legal right to a Court-Martial is a technicality on which I have no means of forming an opinion. But in a case of this kind, where a stigma is placed upon a man, which is calculated to prejudice him permanently, my view is that mere technicalities ought not to be insisted upon. The man ought to have a Court-Martial if he demands it, and the refusal of this satisfaction is calculated to provoke suspicion of the justice of the proceeding. In view of this, and of some of the statements which have been made respecting the case, the Indian Military authorities would do well to look into the condition of the force where it occurred.

I turned this week to the Broad Arrow in the expectation of finding the official explanation of the outrageous treatment of ex-Quartermaster-Sergeant Wilson, of Bodmin Depot; but, to my amazement, I find that my contemporary "confesses to a distinct feeling of sympathy" with Wilson. I tremble for the future of the Broad Arrow if its Editor should often let his feelings get the better of him to this extent. It will never do for him to take up the rôle of Balaam, and, after being instructed to curse Tommy Atkins, to turn round and bless him. That, however, is after all no affair of mine. What I am concerned with is the significant fact that even the Broad Arrow is constrained to admit that the retention of the Sergeant-Major in his post, while Wilson is punished, is indefensible. The question now is, What is going to be done? Is this atrocious injustice going to be left as it stands, or is it to be corrected? The higher military authorities, before whom the case has still to come, have now an excellent opportunity of showing that they can occasionally be trusted to do justice in cases where there is not the slightest doubt on which side justice lies.

In fairness to Wilson, however, it seems necessary to take exception to the assumption of the Broad Arrow that he has been guilty of "indiscretions" resulting from "temper and verbosity." What evidence is there of this? I know of none. The only "indiscretion" which I can see on Wilson's part is that in the effort to expose iniquities of the worst kind he incurred the enmity of parties in a higher station, who were bound to prove in the long run stronger than himself. It would have been more "discreet," doubtless, to have shut his eyes and held his tongue; but to say this is to pass a damning censure on his superior officers, and, by inference, upon the principles on which the Army at large is governed. I repeat, this man Wilson has served his country with a clean record for over seventeen years, in the course of which he has worked his way up to a good position. He has come to grief because he called the attention of higher military authorities to gross misconduct on the part of his immediate superior. After having been degraded, he has now applied for his discharge. This means that the country is to lose a good soldier, of approved honesty, in order that it may keep a man of higher rank who has shown himself unfit for his position. Should no steps be taken to avert this result, I can only say that the sooner every honest man clears out of the Queen's service the better. It is no place for them.

In preparation for the sporting and travelling season, ladies and gentlemen should visit Ulster House, Conduit-st., W., where their orders for every kind of garment will have prompt and careful attention.

In view of Quartermaster-Sergeant Wilson's case I am not surprised to hear that an aggrieved warrior has assaulted Mr. St. John Brodrick with the view of calling attention to his wrongs. When a man cannot call attention to gross Departmental scandals without bringing about his own ruin, it is difficult to see what means are open to him of calling attention to his own private grievances, and he may be excused, therefore, for making a mistake, and taking any short cut which seems likely to lead to the desired end. There would be far less danger of such mistakes occurring, if men were free to unburden their minds to newspaper editors; and I would here point out that a great public service is undoubtedly rendered by TRUTH and other journals (if there are any others) which receive the confidences of public servants, and thereby enable the steam to escape, which, if it were bottled up, might lead to a serious explosion. I cannot find that Mr. Dunn ever communicated his wrongs to me, but had he done so he would doubtless never have felt under the necessity of laying violent hands on Mr. Brodrick.

Mr. Swift MacNeill's case is slightly different. Mr. MacNeill, it is true, when he fell foul of Mr. Furniss, was also labouring under a sense of injustice, his grievance being that justice had not been done to his features in a picture in Punch. This, however, is an almost universal grievance. Ladies, in particular, are known to cherish deadly resentment against those who take their likenesses, and I have been told by a photographer that many of his profession go in daily peril of their lives. It has often struck me as wonderful that the persons whose portraits line the walls at the Royal Academy do not assault the artists who have painted them. When one sees what is done in the way of bonâ fide portraits, it seems absurd to take offence at a caricature. I have always thought that if anybody in the House of Commons would be justified in assassinating Mr. Furniss, it would be Sir Richard Temple; but I have no reason to suppose that there is any enmity between them.

I learn from a naval correspondent that it was the Signal-Book Box, not the Admiral's Despatch Box, which was found floating in the sea after the foundering of the Victoria. But this makes no difference to the point; for the Signal-Book Box, equally with the Admiral's Despatch Box, is constructed to sink, and justified its designers by floating; while the ship, which was specially constructed to float, justified her designers by sinking. Another nautical authority gives me a very simple explanation of the failure of the box to sink. Holes to admit the water are carefully bored in the bottom, but nowhere else. The lead with which it is weighted keeps the box upright. The air inside consequently cannot escape, and the box floats. As I understand that all the Signal-Book Boxes in the Navy are of the same pattern as the Victoria's, I would suggest that a few holes should without delay be bored in their lids. There will then be a chance of their realising the designer's expectations.

Besides the Signal-Book Box, I hear that several other articles mysteriously found their way to the surface on the same occasion. Among them was a large old silver jug of considerable weight, enclosed in a leather-covered case. It belonged to an officer, who kept it in a drawer in his cabin. After the ship sank it was found floating in its case upon the water.

An extraordinary story reaches me from Portland respecting the treatment of a number of men belonging to H.M.S. Vulcan, on the departure of the ship from that station a few days ago. The men in question had gone on shore on leave of absence from Saturday till Monday, and in some cases till Wednesday. After they had left, the ship was ordered to Portsmouth. On the Sunday a man was sent on shore to hunt up all men on leave, and instruct them to be on board by eight a.m. on Monday, failing which they were warned that they would have to pay their own fares to Portsmouth. All the men in Portland accordingly came down to the landing-stage between half-past six and seven a.m. on Monday, but only to find that the ship had proceeded to sea two hours previously.

Some of the men then went on board the flagship, Anson, and applied for passes to Portsmouth, but they were refused any assistance, and told to rejoin their ship at once. Several of them had not the necessary cash (8s. 1d.) about them, and all were presumably liable to punishment for breaking their leave. It seems almost incredible that any class of men in the public service should be treated with such gross and cruel injustice; but I am afraid that there is no room for doubt about the facts in this instance. I trust, therefore, that Lord Spencer will cause some inquiry to be made into the matter. Not only ought the money which these men have been compelled to pay to be refunded, but the official responsible for their being left behind ought to be punished.

The Queen's Regulations for the Navy do not, so far as I can discover, contain anything which authorises a Captain to dispense with them at his own discretion. It would be interesting, therefore, to know on what ground the Officer commanding H.M.S. Trafalgar declines to allow his Chief Engineer to have charge of the engines and dynamos for generating the electric light. The Trafalgar has lately been re-commissioned, but under the same Captain as before, and both the last and the present Chief Engineers have been deprived of the charge of the dynamos and engines, notwithstanding the express directions on this point in Art. 803 of the Regulations. Even granting that the Captain has the right to dispense with these Rules, it seems extremely unfair that he should do so in the present instance, for in the event of anything going wrong with the electric machinery, the Engineer would be held responsible by the Admiralty. This, however, is only another example of the kind of treatment which Engineer Officers have too long suffered in the Navy.

A traveller just back from Turkey gives me an account of his experience of English Custom House officers which seems worth notice. Two officers boarded his ship on entering port, and while the senior in rank was inquiring whether he had anything to declare, the junior gave his hand a surreptitious pinch. In Turkey, the land of backsheesh, the traveller would at once have realised what this meant. In England, he was not disposed to take the hint, and merely responded with a genial smile. An hour later the same officer, not to be beaten, came up to him on deck, and boldly pointed out to the traveller that he had forgotten him; whereupon, says my informant, "mollified by the comical expression of his face, and not having the heart to disappoint the poor fellow, I slipped a florin in his honest palm." Not for a moment would I suggest that this was wrong on the traveller's part. His experience, however, gives a striking illustration of the point which I have so often insisted upon in regard to the sweating of Customs officers. Apart from the indignity of having these men sponging for tips on all who land on our shores, what possible security can there be for the strict collection of dues when the collectors thus proclaim, as it were, their desire for bribes?

The Directors of the Great Northern Railway have just rejected a petition of the platelayers in their employ to have their wages paid weekly instead of fortnightly. It is an amazing thing that in times like the present Directors should show so little regard for the best interests of the men in their service. Few platelayers earn more than 21s. per week. Such wages mean living from hand to mouth, and if a man in such a position has to wait a fortnight for his money, it is a practical certainty that he must largely live on credit, and equally certain that he will have to pay for that privilege. It is a shabby kind of selfishness to set against this the trifling extra expense to the Company of paying wages weekly, as all other employers do, and I hope that the Great Northern shareholders will yet set their faces against such meanness.

In spite of the efforts which I made some time ago to arouse the sanitary authorities at Coleford and the Monmouth Districts (Urban and Rural) to a sense of their duties, this corner of the Kingdom still remains in a disgraceful condition. In a recent report of Dr. Fletcher upon this locality, he alludes to "the persistent prevalence of diphtheria." With regard to Coleford, he says that the Local Board "have in great measure failed to fulfil the important duties cast upon them." The condition of the Monmouth Urban District is stated to indicate "either indifference to the sanitary requirements of the town or culpable neglect;" a similar condemnation is passed on the Monmouth Rural District, and a shocking account is given of the condition of the wells "throughout the Forest District." Unless the inhabitants of these regions possess some infallible secret for warding off the attacks of cholera, they will do well to insist that their representatives shall at once put an end to these scandals.

Really, I marvel at the temerity of some of my provincial contemporaries. A Rhyl newspaper has recently had the audacity to criticise the St. Asaph Board of Guardians. Heedless of the extent to which Bumble's withers might be unwrung, it declared that the Guardians had "wilfully disregarded their functions." This was, of course, more than such a sensitive body could stand, and at a meeting on Thursday they considered how they should punish the daring sheet. Three intelligent gentlemen urged that the Board should bring an action for libel. An asinine law, however, will not permit the Board to do anything of the kind. Then it was suggested that the reporter of the offending paper should be excluded from the meetings, or that no official advertisements should be sent until the editor gave up the name of the writer of the article. It was hinted, however, that advertisements could be withheld without adopting a formal resolution to that effect, and eventually "a vote of censure was ordered to be passed upon the author of the article unless a communication was received to the effect that he was sorry for having made use of the words complained of." No doubt the unhappy scribe will apologise. He could hardly survive the censure of the St. Asaph Guardians.

An amusing discussion took place at the meeting of the Colchester Guardians last week, respecting a tea given to the Workhouse boys by General Miller. Thirty-two boys were sent out in response to an invitation from this hospitable officer, and the mirth of the Guardians was excited by the revelation that for two hours before the tea, and an hour afterwards, the youngsters were employed in pulling up weeds in the General's ground. Doubtless it was thought that this would be suitable recreation, and give them a good appetite for the tea. Even under such a condition, the outing was probably an agreeable change to Workhouse children; but the Guardians were apparently of opinion that the three hours' labour detracted somewhat from the generosity of the entertainment; and so General Miller was not accorded the usual vote of thanks.

The citizens of Cardiff are aghast at the result of an award just given in an arbitration, which has been some time in progress, to decide the price which the Corporation is to pay for certain land belonging to Sir W. T. Lewis, which is required for the purpose of a railway. Not only are the prices now fixed by the arbitrator (Mr. B. F. Williams, Q.C.) out of all proportion to the estimates of the Corporation surveyors, but while £160 per acre is the price of a certain portion of the land which is to be purchased outright, the arbitrator fixes £360 per acre as the price to be paid for the mere right to lay the railway for six years over another piece, said to be intrinsically more valuable. As one of the Aldermen has remarked to a Pressman, the ways of arbitrators are as inscrutable as those of Providence.

The letter which I published last week from Barrister No. 2 on the subject of the Bar Association has brought me another letter from Barrister No. 1, who adduces evidence in support of the views which I originally expressed. From my experience, however, of the learned members of this profession, I know only too well that if I published this letter from Barrister No. 1, it would only bring me a rejoinder from Barrister No. 2. At any other time nothing would gratify me more than that the Bar Association should be tried before me, with my readers as jury, and these two learned friends as counsel on either side. But I must decline to sit for this purpose in the middle of the Long Vacation, so the case will now be adjourned sine die, and the prisoner will be discharged.

With reference to the paragraph in last week's TRUTH on the subject of the County Benches, a Winchcombe correspondent expresses regret that I did not call attention to the case of Gloucestershire. The packing of the Bench with Tories is as gross in that county as in any of those that I cited. To show the spirit in which appointments are made, my correspondent mentions that one of the last names added to the Winchcombe Bench is that of a gentleman who resides in Yorkshire, but who happens, of course, to be a Tory. Yet whilst a useless appointment of this kind is made by Lord Ducie, it is notorious that great inconvenience is caused through the lack of resident Magistrates at Winchcombe. The whole of the duties of the Bench there devolve upon three or four gentlemen who, with one exception, reside four or five miles away from the town. The result is that if the one J.P. who lives only a mile and a-half away is not at home, people who want summonses or other documents signed have to tramp eight or ten miles. Why competent men residing in Winchcombe itself are not appointed, so as to put an end to this inconvenience, only Lord Ducie, the Lord-Lieutenant, can explain.

A notice has just been issued by the Chief Constable of Devon warning all whom it concerns of the penalties to which beggars and persons found wandering without visible means of subsistence are liable, under 5 Geo. IV., cap. 83, secs. 3 and 4. Here is the penalty for the third offence:—

> Imprisonment with hard labour until the next General or Quarter Sessions, when they may be further imprisoned for one year and flogged.

I would ask whether it is not time that such a detestable ordinance, which no Judge or Magistrate would now dare to enforce, should be expunged from the statute book? What, with the beneficent arrangements of Boards of Guardians like that at Folkestone and the spirited efforts of the Great Unpaid all over the land, things are surely made hot enough for the abandoned wretch convicted of the awful offence of not having a penny in the world, without making provision for locking him up for twelve months and periodically thrashing him. If we must have flogging by Act of Parliament, let us have it by all means for wife-beaters and child-torturers. It may possibly do them a great deal of good, but I do not see how it can cure an empty pocket.

The following is my Legal Pillory for the week. From the Southport and Prescot cases it seems that the prevalent fashion in chastising children in that part of Lancashire is to employ a rope-end. Vigorously applied to the bare back of the little one, it proves a most effective instrument of torture, and if the affectionate parent is so unlucky as to be haled before the Magistrates, the consequences are not serious—a trifling fine, or at the outside a very short term of imprisonment. Amongst other examples of the misplaced lenity with which offences against the person are treated, I would also particularly call attention to the case at Keighley. What the Bench characterised as a gross assault is visited with precisely the same penalty as an act of game trespass. But if the position of the parties had been reversed, and two poachers had been found guilty of grossly assaulting a gamekeeper, there is not the slightest doubt they would have been sent to prison for two or three months. However, it is something to the credit of the Keighley J.P.'s that they did at least convict the guardians of the sacred birds. There are plenty of courts in which it would be utterly impossible for a poacher to obtain even that approach to justice from game-preserving Magistrates:—

Prescot Petty Sessions. Before Mr. H. R. d'A. Willis and Mr. A. R. Gladstone. George Marsh, convicted of cruelty to a little girl, aged six. He beat her on the bare back with a rope. Her back was covered with bruises. Fined 2s. 6d. and 7s. 6d. costs.

Prescot Petty Sessions. Before the same Magistrates. William Glendinning, summoned for game trespass. He was seen in a potato field with a dog, and showed it "something." Fined 10s. and 12s. costs.

Newport (Isle of Wight) Petty Sessions. Before Sir Graham Hamond-Græme, Bart., Lord Colville of Culross, Colonel Crozier, Mr. W. A. Glyun, and other Magistrates. Charles H. Moorman, bathing machine proprietor, charged with assaulting a little boy and his nurse. Finding the child on the wheels of a bathing machine, defendant threw him into the sea. He told the nurse that he was "drowning him," and that he would drown her too. He then violently pushed her backwards into the sea. Fined 10s. for the first assault and £1 for the second.

Newport (Isle of Wight) Petty Sessions. Before the same Magistrates. Charles J. Cole and Albert W. Ketcher, boys, charged with stealing plums from Lord Gort's garden. Cole seven days, Ketcher fined 2s. 6d. and costs.

Sherborne Police-court. Before General Waller. Maria Brockway, charged with sleeping out. She was found in a meadow, sleeping beneath a tree. Seven days.

Cardiff Police-court. Before Alderman D. Lewis and Sir Morgan Morgan. Arthur Bennett, charged with being drunk, and with cruelly beating a horse on the head with a bucket. Fined £1 and costs.

Cardiff Police-court. Before the same Magistrates. Hannah Welsh, charged with stealing a pair of slippers from a shop-door. Two months.

Cheltenham Police-court. Before Colonel Thoyts and Baron de Ferrieres. William Henry Driver, charged with assaulting his wife. He struck her with a thick cane and threw a flat iron at her. Fined 10s. and costs.

Cheltenham Police-court. Before the same Magistrates. Walter Stead and Charlotte Deakin, a wretched-looking couple, charged with sleeping in the area of an empty house. Ten days each.

Birmingham Police-court. Before Messrs. Bunce, Wallis, Marris, and other Magistrates. Henry Humphries, convicted of assaulting a woman with whom he cohabited. Her head bore evidence of rather serious injuries caused by prisoner kicking her and throwing a dust-preventer at her. Fined 20s. and costs.

Birmingham Police-court. Before the same Bench. Jas. Giblin and Hy. Blick, charged with stealing part of an iron gate. Three months each.

Nottingham Police-court. Before Messrs. E. Pratt and F. Carver. Edward Shemmill, aged 19, charged with begging. Seven days.

PFUNGST FRÈRES' EXTRA QUALITY CHAMPAGNES.—This select brand can be supplied through any Wine Merchant, or by the Agents, J. L. PFUNGST & Co., 23, Crutched Friars, E.C.

Southport Police-court. Before the Mayor, Messrs. G. Ansterfield, J. A. Robinson, W. J. Robson, A. Pilling, and other Magistrates. James Hopkins pleaded guilty to assaulting his daughter, aged ten. Whilst the child was practically naked he thrashed her with a rope, and then tied her to the bedpost, leaving her without food for sixteen hours. A doctor said one of the bruises measured 9 in. by 4 in., and there was not a sound area of skin in it. Fourteen days.

Accrington Police-court. Before Messrs. W. Lipton, J. Blake, and W. Smith. William H. Kenyon, convicted of assaulting Mary Ann Durmody. He kicked her on the face and arms. Fined 5s. and costs.

Kingston-on-Thames Police-court. Thomas Brown, convicted of assaulting Thomas Bayton, whom he knocked down and kicked about the head, inflicting a wound which had to be stitched with silver wire, and breaking three teeth off close to the gums. Bayton's hearing had been seriously affected by a blow on the ear. Fined, with costs, £4. 13s.

Keighley Police-court. Two gamekeepers, charged with assaulting Abraham Sutcliffe, who was, at the same Court, fined 20s. and costs for trespassing. Sutcliffe said they belaboured him unmercifully with a "picking stick" and kicked him. After seeing Sutcliffe's injuries, the Bench said the keepers had been guilty of a gross assault. Fined 20s. each and costs.

Brigg Police-court. Before Messrs. V. D. H. Cary-Elwes, W. H. Coates, and R. Brooks. Wm. Florence, pedlar, charged with assaulting his step-daughter. He struck her two violent blows on the head with the stock-end of a whip, felling her to the ground and causing a nasty wound. Fined £2 and 13s. 4d. costs.

Lanark Burgh Court. Before Bailie Murphy. Ex-Bailie Watson charged with assaulting his servant girl, aged 14. He struck her several blows in the face, compressed her throat, and dashed her head against a wall. Fined £3.

Southampton County Police-court. Before Colonel Ward and Mr. W. E. Darwin. John Dean and Henry Jones charged with sleeping out in the open air. They said they had walked from Guildford and were fagged out and foot-sore. The Chairman said the Bench thought they would be dealing very leniently with the defendants by sending them to prison for seven days each with hard labour. Similar sentences were passed on a man and his wife who were found sleeping in a field.

Hinckley Petty Sessions. Mrs. Fanny Cooper charged with assaulting Clara Jeffcoat, her servant, a girl from the workhouse. The girl said that her mistress pulled her by the hair and struck her in the face with a brush, causing a lump. Previously, Mrs. Cooper had burnt her leg with a red-hot poker, knocked her about with sticks, and pulled her ears and made them bleed. Owing to the ill usage she suffered, the girl tried to drown herself. Fined £5 and costs.

Blackpool Police-court. Before Messrs. H. Fisher, H. Buckley, and J. Cardwell. Christine Fleming, aged 18, a servant, charged with stealing a pair of eye-glasses. Her first offence. Fourteen days.

Bath City Police-court. Henry Childs, aged 18, charged with using obscene language Fourteen days.

Long Melford Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. W. W. Poley and T. P. Hale. John Heard pleaded guilty to stealing mangold wurzel. Fined £2 or one month.

Lewes Petty Sessions. William Bradford, convicted of introducing a small quantity of rum into Newhaven Workhouse. Seven days.

Tunbridge Wells Petty Sessions. Harry Flint, charged with having fraudulently pretended to be a deserter. Fourteen days.

Wrexham County Police court. John Cummings, charged with poaching. Three months.

Whitehaven Police-court. Lowther Wilson and James Laughlin, charged with poaching. Fined £5 each.

Devonport Police-court. Before the Mayor, Messrs. J. W. W. Ryder, J. C. Graves, W. Hawkes, W. Joll, and G. A. Rae. James Wallis, shoemaker, pleaded guilty to unlawfully pawning a pair of boot-uppers. Twenty-one days.

Glasgow Sheriff Criminal Court. Jane Blair convicted of stealing a door-mat. Six months.

Airdrie. Before Hon. Sheriff Russell. William Hutton charged with day poaching. Fine and costs, £3. 10s.

Last week I pilloried the Leek Bench for having imposed fines instead of imprisonment in a case in which a man was so brutally assaulted that his arm was broken in two places. One of the Magistrates, whilst admitting that the decision was, on the face of it, open to criticism, has brought under my notice certain facts which influenced the Bench, and which did not appear in the newspaper reports. It seems that the complainant, a man in great poverty, had himself offered to settle the matter for a money consideration, and out of the heavy fines the Magistrates were able to allow him a substantial sum as damages. On the other hand, if the defendants had been sent to prison the complainant would not have received a farthing towards the expenses of his illness. This explanation of their motive certainly puts the action of the Bench in a more favourable light. At the same time, ruffians guilty of such violence ought not to be allowed to escape with a mere pecuniary penalty, and it is to be regretted that the law does not make it possible for Magistrates to mulct them in damages as well as to send them to gaol.

In the Wolverhampton Police-court, the Clerk seems to consider it within his province to publicly admonish the Magistrates as well as to advise them. The other day a lad was charged with stealing a watch from a slaughter-house which he was in the habit of frequenting. Mr. Parker, J.P., having elicited that the prosecutor left the watch hanging up in the slaughter-house, ventured to observe that he ought to be ashamed of himself for placing such a temptation in the boy's way. Thereupon the Clerk, Mr. E. H. Thorne, sternly remarked that such an expression ought not to come from the Bench, that it would cause "no end of juvenile crime," and that the prisoner (aged thirteen) "was a scoundrel." I presume the Wolverhampton Magistrates are accustomed to censures of this kind from their Clerk; at all events, Mr. Parker seems to have submitted without a protest.

At Harrogate Police-court the other day a man was charged with selling lavender in the streets without a licence. The prosecution appears to have been a very harsh proceeding, for a resident assures me that the defendant and others similarly engaged were quiet, decent men, trying to turn an honest penny, and that they simply stood in the gutter with their boxes of lavender and caused no obstruction or nuisance whatever. The defendant told the Bench that he did not think he ought to have a licence "as flowers were perishable." Here a Police-Inspector brought his remarkable knowledge of botany into play against the defendant. "Lavender," said the officer, "was not a vegetable or a herb, but it was distinctly a scent." This scientific evidence settled the matter, and the Mayor forthwith committed the defendant to prison for seven days in default of paying 10s. and costs.

The Scarborough Borough Magistrates gave a droll exhibition of their wisdom and understanding at the recent Brewster Sessions. For a time all went smoothly, and licences were granted without difficulty, amongst them being that for the Grand Hotel, a large establishment which is under the management of Commander Green. Almost immediately after the Grand, the case of a smaller house came up, and the Chief Constable casually remarked that it belonged to a Company in the town, and was managed by a lady. Here a preternaturally smart J.P. thought he detected a flaw, which he was prompt to expose. To grant the licence would be, he urged, to violate their rule, that the licensee should be a bonâ-fide landlord, and not a nominee of any Company or firm. But the Chief Constable felt constrained to point out that the circumstances were precisely parallel with those of the Grand Hotel manager, whose application had just been passed. This little fact had been overlooked by the wiseacres on the Bench, and it proved such a poser that they had to retire for a private consultation. The result was an announcement "that these cases would be put back," though the Grand Hotel licence had been already granted, if not signed.

It is, I know, risky to assume that the Scarborough Magistrates will take the right course. Still, I fancy that, after putting the parties concerned to unnecessary inconvenience, the Bench will, in the end, muster sufficient discretion to grant the hotel licences. Meanwhile, the matter is worthy of notice as an example of magisterial wooden-headedness. The rule directed against the tied-house system is, in its proper place, an excellent one; but it is monstrous to strain it against first-class establishments because they happen to be owned by hotel Companies. As a correspondent has written to me on the subject, it is lamentable, not to say disgraceful, that the power of granting or withholding licences should be in the hands of noodles who apparently cannot discriminate between an ordinary well-conducted hotel and a "tied" drinking den.

A Durban correspondent has forwarded me a report of the proceedings of the Supreme Court of Natal in reviewing a decision of a Local Board in reference to an hotel licence. The Chief Justice apparently regarded the proceedings of the Local Board as so remarkable that he suggested an account of them should be sent to TRUTH. In what took place before the Local Board, however, I fail to find anything more extraordinary than a remark made by one of the Chief Justice's colleagues in the Supreme Court. The question of the hotel licence was sent back to the Local Board for reconsideration; and as a reason for doing this Mr. Justice Turnbull suggested that the members might have been "overawed" by a "garbled scriptural quotation" in a temperance petition!

I hear with much satisfaction that a prosecution has been commenced against one of the Indian "oculists," to whose proceedings attention has once or twice been drawn in TRUTH. It seems highly desirable that the area of this prosecution should be extended, if possible, and I would, therefore, earnestly press on any persons who have had recent dealings with any Indian oculists to communicate with Dr. Hugh Woods, Secretary of the London and Counties Medical Protection Society, at 11, Archway-road, Highgate.

A curious Police-court story reaches me from Annan. It appears that at a recent sitting of the Bench, a man convicted of having, without any provocation, attempted to stab a local chemist with a pocket-knife, was let off with the small fine of five shillings. As Provost M'Lean, the presiding Magistrate, does not usually err on the side of lenity, the extremely light penalty imposed in this case naturally caused considerable astonishment. The decision may perhaps be explained by the fact that the defendant is a tenant of the Provost, and the Provost himself paid the fine.

An outrageously severe sentence was passed by the Hastings County Magistrates on Saturday in a case in which Thomas Dibley was charged with threatening and assaulting Police-Sergeant Stevens at Bexhill. The defendant admitted that he used threats, but said that he was provoked to do so by the Sergeant, who deliberately pushed him. As to the assault, the complainant himself only alleged that the defendant "pushed his face into his" and "stamped on his toe." On such evidence the Bench might reasonably have bound Dibley over to keep the peace, but, instead of doing this, they actually sentenced him to a month's hard labour, with a further month in default of finding sureties. Dibley is an ex-Police-Sergeant, and, I am assured, a man of good character, sober, and hard-working. The monstrous punishment inflicted on him for a first and very trumpery offence has, it is not surprising to hear, caused great indignation in the district, and I trust that the Home Secretary will at once release the man.

The suggestion has been made to me that if itinerant fortune-tellers are to be dealt with by fine and imprisonment, the owners of the automatic machines engaged in the same line of business ought to be similarly dealt with. I am bound to say that this seems to me unanswerable logic. If it be illegal for an individual to retail fortunes by word of mouth, it should be illegal for a Company to retail them by means of a "penny-in-the-slot" contrivance. This is a matter which the Anti-Gambling League ought to take up without loss of time.

I am told that it was not the convict Hobbs, but his friend and ally, Jabez Balfour himself, who gave the peal of bells to the West Croydon Congregational Church. He also presented a clock with an illuminated face, and a considerable sum was spent by him on strengthening the tower for the purpose of carrying the bells and machinery. In all, about £2,000 of other people's money was expended by Jabez upon this church, at which both he and Hobbs were regular attendants. The suggestion has been made that the clock and bells should be sold, and the proceeds given to the Liberator Fund; and really it seems to me that this would only be an act of common honesty.

The English and American Register, a journal published at Berlin and Dresden, gives prominence to an announcement that "The Society of Science, Letters, and Art of London, has founded a branch institute in Berlin." It seems desirable, therefore, that I should repeat for the benefit of Germans, and English and Americans in Germany, the information which I have several times given concerning this pretended "Society." The "Society" is the name under which one Sturman at present carries on business at Kensington. Sturman was formerly a vendor on commission of worthless American degrees. His present business is (1) to sell to any fools who will buy them the fellowships and decorations of his so-called "Society;" (2) to obtain money by examining schools, and granting certificates to the pupils. No person of the slightest claims to distinction in Science, Letters, or Art has any connection with the concern, which has been denounced for years in TRUTH as an impudent swindle. Those who desire to learn more of Sturman's character are referred to an interview with him published in TRUTH of April 21, 1892. German and Anglo-German newspapers, please copy.

Mrs. George Hewson, of Ennismore, Listowel, co. Kerry, is engaged, it seems, in collecting money for the families of distressed Irish landlords by means of other circulars than the one noticed in last week's TRUTH. In another printed appeal, which has been circulated in this country, Mrs. Hewson states that she is trying to get thirty people to give her one pound apiece for the benefit of a lad whose case she thus describes:—

> The facts are these:—He is the son of an Irish gentleman of position, well known, but, owing to the heavy charges on the property and the non-payment of rents, he is quite unable to send his children to school this year. I am therefore trying to send this child of eleven to school, who will be utterly ruined if not now sent. May I ask your help? I shall gladly give any information or reference.

On the strength of the last sentence, a lady thus appealed to wrote to Mrs. Hewson asking for the name of the boy and other particulars. This was the reply:—

> MADAM,—Pray excuse delay in answering your note respecting the little boy. He is eleven, the son of a gentleman of position who is very old, the second son, and there is one younger. They are an old family, formerly, I believe, English. Owing to the state of Ireland, the rents being cut down and in some years not paid, also a heavy mortgage, there is no money to educate this boy, and I am trying to help, and have done so, but this next term is not paid. I need not say if boys are not educated they are ruined, and they can't be kept waiting "till times are better." If you could help I shall be much obliged.—Your obedient servant, LILLIE HEWSON.
>
> The Lord Bishops of Waterford and Limerick can give you any information respecting me.

It will be seen that the only additional information here vouchsafed is that the father is very old, that the boy is his second of three sons, and that the family is an old one, none of which facts throws any light on the bona fides of the appeal. The charitably disposed are expected to take it all on the word of "Lillie Hewson," and those who have the misfortune not to know this lady are expected to write to the Bishops of Waterford and Limerick for a certificate of her trustworthiness. If they are wise they will do nothing of the kind, but confine their charity to objects which they know something about. People have no business to appeal to strangers for money in this way.

An American citizen residing in Edinburgh, spending his entire income in Great Britain, paying Income-tax as well as local rates, and having even been invited to join one of the so-called "Conservative Clubs" which are ready to admit the whole world as members at a guinea a head, desires me to inform him whether he is entitled to the municipal and Parliamentary franchises. The answer is, No. What is more, I cannot see that the answer ought to be anything else. For very good reasons all States, so far as I am aware, require that foreigners before they can enjoy the rights of citizens shall renounce their foreign nationality. If my American friend desires to enjoy the privileges of a British citizen, he can do so—by becoming a British citizen.

Apropos to octroi duties in India, I hear that this mode of taxation is one of the blessings which British rule has brought to Egypt. It seems that taxes are in this way levied upon almost every article, including many necessaries of life, at all towns above the size of small villages. This little item should certainly be set off against the reduction of direct taxation which Anglo-Egyptian administrators boast of having accomplished.

The Liverpool Post publishes an article protesting against some fresh land-grabbing operations on the part of the Royal Niger Company, and complaining that the grievances of independent traders against the Company remain unnoticed. Liverpool people, and all others outside the privileged circle of Niger shareholders, have indeed good cause to cry out, and it is time that their cries were attended to. I would point out to the Jingo section of the Liberal Party, inside and outside the Ministry, that this is not a question of enlarging our sphere of influence, or hoisting the Union Jack in regions where it has not hitherto fluttered. The question is whether this bloated and tyrannical corporation is to be allowed to indefinitely extend the bounds of its jurisdiction, to crush out all independent traders within those bounds by arbitrary taxation, and to ignore the terms of its charter whenever it thinks fit.

I want to know upon what principle Peers are created by Liberal Governments? Why should Sir Arthur Hamilton-Gordon be made a Peer? He has been a Colonial Governor—so have a good many other persons. The Liberal Party has solemnly declared that hereditary legislators are an anomaly. Why, then, make more? Are we to run counter to our opinions in order to gratify the desire of nonentities to become hereditary legislators with the prefix of "Lord" before their names? It may be said that, so long as there is a House of Lords it signifies little whether there be many or few. But, if we are to act on this view, surely it would be well to make men Peers who are ready to pay for the honour, and to devote the proceeds to the party funds. The Conservatives almost invariably do this. Their Peers have secured to them the sinews of war. I would undertake to find twenty Liberal snobs, who have not been in prison, and who are just as respectable as any of the brewers and bankers who have been made Peers, who would each give £20,000 for a Peerage. Such a creation would, at least, put us in funds for a General Election. With £400,000 in the Party chest, we might pay for the election of a considerable number of excellent candidates, all pledged to the abolition of the House of Lords. Thus we should cook the hereditary goats in the milk of the kids.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. Restores the colour. Renews the growth. Arrests the fall. Cleanses the scalp.

An esteemed correspondent sends me the following summary of the debate in the House of Commons on the Home Rule Bill:—

WHAT THE UNIONISTS HAVE BEEN SAYING.

"Somebody said, six months ago,
That something or other was so and so.
Old Gladstone was once against Home Rule,
He is for it now, and so he's a fool.
It's been said before, and we'll say it again,
That Irishmen all are knaves in grain.
Talk must go on in an endless flux,
For each clause in the Bill is a vital crux.
The Bill must be dealt with by men of pith,
Like Courtney, and Hobhouse, and Parker Smith.
On the old Constitution we take our stand,
Gladstone's determined to ruin the land.
This House of Commons is bribed and base,
But just watch for the Bill in 'another place,'
Where, before very long, it is bound to go,
To the friends of Jesse, and James, and Joe;
The will of the people may go to smash,
For the 'Noble Lords' will soon 'settle its hash.'"

THE RADICALS' RETORT.

"Well, that is a course that we'll not condemn,
Let them settle the Bill, and we'll settle them."

A paper called the Penrith Observer publishes a letter signed "A Tory Lady," and dated from "Tunbridge Wells," chiefly made up of passages such as these:—

THE GREAT BETRAYAL.

SIR,—Under Divine Providence we must now put our trust (humanly speaking) in the House of Lords, who, we are assured, will throw out the infamous Home Rule Bill. The present Government are simply "political thieves," with the greatest knave in the three kingdoms at their head. A gentleman in Rome at the time remembers how Mr. Gladstone was then and there received into the Romish Church, and the said gentleman remembers all the particulars. How could any honest man read the lessons in Hawarden Church, as Mr. Gladstone does when at home? I am not at liberty to give the gentleman's name. . . . .

No doubt there are many Tory females—ladies they can hardly be called—in the neighbourhood of Tunbridge Wells capable of writing like this, but it is difficult to believe that any of them would select a Cumberland paper for the purpose. For my part, I regard the "Tory Lady" who is supposed to write this letter as equally mythical with the gentleman who witnessed Mr. Gladstone's reception into the Church of Rome, but who objects (very wisely) to come forward to prove this valuable historical fact. Who wrote the letter, however, is immaterial. The editor who publishes it knows that he is publishing a foul and malignant libel, which on its face proclaims that it cannot be proved, and which no intelligent person of any shade of politics would believe. He publishes it, of course, relying on the fact that the statesman whom he traduces will not consider the matter worth notice, and hoping that a few votes may thereby be gained to the party in the district. A journalist guilty of such conduct is a disgrace to his profession, and it is a pity that there is no summary means of removing him from the exercise of it.

By the way, the next paragraph of the letter to that above quoted, informs the reader that the apocryphal gentleman who witnessed Mr. Gladstone's perversion at Rome, also "states that the Crofters Commission in Orkney are so many licensed bandits." We are further told that "the gentleman has much property there." This really is a feminine touch. Apparently the reader is expected to regard this worthy gentleman, by virtue of his holding property in Orkney (and, doubtless, having his rents reduced), as a peculiarly high authority on the character of the Commission. As the worthy landowner has been in Italy (on a great historic occasion) he ought to know that a bandit is one who robs for his own benefit, not one who devotes himself to enriching others. And why this reference to the Crofters Commission in connection with our Government of "political thieves"? The present Government did not appoint the Commission, and it has been at work for many years under an immaculate Tory Ministry.

Mr. Chamberlain and his friends are really too kind. They are aware that the last election was won upon the general thesis that certain reforms were desirable in Great Britain and in Ireland. They now point out to us that so soon as the House of Lords has thrown out the Irish reform, we have no right to carry in the House of Commons the British reforms to give effect to which we also were elected. This is the same thing as asserting that the minority is to impose its will on the majority in respect to tactics as well as to principles.

Several sections of the British Radicals desire, they say, that the particular reform that is dearest to them should come first. To meet this these benevolent advisers suggest that there should be no British reform. Now, I should meet this eagerness by laying it down that reforms that concern all should come before those that only concern a section of the community. The first Bill of next Session should be one making the appeal to the entire nation at an election a reality. Mr. Fowler has brought in a Bill altering the system of Registration. It does not go far enough. Let us have manhood franchise, and let every man find himself on the Register automatically when he has resided for three months in the same place before the period of an election, be it a general or a by-election. This should be the sole list of electors, and no elector should be allowed to vote in more than one constituency.

The Bill might further enact that no Parliament should last more than three years; that in case of a candidate not obtaining a clear half of the votes cast there should be a second election; that all elections should be on the same day; that all returning officers' expenses should be thrown on the rates; and that all members should be paid. Either the Lords would throw this Bill out or they would not. Whether they did or whether they did not, would not hinder it from securing to us a majority, for it would embody in one great electoral charter all the alterations in the electoral law for which Radicals contend. To me it is just as important that the government of the United Kingdom should be in the hands of the people as that Irishmen should enjoy the advantage of self-government. Go, I say, to the country with this Bill, whether passed by the Lords or thrown out by them, and a declaration in favour of Home Rule all round, and we should get such a majority that we should be able to pass without difficulty every other Radical measure to which we aspire.

As a question of tactics, I have never quite understood why Mr. Gladstone preferred to carry the Home Rule Bill through Parliament in one Session, rather than devote three Sessions to it, taking it up in one Session at the point that it had reached in the previous Session. Several advantages were, as it seemed to me, to be found in this. The Lords would have been deprived of the plea that the greater portion of the Bill left the Commons without discussion. The country would have got so used to accept as inevitable Home Rule, that it would have been loth to negative it at a General Election. Three clear years would have been secured for a Liberal Government. Had this plan been adopted; had the Bill granted full and immediate Home Rule; and had the Irish, for a term of years at least, been excluded from the Imperial Parliament, I think that we might have gone to the arbitrament of the country with very little fear of the result. The reason why this plan, notwithstanding its obvious advantages, was not adopted, was, I take it, that Mr. Gladstone has more of the Napoleon in him than of the Fabius, who cunctando restituit rem. Like Napoleon, he prefers to precipitate a solution at the earliest opportunity, rather than to win by tiring out the enemy. With all his ability, his zeal, and his energy, had Mr. Gladstone been in command of the Roman armies against Hannibal, he would have forced on the fighting, rather than have let his opponent bleed to death by declining an engagement.

It seems to be generally considered by Unionists that to Clause 9 of the Home Rule Bill they are indebted to their victory at Hereford, and I am inclined to think that they are right. If so, it only shows that those Home Rulers who thought themselves wiser than Mr. Gladstone were mistaken. The Premier has never varied in his deliberate opinion that Irish Home Rule involved, as a necessary consequence, Irish exclusion from the Imperial Parliament. Many of his followers had, however, incautiously pledged themselves to the retention of the Irish, under the mistaken impression that this would reclaim the Liberal Unionists. These gentlemen had declared, during the discussions of the Bill of 1886, that exclusion was the rock on which they had split away. I never believed this. They had made up their minds for various reasons to seek salvation in the Tory fold. Their desire for retention was a mere pretext, and, had Mr. Gladstone proposed inclusion, they would have been for exclusion. The event has proved that I was not far wrong. In every detail the Bill of 1886 was a far better one than that now before Parliament. In insisting upon modifications in it, and forcing them on Mr. Gladstone as a condition of support, it has been the old story of grandchildren teaching their grandmother to suck eggs.

The reservation of land, constabulary, and taxation for a term of years from the purview of the Irish Legislature rendered it necessary that the Irish should vote for these matters in the Imperial Parliament. Mr. Gladstone sought to meet this by what was called the "in-and-out" arrangement. But any "in-and-out" involved two majorities, possibly antagonistic, in the Imperial Parliament. This, it was self-evident, would destroy our entire system of Government, which is based upon the Executive being the outcome of the Parliamentary majority. Given the tortoise, and the world may rest firmly on its back, even though the animal is moving on. But try to pose the world on the backs of two tortoises moving in different directions, and all stability vanishes. The reservations, therefore, rendered it obligatory to retain the Irish, and the exigencies of Parliamentary Goverment rendered it necessary that, if retained, they should sit and vote for all purposes.

But is it conceivable that the English electorates will welcome with enthusiasm a scheme by which the Irish are allowed to settle many of their local matters as they please, and have what generally would be a casting vote on like British local matters? I have never thought that they will. This is why I hold that the only two ways to ensure the passing of Irish Home Rule are, either to exclude the Irish Members from the Imperial Parliament, or to establish local assemblies in all the component parts of the United Kingdom, with an Imperial Parliament in which all these parts are fairly represented, and which concerns itself alone with Imperial matters.

SCRUTATOR.

MARIENBAD.

IN the months of August and September it is as difficult to keep men to their homes as it is to keep the swallows in England when the moment for their annual migration arrives. Every year articles appear in the newspapers pointing out that it is foolish of Englishmen to go abroad when there are so many beautiful places for them to visit at home. Nevertheless, English people continue to flock to every Continental watering-place. The reason is that the sense and the surroundings are more entirely changed by crossing the Channel. With me, it is a question of waters. What the water may be does not seem to signify. They all produce a beneficial alteration in my interior; or, if it be not the waters, this is due to the open-air existence and the régime that accompanies them. I really believe that in the course of my life I have drunk of every healing well in Europe. I never consult a doctor, but on my arrival at a watering-place I buy a book, which tells me how much is to be quaffed, what I am to eat, and what not to eat. The whole thing is much like turning a horse out to grass. On the whole, I think that the waters of Marienbad are the most effectual in recuperating nature, although I confess that I never took the trouble to learn what they contain. Possibly, however, the result is obtained by the pine woods and the régime. The former surround the place; the latter is severe—a crust of bread and a cup of coffee for breakfast, a couple of slices of joint for dinner, a cup of coffee in the afternoon, and a slice of cold meat for supper. Fat and thin people come here—the fat get thin, and the thin get fat. The correct thing is to walk up and down hill for hours each day. This I never do. The age is given to athleticism. I suppose some persons like it. I do not, and therefore I never hit balls with a stick or kick one with my foot, nor do I do much in the way of walking. All this is a habit acquired in youth, and the body so adapts itself to the habit that it cannot be shaken off. Never take exercise, and you never will want to, is a golden maxim. Tastes, however, differ; and if a man's taste leads him to walk ten miles a day, or to play for hours at tennis, Heaven preserve me from finding fault with him. I do not, however, see why he should despise me (I know that he does) because it is not my taste. I was talking yesterday to a renowned mountain-climber, who had ascended peaks in India in comparison with which the Alps are molehills. He explained to me how weary he had been, how cold, how he had suffered from headache, owing to the temperature of the air. "Then why, in the name of common-sense, did you not remain at the bottom of the mountains?" I asked. This evidently had never occurred to him.

Marienbad does not appear to find favour with Britons, for there are not above twenty or thirty Englishmen and Englishwomen here. If they do get to Bohemia for their holiday, they betake themselves to Carlsbad. Very probably their doctors advise the latter. This is because the doctors, as usual, know very little of the two places. The waters are identical in their composition, except that the Carlsbad waters are hot and the Marienbad waters are cold. But Carlsbad is a roasting, enclosed hole, whereas Marienbad is a thousand feet above the sea level, whilst the surrounding scenery of the latter is far more beautiful than that of the former. One advantage possessed by both Marienbad and Carlsbad is that the mania of converting rural into town life has not reached them. I have not seen a man or a woman in evening dress since I have been here, whereas at Homburg it is dress, dress, dress, from morning to night. There are, however, a vast number of Hebrew gentlemen from Galicia and other parts peopled by Jews, who are arrayed in long caftans to their feet and Wellington boots, and who wear long love-locks down their cheeks. These wondrous beings give Marienbad a local colouring.

FOLKESTONE BUMBLEDOM.

I hear with pleasure that the publication in last week's TRUTH of the facts respecting the treatment of casual paupers in Elham Workhouse was immediately followed by the despatch of a Local Government Board Inspector to Folkestone to make inquiries. It seems necessary, however, to impress upon Mr. Fowler and his colleagues that the Guardians who are responsible for this scandal are quite ready to throw dust in the eyes of the Whitehall authorities if they can do it. I mentioned last week that they appeared to have misled Mr. Fowler on one material point, on which a question was asked in Parliament. Notwithstanding this, I hear that the Inspector who last week visited Folkestone was taken over the Workhouse by one of the Guardians who has taken a prominent part in opposing any reform in the existing state of things. This is not the way in which the truth is to be got at. The best thing a Government Inspector could do would be to visit the Workhouse in the guise of a tramp, and learn by practical experience in that character exactly how tramps are treated. If Government Inspectors are too exalted, or too well paid, to condescend to this mode of investigation, they ought, at least, to visit the place by themselves, and ascertain either by observation or by inquiry of the officials what goes on. For them to go round under the guidance of Guardians whose administration has been impeached, and who are fighting hard against any change in the system, is a manifest absurdity.

The Guardians had their fortnightly meeting last week, and what passed throws valuable light on the frame of mind of the majority of these worthy individuals. Owing to the fact that attention has been directed in the London Press to the treatment of tramps in this Union, the matter was discussed at some length. It is true that a decision was arrived at to provide additional vagrant accommodation at the Workhouse for ten men and twenty women; but a motion of the Rev. A. J. Palmer, who seems to be one of the few fairly enlightened members of the Board, to erect a casual ward nearer to Folkestone than the Elham Workhouse was shelved, and the dominant faction in the Board seem to have been more anxious to convict the papers that have criticised them of uttering "lies," than to deal with the shameful facts which are beyond the possibility of denial. One Alderman Herbert seems to have held the leading brief for this party. He directed his attention specially to an article which has appeared in the Star. Almost every allegation in that article he said was false, but he only referred specifically to two or three. One of these was a statement to the effect that thirty-seven men had slept at one time in the stables, which are used as an overflow casual ward. "There had never been thirty-seven men," said Alderman Herbert, "in the stables at one time. On one occasion only had there been as many as thirty." Now, it is no business of mine to defend statements made by the Star, but I happen to have a report of a meeting of this same Board, extracted from the Folkestone Herald of May 6 last. The report contains the following passage:—

> It was resolved, on the motion of Mr. Peden, seconded by Mr. Swoffer, that that part of the report be adopted, recommending that platforms be erected in the stables for the tramps to sleep on, instead of at present lying on the floor. The latter gentleman characterised the condition of the present state of affairs as disgraceful. He had seen the poor things lying down on the straw in their wet clothes.
>
> The Master, in answer to a question, said they had had as many as forty sleeping in the stables. Women tramps also had to sleep under the same conditions.
>
> The Chairman: I have not heard of this before.

Here the Master formally makes to the Board a statement several degrees worse than that in the Star, which Alderman Herbert calls "utterly false." I italicise the remark about the women tramps, because Alderman Herbert denied last week, with equal vehemence, the statement that women also slept in the stables. It is unnecessary, however, to waste any space on this, for, after making his denial, the Alderman went on to contradict himself by explaining that on three occasions women had been put in the stable, merely qualifying the admission by the statement that the women were "kept strictly to themselves." What this means the speaker alone can explain. There is no more provision for separating men from women in this stable than there would be in any other. For the rest, the Alderman has himself proved that on several occasions women, and, on one occasion, children, have slept in this place at the same time as the men; and the Master is the witness to the fact that as many as forty persons have slept in the building at once. According to the information which I have, this stable—apart from the initial scandal of herding men and women in such a place, and making them walk six miles for the accommodation—only measures 25 ft. by 12 ft. by 7 ft. The Local Government Board Inspector will, no doubt, have taken the measurements for himself, but if the above figures are accurate, or anything like accurate, this hovel into which, by the Master's confession, forty wretched outcasts have been crammed, has not sufficient cubic space for the accommodation of more than a dozen. It is, in fact, a question whether the Guardians responsible for this abominable treatment could not be dealt with under the Sanitary Acts.

It is unnecessary to press on the Local Government Board the significance of facts like these. There is no question here, as some of the defendant Guardians seemed to suggest last week, of pampering tramps, of providing them with the luxuries of a first-class hotel, and making Folkestone and its neighbourhood a sort of Promised Land, to which all the vagrants in the Kingdom will naturally bend their steps. It is simply a question whether in this particular Union the Guardians are to be privileged to treat the casual pauper in a manner at once inhuman, indecent, and illegal; or whether they shall be compelled to make the same arrangements as are made in other well-managed Unions. It is no doubt a highly convenient policy, and will always command the approval of a section of the ratepayers, to make things so hot for the "casual" that all his class will give the Union as wide a berth as possible. The policy, however, is contrary to the spirit of the Poor Law, and extremely unfair to the more conscientious ratepayers of neighbouring Unions. The Local Government Board exists, among other things, to prevent such anomalies, and no doubt it will see and do its duty in this case.

PEDAGOGUES' PLAYTIME.

We have reached a period in the summer at which the rapture with which parents welcome the return of their darlings from school has to some degree evaporated. I take for granted, of course, that all my readers do welcome their darlings with rapture, even the young scapegraces who are always in hot water at school, and are a perennial source of uneasiness at home—indeed, these not unfrequently get the warmest welcome. Such feelings, however, are transient. People there are, of course, who would like to have their children always with them. But the majority—including more especially those whose quivers are the fullest—prefer to take this pleasure by instalments, and they not unfrequently find that the smaller is the instalment the greater is the pleasure. For a day or two after they were home from school, Dick, and Tom, and Harry—not to mention Gladys, and Dorothy, and Marjorie—are a new and agreeable feature in domestic life. At the end of a week their society is apt to pall, and unpleasant traits in their characters to become manifest. At the end of a month their parents are too often counting the days till the end of the holidays, and even wondering why holidays exist at all.

This seems just the time, then, to re-open a very important question which was touched upon in TRUTH shortly after that auspicious event, the marriage of H.R.H. the Duke of York. In honour of that occasion several schoolmasters, in the exuberance of their loyalty, decreed that the ordinary summer holidays at their establishments should this year be a week or a fortnight longer than usual. I asked upon this whether any corresponding reduction would be made in the school bills, or whether the idea was that parents were expected to show their loyalty by having their boys at home, and paying for them to be at school, while the loyalty of schoolmasters took the form of reaping the advantages of this arrangement. I further inquired by what right a schoolmaster, who has a holiday just as much as the boys when the school is closed, should give himself a fortnight's recreation, at the parents' expense, without so much as asking the parents what they think about it. No schoolmaster ventured to come forward in defence of the usages of the profession; but I had one or two letters from parents and guardians asking me to further ventilate the subject. I also received a very original and rational letter from a Scotch pedagogue, who endorses my views. As coming from a head-master (not to say a Tory), this expression of opinion has so much weight that I strain a point in order to give it at full length;—

SIR,—I was pleased to see your remarks about school holidays. I don't see how any rational person can take any other view. I consider that boys' parents have signed a contract in virtue of which I am bound to look after and feed their boys for a certain accurately-specified time.

I keep them to their part of the bargain. I will not let them disorganise my work by sending their boys an hour late, or taking them away early, or sending for or interfering with them during term in any way except for a cause sanctioned by me, acting, as I am bound to do, in the interest of the community as a whole.

On the other hand, any one parent has a right to complain if I fail to fulfil my part of the contract. By giving additional holidays at home I not only relieve myself from responsibility, but I put money into my pocket, in my own case about £10 per diem.

I have frequently set this point of view before my boys. Even when I married a wife I gave no extra holiday, and told them why. Further, I cannot see how giving holidays in this way is consistent with right views of work in boys' minds. They are only too apt to think that work is for the master's good and absence of work for their own. Do we not drive this idea into them by this absurd custom of giving casual holidays? Do we not say to them, "Some one has been married, or given in marriage; some one has won a scholarship; some eleven has won a match, therefore, we will give you a reward, i.e., something which pleases you and is good for you"?

If it both pleases them, and is good for them, why not give it in any case? For the only theory of extraordinary holidays which will hold water at all is that, taking into account all the circumstances, such and such an amount of relaxation is, so far as it is possible to decide such a thing, the best that can be done for all concerned. If, e.g., there has been extremely hot weather and people have become fagged, why, then, I say—and act accordingly—have a break of a couple of days. Let boys make camping-out expeditions, let parents who wish it, and who live in the country, have their boys home to live in the open air, let the hardest worked Masters go away, taking care that a sufficient staff of responsible people, Masters and Prefects, remain at school to look after the boys left, and organise plays and picnics for them. Or, again, an epidemic—say influenza—is disorganising work, and so lowering the whole vitality of the school as to become dangerous to its healthy tone and high spirits. Then, I say, state the facts honestly, in a circular. Let those parents who wish it remove their boys, and let us do as well as we can with the rest. Similarly, in a dangerously infectious epidemic, give the parents the option. On the other hand, in an ordinary case, say mild measles or scarlet fever, we do not give parents this option. There, our side of the contract comes in. We are not going to have the organisation of the school further broken up, and, possibly, a panic spread, because some selfish women are foolishly nervous about their own boys, and wish to teach them cowardice at the expense of the welfare of other people's children.

The upshot of the whole matter is that school should never have its holidays lengthened for any cause whatsoever, except such rare emergencies as need not be discussed here. And it should have no extra holidays given during term time, except for such reason as I stated above, or in order to do something, e.g., be present at some public event or big show, or some exceptional match offered by a visiting team worth looking at, where the balance of pleasure and advantage may be supposed to make up for the loss of so much school work. I say this even of holidays given during school time.

But how any schoolmaster could ever relieve himself of such a large percentage of his responsibility, and impose, without compensation, or without the assent of every contracting parent, the burden of a week's additional maintenance on the home authorities, on such ridiculous pleas as a Royal marriage or a cricket match, passes my comprehension. I am, Sir,

A HEADMASTER AND A TORY.

I commend these outspoken sentiments to the attention of those English pedagogues who are accustomed to throw their boys on their parents' hands for a week or two at a time, whenever the school has won a boat race or cricket match, or a former pupil gains a distinction in after-life, or a Royal personage enters the bonds of wedlock. Primâ facie, such a course is utterly irrational. If an old boy has won University honours or become Prime Minister or Poet Laureate, that is a reason, not for dismissing the present generation of boys from their studies, but for enjoining upon them strict devotion to work, in order that they may emulate the achievements of the previous generation. If a race has been won by the school at Henley, or a match at Lord's, that is equally a reason for keeping the school together and maintaining its form, not for sending off the boys to loaf about in idleness at home. As for such an event as a Royal wedding, if the day is to be one of national festivity, I understand the meaning of giving school-children a holiday, so that they may kick up their heels with the rest of the nation; but why this event should be made a reason for giving the boys an extra week or two in their homes two or three months afterwards, to their own injury and their parents' pecuniary loss, I defy anybody to explain. At any rate, until such an explanation is forthcoming, those who suffer are entitled to assume that the schoolmaster, who gives the holiday and reaps the chief benefit of it, is actuated far more by a sense of his own interest than by a spirit of unreasoning devotion to the reigning dynasty.

The truth is that the schoolmaster is of all men the most greedy of holidays. In the ordinary course of things he enjoys an amount of leisure beyond that vouchsafed to any other class of men who have to work for their living. By gradual encroachments the summer holidays at most schools have now been carried to the length of seven or eight weeks. At Christmas four or five weeks have now become the usual allowance, and there is another holiday of three weeks or so at Easter. Not even the few barristers who can afford to be away through the whole of the legal vacations get such a lavish allowance of holiday as this. No other professional class gets half as much; many men would consider themselves lucky to get a quarter of it. Is there anything in the work requiring this extravagant allowance of play? Schoolmasters will, no doubt, pretend that there is, but I should like to know who will believe them. What does it come to? A six or seven hours' day, with a holiday or two half-holidays per week; an extra holiday generally about once a month; the work itself little more than routine—tedious, perhaps, but involving little heavy mental strain; and, finally, exceptional opportunities of recreation in the shape of all kinds of athletic games ready to hand. Every effort of "labour" to improve its position commands my sympathy, but I cannot at present see that this class of "workers" has a very strong claim to a further reduction of hours.

As for the boys (and the girls), far be it from me to say anything which may seem to imply that I grudge them holidays. "Over pressure" in schools is a pernicious evil. But where do we hear of it? Chiefly in the Board schools. Now, if anybody had proposed that all the Board schools should be closed for a fortnight in honour of the Duke of York's wedding, that might have been a good thing for some of the children; I am sure it would have been a boon to the majority of the teachers, who in this case do indeed lead lives of drudgery; and beyond all question it would have been a grand thing for the ratepayer, who in this case stands in loco parentis. But has anybody ever heard of "over-pressure" at Eton or Harrow, or any of the so-called "public schools" designed for the middle and upper classes? I trow not. My belief is that at most of these schools the normal holidays are too long, and that a less amount of vacation time more judiciously distributed would be to the advantage both of the boys and their parents. My impression is that to stop a child's schooling for seven consecutive weeks does almost as much harm as good, and to extend that time to eight or nine weeks increases by geometrical ratio the amount of harm. To those parents who agree with me, I would recommend that on first sending their boys to school they should have in black and white a clear understanding as to the length of the holidays; and I would further advise them to resist to the last extremity any attempt on the part of schoolmasters to depart from that understanding without their consent.

FUZZY-WUZZY VICE ATKINS.

I fancy that Mr. Kipling has somewhere speculated on the possibilities of "Fuzzy-Wuzzy" as a guardian and champion of the British Empire. If he has not, it is of no consequence. If he has, I congratulate him on what seems a very rational and business-like notion. My attention has been called to it in connection with my friend Thomas Atkins's old clothes. As many of my readers are aware, the fate of the cast-off uniform of the British soldier has lately received some attention in these columns. Among others in distant regions of the globe who have helped to enlighten me on the subject, is a gentleman in South Africa, and it is the gentleman in South Africa who has impressed me with the martial capabilities of "Fuzzy-Wuzzy." From what I can see of the bearings of the subject, I should be wanting in public spirit if I did not at once lay the idea before my brother taxpayers.

What suggested the idea to my South African friend—just as the tea-kettle suggested the steam-engine to Watt—was the sight of the native worker disporting himself in Tommy's old clothes. It seems that the contractors who relieve our thrifty War Office of these garments find an active market in Cape Colony and Natal, and it is the commonest thing there to see a native porter or waggoner adorned in the full uniform of some crack Line regiment. My friend protests against the phrase "degradation of the Queen's uniform" in this connection. The boot, he considers, is on the other leg. What must strike any beholder, he says, is that the new wearer is infinitely better adapted to display the uniform to advantage than the old one, the fact being that in nine cases out of ten poor Tommy's cast-off garments are several sizes too small for their new owner. Hence the momentous question, why not enlist the black man in the first instance? Zululand, Basutoland, and the adjoining regions are, I am told, potentially the finest recruiting-ground in the Empire. They contain an almost inexhaustible supply of stalwart warriors, who, if trained and led by British officers, would go anywhere and do anything. "Fuzzy-Wuzzy," in the opinion of those who know him best, is a born soldier, and he has proved his mettle pretty conclusively on one or two occasions when he has come to close quarters with the British Army. Of all things he hates work. If he can help it, he will never do more than the minimum necessary to earn his day's bread. He has no affinity with civilisation, and if left to take his chance, he will probably disappear under the influence of indolence and strong drink, like the rest of the noble savages. But catch him young and discipline him, give him the certainty of a couple of square meals a day for an indefinite period, a fair allowance of pure idleness, and an occasional chance of a fight, and you have found a career for him which will suit him as well as it will you.

HOUSE DRAINAGE.—Sanitary work of every kind contracted for.—The Sanitary Engineering Co., 65, Victoria-street, Westminster.

Of course, I know the indignation that will be raised in many quarters at the bare suggestion. I understand all the sentimental objections to handing over the glories of the Empire to the custody of "black men," not Salisbury "Hottentots"—there are plenty of them wearing the Queen's uniform already—but real genuine niggers. I know all about the disastrous consequences of depending upon "mercenaries," and that sort of thing. I can sympathise with the feelings of Sarah Anne at the prospect of being expected to walk in the Park with a coloured gentleman in the place of her magnificent Guardsman. But, after all, this is only sentiment. If you are an Imperialist, or a Federationist, or a Jingo, if you swear by the unity of the Empire and all that, you must recognise, of course, that "Fuzzy-Wuzzy" is just as much our fellow-subject as Atkins. If you cheer the Indian and Colonial troops when they parade through the streets in Royal processions, why should you have any scruples about enlisting the Queen's black men? And as for "mercenaries," although Mr. T. W. Russell does not like the word, where, I should like to know, would Marlborough and Wellington have been without their mercenaries? I will back "Fuzzy-Wuzzy" to give as good an account of himself when it comes to the scratch as some of the nondescript hirelings who rallied round the Union Jack at Waterloo.

As a business-like nation, we must learn to look at matters of this kind in a business-like spirit. In other words, the whole thing resolves itself into a question of pounds, shillings, and pence. Tommy Atkins is costing us more and more every day. Notwithstanding that, he is in a perpetual state of discontent. He grumbles; he writes to TRUTH; he gets questions asked in the House; he even forgets himself so far as to mutiny. With a dangerous Democratic spirit abroad, he is likely to get more troublesome as time goes on. As a fighting man he may not have his equal on earth; but then you must not lose sight of the cost per pound avoirdupois. "Fuzzy-Wuzzy" would probably be happy on 2d. a day where Tommy is discontented on a shilling. "Fuzzy-Wuzzy" is not likely to grumble at his rations; "mealies" are his daily bread, and no contractor has discovered the meat which he will not be able to digest. "Fuzzy-Wuzzy," as I am credibly informed, will actually do without barracks; he does not even require bedclothes. For choice he sleeps on the ground al fresco, and the only bedding he asks for is a block of wood to serve as a pillow. Against that, think of the Army Estimates, think of the £4,000,000 voted recently for merely improving the housing of our soldiers. It seems to me that this ought to decide the question at once. "Fuzzy-Wuzzy" has already got into Atkins's uniform. He had better now step into his shoes.

THE GREAT UNPAID.

I pointed out in a recent article some of the gross defects and abuses which warp and corrode the administration of the criminal law. In returning to the subject, I propose to make one or two suggestions as to how we may best secure a more perfect dispensation of justice. It has often been urged that the Magistracy should be shorn of many of the drastic powers which were conferred upon them long ago, not so much in the general interests of justice, pure and simple, as in the particular interests of the property-owner and the game-preserver. That there is here a considerable field for the reforming labour of a Democratic Legislature is undeniable. But I am afraid that the bulk of the evils revealed in the TRUTH Pillory week by week can never be eradicated by any mere amendment of the law. Whether justice or injustice is done must, after all, depend chiefly upon the skill, discretion, and disposition of those who occupy the judgment seat. And it is, I am convinced, quite hopeless to look for a uniformly intelligent and impartial application of the law under our present Magisterial system. One might as well seek to gather grapes from thorns. In an age of examinations, when even the postman who knocks at your door has to undergo some sort of test for his work, not the slightest proof of fitness for the office is required from the J.P. in whose hands your liberty may lie. He is enrolled on the Commission of the Peace because of his social position, wealth, or party services. Only too often, as my columns show, he makes it painfully manifest that he is not appointed because of his grace, wisdom, and understanding.

Consider what manner of men they are that have converted Justices' Justice into a recognised synonym for injustice. Take the average rural Bench. It is recruited mainly from the squire-archy with a few other kindred spirits, such as the Vicar or Rector, a retired military officer or two, and a stray specimen of the nouveau-riche. At his best the Squire is not an ideal Magistrate. His education and environment foster the notion that he is a being infinitely superior in all ways to the common people around him. He is one of the "betters" before whom they are taught by the Church to order themselves "lowly and reverently." Even if he could manage to banish this idea when on the Bench, it would hardly be possible for his humbler neighbours to rid their minds of it. He must seem to them to belong to a privileged class empowered to enforce against the unprivileged laws which have obviously been, in many instances, enacted in his own special interests. However conscientiously he may endeavour to do his duty, his decisions will inevitably be received with a certain amount of distrust. It is unreasonable to expect Hodge, for example, to accept a game preserver as a fair arbiter in a poaching case. Apart from this objection, the country gentleman is not, as a rule, so prodigally endowed with brains as to become a good Magistrate without any training for the work. He may be a great success as a judge of horse-flesh, but a ludicrous failure as a judge of evidence. In some places, where he is seen at his worst, he is notoriously a dull, stupid, wooden-headed dolt, possessed of about as much of the judicial faculty as the parish pump. Yet, because he is the most important member of the local landowning caste, he is thrust into the position of Chairman of Petty Sessions. His sole conception of his functions is that he must visit with the most severe punishment at his command all offences which impinge in any degree upon the divine rights of the property-owner and game-preserver. Then there is the Parson. He is usually, I think, the most detestable figure on the Bench. Ask any rustic for his opinion, and nine times out of ten he will tell you that of all justices the most intolerable tyrant is the cleric. A pretty extensive acquaintance with Magisterial performances enables me to confirm this. Why reverend gentlemen, whose mission it is to expound a gospel of love and charity and mercy, should prove themselves to be destitute of those virtues the moment they get on the Bench, is a psychological problem which I cannot solve; but such is the fact. The parvenu, who sits alongside the Squire and the Parson, emulates them both in the maladministration of the law. Having made a fortune in trade, his absorbing passion now is to hide his plebeian origin, and bask in the sunshine of County Society. To be made a Magistrate is one of the first steps in his snobbish progress, and when it is accomplished, he strives to curry further favour by the vindictive exercise of his powers in the interests of his new friends.

Of the ordinary Borough Bench it is not necessary to say much. Generally speaking, it is almost as unsatisfactory as its county rival. The prosperous tradesman, who presides, may be in his proper sphere a most estimable individual, and he may make a well-meaning attempt to dispense even-handed justice. But how can he help blundering in a difficult and delicate vocation, for which, in all probability, he is equipped neither by required ability nor natural aptitude? He cannot weigh up the rights and wrongs of a complicated case like a pound of tea. Whenever he is puzzled he can, of course, refer to the Clerk, and, as a matter of fact, Borough Magistrates are in a great many cases solely guided by the advice of that official. This is, however, an extremely undesirable state of things, because it practically enables the Clerk to give decisions without bearing any responsibility for them.

If we are to have a substantial improvement in the administration of justice, a radical reform of the present rotten Magisterial system is absolutely necessary. In a word, the Great Unpaid must give place to Stipendiaries. I know the proposal alarms the long-suffering taxpayer. He has been assured not infrequently by the Great Unpaid themselves—that it will mean a frightful addition to his burdens. Considering the object in view, I do not admit that this ought to be an obstacle, even if it were true. But really I do not see why there should be any appreciable addition to the taxpayers' burdens. It is not part of my scheme to appoint a Stipendiary for every little petty sessional division, and to remunerate him at the same handsome rate as a Metropolitan Magistrate. In the big army of the briefless there are many barristers competent for the work, who would jump at the offer of a salary of, say, from £350 to £400 a year. In scores of small towns a Stipendiary would have nothing like enough to do on the Borough Bench, and, without being sweated, he could attend three, or four, or half-a-dozen Petty Sessions in the surrounding country. Many of the County Petty Sessions are held only once a fortnight, or once in three weeks, and there need be no difficulty in arranging circuits for the Stipendiaries. With experienced lawyers on the Bench, the clerks would have less to do, and their salaries might be cut down accordingly, the money saved in this way going towards the payment of the Stipendiaries. Moreover, to meet the fresh expenditure a new source of revenue might be created. I would not entirely abolish the Great Unpaid. Hundreds and thousands of worthy men derive inexpressible delight from the contemplation of the letters J.P. after their names. Not for the world would I rob them of this innocent pleasure. I would charge them for it, however. Those who covet the privilege of being on the Commission of the Peace would not object, I imagine, to a £10 entrance fee and an annual subscription of the same amount. And lest the barren title might not be considered worth the money, some ornamental functions could still be left for the unpaid Magistrates to perform. If they were so minded, they might sit on the Bench with the Stipendiary, as the Sheriffs do with the Judge at the Old Bailey, and they might transact the purely formal business of the Court, sign documents, and do anything else in which they would be harmless. But what, it may be asked, if the Stipendiary happens to be as unjust and unrighteous a Judge as the amateurs whom he supplants? Sometimes, no doubt, it would be so. But a paid official can be checked much more effectively than an honorary one. There should be some cheap and expeditious method of appealing from all magisterial sentences, and a judicial functionary might be entrusted with the duty of watching the Courts of Summary Jurisdiction. The Stipendiaries' appointments would be annual, and when one was found to be guilty of flagrant abuse of his authority, or to be incompetent, his services would, as a matter of course be dispensed with. Such a scheme as this I have outlined might not provide us with a perfectly irreproachable administration of justice, but it would be far in advance of what we have now.

ULSTERS, OVERCOATS, and CAPES are kept ready for immediate use at Ulster House, Conduit-street, W.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

LONDONERS THROUGH FRENCH OPTICS.

"CHRISTMAS NIGHT" ("Une Nuit de Noël") should have for its sub-title "or Londoners seen through French optics." What a number of events are crowded into that Christmas night at the Ambigu Comique! The drama opens on the day before Christmas, and we are forthwith presented by the authors, Camille de Roddaz and Maurice Lefèvre, to the leading characters save one, Conscience, who is ingeniously brought in towards the end in a sort of scene which affects one like the transformation views in a magic-lantern, or like the dream of Mathias in "Le Juif Polonais." The rising of the curtain discovers the business house of a great ready-made tailor, Cruck, to whom workwomen are, on the day before Christmas, bringing the clothes they have made for him at home. They want their poor wages for Christmas. He is harsh and exacting. What he thinks not well done he won't pay for. The sympathies of the audience were strongly enlisted by Clara (Marley), a pale-faced, starveling seamstress, who has a little sister down with fever. The "Song of the Shirt" was bad; but Clara could sing a more thrilling song of the gent's ready-made suit. One sees that she has slaved and sat up, and she is quite pathetic when Cruck is going to tear her seams, and she flings herself forward in an attitude of supplication to prevent him and get the wage that she has fairly earned. Cruck is rather a French than an English bourgeois in his love for his two daughters, Rose and Mary. He thinks of giving Rose in marriage to his general manager, a hypocritical wretch named Mackenzie. The worst of this person is that villains who go to see the play will be made by his black-dyed heart to consider themselves almost virtuous. The action is short, but the plot is involved. Rose loves a bookkeeper named Charley. This Mackenzie finds out, and employs for £100 one Sam, an individual who has a talent for forging, to manipulate the books, and establish in them the proof that Charley has embezzled £68,000. Not that he wants to have his rival prosecuted. He only wishes to have him in his power, and to oblige him to leave off admiring Rose, and to make him the vehicle for securing a profit of £20,000 to Cruck & Co. The forgery takes place on Christmas Eve. What is in his head is this. A ship-broker, named Morley, has refused to ship abroad goods of the house, remarking that whenever he took any they were heavily insured, and the vessel went down. So Mackenzie now wants to hide himself and partner behind Charley. But he suspects a dark trick and refuses. Sam forges again his name to get Morley to accept the cargo. One crime leading to another, he then compasses how to "remove" the bookkeeper. To this end he follows him to a midnight mass (in London!) and stabs him in the back. We next see a Christmas-tree party at Cruck's private residence. Rose is away, and Mary brings in, almost by stealth, the wife and children of Tom. They are to implore the dealer in gents' ready-made suits to take back Tom, who was a cashier in the house and dismissed for having, the day before, taken pity on Clara and slipped a shilling into her hand. Madame Tom has a succès de larmes. Young Bob, a shopman, expressing his warm sympathy for her, is also sent about his business. The return of Rose to announce that Charley has been murdered, and that Mackenzie is the murderer, spoils the fête. The villain smiles contemptuously at her charges, and shrugs his shoulders. I dare say on the London stage he would be more English than this. Rose faints. Cruck is going to her help, when Mackenzie hurries him away to go and present the forged paper to the ship-broker. This is done, and the cargo of goods doomed to sink will be on board the St. Michael next day at Wapping. A curious scene then follows. Morley's ships having been so often scuttled, it is not easy to secure a crew for the St. Michael. Bob turns up and signs an engagement to go to sea. Probability is not always kept in view, but as the scene passes in London, this does not matter to an Ambigu public. Another fearful improbability is what Charley next does, in the spirit, not of a bookkeeper, but of a Quintus Curtius. He has been told that it was to save old Cruck, Rose's father, from bankruptcy, that he was asked to be the man of straw. He resolves to do so, and, to wipe out the dishonour of being a party to a crime, resolves to go in the St. Michael as supercargo. Morley is surprised when Charley comes to sign, he already having his signature. The cat thus is let out of the bag. Who is the forger? Tom, advancing, thinks of good Rose and Mary, and says, to save their father, that he himself wrote Charley's name. I wonder where the Englishman is who would thus risk transportation beyond the seas for the hunks who dismissed him because he gave starving Clara a shilling. Rose shows herself as a true-hearted English girl up to date. When Cruck goes home, he finds Rose in a state of anguish and nervous excitement. She had followed Charley to Blackwall to retain him in England or share his fate, whatever it may be. Unluckily she was too late, and the ship had left her moorings. Rose gives the father a piece of her mind. She divines some black conspiracy, but has not got to the bottom of it. Cruck sends her to bed, and, being too tired himself to retire to his own room, drops down on a sofa, and is soon asleep.

We see in his dream Madame Segund Weber as an accusing Conscience. She throws in the face of this Scrooge his greed and hardness of heart, and then invokes dread visions, in which Cruck is tortured by revelations of the future. These magic-lantern effects enchanted the audience. The most terrible feature of Cruck's nightmare is that he had secretly sent £20,000 to France to keep it from his creditors, but he cannot say where this sum is lying, his brain being in the muddled, bad-dream state. He is thus punished through his avarice and affections. The play is Shakspearian in regard to the merciless clearing away of the dramatis personæ by death. One also traces the influence of Dickens. The names are homely in most cases, and Jack, John, Joe, come in nicely with Charley, Bob, Tom, and Sam. We have Madame Tom and Madame John. The toilettes of Rose and Mary were thought ravissantes and did not look at all as if made in London.

FAMILY WASHING ONLY.—Collection and delivery twice daily. For families leaving Town, work delivered day following collection, and with three days' clear notice, household work collected and delivered prior to families arriving in Town. Under new management.—Belgrave Steam Laundry, 196, Ebury-st., Belgravia, S.W.

M. Lockroy is nearly recovered from the wound he received from the pistol of Moore, the cabman. The attempt to assassinate him relieved him from the necessity in torrid weather of making electoral speeches. Every one likes M. Lockroy. He is one of the brightest men alive and most amiable. This is greatly to his credit, he being a bundle of nerves which are apt to get on edge. If ever there was a perfect stepfather it was Lockroy. His wife is as reposeful as he is nervous. She has been in bad health for some time. She was for several days prostrated from having been suddenly informed by telegraph of the attempt to shoot her husband. Unfortunate Moore's head was turned by Victor Hugo's kindness to him as "a brother poet." He called the illustrious bard to his face "mon collègue." The right of Lockroy to deny himself to this bore has been a subject of hot debate at public meetings. No person of sense will hold that he was wrong, particularly as Moore did not belong to his constituency.

The inducements to the Duke of Edinburgh to remain an English Prince were the independence and dignity he enjoys as such, and his more than handsome annuity, with his naval emoluments. But the private fortune of his late uncle, which comes to nearly £800,000, is settled for life on the Dowager Grand Duchess, with reversion to the Grand Duke, whoever he may be, at the time of her death. She is old, and likely not to live long. The late Grand Duke often visited Paris, sometimes coming to stay for weeks here, and sometimes halting merely en route for Spain or the Riviera. He used to have in his suite a Spanish harpist, with her mother, and other musicians. A musical gift was in his eyes a patent of nobility direct from heaven. The Grand Duke and his musicians used to take part in concerts at the house of his cousin Prince Leopold, who had married a pianist, and used to live in the Rue Spontini. This petty Sovereign craved for fame, and rather suffered at his brother playing a brilliant part with the whole world for an auditorium. He longed to shine as a statesman, historian, and operatic composer. But he was too well off for that intense concentration of thought which produces works of genius, and did not fill a great enough place in the world to stand apart from his own merits on a high pedestal. A kinder man there could not be, but he was the autocrat of his little Court. His ideas were romantic, and sometimes ran away with him. As a writer, he was recondite, and it was sometimes a labour to follow his train of thought. I never came across more laborious pieces of writing than a brochure of his that now lies before me, and the letter to the Emperor Napoleon III., fished up by Le Figaro. It is on the interest and duty of France as a European Power to persevere in the Crimean war. One of the more recent productions of his pen was an attack in his short reign on the Emperor, and still more the Empress, Frederick. This came out anonymously, and was thought to have emanated from some underling of Prince Bismarck, until the author admitted its paternity. In reading the Grand Duke's memoirs, I was struck with different glaring inaccuracies. It was remarkable that the events he described the most inaccurately were those he witnessed. Success dazzled him—not that he was a base worshipper of it; but it seemed to him a sign of strength, and he was fascinated by those who knew their own minds and had strong character. For nearly sixteen years he professed himself an admirer of the late Emperor of the French, and sought to be his adviser. But he dropped him after Sedan, where he saw him for the last time, and came thence to Versailles, where he showed himself the votary of Prince Bismarck. The cult was sincere, and the Grand Duke lived in it to the end. Carlotta Patti's husband, Munck, was his favourite violinist. Not being under the spur of necessity, he did not specialise any of his talents. They might be said to have crowded each other out. At any rate, they grew weedy. The charming vein of melody and psalmody which nature gave him might have secured eminence for him as a composer, were he not ambitious of writing opera. "La Chiara" could only be played twice at the Paris Opera House, where the late Emperor had it brought out at considerable expense.

The party that has come worst out of the elections is the Royalist remnant from which Les Ralliés parted company some months ago. Their ill-success justifies the present policy of the Vatican, whose favourites would have been more successful had they not been suspected of wearing masks, and being ready to play into the hands of the Comte de Paris's agents. Comte d'Haussonville, the chief of these last, had a burning desire to get himself elected, and sought diligently for a constituency. Not a single Royalist who had any prospect of being elected would make way for him. This shows what their Royalism is; for it was well known that the Comte de Paris wished him to represent him at the Palais Bourbon. He could not think of putting himself forward in any of the thirty constituencies, which are merely Conservative, because it was impossible for him to hide his flag. Had he unfurled it he knew that there would not be the slightest chance of success. I am sorry that Comte de Mun is among the slain. He was a charming and picturesque figure in the different Parliaments in which he sat. His speeches had ease and polish, and were those of a really high-minded man. One always knew what he meant in the most eloquent flights. This was unfortunate for him, because his Christian Socialism was not practical. The plant of a factory using steam engines must turn out thousands of the same article to make it pay. He recommended a revival of the narrow trades corporations of former times, with their jurandes or appraising members, who fixed the prices at which manufactured articles were to be sold. This did not do for the working-class Socialists, who know where the shoe pinches. He was too near the Comte de Paris in sympathy for his conversion to Constitutional Republicanism to be believed, though it was sincere in this sense that Comte de Mun would not have ceased to be a rallié except with the Pope's leave.

To Overcome Weakness.—Pepper's Quinine and Iron Tonic gives New Life, Appetite, Health, Strength, Energy. Cures Neuralgia, Indigestion, Nerve Debility. Pepper's Tonic. Kept everywhere.

The only newly-elected Royalist who can pass for being intellectual is Prince Victor de Broglie. Not that he is clever, but, like all his family, he is très instruit, and a likely man to collect his speeches and get into the Academy on them. The Duc de Rohan, better known as the Prince de Léon, has his old name and about £20,000 a year. They will not compensate the reporters, when he manages to deliver a speech, for his shortcomings in other respects. Comte de Montalembert owes his seat to the influence of his relatives, the De Mérodes, in the Nord, a district of which has returned him. The Pope would do a good service to the Catholic party in asking M. de Montalembert to pass on his constituency to Comte de Mun. When the Panama scandals were on, the time-servers and the trimmers watched to see whether the cat would jump in the direction of the Duc d'Aumale, to whom it was remarked M. de Freycinet was making up. The cat has jumped in quite another way. I cannot think of any other French Parliament that contained so many mediocrities as those who have been brought in by the first ballot, and there is not much room for hoping that the winners at the second ballot will be less commonplace. Not that men of talent are scarce in France; but the provincial electors, when they have to vote under the District system, will prefer rich mediocrities. Not that they are fond of wealthy persons as the English are said to love a Lord. But they are cowardly, and think that, money being irresistible, they will not, if they vote against the rich candidate, be du côté du manche.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

I AM still patiently continuing, dear Lady Betty, my study of the common curiosities of country life. I came to the country for fresh air; I also came for fresh butter, fresh fruit, and fresh food generally, for I supposed that in the country they grew beef, mutton, poultry, new milk, new-laid eggs, vegetables, rabbits, and other similar simple provisions, but it appears that this is not so.

Our village contains probably from a hundred to a hundred and fifty houses—new red-brick, Kate-Greenaway villas, some half-dozen commodious-looking stucco and stone residences, and the average sprinkling of dilapidated but picturesque old English cottages. It is a long, straggling place, and the population amounts, I should say, to a little less than that of Half Moon-street, Piccadilly. My chief guide, philosopher, and friend here is Mr. M——, the village storekeeper—a most intelligent and most obliging man. What Mr. M—— does not sell cannot be worth the selling. Boots and butter, sausages and starch, cigars, cigarettes, and suet, buttons and bread, liniment and lemonade—there surely never was before such a strange combination of commodities as are gathered together in this tiny store beside the village green.

I call on Mr. M——.

"Good morning."

"Good morning, sir."

"Mr. M——, you have perhaps heard of rabbits?"

"Yes, sir." (Looks puzzled.)

"You may even have occasionally seen rabbits?" (The neighbourhood is overrun with them.)

"Certainly, sir." (Smiles.)

"Well, do you think now that by any possible means, short of poaching, you could procure a couple of these for me?" (I have been hunting around for them for close upon a week.)

Mr. M—— instantly became grave. "If you could give me until Saturday, sir (this is Tuesday), I might, perhaps, be able to do so."

"Thank you. That's very good of you. And now about fresh butter?"

(Brightening up) "We have some excellent butter, sir—Normandy butter."

"No doubt, but what I require is pure, fresh English butter."

Mr. M—— promises to see about this for me too. The matter of vegetables is less satisfactory. Spinach, it appears, is utterly out of the question. Cauliflower?—ah, well—Mr. M—— does recollect that a farmer mentioned cauliflowers once, and he promises to try to remember his name.

The same difficulty applies to procuring ducks and geese. Everything which is grown in the country is sent up to London; everything which is produced abroad is sold in the country. Butter from Normandy, eggs from Brittany, wheat from Canada, cream from Switzerland, matches from Sweden, and cheese from America!

This inquiry has utterly upset my previous ideas of country life. There is a deal of spurious luxury and very little solid comfort. The new Kate-Greenaway cottages are not much better than card-houses; their walls are one brick thick, they do not exclude the heat of the sun from without, and they do not retain the heat of the fire from within. They are attractive, but uninhabitable. Japanese gold-embroidered screens—and salt butter; Liberty silk blinds—and villainous tea; piano—and no meat; bow windows—and none of that store of home-made housekeeper's wealth which has hitherto been associated with country life in England.

I write playfully, but a serious problem underlies this, which might be well worth the while of a practical philosopher to inquire into.

* * * * *

In the country the animals bite—and the people backbite.

* * * * * *

An instructive and at the same time amusing discussion has been opened in the Times with respect to the misuse of words and to slipshod English. The universal vulgarising influence of America has exerted itself upon our language and upon our literature as it has upon our manners. But, apart from this, the tendency of the day in England is to be careless in this matter. The great rule in composition is to seek sense first and sound afterwards. This is as it should be, but for good composition both sense and sound should be studied together. The amusing element of the discussion is that connected with the use of the word menu as a synonym for "bill of fare." A correspondent writes to the Times, and indignantly denies that, rightly used, this word bears the meaning which we are accustomed to associate with it. This is, of course, ridiculous. In a French restaurant they hand you la carte, or the carte du jour, which is a general list of the dishes from which you can make a selection. The word menu applies to a set dinner, and as "bill-of-fare" is the only expression which we have in England for describing both, we have been compelled to adopt the French term to distinguish the latter from the former.

But why should we otherwise use French to describe the various dishes? A century ago French was the polite language; it was the language of diplomacy. This is no longer the case. It is now the language of cookery. Where there is a chef in the house it is obvious that for his convenience the various dishes should be described as he only knows how to describe them. But for an English cook to do this is mere affectation. Besides, the vast majority of Englishmen and Englishwomen are utterly unable to recognise the different dishes when these are described in French.

* * * * *

Many will have noticed with regret the announcement of the death of Mr. Eustace Ramsay L'Amy. The late Mr. L'Amy, who was staying at Ostend, slipped, some three weeks ago, whilst walking on the Digue, and broke his leg in two places just above the ankle. He was at once carried to his hotel, where all attention possible was paid to him, and, in a few days, he so far improved towards recovery that little or no further anxiety was felt on his account. On Thursday evening, however, he suddenly became unconscious, and he passed away almost instantaneously, in the presence of his brother and a friend.

A wider subject for regret is the intelligence of the death of Mr. Henry Cadogan, Second Secretary to the British Legation at Teheran, who died at his post last week after a few days' illness. For some years, however, the late Mr. Henry Cadogan had been suffering from ill-health. He was a son of Mr. Frederick Cadogan by his marriage with Lady Adelaide Paget, a younger daughter of the first Lord Anglesey. Mr. Cadogan entered the Diplomatic Service in 1881, his first appointment being that of Attaché at Washington. He served besides at Berlin, Darmstadt, Rio de Janeiro, Copenhagen, and Munich. His appointment to Teheran dated from August, 1891.—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

THE summer yearling sales were a dreadful failure, but things are likely to be a great deal worse at Doncaster next week; and if one-tenth of the animals which are to be offered are sold at remunerative prices I shall be vastly surprised. The catalogue fills twenty columns of the "Calendar," and there is a great deal of most direful rubbish in it. Considering how difficult it now is to sell even the most fashionably-bred yearlings, it does seem a most hopelessly muddy-minded proceeding to waste money in advertising and sending up to Doncaster animals sired by unknown or unsuccessful horses; but this is a form of insanity which appears to be impregnable.

As a rule, the most successful of the breeders who sell at Doncaster are Sir Tatton Sykes and Mr. J. S. Harrison. There are only six animals from Sledmere this year, of which one is own brother to Mimi, and another is the brother to Childwick. There is a colt by Isonomy out of Re-echo, and an own sister to Queen's Pardon. Mr. Harrison's lot includes an own sister to Go Lightly, an own sister to Wedding Bell, and a filly by Bend Or out of Crucible. Mr. Snarry sends up five, of which one is a colt by Bend Or out of Festive, dam of L'Abbesse de Jouarre. Mr. Hoole makes the very sensible announcement that "there will be no reserve over 100 gs." on any of his yearlings, and it would be well if his excellent example were generally followed by breeders.

Galloping Dick was not sent to York for the Prince of Wales's Plate, which he could not possibly have lost if in his Richmond Stakes form, and Ryan's stable was represented by Springray, who was backed for a great deal of money, and so was Red Sky (who cost 700 gs. last year), but they both ran badly, and the race was won by Amiable, a moderate filly, by St. Simon, who is the joint property of the Duke of Portland and Lord Lurgan. The most promising animal which ran in the race was Wherwell, a very fine colt by Fullerton, which is owned by the Duke of Devonshire, having been bred by Lord Dudley. Wherwell is still backward, although he did win a trial at Newmarket, but he will be worth following. A very high opinion must have been entertained of this animal last year, as he commenced the season with no fewer than forty-seven engagements.

Captain Machell and Jewitt made a good bargain when they bought Go Lightly at the sale of "Mr. Abington's" stud for 1,000 gs., as she won the Convivial Stakes very cleverly indeed from Skirpenbeck, who was much fancied.

Self Sacrifice was generally regarded as an absolute certainty for the Ebor Handicap, and after the race there were vituperative cacklings about her bad luck in running from her supporters, some of whom are so infatuated as to insist that she still has a chance for the Leger. Red Eyes was backed for a great deal of money, and she is one of the best stayers in training, and would certainly have won the Cesarewitch if she had been kept for that race. It is vastly fortunate that Red Eyes was exposed at Goodwood.

After the One Thousand I was alone in maintaining that the result of that race was not the outrageous fluke which it was generally proclaimed to be, the fact being that a horde of people were then crazy about the perfectly imaginary excellence of Dame Président. That my opinion of Siffleuse was correct is now a certain fact, and she may justifiably be regarded as the best filly of the year, but they are all a moderate lot. Queen of Navarre was desperately uncertain last year, and she is evidently a most dangerous filly to back, for after her excellent form at Stockton nobody could suppose that she would twice be very easily beaten at York. Her defeats have the advantage, however, of opening up the Park Hill Stakes and the Newmarket Oaks.

If the Illuminata colt wins the Champagne Stakes it is almost certain that Lord Rosebery will run him for the Lancaster Plate at Manchester, in which he would meet Isinglass at 32 lb. and Raeburn at 22 lb. La Flèche will probably be started for this £8,000 stake, and she would have to give Isinglass 6 lb.

Baron de Rothschild, having won the Gimcrack Stakes at York, will have the privilege of paying for some of the wine which is drunk at the annual dinner of the Gimcrack Club in December, at which he is not likely to be himself present, but he may, perhaps, commission his cousin, Mr. Leopold de Rothschild, to take his place, and make the speech which is always expected from the winner of the race. The Gimcrack was the most successful event at York, there being no fewer than seventeen starters, and Styx, who has improved since he ran in the Chesterfield Stakes with Speed and Throstle, won easily from Maundy Money, who was favourite on the strength of his having been well galloped, but the trial must have been a hugger-mugger affair, as the winner gave him 15 lb. Styx is a splendidly-bred colt, being by Tristan out of an own sister to St. Simon.

The Duke of Westminster has entered Orme for the Duke of York Handicap of £3,000 at Kempton Park, which is run on the Saturday before the Cesarewitch, and, the distance being an easy mile, the horse will very likely be started for the race. Orme is undoubtedly a real flyer over a mile, and if he comes to the post fit and well I would not look far beyond him for the winner, as he cannot be handicapped out of the race, for which Orvieto, Suspender, Siffleuse, Gangway, Phocion, Cabin Boy, Nobleman, and Haut Brion have been engaged. There are fifty-six entries, of which Colonel North contributes eight. Marcion would have been entered but for his valuable engagement at Paris on the following day.

I hear that Mr. H. L. Brassey intends to establish a large breeding stud at Preston Hall, his place in Kent, and it is probable that a number of mares will be purchased for him at the Newmarket autumn and winter sales. It will be remembered that several yearlings were bought at the summer sales for Mr. Brassey, who won the Halnaker Stakes at Goodwood.

A paragraph has been going round the provincial papers which states that "a great sensation" has been produced in turf circles by the scratching of The Jew for the Leger, as "he was one of the favourites for the race," and it is added that "an immense sum had been placed on him."

MINTON'S (Limited). MINTON'S CHINA.—A visit to Messrs. Mortlock's extensive collection in Oxford-st. and Orchard-st. will conclusively prove the superiority of taste and lowness of price for which this house has been so celebrated during the last century.

This is a farrago of nonsense. The Jew was never anything but a rank outsider, whose chance was held in boundless contempt by all rational people, and only a few stray bets had been taken about him, and these for small amounts. A month ago I pointed out the folly and absurdity of supposing that The Jew could have the very slightest chance of even getting a place at Doncaster, and my opinion of his Leger prospect was thoroughly justified by his complete and ignominious collapse at Leopardstown last week, when Delphos gave him such a rare dressing that he was at once scratched for his engagement next week.

THE DONCASTER PROGRAMME.

The Doncaster meeting seems likely to be a very tame affair this year, and it is high time for the programme to be revised and considerably strengthened. An enormous revenue is derived by the Corporation from the races, but the amount of money given to stakes is contemptibly small. A rich two-year-old stake ought to be established, and a good race for three-year-olds and upwards, on the lines of the Hardwicke Stakes at Ascot. The programme is altogether miserably meagre, and there is a nauseous plethora of small handicaps and selling races.

There will be only a very small field for the Leger, and I should fancy that people who desire to back horses for places will have to accept excessively close prices. Isinglass is going on as well as possible at Newmarket, and he will be brought to the post in the very best possible condition, for he has been improving every day since he commenced to be galloped on the turf. Isinglass has three times defeated Ravensbury this year, and he never had to be punished in order to make him win, and there does not seem to be any affinity with reason in the theory that Mr. Rose's horse will turn the tables because the course is longer and more severe, and I do not understand why some people should protest that he can stay better than the favourite, who has won all his races like a stayer. Phocion is doing well, and so is Ravensbury, and there can be no excuse if either of these animals disappoints its friends. A month ago I advised that people who had backed Medicis should hedge their money, and he was then at a short price in the betting. He was cleverly beaten at Deauville last week, and is now a doubtful starter for the Leger, and Le Nicham cannot stay the course. Siffleuse is more likely to be reserved for the Park Hill Stakes, and Peppercorn's chance now appears to be hopelessly forlorn. It must surely be lunatics who are taking 20 to 1 about Self Sacrifice, for after her defeat at York 200 to 1 would seem a short price to accept. Malchus can only be started because Mr. Vyner likes to see his colours in the Leger field. Peppercorn must have been amiss when he was beaten at York by Harbinger; and Mr. D. Baird's horse could not, under any circumstances, have the most remote chance for the Leger, as he cannot stay the course. The pace was wretchedly bad in the race for the Great Yorkshire Stakes. If Harbinger starts for the Leger he will, of course, be ridden by Cannon, and Mr. Rose will then have to find another jockey for Ravensbury.

I find that out of ninety two-year-olds which were entered for the Champagne Stakes, forty-three declared forfeit on June 6, and it does seem a discreditably parsimonious arrangement that these minor forfeits (amounting to £215) should go to the fund instead of being added to the stake. The added money, which is nominally £500, is reduced by this ingenious device to £285, which is not a large donation towards the principal two-year-old race of the meeting, and especially as not a farthing is given, either directly or indirectly, to the great three-year-old stake. £1,000 should be added to the Champagne Stakes, and the conditions as to the sweepstakes ought to be altered, and winners of £500 or upwards should carry 7 lb. extra, or if a horse has twice won that amount, the penalty should be 10 lb. Mr. D. Baird has left in Sempronius and Galloping Dick, Prince Soltykoff has Speed, the Duke of Westminster has Sanderling (winner of the Lavant Stakes at Goodwood), while Lord Rosebery has the colt by Hampton out of Illuminata, and the race looks like becoming a match between this animal and Mr. D. Baird's representative. My own fancy is that Sempronius will beat the Illuminata colt, if he is all right. Lord Rosebery's colt beat Glare easily at Epsom, but Mr Cooper's filly cannot stay a yard beyond five furlongs, and when Bullingdon ran for the Coventry Stakes at Ascot (when he finished second to the Illuminata colt) he was preposterously backward.

The Filly Stakes, which is an event which ought long ago to have disappeared from the programme, has a very bad lot entered. Nineteen animals are left in for the Tattersall Sale Stakes on Wednesday, of which Ilium, El Guacho, and Sweet Duchess are the best, and I prefer the chance of the filly, unless Red Sky is better at the weights. The Rous Plate of £500 on Thursday has a huge entry, including Galingale, Lucy Cross, El Guacho, Wherwell, Queen's Favour, Wedding Bell, and Stowmarket. Wherwell ought to be able to win this race. The Wentworth Stakes will probably end in a walk over for the Duke of Devonshire's candidate.

Phocion cannot lose the Scarborough Stakes if he is all right on Thursday. Twenty-nine three-year-olds are left in for the Doncaster Stakes on Friday, which will be worth about £670. Marcion has no penalty, so the race is simply a certainty for him if he starts; but Mr. Vyner may possibly prefer to run him for the Doncaster Cup. In the absence of Marcion there is nothing in the entry that is likely to beat Harbinger, who will meet Canning on better terms than when he defeated Sir Robert Jardine's steed at Goodwood, and surely he could beat Red Ensign at even weights. The Park Hill Stakes, which will be worth about £1,150, looked a good thing for Queen of Navarre before her defeats at York. The field may also include Silene (who has been amiss lately), Evermore, Siffleuse, Tressure, and Harfleur II. I shall plump for Siffleuse.

The Doncaster Cup will be won by Marcion if he runs, and in his possible absence I can see nothing in the entry that is likely to beat Red Eyes.

The Prince of Wales' Nursery of £1,000, for which the distance is a mile, is always one of the most interesting races at Doncaster. St. Simon won this stake a few years ago with 9 st. on his back, and I suppose it was a remembrance of that achievement which prompted the entry of Delphos, who will certainly be the topweight. The entry includes Sweet Duchess, Xury, Sarana, Grey Leg, Wherwell, and Barboreen, as well as Vieux Saxe, which is the colt by Isonomy out of Dresden China for which Captain Machell paid a high price twelve months ago, and I hear from Newmarket that he is considered a likely animal to win a Nursery before long.

The handicaps at Doncaster cannot yet be dealt with, and my only advice to backers is to leave these events alone until the numbers are up, as the early betting on the Great Yorkshire Handicap and the Portland Plate is now quite unworthy of any notice whatever.

MAMMON.

THE CHARTERED COMPANY OF SOUTH AFRICA.

I HAVE the profoundest distrust of the Chartered Company of South Africa and of its President, Mr. Cecil Rhodes. Lobengula is the King of Matabeleland, where he resides, and he claims to be Sovereign of Mashonaland. A gang of speculators obtained a concession from him, granting to them mining rights and certain land rights in Mashonaland. The speculators on this formed two Companies—the first Company, called the Concession Company, with a capital of four millions (nominal, for no cash was paid), let these mining rights to a second Company, with a capital of one million, on condition that it paid to the first Company one-half of all net profits. A charter was then obtained for the second Company, the fact that one-half of net profits was to be retained by the speculators for themselves being carefully concealed. A portion of the shares of this second, or Chartered Company, was distributed amongst the speculators, and a portion sold to the public. At once the most absurd and mendacious puffs in respect to the richness of Mashonaland were circulated, and the shares went up to 700 per cent. premium, at which price the speculators sold to dupes many of the shares that they had retained in their hands. What between these sales and the sales of the shares of the Concessions Company, for which the speculators paid nothing, they have probably pocketed several millions. Soon, however, it became clear that there was not gold in paying amounts in Mashonaland. The Company, therefore, got up a raiding expedition into territories belonging to the Portuguese, where they hoped to find gold, and managed at the cost of many lives to steal land. It would now seem that there is no gold there. At present the Company has not only spent its capital of one million, but it owes large sums of money to other Companies under the control of Mr. Rhodes and his gang. On this point a new light is thrown by a letter, emanating, apparently, from a well-informed source, which appeared in the Financial News of the 28th inst. The statements therein made as to the relations between the Chartered Company and the De Beers Company are very curious, and if they are well founded the former Company has not given credit to the De Beers Company in its accounts for advances, which have been made regularly for some time at the rate of £3,500 per month, and which are apparently still going on. It will be interesting to watch if these two Companies will make any statement with respect to this matter, and especially if the shareholders of the De Beers Company will allow this extraordinary state of affairs to continue. In Mashonaland there are about 2,000 Europeans, who are living by preying on each other. Something, therefore, has to be done, otherwise the Company would go into liquidation. This something has taken the form of a proposal to wipe Lobengula and his nation out of existence, in order to lay hands on Matabeleland, where it is hoped that gold may be discovered. With this view, a wolf-and-lamb dispute has commenced between the Company and Lobengula. That monarch sent some of his troops into Mashonaland The Company denies that he has any rights there, although as they derive their own rights from his paramount rights, if the one does not exist neither does the other. To punish him, he is to be deprived of Matabeleland, and his people are to be shot down with breechloading rifles and machine guns. But the climax of all this is that we are now told that we ought to pay for this wiping-out, and that, having done so, Matabeleland is to belong to the Company.

It is really full time that our good name should no longer be prostituted by a gang of gold-seekers. Of course, Mr. Rhodes and the gang declare that they are carrying out our Imperial destinies. As a matter of fact, they have lined their own pockets by foisting off shares on unwary British investors by financing tricks which Mr. Jabez Balfour must regard with admiring wonder. Neither ought we to spend one farthing for them, nor ought they to be permitted to "wipe out" Lobengula in order to get hold of his territories. Very probably there is not more gold in Matabeleland than in Mashonaland. But if the Company were to acquire the former, we should be told that gold is plentiful there, and this would enable the Chartered Company to borrow more money, and to sell more shares to dupes. This is the sole aim of the speculators. They are a curse alike to the natives of South Africa and to British investors. The former they shoot, the latter they rob. Mr. Sidney Buxton is now Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies; when in Opposition he often denounced the "Chartered Company swindle." I trust, therefore, that he will have the courage of his opinions now that he is in a position to give effect to them.

Although the Chartered Company of South Africa is to the other Chartered Companies what Jabez Balfour was to other Company financiers, yet all these Companies are based upon the idea that, whilst we prefer to do our dirty work by deputy, they are to take profit, if profit there be, and to throw on us the loss, if loss there be. Take, for instance, the Chartered Company of East Africa; they went to Uganda, made a treaty with the King involving them in heavy obligations, and slew many natives; no sooner, however, did they find that they were engaged in a losing speculation, than they repudiate their obligations and throw them upon us. It is really a little too outrageous that we should confer on speculators the right of life and property in a vast area, and that when their folly and greed bring them into difficulties with the natives, they should require us to get them out of these difficulties. The system adopted by Queen Elizabeth might have been open to objections. She winked at buccaneering on the Spanish main, and, indeed, invested money in the business. But all happened at the risk and peril of the buccaneers. They took the risk of loss or gain, and if there was no gain, the Queen utterly repudiated them.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

My Dear Ben,—The advance in the Bank rate to 5 per cent., which I have been predicting for some time, has now come about, and has, combined with the holiday influences now prevailing, effectually prevented any revival on the Stock Exchange. The demand for gold for the United States has slackened for the moment, but it is certain to revive again, and it is satisfactory to know that the Bank of France has now made a price for American eagles and Japanese yens, so that our Yankee cousins, should they want the precious metal very badly, can supply themselves from that source. They ask rather a stiff price for the eagles, although they have fifteen millions of them, with the bulk of which Messrs. Lazard frères supplied them last year. It is rather ingenious of our French neighbours to try and saddle the Yankees with Japanese yens during the present gold famine. They are unpopular coins both on account of their size (they are of the value of 10 yens or dols.) and of the inferiority of the gold.

Is the Crisis Mending?

The question is being asked in many quarters, if the crisis on the Stock Exchange is mending at last? I do not pretend to be able to answer this off hand, as the circumstances which have contributed to creating the present exceptional position are numerous. The effects of the Baring collapse are gradually wearing off, but at the next court of the Bank of England the Governor will hardly be able to make any very encouraging statement concerning the Baring estate, as prices of the securities held have undoubtedly fallen during the last few months. The political unrest in Argentina, too, is an unfavourable feature, and no important impovement can come about in the South American market generally until the Argentine Provinces are pacified, and the settlement of the foreign debt of the republic is confirmed by Congress. The Australian position has not further deteriorated, and although failures of mercantile firms are now occurring frequently, the banking position seems to be fairly sound, if the proposed remittance of £1,000,000 by the Government of Victoria in payment of Treasury Bills due in London at the end of the year does not unsettle things again. Then there is the latest trouble of the markets—the silver difficulty. Some of the silver securities, such as Mexicans and Perus, have recovered from the blow struck them by the closing of the Indian mints, and the price of silver has kept up so remarkably well, notwithstanding the growing certainty of the unconditional repeal passing the U.S. Congress, that it looks almost as if the worst were over. But more important than all these various features is the position in the United States. The vote of the House of Representatives in favour of repeal by a triumphant majority seems to assure also the adoption of the measure by the Senate, and if wise measures for dealing with the financial position generally and with the currency trouble in particular were devised, an improvement would be caused in American Railroad stocks which would favourably react upon all the other departments. Finally, the position of the Money Market has to be considered, which is closely bound up with the Yankee troubles. The Five per Cent. Bank Rate is attracting gold to this centre, and if it should suffice and if the Bank of France should bear part of the burden of future gold shipments to New York, we may see a rapid improvement in the markets, especially as the speculative account is greatly reduced. This deduction is, however, based on a number of conditions, which have first to be fulfilled, and while considering the outlook distinctly more promising, I do not yet recommend speculative operations. Investment purchases of depreciated securities are most advisable, and it is practically the investor who will turn the position. He has already absorbed very considerable amounts of stocks and is still on the war-path. Should favourable advices come to hand from the United States, we may look for increased activity during the next two accounts, which will also see many of the holiday-makers back again.

Home Rails.

The coal strikes and fears of dear money are the bugbears in the Home Railway market, and as the unfavourable influence of the former has been illustrated by very heavy traffic decreases for the week, especially in the case of the Midland and North-Western Companies, a further fall has taken place, Brums declining 2½, Midlands 1½. Great Western are only ½ down, as the coal strike in Wales seems to be on its last legs. With regard to the strikes in the other districts there is, as yet, no prospect of an early termination, and the lines serving these will lose not only the coal traffic but also that connected with the numerous industries which are dependent upon coal for fuel, and amongst which half-time or total stoppage of work are now being reported. Even should the strikes not extend over a protracted period the Railways will have to suffer a serious diminution of revenue for the current half-year, and it is, therefore, not surprising that prices have given way. At the same time operators should be careful about attempting "Bear" sales, as there is already great scarcity, and there is not, so far, any indication of real stock coming out. Ever progressive, the Great Eastern is using liquid fuel in its engine works and for some of their engines in the present predicament. A sudden fall of 2½ in Great Eastern stock was somewhat surprising unless it be connected with the proposed issue of new capital. The talk about the cholera is exaggerated, and the appearance of isolated cases in Rotterdam and Antwerp so late in the season does not appear to possess any importance. "Saras" have again declined ½ to 23¼, the Sheffield line being likely to suffer a good deal from the indirect effects of the coal strikes. A fall of a point has put the Metropolitan Districts down to 22½, the lowest quotation on record. The very ill-advised operation of a syndicate, who made a large purchase some three months ago, when rumours of an arrangement with the South-Western Company were rife, is responsible for the heavy fall which has of late taken place in this stock. At that time they had to buy out another and more powerful clique, who had been nursing some £200,000 stock, and prices have been dwindling ever since. Brighton "A" are down two points partly on the advance in the Bank-rate and partly on indifferent traffics, but it should not be forgotten that the comparison will from September be with poor returns last year. Dover "A" have dropped as much as 1¾ in sympathy, and the Scotch stocks have also eased off notwithstanding fitful purchases from the North.

Yankee Rails.

A distinct improvement is shown in the New York Bank statement, which indicates the general recovery now taking place in the financial position in the United States. An increase in the reserve of the Associated Banks of 4,578,000 dols. for the week is, of course, a distinct advance in the position, as is also the gradual disappearance of the premium on currency. But the most important question is undoubtedly that of the silver debate at present in progress in Washington. With respect to this, the prospects of unconditional repeal of the Sherman Act are greatly improved, as the House of Representatives have voted repeal by an overwhelming majority of 239 to 110. Under these circumstances the Senate is expected to follow suit, although with a smaller majority. With the repeal of the Sherman Act it may be assumed that the hoarding of currency will come to an end, the more so as, no doubt, measures will be adopted for remedying the currency trouble, which was certainly most extraordinary. It was a wild scramble for the circulating medium, and some of the Wall-street papers seem to be quite proud of the commotion our Yankee cousins have thereby caused in the Old World. Thus we are told by the Wall-street Daily News that "New York had for the time being become absolutely the money centre of the world." I do not know that it is anything to be very proud of to become the centre of the financial disturbance in the world. This is how my Yankee contemporary follows up these remarks:—

> The only standard in this country now appears to be the certified check, and, according to the emergency, anywhere from 1 to 5 per cent. premium is paid for actual money. Small bills command the highest bid—say 4 to 5 per cent., and they sell at 1 to 2 per cent. over gold; gold ranges 1 to 2 per cent. higher than silver, while silver is in demand at 1 to 2 per cent. over certified checks. As long as these conditions exist here, an advance in the rate of discount by the Bank of England cannot possibly prevent such additions to our circulating medium as we are willing to pay for. How extraordinary the demand has been, and how keenly it is felt is shown by the fact that, since the imports of gold began, the Bank of England's discount rate has been advanced twice—a fortnight ago from 2½ to 3 per cent., and yesterday from 3 to 4 per cent. It is not at all surprising that the Old Lady of Threadneedle-street is frightened. Our concern is much more about the capacity of the Bank to meet our demands than of our ability to pay for the yellow metal if it is obtainable.

This certainly is rather tall talk to hold for the organs of a country which has made such egregious mistakes in its currency policy as to upset private and public credit, cause numerous failures, and drive several of its large railway systems into bankruptcy. Investment business appears to have been going on in New York to a very lively tune. Thus we are told that the number of stockholders in Western Union increased about 450 in the first week of August. They all took certificates for not more than 100 shares, and there was a large reduction in the amount held in brokers' names. The Rock Island claims transfers in the first four days of the month of 6,500 shares in fractional lots. The Milwaukee, in the same week transferred stock to 524 new shareholders, the total being about 13,000 shares, averaging only a little more than twenty shares for each name. The New York Central in three months increased its stockholders by 500, Manhattan 356, and Delaware and Hudson 154. On the first day of the opening of the Lake Shore books 307 new names were added to the list, of which 161 were for less than 100 shares. Similar investments have been made in Europe during the last month or two, and one fine day when confidence revives in the States it will probably be found that there is no more stock to be had except at much higher prices. For the week prices of most active stocks are distinctly higher. Atchison shares and bonds are especially strong, the Second Mortgage "A" bonds at 38 being 4 points up. I understand that on the conclusion of a certain operation, which is all but completed, this Company will be found to be on an altogether solid basis, and that the bonds will consequently improve rapidly. With respect to Milwaukees the statement is made that the 2 dols. dividend on the common stock will be duly declared, and this stock is about 3 dols. higher. A persistent attack has been made on Louisville and Nashville, for which the only apparent reason is the falling off in the traffics, which is certainly serious, but should be recovered again on an improvement in the commercial position, which will, no doubt, follow the repeal of the Sherman Act and the greater ease in the Money Market. Most other active stocks, including low-priced securities like Erie and Readings, are also better, and there is every prospect of this movement gathering strength as soon as financial matters in the States assume a more settled appearance. Canadian Pacifics and Grand Trunks have declined and recovered, and will, no doubt, at all events temporarily, follow the movements of the Yankee market. But the outlook for Grand Trunk shareholders, as explained last week, is not promising. The crisis has, moreover, caused very severe losses in Stock Exchange circles in Montreal, and many operators there are reduced to the state of lame ducks, and will, therefore, not be able to give much support to their favourite stocks in the near future.

"Toilet Lanoline" softens, clears, and preserves the skin, and should be used in every household. "Toilet Lanoline" protects the skin from the effects of exposure, and adds to the natural beauty. In collapsible tubes, 6d. and 1s.; in small boxes, 3d., from all chemists and druggists. Wholesale depot, 67, Holborn-viaduct. The genuine bears the trade-mark, "Lanoline."

Foreigners and South Americans.

Inter-bourse securities have shown weakness on the unfavourable monetary outlook, Italians and Spanish suffering most, although a slight recovery is shown at the last. Greeks and Turks, on the other hand, have eased off but slightly. Amongst South Americans, Argentine Government stocks are lower on a rise in the gold premium, but in their case an improvement is anticipated as soon as the disturbed provinces are pacified. A most reassuring feature is undoubtedly the statement that the Argentine Government have arranged to pay the September 1st coupon on the Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Internal Loan of 1886 in gold at the rate of 63 per cent. As this is considerably above the price of the Funding bonds, it shows that the Government intends to act fairly to the bondholders pending the confirmation of the settlement concluded with the Rothschild syndicate. With regard to the latter, it will, of course, be included in the Budget which the new Minister of Finance is to bring in very shortly, and it is hoped that with the adoption by Congress of the settlement, Argentine securities will improve. Some recovery has taken place in Central Argentine Railway stock owing to an increase shown in the last traffic return, the impression prevailing that, with the pacification of the provinces, traffics generally will expand. Mexican Government stocks have improved on the official announcement that the October coupon will be paid in full. What the future will bring must in part depend upon the course of silver; but on the whole prospects are brighter. Peruvian Corporation stocks have been well maintained, and Ecuador bonds have improved on the contradiction by the Fiscal Agent of the Republic of any possible suspension in the service of the Debt. Chilians and Brazilians are steady, and with reference to Guatemala it is reported that remittances towards the payment of the next coupon have been received.

The British Chartered and Other Land Companies.

The leading feature in the South African market has been the collapse of British Chartered of South Africa shares, which have been dealt in as low as 16s. on the aggressive attitude assumed by the Matabele King. Readers of TRUTH will not have been taken by surprise by this development, and those who followed my advice will have greatly benefited. From the time when these shares touched 50s. I have been strongly urging their sale; and as late as a fortnight ago, when the quotation was still 38s. 6d., I asked what would happen to the shares if Lobengula were to determine on a grand attack. I then stated that he might take openly hostile measures any day—and so it has happened. I cannot see how such an attack is to be met by the Chartered Company in its present financial straits, and the British Government of the day will not assuredly pull the chestnuts out of the fire for Mr. Cecil Rhodes at the cost of a very serious colonial war. Under these circumstances grave events will have to be faced, and holders of Chartered shares must be prepared for a complete collapse whenever it may please Lobengula to hurl his warriors against the settlers in Mashonaland. But I protest against the absurdity of marking prices down in the whole South African market merely because there is a breakdown in the outrageous Chartered rig, and I trust that operators will come to their senses and not throw away sound stocks altogether unconnected with Mashonaland. Why, in all conscience, should the prices of Witwatersrand Gold Mining and of Transvaal Land Companies' shares, totally unconnected with Mashonaland and Matabeleland, decline on account of a Matabele rand? It is argued that the same men who are interested in the Chartered Company are also holders of other South African shares, and that their losses in the former compel them to sell the latter. But this, after all, only applies to the reckless speculators in Chartered shares, and not to the investing public, who have, I believe, kept pretty clear of this dangerous gamble—a fact for which I think I am entitled to some credit. So far, at least, Oceana shares have not been affected by the Chartered collapse. As all the Company's land and assets are in the Transvaal, it would, of course, be idiotic to sell Oceanas because the British Chartered Company is in sore trouble. This would be all the more unjustified as advices from the Transvaal concerning railway development are exceptionally promising. A number of new railway concessions are at present being discussed in the Transvaal Volksraad, "Oom Paul" having very sensibly adopted the policy of encouraging a movement which he could not in the long run hope to stop. According to a cablegram from Pretoria, dated August 25, the Volksraad has sanctioned the proposed extension of the Natal Railway system from Charlestown northwards into the Transvaal. It will be remembered that this is the line which is expected to run on its way to Johannesburg within a few miles of the property of the Oceana Transvaal Coal Company, so that the Company's collieries will be in close communication with Johannesburg, and will, therefore, obtain a share in the large consumption of the Witwatersrand Mines, which will be ever increasing owing to the opening up of the deep levels. In view of the large stake held by the Oceana and Oceana Development Companies in the Coal Company, this concession will, of course, prove of great importance to these Companies, altogether apart from the benefits to be derived from the construction of the Silati Railway, which is at present proceeding, and from the granting of other concessions. The shares in various Land Companies connected with or holding shares in the Chartered Company have, of course, declined, especially Exploring and Consolidated Goldfields.

Kaffir, and American, and other Mines.

The ominous news concerning the British Chartered Company has cast a gloom over the South African market, including the Randt Mines. As there is no connection between the two interests, the latter market will, no doubt, shortly shake itself free from the influence of the Matabele troubles, especially if the August crushings were to prove again satisfactory, which is generally assumed. In the meantime, however, a fall of ½ to ¾ has to be recorded in Rietfontein, City and Suburban, and Meyer & Charlton, and of about ¼ in Geldenhuis, New Primrose, Ferreira, &c., the advance in the Bank rate, no doubt, also contributing to the weakness. Intrinsic merit, however, will eventually tell in this matter, and holders of Randt shares generally should stick to their shares in anticipation of a marked recovery, which will come about sooner or later. Advices from the New Primrose Mine continue favourable; fifty new stamps have arrived on the property, and largely increased crushings may be expected as soon as this battery is erected. I also hear that the Kimberley Roodepoorts Mine has started crushing. There has also been a relapse in Diamond Mining shares, De Beers losing ¾, New Jagersfontein ½, the speculative position in these having been affected by the Chartered trouble. Indian Gold Mines have improved, Mysore gaining ⅛-¼; Nundydroog and Champion Reefs, ⅛. Having in a recent issue recommended caution to a correspondent who inquired concerning "The Black Horse Extended Proprietary Syndicate," I have received a communication from the Secretary furnishing some information on this syndicate which he hopes will "satisfy me that the syndicate is an excellent venture." The chief argument advanced is that it is the opinion of Professor Nicholas, F.G.S., that the rich lode of the adjoining Black Horse United Mine will be struck in the "Extended" property. I hope that the Company will be fortunate enough to strike this lode, but so far there is only the opinion of experts as to possible discoveries to go upon, the subscriptions now invited being intended for a considerable extension of prospecting, and especially the following up of the reefs where gold-bearing stone has been discovered. I must consequently leave my readers to judge for themselves. Possibly the rich lode will be struck, but there is also a possibility that it may not be, and assays are not, moreover, given. Taking, therefore, into account the uncertainties of mining, I do not see how I can recommend the investment at the present stage of development. The silver trouble and the gold famine which has been caused by it in the United States are already having the effect of greatly stimulating the gold production in that country. From California the news comes that mines which had not been worked for years are being taken in hand, and in Colorado new gold mines are being started with the help of some of the miners whose occupation at the silver mines is gone, while existing gold mines are being rapidly developed. Thus the Springdale Gold Mining and Milling Company of Denver is, I understand, pushing its operations forward, and is expected, within the next three months, to show a considerable output and begin to pay dividends. The chief product of this mine is gold, although considerable quantities of silver are also obtained from the ore, which is sold to the reduction works. The Manager reports that there is an ample supply of ore, going 1,000 dols. to the ton, available. Caratals have been dealt in at from 9d. to 1s., and advices to hand by mail not only confirm previous statements, but give unmistakable evidence of the value of the property. Mr. Skertchly, the well-known expert now on mines, writes: "While thoroughly believing in the tailings scheme, I have still greater faith in the mine."

My Letter Box.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

Government, &c., Bonds.

I.—Yes, Chilian Five per Cent. bonds of 1892 are a safe investment, and the interest is paid on January 1 and July 1. E. J.—You should hold all the South American Government stocks Nos. 5 to 9 for an improvement. Also hold Cordoba Central (Central Northern Section) Debenture stock (1) and Costa Rica Railway Six per Cent. Debentures (2) for an advance, but with regard to Nos. 2 and 3 you should avail yourself of any further moderate improvement (which is probable at present) to sell out. Both stocks will remain non-dividend paying for the present, and are not, therefore, suitable for investment. C. Woode.—1. The Colonial bonds are a fair investment. The Company No. 2 is reported to be doing well, and there is no reason to sell the Debentures now. Medicus.—Hold the Santa Fé bonds, but do not average yet, until the outlook is clearer. You might buy more Cordoba Central (Central Northern Section) Debenture stock, which is very cheap, and certain to recover. W. F.—The reply appeared in last week's issue, and the documents have been returned. Dublin.—You should hold the Mexican stocks, Nos. 1 and 2, also Peruvian Debentures. Hold also Northern Pacific Preference. An assessment is improbable.

Banks, Trusts, and Financial.

Carlos, St. Vincent.—1. Yes, the National Model Dwellings Company was directed by some of the same clique as the Liberator. You had better write to the secretary for information as to the present outlook. 2. I see no special reason to sell the shares in these stores, which are quoted at about the price named by you. J. C. E.—These are bonds which had become due and are renewed. The position of the Company is improved thereby. W. T. B.—I cannot reply by letter. Had you and your friend read my remarks regularly, he would, doubtless, have sold his shares in the English, Scottish, and Australian Chartered Bank long ago at a much higher price. At present the Bank is reconstructed, and it is advisable to meet the call. Presently the new shares will again be saleable, and then your friend can, if necessary, sell out. S. Mary's.—1. This is a substantial English Life Office, established about forty years. I should not exactly have recommended it in preference to others, but there is no reason for feeling nervous. 2. You should hold the Brewery shares, they will recover again. B. H.—Upon the whole I think you might risk holding the Trust shares, Nos. 1 and 2. Bamfoozled.—I should say that it would be preferable to hold the Debenture Corporation shares, as a recovery is probable. Islander.—Under all the circumstances I should say that a recovery is probable, and that it would be wisest to hold. John.—Yes, these trust shares should recover again, and you had better hold.

Sanitary Surveys.—Fee for inspection and Report in London, 20s.—The Sanitary Engineering Co., 65, Victoria-st., Westminster.

Home Rails.

P. R. O.—I should not advise you to sell Great Western now, as the coal strike in Wales is pretty well over. River.—Do not sell a "Bear" of the "Heavies," stock is too scarce. Mab.—Yes, you had better hold Caledonian for an improvement. Yes, I still look for a rise in the mining shares. Hold.

American and Foreign Rails.

A. P. D.—I have already repeatedly referred to this little game with Mexican Railway Second Prefs., which is being engineered by Mr. Mackusick, of the Universal Stock Exchange. A. B. C.—Yes, if you can lock up these American Rails for a month or two you will do well with them. You should divide the purchase over the stocks Nos. 1-6. Bowler.—It is satisfactory in these times of scarcity of money that the issue has been successful, and it is still hoped that interest will be paid on the Income bonds. Knowledge.—I do not advise purchase of Grand Trunk Second Prefs. American Rails, such as Louisville, Milwaukees, and Atchison Second Mortgage bonds are much better value. Arikea.—The present is an excellent opportunity for buying American Rails for a lock-up, and as you are prepared to do so for six months to the extent of £6,000 to £7,000 you should buy at once. You cannot do better than distribute the money over all the eighteen stocks named by you, with the exception of Nos. 7 and 8 (which are affected by the silver trouble), and 14, which is rather weak-kneed just now. A. H. B.—As you wish doubtless at once to receive full interest, you had better select Atchison "B" Four per Cent. bonds. Aaron.—I replied to your inquiry on July 27 under "American and Foreign Rails." You take an absurd view, considering that there has been a heavy fall all round, no matter what securities you may have held. I referred to Cordoba and Rosario in last week's issue under "Foreigners and South Americans," and if you hold this stock as an investment you will see it rise 20 or 30 per cent. at no distant date. W. E. H.—Missouri, Kansas, and Texas are a good lock up, and are also freely dealt in when at higher prices, but I do not recommend running a speculative purchase just yet. Verax.—Yes, your selection of New York Central shares (1), do. Debentures (2), Illinois Central shares (3), Louisville Four per Cent. United Gold bonds (5), is a good one for the investment of the £3,000, but I do not like Nos. 4 and 6, and should advise instead some of the American Railroad bonds mentioned in last week's issue under "Yankee Rails." P. R., Manchester.—I quite agree with you with respect to Grand Trunks and Canadian Pacifics, but, for all that, I do not advise "Bear" sales, as any improvement in the Yankee market would assist a rise in them. Aberdeen Awa.—You are correct about Grand Trunks. E. J. M.—Yes, Norfolk Prefs. are a good purchase at present prices. No dividend has been paid. I do not like the Automatics. Devon.—Yes, Reading First Income bonds, Ballemew Ohio Capital stock, and Erie Seconds are a good purchase. L. D. S.—You should hold all the shares mentioned, Nos. 1-6. As to No. 7 the answer is yes.

Mining Shares.

W. A. W.—Yes, the shares of the Oceana Transvaal Company are worth buying, and the offices of the Company are at Sun Court, Cornhill, E.C. E. B.—I think the Diamond shares are high enough under present circumstances. I should prefer New Primrose, and I certainly should advise you to buy Caratals. Their price is 9d. to 1s. Of the two foreign bonds named I should prefer Costa Rica "B." Yes, if you can take the shares up, you will be quite right to buy Louisville and Nashville. Inquirer, Birmingham.—1. Jumpers are a fair speculation at present price. 2. With a little patience you will see these shares recover again. Prospects are satisfactory. A. G., South Wales.—Hold Stanhope and Nigel shares, and sell Queen's Birthday. J. S., Liverpool.—The Poorman is a good mine, but I do not care for American Belle, while with regard to the Yankee Girl reconstruction, the present proposal has not received sufficient support, and a fresh scheme with much smaller capital is to be proposed at a special meeting convened. Bolton, Notts.—Have nothing to do with the New Viola reconstruction; it would be throwing good money after bad. Tiro.—Nyassa shares are £1, fully paid. The Baker's Creek dividend has been paid. R. A. H.—You are quite right to buy Caratals, and you could easily buy 300 shares. I have forwarded what you require. Scrutator.—You should hold these Mining shares, but do not buy any more until I advise you. I am watching developments closely. M. A.—1. Yes, I do expect an improvement. 2. I should certainly prefer Buffelsdoorn to the other South African shares mentioned. J. M.—I do not recommend you to sell these shares now, as a recovery is most probable. The commission charged to you is much too high. What you require has been forwarded to you. I have warned my readers so persistently of these Mashonaland enterprises that I am surprised you should have kept these shares. Get out of them as fast as you can.

Industrial Companies.

J. M. Co.—The shares of neither of these Companies are quoted officially on the Stock Exchange, and both are very speculative. Optimist.—A small local concern, the stock of which is not dealt in here. I am sorry not to be able to express any opinion.

Mixed Investments.

Miles.—1. The Eastern Banks must necessarily suffer from the silver trouble. The Bank mentioned by you is one of the best, but I advised investors a year or two ago to clear out in anticipation of what was coming. At the present reduced price it might be advisable to hold. 2. Doubtful, but you had better hold now. 3. Yes, hold. 4. The San Jorge Nitrate Company is doing very well. I do not believe in Government interference with the Nitrate Companies. Hold Nos. 5 and 6. It does not look as if silver would fall to the low level once predicted. The next Mexican Government coupons will be paid. Anxious.—I cannot advise sale of these Trust stocks at present low prices. Hold for a recovery. I do not consider Victoria Inscribed stock so desirable as Queensland or New Zealand, but as you have no very large holding you might await a possible improvement before selling. The Bank named is all right. Dreadnought.—1. I do not think much of the Railway stock, as the line is not progressive, but I suppose this is not the time to sell. The Gas Company should be doing well, but all such American industries are under a cloud just now. Des Cœurs. 1. Impossible to call up more on Kimberley Waterworks, as the £3 liability on the shares represents the guarantee on the Debenture bonds. Prospects are, however, discouraging. 2. There is every prospect of the Sherman Act being repealed, and that would be an event favourable to Yankee Rails. 3. They will recover. Hold until the depression is over. 4. If you are a holder, keep them, but do not buy now. A. G., South Wales. Sell the Messenger shares if you can. Hold the Tram shares. Basha Bazouk. For the investment of your £1,000 to yield 5 per cent. you might, as you propose, select Brighton "A" and National Provincial Bank shares, and add Chilian Five per Cent. 1892 bonds, or some of the American Railroad bonds mentioned in last week's issue. Dame Mary.—I do not care for these South African Debentures. It would be preferable to buy Transvaal Government Five per Cent. Loan at 104. Jersey.—1. Just at present circumstances are not favourable, but the management is good. Hold Nos. 2 and 3. Of the three mines mentioned under No. 4, Balkis are the best. I do not care for the other two. 5. Yes, a thorough change has taken place in the entourage and in the Board of the Caratal Mine. The management is very good. 6. Yes, hold. 7. Doubtful. 8. Yes, hold. You will have seen my remarks of a fortnight ago. 9. I am afraid that this is a very bad bankruptcy, with little prospect of any return; but I have not seen anything published about it. Bath.—1. Certainly hold Milwaukees. On the announcement of the dividend there would be a fresh advance. 2. You should buy Atchison Second Mortgage "A" bonds at 37½, ditto "B" at 40, and amongst the low-priced shares Erie, Ohio and Mississippi, and Readings. 3. Yes, you had better buy more Caratals to average your old holding. 4. What you require has been forwarded to you. 5. I am afraid that this is a very bad failure, and that you will not get much back. You must have seen my repeated warnings about these outside brokers. H. A. B.—I should recommend you to put the money into Brighton "A," Chilian Five per Cent. bonds of 1892, and some of the American Railroad bonds recommended last week under "Yankee Rails." This will give you the desired return.

Various Investments.

The uncertainty concerning the action of the India Council with regard to future allotments of bills on India has been weighing on the price of Rupee Paper, which has dropped to 64¾. Tenders this week were still lower, but no allotment was made, and it is to be hoped that a more spirited policy will be adopted. Silver has fluctuated within narrow limits, and the fact that the growing certainty of the unconditional repeal of the Sherman Act has not, so far, brought about any further collapse in the white metal would appear to sustain the opinion of those who do not look for any further substantial decline. Mexican Railway stocks are the turn firmer on anticipations of better traffics for some time, but it remains to be seen if these will be fulfilled. According to a circular which has been issued by Mr. Edward H. Eldrid, who was formerly for a number of years associated with Messrs. C. de Murrieta & Co., he has acquired the goodwill of the firms C. de Murrieta & Co., and C. de Murrieta & Co., Limited, but without taking over any of the liabilities of either house, and he has, in complete accord with the Messrs. de Murrieta, established in the old offices at Adam's-court a new house under the style of Murrieta & Co. The intention is, of course, to keep together the connection of the old firm. The suspension of the Bank of Commerce, United Railways of the Havana and Regla Warehouses Company is an unpleasant incident connected with the crisis in the United States. The Mortgage bonds have, consequently, fallen heavily, and it is a satisfaction to me that I have invariably discouraged investment in these when applied to for my advice by correspondents, although it is now announced that the next coupon will be paid. One of my readers has addressed a lengthy communication to me concerning the English, Scottish, and Mercantile Investment Trust, from which I am only able to publish the following extract:—

> I know that a Company cannot muzzle you, and therefore to you I address the letter for publication, and at the same time to ask, through your columns, if there is no available remedy for the following, re English, Scottish, and Mercantile Investment Trust: A prospectus was issued by this Company, dated May 18, 1889, asking for £150,000 additional capital, and the names of the Directors given were Lewis H. Isaac, M.P. (Chairman), the Hon. Evelyn Ashley, Viliers F. Dent, R. A. Germaine, T. G. H. Glynn. Was the Company solvent on that date? If so, why, at the meeting held in 1891, was it proposed, but not adopted, to pass the dividend altogether? In 1892 a so called reconstruction scheme was forced through to subdivide the Deferred stock, which was already non dividend paying, and in 1893 shareholders are informed that all the Deferred capital, some £125,000, is absolutely gone, and that only a portion of the Preferred capital can possibly be saved by carefully nursing the securities that are already pledged. All the above-named Directors have resigned, and leave shareholders who have trusted these men with their money to their misery, and with apparently utter callousness to their losses. Have these men the right so to act—attracting capital and trust by their names?

According to the report recently issued, £100,000 has been lost through permanent depreciation in the securities, but this appears to be only a portion of the loss made. At the meeting of shareholders held on the 14th inst. it was stated by the Trustees who have been appointed by the shareholders that the only way of saving anything for the shareholders lay in their ability to protect the assets and realise them from time to time as opportunities occurred. The Chairman gave it as his opinion that, if this were done, it might be possible to pay £2 to £2. 10s. per share on the Preference shares, while the Deferred shares might be considered as of no value. This is, indeed, a monstrous case of collapse of a Trust Company, and the mismanagement for which the former Directors are responsible must have been of an almost unique character. There ought to be some means of fixing the responsibility for some of these shocking losses upon the Directors, and I am surprised that the shareholders have let them off so easy. Another instance of gross mismanagement is that of the Globe Industrial and General Trust, the Directors of which appear to have gone so far as to run speculatively stocks upon which heavy losses have been made. Mr. H. Norman Wilson, of 30, Regent's Park-road, N.W., writes to offer to a reader of TRUTH, who has not the pleasure of his acquaintance, by letter dated August 15, on account of recent very heavy losses, ten Founders' shares (£10 fully paid) in the Alliance Financial Corporation, Limited, at £10. 10s., stating that the nominal price in the financial papers is £22. 10s. per share. I wonder what the real value of these Founders' shares actually is?—Your affectionate uncle, MOSES.

Why not cultivate your hair? Encourage it and strengthen it or, if your hair is grey or white, the natural colour can be restored by a few applications of Mrs. S. A. Allen's World's Hair Restorer.

All Rights Reserved.

QUEER STORY;

CHECKMATING A BLACKMAILER.

"ANY ONE call yesterday while I was out, George?" The speaker was our old friend, Mr. Hydenseke, the private inquiry agent, and the man he addressed was his solitary clerk and factotum.

"No, sir. At least I found this card in the letter-box when I came just now. It must have been left after hours last evening."

Mr. Hydenseke took the pasteboard and looked at it. It bore the inscription, "Major General Bullock, R.A.," and a few words to the effect that he would call again next morning.

"Umph!" reflected Mr. Hydenseke, "Major-General Bullock, who is he? Ah! I think I recollect the name. One of the Directors of that Loan and Mortgage Company which smashed up last month. You can show him in, George, when he comes."

"Very good, sir," and the clerk departed to his box of an office outside.

Mr. Hydenseke set himself to examine some papers in connection with a divorce case which he was working up for a member of the aristocracy, and had been so engaged for about twenty minutes, when General Bullock was announced—a fine soldier-like man, who carried his sixty-five years or so remarkably well. He looked, however, rather anxious and agitated, and appeared so much at a loss how to open up matters that Mr. Hydenseke found it necessary to give him a lift.

"Good morning, General Bullock," he said. "I have not the honour of your acquaintance; but I presume that you have come to consult me on some matter of business."

"That is so. Possibly you know me by name."

Mr. Hydenseke nodded.

"And possibly you also know that I was a Director of the West-end Loan and Mortgage Company, which is now in liquidation."

Mr. Hydenseke nodded again.

"I need not say," the other continued, "that my business is strictly confidential. The truth is—my connection with that Company has drawn me into a serious scrape."

"Ah," remarked the detective, "I see by the papers that the Registrar has been rather down on the Directors. Are proceedings contemplated against them?"

"Against the Chairman and two others," was the reply. "But not, so far, against me. For, beyond the fact that I was fool enough to lend my name to a concern of which I was wholly ignorant, nothing has yet transpired to my detriment."

"Is anything likely to transpire, in the course of further inquiries?" asked Mr. Hydenseke, briskly.

"That is just the point which has brought me to consult you. You are aware, of course, that Sellars, the late Acting-Manager of the Company, made himself scarce before the smash came, leaving behind him evidence enough to implicate him in at least a dozen charges of fraud?"

"Certainly, I am."

"Well, shortly before he bolted, he brought me a certain legal instrument—a deed of transfer is, I believe, its name—which (he told me), besides being signed by himself, had also to be countersigned by two Directors. I knew absolutely nothing of the business matters of the Company, but Sellars assured me it was all right, merely a form, &c., &c.; so I appended my signature, and thought no more about it. I have now discovered that the object of that deed was to perpetrate a fraud of the worst description."

"Ah! that's devilish awkward," commented Mr. Hydenseke; "for I do not see how the whole thing can fail to come out."

"Wait," was the rejoinder. "The transfer in question was, for some reason, never carried through. Whether the other side fought shy of the transaction, or whether Sellars funked it at the last minute, I can't say. At all events, it was not completed. But the instrument is still in existence, and has passed into the hands of an unscrupulous blackguard, who is using it as a means to extort money from me."

"Have you paid him anything?"

"Yes, more than £200 already; but his demands become every time more extortionate."

"Tut—tut. That's a pity," commented Mr. Hydenseke. "Always makes a case look so much blacker against you, if that has to be admitted. You should have left your solicitor to deal with him."

"It would have been wiser, no doubt. But the scoundrel himself deterred me; for, on making his first demand, he told me in his coarse, offensive language that if I set any lawyers upon him, he'd 'bust up the whole blooming show, right away.'"

"Do you know who he is, or how to get hold of this document?" asked the detective.

"No; neither. I suspect he is a confederate of Sellars. But I can say nothing for certain. I only know that by his habit of constantly following me about and accosting me in public places, with his outrageous demands for money, in the most insolent manner, he is making my life a perfect burden to me."

"Has he written you any threatening letters?"

"Not one. He has invariably made his demands by word of mouth."

"Umph!" said Mr. Hydenseke. "Pretty wide awake I have no doubt. And now, General, you wish me to take this gentleman in hand, I presume?"

"Ye-e-s, if you please," answered General Bullock. "At least, I want your assistance—immediately, if possible. Are—are—you engaged this morning?"

"I have nothing on, which is absolutely imperative," answered Mr. Hydenseke, referring to his list of engagements. "Why do you ask?"

"For this reason," the General replied, bending forward and speaking very impressively. "That scoundrel's demands have just reached a decisive point. He has offered (being, he says, in want of a large sum of ready money) to sell me the transfer out-and-out for £1,000 down; and has appointed me to meet him in the Park at eleven this morning, either to settle or decline the purchase."

"And if you decline?" queried Mr. Hydenseke.

"In that case, he threatens that he will sell the document to some enemy of mine, and he knows, worse luck" (added the General, gloomily), "that there is more than one person who would give a round sum for such a piece of evidence against me."

"Do I understand, then, that you desire me to be present at this interview?"

"That is precisely what I do wish," said General Bullock emphatically. "You see, Mr. Hydenseke, with my very scanty knowledge of such villains and their ways, I am more than likely to be overreached. But if you were by I should feel quite safe from that contingency. Besides," the General concluded, "as he is going to bring the document with him, I thought that perhaps it might—er—be possible—er—to—er—er—get it away from him without paying the money at all."

Mr. Hydenseke smiled.

"Rather a difficult feat, I should imagine," he remarked. "A rogue like that is sure to have his wits about him. . . . . And, further, would not the very fact of my presence put the fellow more on his guard, do you not suppose?"

"I have thought of that," answered the General. "And it occurred to me that you might come across me, by chance, while I was talking to him, and pass yourself off as friend of mine—say a fellow-soldier. You have rather a military appearance, Mr. Hydenseke."

"It seems to me," retorted the detective, consulting his watch, "that if the scoundrel is worth twopence in the way of brains, he will scarcely be taken in by so simple a ruse. . . . . However, if you wish me to be present, General, I will come; and as I see that it is more than 10.30 now, we had better, perhaps, make a start of it. I need hardly add that my time is my money."

"Oh, we shall not quarrel on that score," was the prompt reply. "And, look here, Mr. Hydenseke, if you can get hold of that document for me, I will, in addition to your regular fee, give you a couple of hundred down!"

The detective's sharp little eyes sparkled at the offer.

"It might be managed," he said. "It is just possible. But if you wish me to attempt anything of that sort—which, mind you, is a devilish risky proceeding—you must entice the fellow away from the Park. Better get him to come and lunch with you, I should say. Now, if you'll just excuse me a minute, I will get myself ready to accompany you."

So saying, Mr. Hydenseke locked away his papers in his escritoire, and, vanishing into an inner room, soon reappeared in becoming attire, and they walked down into the street together.

The detective's office was in Long Acre. It was decided, therefore, that they should proceed in company as far as the western end of Piccadilly, when General Bullock was to turn up Park-lane and enter the Park by Grosvenor

Rational Dog Feeding. Give wholesome and nutritious food (Spratt's Patent Meat Fibrine Dog Cakes). Do not give tit-bits and dainties because your dog, like a spoilt child, prefers what suits his palate. See that the Dog Cakes are stamped "Spratt's Patent" and a "×," as cheap and innutritious imitations are often substituted for extra profit. Pamphlet on Canine Diseases post free, Spratt's Patent, Limited, Bermondsey, London.

Gate, while Mr. Hydenseke proceeded along Knightsbridge and approached the rendezvous (carefully explained by the General) from that side.

As they walked down Piccadilly, they were so absorbed in conversation that General Bullock actually collided with a lady coming in the opposite direction, to whom, of course, he apologised profusely for his clumsiness. She was a very pretty woman, and Mr. Hydenseke, who had a great taste for female beauty, eyed her appreciatively, remarking to his companion on her good looks after she had passed on. The General fully assented, and cast more than one languishing glance behind him, but without effect, and the two men fell to resuming their interrupted conversation.

When they reached their point of divergence, they stopped a minute or two to settle a few remaining details in their plans, and then separated, as arranged, the General proceeding up Park-lane, and Mr. Hydenseke along Knightsbridge. Passing a Post-office on the way, the detective stepped in, scribbled a few words on a sheet of paper, and despatched the note by an express messenger. Then he proceeded, by a somewhat circuitous route, to the appointed rendezvous.

At that hour of the morning there were few people in the Park, and Mr. Hydenseke's keen eyes soon detected General Bullock engaged in close conversation with a vulgar, over-dressed, little man, whom he rightly surmised to be his blackmailing antagonist.

Agreeably to the scheme which he had finally arranged with the General, he sauntered casually in their direction until he was close up to them, and then appearing to catch sight of his military friend for the first time, he rushed up to him and grasped him warmly by the hand.

"Bullock, by George! I should have known you anywhere, though it is fifteen years since we last met. How d'ye do, old fellow? How d'ye do? By Jove, I am delighted to see you! I only landed at Plymouth last week. Just home from India, you know."

"And I'm equally delighted to see you, Chinley," replied the General, carrying out his part in the piece. "You don't look a day older than you did fifteen years ago. Hanged if you do! The climate of India has not damaged you much, that is quite evident. . . . Look here. You are not engaged this evening, I hope? You must come and dine with me and renew your acquaintance with Mrs. Bullock!"

"Right you are!" affirmed the soi-disant Chinley, with effusive heartiness. "Only too pleased, old man. . . . . But, I say" (pulling a long face, as the General made a half-movement to wish him good-morning), "when you meet an old friend for the first time after fifteen years, you're never going to put him off with about two words—for eight mortal hours. This gentleman" (indicating Bullock's vulgar companion, who had stood scowling rather sulkily at the interruption)—"a friend of yours, Ned?"

Looking decidedly uncomfortable, the General muttered an affirmative.

Chinley at once extended his hand to the stranger.

"Proud to make your acquaintance, sir," he said. "In India we always treat a friend's friend as an old friend already. And I insist, gentlemen, I positively insist, that you both come and celebrate this meeting by cracking a bottle with me."

"Oh, thank you very much, I am sure," answered the General, hastily, "but I am afraid we cannot come now. We——"

"Nay, nay. I will take no denial," interposed Mr. Hydenseke-Chinley, who was assuming, with admirable reality, that obtuse friendliness which cannot see when it is in the way. "I shall be seriously offended if you refuse; I shall, indeed."

General Bullock looked in despair at his companion. But the latter, not perhaps averse to the prospect of gratuitous champagne, and thinking, no doubt, also that this might be the best way to get rid of the persistent Indian, signified his readiness to fall in with the proposal. And the end of it was that the latter gentleman carried them both away bodily to a restaurant in Piccadilly, talking with extreme volubility all the way.

Having ordered a magnum of Bollinger, and a lobster salad into the bargain, Mr. Hydenseke-Chinley distributed them to his guests with no niggard hand, and especially did he ply the General's friend with the nectar-like fluid, until that gentleman, who took very kindly to the liquor, must have had a liberal quart beneath his belt.

General Bullock, who, it is needless to say, never lost sight of the object of all this hospitality, watched Mr. Hydenseke's movements throughout with a latent eagerness which he could scarcely conceal; and the look in his eyes grew painfully anxious when he saw the detective, whose sleight of hand was little less than marvellous, begin cautiously to explore the contents of the other man's pockets. It was while he was occupied with this delicate and difficult task that, finding himself in imminent peril of being "twigged," and wishing to divert his victim's attention completely, he sprang up and rushed to the window, exclaiming, with eager excitement—

"There goes Jack Belcher—by the Lord! I have not seen Jack Belcher for twenty years. Great Scotland, how fat he's grown! . . Jack! Jack! The rogue doesn't hear me. You won't object, gentlemen, to Jack Belcher making one of our party. Excuse me for half a minute. I'll have him in here before you can count ten! An awfully good chap. You remember him, Ned, of course?"

So saying, and without waiting to hear General Bullock's reply, he hurried out into the street; but he did not, strange to say, accost Jack Belcher or any one else. He merely hailed a hansom, and ordered the cabby to drive him, with all speed, to his offices in Long Acre.

He was met at the foot of the stairs by his clerk, to whom he tipped an inquiring wink.

"It's all right, sir," that functionary said. "I had your note in time. The General is here waiting for you now—has been here rather more than an hour, in fact. But I kept him, as you told me."

"That's well," replied Mr. Hydenseke. "I will see him at once; and I shouldn't wonder if I was able to relieve his mind a bit."

He proceeded immediately into his office, and there found a grey-headed stranger pacing up and down the room, with every evidence of uneasiness and agitation.

"Mr. Hydenseke?" he queried, anxiously, as our friend entered.

"The same, General Bullock . . . . I have just been spending an hour or so with a gentleman who has taken upon himself to personate you."

"Personate me?" exclaimed the General, in amazement.

"Yes—you. But just tell me this. Has a strenuous attempt been made this morning to blackmail you for a large sum?"

"Yes," was the reply. "That scoundrel has threatened and bullied me more violently than ever. He swears that he will set the police on me unless he is paid £400 by two o'clock."

"Ah!" commented the detective, complacently. "Just what I surmised. They have evidently been watching your movements lately; they saw you come here last night and drop your card in the letter-box, and they decided to bring off a final coup this morning, before you could see me. For London's getting rather hot for that gang, and they want the dibs to make a bolt with. It was with this object in view that they enticed me away from the office this morning."

Hereupon Mr. Hydenseke detailed as briefly as possible all those particulars of which the reader has been already apprised, the General listening with the greatest interest and wonder.

"As I did not know you by sight," Mr. Hydenseke concluded his narrative, "I was at first deceived. But it happens that I do know Mrs. Bullock by sight; and by the greatest good fortune, we ran up against her in Piccadilly this morning. The way in which my companion looked at her showed me that she was an absolute stranger to him, and I was at once awake. In about two minutes I saw through his game. But the neatest point" (Mr. Hydenseke chuckled and rubbed his hands with huge satisfaction) "has yet to be told. While we were drinking together, and your double was watching my apparent attempts to pick the other chap's pocket, I picked his pocket, ha! ha! ha! and nabbed that deed of transfer under his very nose."

"You have got it, then?" ejaculated the General, very excitedly.

"Yes; here it is," said Mr. Hydenseke, producing it from the breast of his coat. "Your impersonator valued the job at a couple of hundred," he added, meaningly.

"Well, the original shall go one better," rejoined the delighted warrior, in high good-humour. "He'll make it three."

MUSIC.

WANTED, NEW MUSIC FOR PARK BANDS.

NOW that the County Council have organised a complete system of open-air performances during the summer on the Embankment, in the parks, and elsewhere, it is hoped that British composers will be encouraged to add to our very scanty repertory of good wind band music from native pens. The musical adviser of the County Council, well knowing that the musical tastes of the greater public are very much higher than some of our concert entrepreneurs imagine, has endeavoured to improve the programmes of the numerous open-air performances for which he is responsible. He has succeeded in doing so to a considerable extent, but it is perfectly obvious that his efforts are more or less frustrated by the want of original music of a better kind. For many years bandmasters relied chiefly upon French works, but owing largely to the system adopted some little time since of charging petits droits for its performance, French band music is now going out of fashion. Bandmasters therefore depend for novelties mainly upon the various Band Journals published by the successors of the late Richard Smith, by Boosey, Wright & Round, Chappell, Ascherberg, Hawkes, Lafleur, Oertel, Phillips & Page, Rudall Carte, and many others. But so far as original music is concerned, it is practically confined to quick-marches, fantasias, and dances; so that if anything better is wanted it is necessary to have recourse to selections from comic or other operas and "arrangements." Selections from Sir A. Sullivan's comic operas are very popular, the Pageant, from Mr. German's "Henry VIII." music has of late been performed by nearly every brass band of consequence, and during the past year the publications for military bands have included such curious efforts as a transcription of Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony, a pot-pourri of "Lohengrin," and an adaptation for military bands of some of the "Hymns Ancient and Modern." But these things, however excellent they may be, cannot possibly prove so effective as music specially written for military bands by competent men. In France and Belgium, and also to a certain extent in Germany, this branch of composition has long been studied, and the greatest musicians think it by no means derogatory to their art to write music expressly for "the orchestra of the masses." Even Verdi in his younger days composed a good deal of music for brass bands. In England, however, the thing is left to the professional "arrangers" and to a few bandmasters. A young man, fresh from one of the Academies, at once plunges into a full-blown symphony, for a bare hearing of which he has to depend upon the kindness of Mr. August Manns, or he writes a string quartet, which, as English music is practically tabooed at the Monday Popular Concerts, has little chance of a public performance at all; or a grand opera, which is hardly likely to be represented on the stage unless the composer or his friends are willing to pay for it. It never occurs to the young British musician to seek the suffrages of the greater public, and thereby to make his name familiar to thousands who would otherwise never even have heard of it. The older men are in pretty much the same boat, wasting their energies upon big works and complaining that they cannot get a hearing. And all the time music of a high class, composed specially for wind bands, is urgently needed, and would be paid for liberally. Of course, in the writing of music for a military band, other qualifications are needed than would be required for a royalty ditty or a drawing-room show piece; but the thing is knack rather than skill, and it could easily be picked up by qualified men after a little experience. In the north of England there is an even still greater demand for park-band music than in London. In Lancashire and Yorkshire, wind bands abound. Almost every large factory supports one, and the working men, under competent instruction, make very good players. This movement in the manufacturing and mining districts is largely fostered and supported by a system of brass band contests, of which during the summer some hundreds are annually held, often for very valuable prizes, raised partly by subscription, partly by "gate-money." A brass-band contest in Yorkshire will attract thousands of people—almost as many, indeed, as a football match—and the spectators are very keen critics, frequently challenging the verdict of the judges, sometimes in the forcible manner not peculiar to Yorkshire.

Sir Arthur Sullivan proposes to return to town the week after next, in order to take part with Mr. Gilbert in the rehearsals for the new Savoy opera. The choral rehearsals will, I learn, commence on Monday next, and the leading artists will then have their music; the dialogue, in accordance with the Savoy custom, being given out later on. The secret of the story is being well kept, but, I understand, the report that the opera will be a skit on the music-hall craze is devoid of truth. Mr. Gilbert has been at Homburg, but has now returned to Graem's Dyke, that lovely spot at Harrow Weald, from the park gates of which his predecessor, Mr. Leslie, R.A., painted his popular picture. Sir Arthur Sullivan has for the past few months been rusticating at Weybridge, where, besides developing into a first-class rowing and punting man, he has learned to "cycle"—be it said on a bicycle made for one.

Mr. Collins, stage-manager at the opera, has also become a "wet bob," and at Marlow regatta he carried off the prize for the best decorated punt.

At the Promenade Concerts oil has at length been struck with a Wagner programme. The Wagner concert on Thursday attracted the biggest and best audience of the season, and the dose is consequently to be repeated this week. Of course Mr. Cowen could not offer a Richter concert performance of the Meister's music, and the "Tristan" prelude and closing scene, which is one of Richter's battlehorses, was at Covent Garden perhaps the feeblest effort of the evening. The "Siegfried Idyll" went best of all. At the classical concert Mr. Dawson played, and it was amusing to note how, in the absence from town of some of the musical critics, their deputies insisted upon treating the Manchester pianist as a débutant. But perhaps the finest thing of the week was the performance of Mozart's Symphony in E flat, which was listened to by nearly 3,000 people. Mr. Sinkins, indeed, fully appreciates the fact that good music is the best draw at a promenade concert, and a symphony or other classical work is now included in every programme. Nothing, indeed, could be more significant than the manner in which, after the Wagner section of the programme last week, the people cleared out when the dance music began. Mdme. Marie Roze, who has not sung in London for more than a year, made a successful rentrée at the Promenade Concert on Saturday; and next Monday the perennial Mr. Sims Reeves will once more appear.

Although there are persistent rumours that Signor Sonzogno proposes next year to have a London season with one of his travelling opera companies, I do not think it at all likely that he will come here on his own account. The initial difficulty, of course, would be a theatre, for Sir

"TRUTH" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for the Continent, America, and the Colonies (India and China excepted) is 3 months, 7s. 7d.; 6 months, 15s. 2d.; 12 months, £1. 10s. 4d.; and to India and China, 3 months, 8s. 2d.; 6 months, 16s. 4d.; and 12 months, £1. 12s. 6d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the MANAGER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

Harris holds Drury Lane, and his lease of Covent den, which expires next March, will with absolute ainty be renewed. Then again London opera goers k to Covent Garden as an Opera house, and have a lthy distrust for the average Italian singer. In all bability, therefore, Sir A. Harris will produce the best the Sonzogno novelties, which would, of course, suit energetic Milanese publisher just as well. Signor zogno has, I believe, made an offer to Sir Augustus to g an Italian troupe to Covent Garden or Drury Lane t year, but down to date the suggestion has not been pted.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

Y DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—Do you remember Baron Alderson's piteous appeal to a prolix barrister o was cross-examining an atheistic witness interably ?—

Come, sir; do you believe in a future state?" asked this ocate, Alexander, of the witness.
Mr. Alexander, Mr. Alexander," the Baron cried, in pathetic onstrance, "Are you asking this witness his opinion whether shall ever get on to the next case?"

Of this pathetic appeal I was reminded upon trying to d a stupendous tome of six hundred pages, "The tobiography of an Old Passport" (1), written in a style ich reminds you of Milton's description of death :—

The other shape—
If shape it might be called that shape had none
Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb.

Here is a specimen taken at random from this vast ertebrate volume :—

Never so long as we exist shall we forget our first experience foreign town, nor could any better town for first impressions selected on the whole seaboard of the English Channel than twerp, to which we proceeded by sea from the Tower Stairs, ndon, on the first of August by the old Soho steamer, a boat ich, we doubt not, will be recollected by any who travelled n England to Antwerp some fifty years ago, if any such exist; never was a more rough, clumsy, top-heavy looking, though reality seaworthy vessel, which laughed to scorn the misery her passengers, and pitched and tossed and rolled from side side, as if enjoying the catastrophe to which every such pendicular or lateral motion gave rise.

Why shouldn't the whole six hundred pages be a single rgantuan sentence? I'm sure I don't know, and quite e the author couldn't say. In Mr. Barry Pain's Playthings and Parodies" (2), a smart book which I hope m not late in recommending to you, Mr. Rudyard pling's success is humorously traced to his adoption an opposite style to this which, "like a wounded ke" or, rather, sea-serpent, "drags its slow length ng." "Mr. Kipling," he says, "used more full stops n any man before him. Which was genius." But ely these fatuous puns in an amusing paper upon the oes of ladies' novels are unworthy of Mr. Barry Pain.

"And now," I asked, "can you tell me why all you people are ing on gates?" Flinging a handful of gold in my face to show profusion, he replied, "Because those who use us have no le; so we're compelled to sit on gates." "But," I urged, he critics are always sitting on the style of those authors." ndeed," he retorted, contemptuously, "then how do you ount for the critic on the hearth?"

A pun struck out impromptu in conversation may tolerable, or even admirable, but to construct entire paper in order to erect a poor pun on it as a statue upon an appropriate pedestal

) "The Autobiography of an Old Passport." By the Rev. Charles Smith Illustrated. (London: Digby, Long, & Co.)
) "Plaything and Parodies." By Barry Pain. (London: Cassell & Co.)
) "Donald Marcy." A Novel. By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps. (London: liam Heinemann.)
) "Told by the Colonel. By W. L. Alden. Illustrations by Richard Jack Hal Hurst. (London: McClure & Co.)
) "The Great Peril," and "How it was Averted." By W. Laird Clowes. rinted from Black and White. (London: Offices of Black and White.)
) "Tavistock Tales." By Several Writers. (London: George Isbister.)
) "Mrs. Falchion." A Novel. By Gilbert Parker. 2 vols. (London: hmen & Co.)

Is as silly as what is architecturally known as a "folly." Nevertheless the description of the lady novelist's hero is entertaining and true. Read, for instance, Miss Elizabeth Stuart Phelps' "Donald Marcy" (3) and see what portentous creatures she has evolved out of her womanly consciousness as students of Harle University. Such a student upon his first going a green horn to India is, I think, called a Griffin; and this heraldic creature with the wings of an angel and the body of a beast fairly symbolises Miss Phelps' Harle heroes. The arch hero, Donald, with his lovely curls and lily white hands, is described by the author of "The Gates Ajar" as "looking like a fashionable angel." Yet anything more dastardly and diabolical than this young gentleman's "hazing" of Lee Calhoon I have seldom read; while his accomplices in the brutal outrage show themselves but girls in trousers on the first alarm. But the most terrible thing in the book is its humour, supplied by an Irish policeman in the invariable form of bulls of this machine-made order: "It's that dark, they might murther the President foreninst my eyes, and I shouldn't see him livin' till he lay dead before 'em." "Begorra, it's a corrups! But, be jabers! it's a live corrups!" You get at last to dread Jerry McCarty's humorous appearances as you would dread the infallible sign of an approaching Scotch mist. The author of "The Gates Ajar" must be a veteran writer by this, yet, if "Donald Marcy" had been published anonymously it would have been unanimously laughed at by the critics as the unpromising production of a girl in her 'teens. I suppose there is something irresistibly humorous in another American importation, "Told by the Colonel" (4), but only children and Americans, I think, could appreciate much of it. Perhaps it is too exquisitely subtle for my apprehension. Can you see anything singularly and subtly humorous in the idea—even as a parable of the result of Home Rule—of the transposition of a monkey and an organ-grinder? The monkey grinds while the grinder collects, and is checked by the simian holder of the chain and whipped mercilessly for any remissness. Or, again, is the idea of a kite with a negro lashed to it, coming down into a religious camp-meeting, frightening the congregation and damaging the clergy, irresistibly funny? The whole point of the jest lies in the congregation's taking the descending negro for an angel, while the clergy took him for the devil, and in the tail of the kite damaging the eye of the Rev. Hannibal Blue, and hitting the Rev. Julius Cæsar Washington on the side of the head. I should never have thought that a rough and primitive vintage of this sort was worth bottling and importing, but there may be ingenuous English palates, or dura messorum ilia, that can relish it. At least the illustrations are clever and amusing. Perhaps the happiest part of the "Great Peril" (5) are its really admirable illustrations; but the sketch or skit itself is admirable also up to the bathos of the dénouement. You are thoroughly and almost excitedly interested in Mr. Hiram Y. Hancock's political secret, which was to put under the absolute control of an American Company, the United Kingdom and the British Empire, "together with palaces, government buildings, fortresses, harbours, castles, cathedrals, historic ruins, museums, gasworks, a state church in working order, vast plots of real estates, hitherto the property of the British Crown, schools, universities, colleges, mines, canals; the whole forming an unrivalled security for the investor." But your very interest in the enterprise is the means and the measure of your disappointment when you discover the secret to be a piece of sticking-plaster slipped into the lining of the hat, which robs the wearer of his will-power. Surely the ingenuity abundantly shown in leading up to this dénouement was adequate to devising a less mechanical and grotesque recipe of Empire. There is, besides, the glaring improbability that the wife—through whom, of course, the secret is divulged, to the conspirators' destruction—was not the first to be plastered by her husband. What husband,

CHINA AND GLASS. — Messrs. GOODE, Artists and Designers solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

> Who had the power and skill
> To stem the torrent of a woman's will, would hesitate to use it? And what conspirator would trust a woman with his head unsecured, when he could make sure of its remaining on his shoulders by plastering her forehead while she slept? The best, perhaps, of "Tavistock Tales" (6)—not a brilliant collection—is by Mr. Gilbert Parker, whose "Pierre and his People" you liked, I remember, and whose latest and most ambitious effort, "Mrs. Falchion" (7), you will enjoy still more. It is really a novel of much power and promise, weak comparatively in plot, but full of vitality and vigour in its character drawing.—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, very sincerely yours,

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—Have you heard that there is some notion of reviving ringlets again? What do you think of it? How should you like to go through life with half your time in curl-papers? I suppose there are not three girls out of every thousand whose hair curls naturally with sufficient vigour to maintain the spiral twists of ringlets without some additional artificial method of inducing them to do so. I have been looking through some old numbers of Punch since I heard the report, with a view to gathering what sort of aspect we should present to our looking-glasses and the world should the ancient fashion be revived; and the result is far from reassuring. There could not be anything on earth more hideously unbecoming than curl-papers, except, perhaps, the awful oilskin caps in which some ultra strong-minded women are in the habit of bathing. So much for the looking-glass view of ourselves at "hair-curling" time. I suppose that very expression is a survival of the days in the beginning of the century when ringlets and back-hair were in vogue.

As to the curls themselves, they would look odd enough now, though they were probably considered very graceful and charming when eighteen hundred was comparatively young and gay.

I gather, from various bits of satire in Punch, that to have one's hair come out of curl was the one ever-dreaded catastrophe with girls in those days. If they danced too fast their ringlets "drooped." If they got caught in a shower the curls "straightened out" into limpness. You see, this was not merely unbecoming but it gave an absurd look to the be-ringletted ones, which was fatal to romance, and those were the days when the romantic flourished; when girls affected small appetities in public and kept up the deception by means of plentiful meals in private; when they imbibed vinegar in order to make themselves look pale and interesting; and when the accomplishment of "swooning away" at will was carefully cultivated. All this I glean from a few old volumes of Punch; a delightful paper in which the various phases of the English girl, reflected from her as she passes across the century, are left permanently visible for the study of posterity.

I have also heard that "side whiskers" are coming in again for men. Could you fall in love with a man thus adorned? I feel sure that it would be impossible. Can you fancy the Gaiety young man with these hirsute additions to his varied charms? High collars will have to go out if mutton-chop whiskers come in. They would interfere with each other sadly. Nor would they go at all well with the close-cropped hair such as is now affected by our golden youth. The hair would be worn long again, and men would have it curled on occasion, as Mr. Dombey did on his wedding morning, and Major Pendennis every day. What a contrast there is, by the way, between the appearance of a "man about town" in our own day and what it was when our Queen was a girl! He, too, is crystallised in the pages of Punch. We have just been looking at him as he was some forty years ago, and at an 'Arry of a later period depicted upon the knifeboard of an omnibus, and remarking "I wide from Whitechapel to Bayswater, picking pewiwinkles with a pin." We conclude from this that a sort of harmless silliness was the fashion at that time, together with the assumed inability to sound the letter r.

We have just been hunting for a recipe, and amusing ourselves with the extraordinary English of the cookery books. Pronouns appear to be at a premium in the language of the art, so frequently are they economised, even when really necessary. Instead of "wash them in several waters," referring to some vegetable, one recipe has it, "wash in several waters," which, of course, means that the person cooking the dish is to perform the ablutions upon herself. Another delicious sentence runs, "When full, stand on one side." This refers to a dish, but the structure of the sentence points it again at the cook. If literally carried out, some of these recipes would involve considerable hardships. Take, for instance, one that desires the unfortunate operator to "fry in boiling fat till of a light golden colour." Elsewhere she is enjoined to "cook slowly while preparing the sauce," and "when cooked cut off the legs." After this to "stand in the oven till brown" seems comparatively easy; but there are cooks of comfortable proportions who would find it extremely difficult to "squeeze through a tammy" or "pass through a wire sieve." In fact, these sound like some of the Chinese tortures that Mr. James Payn tells us about in "By Proxy." The whole thing is suggestive of that delightfully-worded advertisement of a bottle for babies that appeared in a Canadian newspaper not long ago, and concluded as follows:—"When the baby is done drinking, it must be unscrewed and laid in a cool place under a tap. If the baby does not thrive on fresh milk, it should be boiled." Poor baby!

I have had a letter from our friend "Muss," who is at Harrogate. She is delighted with the effect of the waters on her complexion, and declares that she watches the cheeks of those around her growing whiter and pinker day by day. This is attributed by "Muss" entirely to the sulphur springs, but ought she not, in fairness to the splendid air at that height above the level of the sea, to let it share in her praises? It would be difficult to exaggerate the improvement in colouring that has generally taken place in the thousands of girls, as well as older women, who during the London season became pale and haggard with fatigue, late hours, and want of fresh air. We have already seen some wonderful transformations in this respect. Here by the river, where we are spending a few weeks, there are faces that look five or six years younger than they did as many weeks ago when we saw them in town. Girls who did not dare to wear mauve do so down here, not only with impunity, but with profit to their looks. River dress is not so severe as it was in the days of stiff-fronted shirts, and it is all the more becoming. Frills, when not in excess, suit most figures, and puffed sleeves are often picturesque. I notice that blouses of batiste are in great favour this season, and we see some lovely shades of blue in them. One girl here wears a navy-blue skirt with a sky-blue shirt, and though one cannot admire the half-and-half character of the union of the two shades, the effect upon her is excellent, it cannot be denied. Have you realised what chances there are in the matter of sleeves just now? It is good to have them quite tight to the arms from above the elbows to the wrists, with puffs at the shoulders Or they may be of the double-barrelled variety, with the silk blouse sleeve visible from the elbows and that of the zouave or bolero above it. This sometimes looks very well, as, for instance, on a dark-haired girl here who wears a fawn cloth with blouse and sleeves of turquoise silk, and a torcador jacket of the fawn with sleeves half way down the arms towards the elbows, the blue ones being well cut so as to show the pretty shape of the arms. There are dressmakers who have quite a genius for sleeves, just as there are others who invariably fail in this rather important detail, for much of the character of a gown depends on the sleeves.

COSTUMES FOR SCOTLAND, &c.—Messrs. REDFERN beg to announce that they have designed some very practical Gowns for ladies visiting Scotland, either for Shooting, Travelling, Golfing, &c., to which they invite an inspection.—27, New Bond-street, W.

The evenings are already beginning to grow longer, are they not? In our little settlement down here we all vie with each other in the prettiness of our lamp and candle shades. We live so much in the sight of the public, even at the dinner-hour, that the competition in this matter is quite interesting, and after we ourselves have dined we stroll out and look in at our neighbours' windows to see whether they have outdone our own efforts. We manage to secure a constant variety by using the pretty crêpe paper, which is also useful for splash-screens in bedrooms and for filling in fireplaces. We have it in a lovely shade of green, which made our rooms look deliciously cool in the hot weather. Our most successful dinner-table was done with rose-petal pink shades and all white flowers in pink vases. We brought down a pair of gilt candelabra, and Charlie has invented a new way of making frames for the shades with wire, which is done in a few moments.

What a difference it makes in the enjoyment of one's dinner when the table is pretty! I feel perfectly certain, too, that it is a tremendous aid to digestion. Perhaps there would never be indigestion any more if people made it a rule to be always cheerful at meals, and to avoid disagreeable subjects while eating. It is a good, wholesome family rule, and one that should be enforced by example as well as precept. But I suppose the Millennium will have to come before the habit becomes general.

Have you noticed what a custom some people make of reciting all the horrors out of the papers for one's benefit? They call this conversation, I believe. I resent it strongly. Why should we dwell on the tragic side of life when doing so can do no possible good? It is not as if we were shirking the disagreeable side of things. We are sure to have our due share, and there is no earthly use in adding to it. Do you not agree with me?

Have you seen or heard of the new Bias Velutina? It is a very good kind of velveteen, cut on the cross in widths varying from a little over an inch to three inches, and suitable for dress trimmings as well as bindings for skirts, in lengths of eighteen yards wound on reels in a continuous strip. The colours are beautiful, including all the fashionable tints, such as sea-blue, écru, mulberry-leaf green, rosine (a glorious pink), aubergine, Maryland (a splendid forest brown), serpent green, and heliotrope. The Velutina is also sold in dress lengths, and the pale tones would be lovely for dinner dresses, especially a pale mauve, a soft pink, and a bright turquoise blue.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin :—

DEAREST MADGE,—Though it might be difficult, if not impossible, for the average mind to decide which of our two great weeks is the greater—Punchestown or the Horse Show week—there is no doubt that on both these occasions we hold very high carnival in honour of the horse. Never was the great annual Show at Ball's Bridge better attended than last week; not a room was unoccupied in any of the hotels in Dublin and the immediate neighbourhood, besides which, hospitality in the way of having visitors was largely exercised by every class in Dublin and the adjoining counties. For four days the Show was open, and crowded on every one of them—a record, surely, which proves us to be second to none in our love of horses, not even to the Arabs or Red Indians. The crowds set one moralising on the great cause which had gathered them together—all sorts and conditions of men from all parts of the kingdom. What a ghastly blank life would be for a large section of society supposing for an instant that there was no such animal as the "horse." What would our gilded youth do? Would life without the horse be worth living?

I wonder who was the first man who mounted the first horse. As he sprang on its back, how little he can have suspected the intense importance of the simple action, its momentous consequences, the powerful influence it would ever afterwards exercise on the world. How did the idea of riding occur to him, and why? Was the horse his first selection as a mount, or did he to begin with have a tentative round of other animals? This is all very ancient history, however; you, no doubt, would rather hear of the way in which we honoured the horse in his present position than trouble to inquire how he got into it.

At the beginning of the week there was a break in the beautiful weather, just to prove to us that the teachings of philosophy on the uncertainty of things in general are correct. Wednesday, like life itself, was mixed good and evil, with, perhaps, a preponderance of the latter—intervals of sunshine, with heavy showers. Such a scene of waterproofs and umbrellas as the enclosure presented at times! Worst of all was the mud. What havoc it wrought with costumes and dainty shoes! One cannot look smart, no matter in what preservation the headdress and bodice remain, if one's skirt has a deep band of mud round it. And then how it changes one's whole aspect to be conscious of defects in one's toilet. In fact, no woman looks perfectly well dressed unless she have at the same time the consciousness of being so. Thursday, however, brought us back to that satisfaction with ourselves which usually entails satisfaction with all things else as well. The sun shone out, the mud had vanished as if by magic, and toilets of every sort and degree of magnificence revealed themselves unveiled by wraps. It is peculiar to this particular festivity to wear toilets of many types and varieties. Costumes of silk, muslin, crépon, alternate with those of drill, holland, and homely tweed. There is the horsey woman, generally tailor made, and the yachting woman, what one might call sailor made, in serge suit, tan boots, and even the simplicity of the untrimmed sailor's hat. With all costumes bonnets were conspicuously absent, and in innumerable cases the size of the hats was more remarkable than their becomingness. How picturesque, however, big hats can be, especially when black and feathered; but the faces beneath them must at least have the beauty of youth.

Lord Houghton did not have a party for the week to stay with him, except a family one, consisting of Sir G. and Lady Fitzgerald and Mrs. Henniker. There is a great run in this age upon new experiences; but, to judge by appearances, it is not such an agreeable as novel experience for a Viceroy to undergo boycotting. One cannot but think that Lord Houghton has not risen superior to the occasion, and, of course, he deliberately weakened his own position by surrounding himself with the household officials of Lord Zetland's régime. With nobody to back one up, it is not easy to make a determined stand against the enemy. Oh, these politics! What business have they to intrude into society, where all ought to meet on the common platform of enjoying themselves in liberty, equality, and fraternity?

The occupants of the Grand Stand who excited most interest were Lord Roberts and his daughter, who are spending the week in Merrion-square with Sir Richard and Lady Sankey. On Wednesday Miss Roberts wore a very pretty costume of pale pink trimmed with handsome embroidery and black velvet, with a large black hat. On Thursday she was in pale green and white—a sweet combination in hot weather. Lord Roberts is a soldierly-looking man, suggesting practical experience in the tented field. No other Richmond was in the field, as Lord Wolseley was not in Dublin for the week, and the Royal Hospital indulged in no hospitality, as it did last year, Lady and Miss Wolseley being also away. Irish society was as fully represented as usual; the families of hereditary legislators, numbering amongst them the Portarlingtons, Bandons, Downshires, Fingalls, Howards, Rathdonnells, Glentworths, &c., Lords Powerscourt, Enniskillen, Clonmel, Howth, Ashtown, Longford, Fermoy, Dunsany were there. We had Serenity, if not absolute Royalty, in the person of Prince Francis of Teck, now one of the Dublin garrison. Of course, there was Lord Morris, faithful as ever to the festivals of his native land, and Sir James Mathew and his pretty daughters, who are spending the summer amongst the picturesque Wicklow Hills.

One hears that not quite so many thousands were present as last year. Where any more would have fitted in it is not easy to imagine, as every place on every stand was taken and the enclosure would have been very uncomfortable if more crowded. For the horses and their quantity and quality I must refer you to some one other than I if you want information on the subject. Don't you know the difficulty of remembering on such occasions that they have anything to do with horses? In a mind not properly attuned to "horse," human interests have such a dreadful way of asserting themselves and getting a hold on one's thoughts, even to the exclusion of the "noble animal."—Yours ever,

CLARE.

I give you this week three different modes of preparing grouse for table. First mode :—

Pluck, singe, and draw a brace of young grouse. Truss, and put them into a covered stewpan, with a sliced onion and carrot, six pepper-corns, two cloves, a bouquet of herbs, and an ounce of lean ham, or bacon, cut in dice, and two or three tablespoonfuls of salad oil, and fry the birds briskly until they are brown on both sides. Then mix in a dessertspoonful of "Potato Fecule," two good tablespoonfuls of reduced tomato purée and half a pint of good bone stock, stir it till it boils, then rub it through a hair sieve. Return it to the stewpan with the birds, and simmer very slowly until they are done. Before serving, remove the skewers, and divide the birds in halves; arrange them on a bed of dressed spinach, and pour the sauce round them.

This is the second mode :—

Remove the bones from the bodies of a couple of young grouse, leaving the legs whole. Fill them with forcemeat, truss them into shape, and place them in a stewpan with the bones of the birds, a little rough vegetable, herbs, and spices, cover with a buttered paper, moisten with about a pint of bone stock, and braize them for about an hour in a moderate oven. Then remove the skewers and string, cut each bird in halves, glaze them, and serve with brown sauce, which is made from the stock they were braized in, adding a small piece of glaze, half a glass of port wine, a teaspoonful of lemon juice, and a pinch of cayenne pepper. The forcemeat is made by pounding 4 oz. of scraped veal, with 6 oz. of slightly-fried fowls' livers, until it is a pulp, then adding 4 oz. of scraped fat bacon and 1 oz. of butter. Pound again until it is thoroughly mixed, add one egg, season plentifully with salt and pepper, and rub it through a wire sieve.

The third method is excellent for grouse that are too old for roasting. They make a superior dish of crêmes:—

Remove all the meat from the breasts and thighs of two old birds. Pound it thoroughly, add half its quantity of panada and 2 oz. of butter, pound again, then add one whole egg, a pinch of cayenne pepper and salt to taste; work it with the pestle until it is thoroughly amalgamated, then rub it through a wire sieve. Now work it with a wooden spoon in a basin, adding a gill of double cream at intervals. Decorate the bottoms of seven or eight buttered dariol moulds, with a little chopped truffle, fill them with the forcemeat, and put the remainder into a buttered plain-border mould. Steam them twenty minutes, without allowing them to boil, then turn the border on to a dish, arrange the crêmes in a circle on it, pour some good white sauce round and garnish the centre with any nice vegetable in season. The bones of the grouse make excellent soup, or they may be boiled to make stock for the sauce.

Have you ever tried this way of stewing sole? I have an idea that you would like it.

Skin, trim, and remove the head and tail of a fine Dover sole. Cut the fish into neat slices, and fry of a golden brown colour. Put the whole of the cutlets into a stewpan with an ounce of butter, one sliced shallot, one tuft of parsley, one mushroom, a glass of white wine, pepper and salt, and the picked leaves of a sprig of sweet marjoram. Let all stew gently till the gravy is of a good flavour. Strain off into a clean stew-pan, add to it a glass of champagne, and thicken with a small lump of butter well rolled in cornflour. Let this liquor come to the boil, then lay in the slices of fish for five minutes. Dish up hot, without breaking; squeeze over the whole the juice of a lemon, and garnish with parsley.

This is a new way of dressing cold fowl. It is excellent:—

Cut all the meat from any cold poultry you may have at hand and chop it small. With this mix the same weight of fine breadcrumbs, seasoned with white pepper, salt, the grated rind of a lemon, and a dash of nutmeg. Stir all well together, add a good pinch of isinglass (sufficient to make it set), with enough cream and white wine to moisten. Put the whole into a jug and set it in boiling water to heat. Half fill six small cups with this mixture, and leave it to cool. When cold, fill the cups with aspic made of equal quantities of rich veal stock and champagne, with enough gelatine to make a clear jelly, and tinted with two or three petals of saffron flower. When the moulds are full, place a row of pickled capers around the edge. Turn each mould out on to a cold devilled biscuit and arrange these on a dish with chervil, small cress, tufts of watercress, or parsley.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

MARIANI WINE

This inimitable COCA WINE is an aid to intellectual exertion, and is indispensable to brain-workers and others who suffer from Debility, Exhaustion, Mental Depression, Dyspepsia, Sleeplessness, Voice Fatigue; also to promote Convalescence. Written Testimonials from over 2,000 Physicians. "A powerful rejuvenator and renovator of the vital forces." Sold by Chemists, Grocers, and Stores, or delivered free by Importers, WILCOX & CO. 239, Oxford-st., London. 4s. per bottle, or 45s. dozen. Be sure and ask for MARIANI WINE.

MOURNING FOR IMMEDIATE WEAR.

Messrs. JAY'S

Large and well-assorted STOCK includes a choice and varied selection of COSTUMES, MANTLES, and MILLINERY, suitable for any degree of Mourning, and ready for IMMEDIATE WEAR. Orders to special instructions are executed in a few hours, and Ladies are Waited Upon in any part of the country without any extra charge whatever.

JAY'S,
REGENT STREET, LONDON.

THE MANUFACTURING
GOLDSMITHS' & SILVERSMITHS' COMPANY
Show Rooms—112, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. (Adjoining Stereoscopic Company.)
Supply the Public Direct at Manufacturers' Cash Prices, saving Purchasers from 25 to 50 per cent.

Fine Diamond Half-hoop Rings, from £15 to £200.

Fine Pearl and Diamond Brooch, £8.

SPECIAL NOTICE.
THE
GOLDSMITHS' ALLIANCE LTD.
(A. B. Savory & Sons), late of 11 and 12, Cornhill, E.C., is sold to this Company, and the business is transferred to the above address.

Fine Diamond Brooch, £5.

Fine Pearl and Diamond Ring, £18 10s.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE POST FREE.

The Largest and Choicest Stock in the World of Novelties specially prepared for WEDDING & COMPLIMENTARY PRESENTS.

Goods forwarded to the Country on approval.

Fine Pearl and Diamond Border Ring, £23.

Fine Pearl and Diamond Brooch, £5.

Fine Pearl and Diamond Bracelet, £35.

REGISTERED DESIGN
Fine Pearl and Diamond Brooch, £5.

Fine Diamond Cluster Ring, £25

COURT DRESSMAKER. M. E. HUMBLE, ARTISTIC LADIES' TAILOR.
19, CONDUIT STREET, BOND STREET, W.
Respectfully invites inspection of her Collection of EXCLUSIVE AND ORICINAL AUTUMN MODELS IN VISITING AND RECEPTION GOWNS, TAILOR-MADE COSTUMES, COATS, JACKETS, PALETOTS (made and fitted on the premises by highly skilled Tailors), ELEGANT MANTLES, PELISSES, TRAVELLING CLOAKS, &c.
Perfect Fit and Style. A visit respectfully solicited.

CRITERION GRAND HALL.
THIS WEEK
Miss ALICE NICHOLSON, Violinist,
Signor DABIERO, Mandolinist, &c.
And Miss GRANT, Vocalist.
RECHERCHE DINNERS AND SUPPERS
AT 5/- & 7/- 6 to 9.30.
AT 4/- 11 to 12.30.
No Charge for Attendance. Separate Tables. Lift from Grand Vestibule to Grand Hall. Constantly Varied Programme and Musical Novelties.

LORD BYRON'S HEROINE

"Nothing earthly could surpass her,
Save thine incomparable oil, Macassar."
("Don Juan," Canto 1.)

A splendid testimony this of the Poet's high appreciation of the merits of

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL.

His Lordship preserved his fine head of hair by the use of this Oil, and recommended it to all his acquaintances as being the best and safest preserver and beautifier of the Hair. Sold also in a Golden Colour for fair hair. Bottles, 3/6, 7/-, 10/6, equal to four small.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO

is the best and most fragrant preparation for the Teeth. All dentists allow that neither washes nor pastes are as efficacious for polishing the Teeth and keeping them sound and white as a pure and non-gritty tooth-powder; such Rowlands' Odonto has always proved itself.

—— ASK ANYWHERE FOR ROWLANDS' ARTICLES. ——

HOWARD & SONS'

MACHINE-MADE

FURNITURE & FITTINGS

A new BOOK of DESIGNS for

HOUSE DECORATION

Free on Application.

THE ORIGINAL
PARQUET
MANUFACTURERS
AND
HOWARD & SONS,
25, 26, 27, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.;
and Cleveland Works, W.
MAKERS OF FURNITURE DESIGNERS
OF
ATTRACTIVE HOMES.
Specimens at WAREROOMS.

25, 26, and 27, Berners Street, W.

THE NEW PATENT

TRIPLE SPLICED INSTEP HOSE.

NO. 20,778,

For Ladies and Children.

These goods are spliced at the instep, where, in the case of lace-up boots and shoes, stockings first show signs of wear. In the heels and feet there is also a splicing thread more than is found in ordinary goods. Thereby the wearing power is doubled without the slightest clumsiness or discomfort. The improvement is particularly advantageous in the thinnest summer makes of stocking, where the extreme fineness of the yarn makes the ordinary goods very apt to wear out almost immediately.

Made in Cotton, Lisle Thread, Summer and Winter Cashmere, Spun and Pure Silk.

See Reg. Trade Mark "MUSA DYE" on each pair.

To be obtained of all the best Hosiers and Outfitters in the United Kingdom, and

Wholesale only of the Patentees:

DEBENHAM & FREEBODY,
FLETCHER GATE, NOTTINGHAM.

The CLARET of the SEASON.

CHÂTEAU LA MARNIÈRE

(VINTAGE 1888, BLANQUEFORT.)

21s. Cash, delivered. Sample bottle, 2s. by post.

Order through your Wine Merchant or Grocer.

SOLE PROPRIETORS:

ARNOLD, PERRETT, & CO., LIMITED,

WINE MERCHANTS,

7a, Lower Belgrave Street, S.W. & Country Branches.

PRICE LIST OF CHOICE WINES AND SPIRITS POST FREE.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 935.—SEPTEMBER, 1893.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—GLENGARRY AND HIS FAMILY: SOME REMINISCENCES OF A HIGHLAND CHIEF.——GLENGARRY'S DEATH SONG, by Sir Walter Scott. Hitherto unpublished.——THE SOUDAN: A TALK WITH FATHER OHRWALDER.——EARLSCOURT, chaps. XXXII.-XXXIV.——THE GLENS AND THEIR SPEECH, by Moira O'Neill.——RECENT FRENCH NOVELS.——BALANCE OF POWER IN EASTERN ASIA.——WILLIAM DUNBAR, by F. R. Oliphant.——A CRUISE TO THE DUTCHMAN'S CAP, by C. Stein.——SIR EDWARD HAMLEY.——THE NEW TREASON.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

Hatchards, Booksellers, 187, Piccadilly, London.

ALL THE NEW AND STANDARD BOOKS.

Post Orders Promptly Executed. Usual Cash Discounts.

STERILITY IN WOMEN: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. By J. B. RYLEY, M.D., M.R.C.S., London.—A New Illustrated Edition of this work is Now Ready. Price 3s. 6d.; post-free, 3s. 8d. London: HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand.

MR. HELBRONNER, LD.

300 & 302, OXFORD STREET, W.

ECCLESIASTICAL AND DOMESTIC EMBROIDERERS.

Weavers of Dress Silks,

Decorators, Upholsterers, &c.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

GRANT ALLEN'S New Novel, "THE SCALLYWAG," will be Ready in 3 vols., at every Library, on September 5. — And WALTER BESANT'S New Novel, "THE REBEL QUEEN," will be ready, in 3 vols, on SEPTEMBER 15.

History of the Consulate and the Empire of France under Napoleon. By L. A. THIERS. Translated by D. FORBES CAMPBELL and JOHN STEBBING. A New Edition, set in a specially-cast type, with 36 fine Steel Plate Illustrations. Complete in 12 vols. demy 8vo, cloth extra, 12s. each. The FIRST VOLUME is just ready, and the publication will proceed at the rate of one volume a month.
* A Prospectus, with Specimen Page, will be sent upon application.

The Gun-Runner. A Romance of Zululand. By BERTRAM MITFORD. With a Frontispiece by Stanley L. Wood. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.
"Mr. Mitford's South African tales are always interesting; his latest, 'The Gun-Runner,' is positively thrilling. . . The story is one that will be read with breathless interest, and it is, perhaps, the author's most telling piece of work."—Literary World.

Dr. Pascal. By ÉMILE ZOLA. Translated by ERNEST A. VIZETELLY. With an Etched Portrait of the Author. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.
"In 'Dr. Pascal.' . . Zola defines and expounds, in magnificent prose, the stately and pathetic poetry of which will appeal to every imagination, his literary method, his moral aim, his penetrating love of his kind, his large political and social ideas, his belief above all in the three ideals of the modern mind—the search for truth, the rectification, and the glorification of life."—Daily Chronicle.
Also, uniform in size and price.
THE DOWNFALL. By É. ZOLA. | THE DREAM. By É. ZOLA.

Link by Link: Detective Stories. By DICK DONOVAN. Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s., cloth, 2s. 6d.
"Some of the writer's stories are almost worthy of Edgar Poe. . . . If one wants to be kept awake for an hour or two, Dick Donovan's new volume and a pipe are all that is required."—News of the World.

A Trying Patient, &c. By JAMES PAYN, Author of "By Proxy" &c. With a Frontispiece by Stanley L. Wood. Crown 8vo, cloth extra 3s. 6d.

One Traveller Returns. By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY and HENRY HERMAN. A New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

A Dog of Flanders, and other Stories. By OUIDA. With 6 Illustrations by E. H. Garrett (Uniform with the Illustrated Edition of "Bimbi.") Small 4to, cloth extra, 5s.

"To Let," &c. By B. M. CROKER, Author of "Diana Barrington," &c. Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s.; cloth limp, 2s. 6d.

St. Katherine's by the Tower: a Novel. By WALTER BESANT, Author of "All Sorts and Conditions of Men." Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

It is Never too Late to Mend. By CHARLES READE. A New Edition, handsomely printed in medium 8vo, with Portrait cover, price 6d.; cloth limp, 1s.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, Piccadilly, W.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

(TO BE OBTAINED IN TOWN OR COUNTRY.)

I.
By Mrs. Alexander.—FOUND WANTING. 3 vols. At all Libraries.

II.
By Mrs. Robert Jocelyn.—FOR ONE SEASON ONLY. A Sporting Novel. 3 vols. At all Libraries.

III.
By Florence Warden.—A WITCH OF THE HILLS. Third Edition. In picture boards, 2s. At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.

F. V. WHITE & CO., 14, Bedford-street, Strand, W.C.

NEW WORK BY R. L. STEVENSON

Ready September 1, price 6/-

CATRIONA.

A SEQUEL TO "KIDNAPPED."

Being the Further Adventures of David Balfour at Home and Abroad

 Since this work appeared in Serial Form in the pages of one of the Magazines, it has been Revised by the Author.*

OTHER WORKS BY R. L. STEVENSON.

ISLAND NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.
Illustrated by GORDON BROWNE and W. HATHERELL. 6s.

THE WRECKER.
By R. L. STEVENSON and LLOYD OSBOURNE. 6s.

KIDNAPPED. 3s. 6d.

THE MASTER OF BALLANTRAE. 3s. 6d.

THE BLACK ARROW. 3s. 6d.

TREASURE ISLAND. 3s. 6d.

A FOOTNOTE to HISTORY: Eight Years of Trouble in Samoa. 6s.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, Ludgate Hill, London, AND ALL BOOKSELLERS.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION NOW READY.

THE TRANSGRESSION OF TERENCE CLANCY. By HAROLD VALLINGS. Author of "The Quality of Mercy," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.
PERDITA. By Mary F. Mann Author of "One Another's Burdens," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.
"'Perdita' is a tale of considerable dramatic power, which has the additional merit of being told in plain yet vigorous language."—The Scotsman.

NOW READY.
THE BISHOP'S WIFE: A Sketch. By DAYRELL TRELAWNEY. In 1 vol., crown 8vo. 6s.
"The relations of the charming Bishop and his wife are sketched with tenderness and refinement."—Globe.

NOW READY.
MRS. FINCH-BRASSEY. By Mrs. ANDREW DEAN. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.
"'Mrs. Finch-Brassey' is almost daring in the slightness of its plot, but it is careful and humorous study of an odious woman, with several sketches of other characters cleverly indicated."—The World.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street.

NOW READY. PRICE ONE SHILLING. SEPTEMBER, 1893.

THE NEW REVIEW.

EDITED BY ARCHIBALD GROVE.

No. 52.

THE COAL WAR. By SAMUEL WOODS, M.P.
THE POETRY OF JOHN DONNE. By EDMUND GOSSE.
OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS: A DEFENCE OF THEIR METHODS AND MORALS. By the Rev. J. E. C. WELLDON, Head Master of Harrow School.
OPERA IN ENGLAND: SOME NOTES AND REMINISCENCES. By Sir AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
A LAST SCENE. By ALFHILD AGRELL.
THE BOMBAY RIOTS: WHO IS TO BLAME? By Sir WILLIAM WEDDERBURN, Bart., M.P.
SILCHESTER AND ITS STORY. By W. H. ST. JOHN HOPE.
LORD TOLLEMACHE, THE LABOURERS' LORD. By FREDERIC IMPEY.
THE COMÉDIE FRANÇAISE OF TO-DAY. III. By ALBERT D. VANDAM.
A VISIT TO THE MONASTERIES OF CRETE. By RENNELL RODD.

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO., London and New York.

EW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES.

HE COUNTESS RADNA.

By W. E. NORRIS.

In Three volumes.

Scotsman.—"The book is one of good healthy reading, and reveals a fine ad view of human nature."

AS A MAN IS ABLE.

By DOROTHY LEIGHTON.

In Three volumes.

Daily Telegraph.—"An extremely clever book. The literary talent evinced lls for unstinted recognition."

FOURTH THOUSAND.

THE HEAVENLY TWINS.

By SARAH GRAND.

In Three volumes.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE HEAVENLY TWINS."

DEALA. By SARAH GRAND. Fifth Edition, cloth, 6s.

HEINEMANN'S INTERNATIONAL LIBRARY.

THE JEW. By J. I. KRASZEWSKI. Translated from the Polish. With an Introduction by EDMUND GOSSE. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; paper, 2s. 6d.

Morning Leader.—"'The Jew' has the adventurous interest of 'Gil Blas' nd the mockery of 'Don Quixote.'"

FROM WISDOM COURT. By HENRY SETON MERRIMAN and STEPHEN GRAHAM TALLENTYRE. With 30 Illustrations by E. COURBOIN. 3s. 6d.

"The Optimist" in The Sun.—"It is the book to take upon a punt, to carry o the hills, to dream over on a hammock; a holiday book par excellence, of a ort which is not forgotten with the return to work."

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

SEPTEMBER, 1893.

Weariness. By Professor MICHAEL FOSTER.
"Protestant Science" and Christian Belief. By the Rev. Canon KNOX LITTLE.
The Transformation of Japan. By the COUNTESS OF JERSEY.
Father Archangel of Scotland. By R. B. CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM.
The Conduct of Friendship. By SIR HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P.
"La Jeune Belgique." By WILLIAM SHARP.
The Malay Peninsular. (With a Map.) By ALFRED KEYSER.
A New Stage Doctrine. By HAMILTON AIDÉ.
A Question of Taste. By E. F. BENSON (Author of "Dodo.")
Coaching. By L'AIGLE COLE.
American Life through English Spectacles. By A. S. NORTHCOTE.
The Verdict of Rome on "The Happiness in Hell." By the Rev. Father CLARKE, S.J.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LTD.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

SECOND EDITION.
NOW READY.

The Two Lancrofts.

By C. F. KEARY. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

The Prince of India;

or, WHY CONSTANTINOPLE FELL.

2 vols., crown 8vo.

By General LEW WALLACE, Author of "Ben-Hur."

NOTE.—Total sales of "Ben-Hur" over half-a-million.

SECOND EDITION, NOW READY.

THE CRIME OF MAUNSELL GRANCE.

By FREDERIC BRETON. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOTE.—New List of Books free on application

JAMES R. OSGOOD, McILVAINE & CO., 45, Albemarle-street, London.

THE UNITED SERVICE MAGAZINE.

SIXTY-FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.—SEPTEMBER, 1893.

The Siamese Question. — Lord LAMINGTON.
Rulers of India. — By Sir MOUNTSTUART E. GRANT DUFF.
Smokeless Powder. — J. D. DOUGALL.
Naval Efficiency and Army Reform. — Captain C. E. CALLWELL, R.A.
Regimental Histories: History of the 24th Regiment. — Colonel J. F. MAURICE, R.A., C.B.
In the Solomon Islands. — Commander F. W. WYLEY, R.N.
The Protection of our Commerce in War. — Vice-Admiral P. H. COLOMB.
Military Japan. — Lieut.-Colonel E. G. BARROW.
Soldiers' Food. — A REGULAR OFFICER.
The Peace of Europe and Russian Designs. — KARL BLIND.
The Growth of the United States as a Naval Power. — H. LAWRENCE SWINBURNE.

TWO SHILLINGS MONTHLY.

OFFICES—15, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON, W.C.
And at all Railway Stations and Booksellers.

LONDON LIBRARY.

ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

PRESIDENT ..... LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P. — The Very Rev. the DEAN of LLANDAFF.
Sir E. H. BUNBURY, Bart. — Sir HENRY BARKLY, K.C.B.

TRUSTEES.

Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF. — Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart.
Right Hon. Earl of ROSEBERY.

The Library contains 130,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in various languages.

Subscription £3 a year. Life Membership according to Age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country and Ten to Town Members. Reading-room open from Ten to Half-past Six. Catalogue, Fifth Edition, 2 vols. royal 8vo, price 21s.; to Members, 16s.

C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, Secretary and Librarian.

PALL MALL MAGAZINE.

SEPTEMBER NUMBER NOW READY. (EDITED BY LORD FREDERIC HAMILTON, M.P., AND SIR DOUGLAS STRAIGHT.) PRICE ONE SHILLING.

BIMETALLISM: A STUDY.

"THE CASE FOR SILVER." By W. H. GRENFELL, Esq., Ex-M.P. for Hereford.
"THE CASE FOR GOLD." By WILLIAM WALDORF ASTOR.
By SIR F. LEIGHTON, Bart., P.R.A., Engraved by BISCOMBE GARDNER.

OTHER CONTENTS.

DUTCH PEASANT GIRL. Coloured Frontispiece. From an original painting by Miss E. G. COHEN.
THE TRUE LEGEND OF THE ZEPHYR AND THE ROSE. By the COUNTESS OF CORK AND ORRERY. Illustrated by E. M. JESSOP.
THE SERE, THE YELLOW LEAF. Part I. By Madame SARAH GRAND. Illustrated by W. H. MARGETSON.
AT ANCHOR—TAKING IN STORES.
RUSSIAN JEWRY. Part I. By HALL CAINE. With Illustrations drawn from Types of Russian Immigrants at the London Docks by Miss E. COHEN.
AN IMPERIAL CITY. By Sir LEPEL GRIFFIN, K.S.I. With Illustrations by H. BREWER and FRANCIS MASEY.
DICK DENHOLME. By J. KEIGHLEY SNOWDEN. With Illustrations by J. GÜLICH, and a full-page Engraving by BISCOMBE GARDNER.
THE FOLLIES OF FASHION. Part III. By Mrs. PARR. With Illustrations from Dr. Parr's Collection of Old Prints.
ROME IN AMERICA. By RAYMOND BLATHWAYT. Illustrated with portraits of the Roman Hierarchy in America.
"THE CHILDREN'S PLAYGROUND." From an original drawing by ROBERT BARNES, R.I., engraved by J. R. SMITH.
A DUTCH EXTERIOR. By W. L. ALDEN. With Illustrations.
PEOPLE WE HAVE MET. No. 3.—"The Sportsman." From an original drawing by "RAB."
A NEW EXPLOSIVE. By ROBERT BARR. Illustrated by A. RITCHIE.
THE CALL TO DUTY. From an original drawing by G. L. SEYMOUR.
SOCIETY: THE REMNANT. By Mrs. LYNN LINTON.
THE PARTRIDGE. By "A SON OF THE MARSHES." With Illustrations by G. E. LODGE.
CLARINDA'S BEAUTY. By NORMAN GALE. Illustrated by Miss VERA CHRISTIE.
WITHOUT PREJUDICE. By I. ZANGWILL. With Thumb-Nail Sketches by L. BAUMER.
PALL MALL MAGAZINE DRAWING COMPETITION (No. III.). "THE PRINCIPAL INCIDENT OF THE SUMMER HOLIDAYS." As anticipated by (a) Paterfamilias. (b) Materfamilias. (c) Edith (aged Nineteen). (d) Dick (aged Fourteen). By Mr. H. STRATTON, Mr. W. J. URQUHART, and Miss VERA CHRISTIE.

Copies on sale at all Booksellers, Newsagents, and Railway Bookstalls in Great Britain and Ireland. Editorial Offices: 18, Charing Cross-road, W.C.; Publishing Offices—London: GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, Limited, Broadway, Ludgate Hill, E.C.; Manchester: GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, Limited, 16, Jackson's-row; New York: The International News Company; Toronto: The Toronto News Company; Montreal: The Montreal News Company.

A NEW NOVEL BY A NEW WRITER.

Just Published, in 3 vols., Crown 8vo, 31s. 6d. At all Libraries.

THE HEIRLOOM

By T. DUTHIE-LISLE.

MRS. WIGGIN'S LAST SUCCESS.

Second Edition, Crown 8vo, Illustrated, Tastefully Bound, 3s. 6d.

A Cathedral Courtship

And Penelope's English Experiences.

Baron de Book Worms wrote in Punch:—
"There is only one word that will fittingly describe 'A Cathedral Courtship'—IT IS DELIGHTFUL."

Daily News:—"Both stories are idylls. . . . From the first to the last the volume is full of life, humour, and colour."

Athenæum:—"Humour, vivacity, and freshness written on almost every page."

London: GAY & BIRD, KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND,
Publishers and Agents for American Books.

FROM WARD & DOWNEY'S LIST.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

BY J. FOGERTY.

JUANITA. By J. FOGERTY, Author of "Countess Irene," &c. 3 vols. [Now ready.

BY ESMÈ STUART.

BY RIGHT OF SUCCESSION. By ESMÈ STUART. 2 vols.
"Always interesting .....and well worth reading."—Manchester Examiner.
"None of Esmè Stuart's previous works deserve such sincere commendation as 'By Right of Succession.' It unites the best features of purely English domestic fiction to the fruits of an artistic perception which has made the author concentrate her efforts on the development of a limited number of character sketches that have great individuality."—Morning Post.

BY W. CARLTON DAWE.

THE EMU'S HEAD. By W. CARLTON-DAWE. 2 vols. "A clever and well-sustained story with one woman in it, Kitty Logan, drawn with force and finesse rarely expended upon the actors in stirring scenes of adventure and villainy."—World.

AN UNCO STRAVAIG. By COCHRANE MORRIS. With numerous Illustrations by the Author. Crown 8vo, 5s. 6d.
"There is a good deal of boisterous fun in this story of a Highland tour..... Much of it is frankly frivolous and flippant, but there are some amusing stories .....and jokes which are sometimes good and sometimes bad, but generally laughable."—Scotsman.
"Very readable.....There are many comic incidents and several clever sketches of character."—North British Daily Mail.

OLD PROVERBS WITH NEW FACES. By JENNY WREN, Author of "Lazy Thoughts of a Lazy Girl." 1s. [Now ready.

WHEN A WOMAN'S SINGLE: the Humours of a Sedate Profession. By M. EASTWOOD. 1s. [Now ready.

WARD & DOWNEY, 12, York-street, Covent Garden, W.C.

Now Ready. Foolscap 4to, 252 pp., Illustrated, Cloth, Gilt edges. 10s. 6d. net. THE

EARLY DAYS OF MARLBOROUGH COLLEGE;

Or, PUBLIC SCHOOL LIFE BETWEEN FORTY AND FIFTY YEARS AGO. To which is added A Glimpse of Old Haileybury; Patna during the Mutiny; A Sketch of the Natural History of the Riviera; and Life in an Oxfordshire Village.

By EDWARD LOCKWOOD, Indian Civil Service (Retired).
Author of "The Natural History of Monghyr."
"A lively and gossiping description of the School in its infancy."—Morning Post.
"We feel almost tempted to call Mr. Lockwood the Gilbert White of the Riviera."—Publisher's Circular.

SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & CO., Limited.
FARMER & SONS, 225, Edgware road, London.

AUSTRALIA and NEW ZEALAND. - NEW FAST PASSENGER ROUTE, via Vancouver, by fastest Atlantic steamers (any line) to Montreal or New York; thence via Canadian Pacific Railway, taking in the grand scenery of the Rockies, only actual trans-continental line running through trains under one management Atlantic to Pacific. Many optional routes, including Niagara and Chicago. Break of journey allowed.
New steam-ships, 5,000 tons each, of New Zealand and Australasian S.s. Co., largest, fastest, and finest running from American Continent to Australasia, leave Vancouver about as follows:—
S.s. WAIRIMOO ..... September 16th,
S.s. MIOWERA ..... October 16th,
monthly thereafter, calling Honolulu, Brisbane, and Sydney. Electric light, good cuisine, exceptionally large cabins.
For pamphlets and berths apply to PASSENGER DEPT., CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY, 67 and 68 KING WILLIAM STREET, LONDON, E.C.; 7, James-street, Liverpool; 103, Market-street, Manchester; 67, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow; or to JAMES HUDDART, 22, Billiter-street, E.C.

NORWEGIAN YACHTING CRUISES (FORTNIGHTLY) FROM NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.
Shortest route to Norway. Only one night at sea.
By the ALBION STEAMSHIP CO'S (Limd.) Fast and Splendidly-fitted Yachting Steamer
"MIDNIGHT SUN" (Captain MYLNES, R.N.R.), 2,020 tons, 2,500 horse-power.
Fares from 12 Guineas, including a sumptuous table.
NEXT SAILINGS—AUGUST 26; SEPTEMBER 9.
All applications for Berths to be made to the Yachting Steamer "MIDNIGHT SUN." Passenger Office, 4, Lombard-street (Tel. Add., Tourist), Newcastle-on-Tyne. Write for Itineraries.

ESTATES, AUCTIONS, &c.

ALDRIDGE'S.

"THE PRESENT TIMES" COACH HORSES.

On Wednesday next, September 6, Will be SOLD,
(The Property of Mr. W. S. JONES),

20 HORSES,

Which have been working the above COACH during the Season. All warranted quiet in single and double harness. These Horses are an unusually good lot. Catalogue will be forwarded on application to

W. & S. FREEMAN.

On view MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 4.

HYDE PARK AND PORTMAN ESTATES. — Messrs. FREDERICK A. MULLETT, BOOKER, & CO.'S Registers of the Select Furnished and Unfurnished Residences, TO BE LET and SOLD, may be inspected daily at their Auction and Estate Agency Offices, Albion House, Hyde Park-square (the corner of Albion-street), W.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent Gratis. The List includes Private Asylums, &c.—Address, Mr. G. B. STOCKER, 8, Lancaster-place, Strand, W.C.

HOMBURG. — VILLA QUELLENHOF, 91, Kaiser Friedrich Promenade, opposite Park, and close to Springs and new Bath House. With or without board. Terms moderate. Good English references. English spoken.—Address, A. SAUERBREI, Proprietor.

FOR SALE, Splendid SEA-GOING STEAM YACHT.—Great bargain. Ready for cruise. Crew for season. Eight berths, six sofas. Price, £2,350, in easy instalments.—Address, YACHT, care Lee & Nightingale, Liverpool.

TREATMENT OF INEBRIETY.

Dalrymple Home,

Rickmansworth, Herts.

For Gentlemen under the Act and Privately.

TERMS—2 TO 5 GUINEAS.

Apply to—R. WELSH BRANTHWAITE,
Medical Superintendent.

WEST LONDON HOSPITAL, Hammersmith-road, W.—FUNDS urgently REQUIRED for maintenance, and for the much needed Enlargement of the Hospital.

R. J. GILBERT, Secretary-Superintendent.

COALS.—The Marquis of Londonderry supplies SEA-BORNE COAL from his DURHAM COLLIERIES; Londonderry Wallsend, 27s.; Pittington Wallsend, 26s.; Primrose, 25s. 6d.; Seaton Wallsend, 24s. per ton. Cash on delivery.—Seaham Wharf, Nine Elms-lane, Vauxhall.

AEGER

PURE WOOL

FRINGED RUGS

From 15s. 6d. to 42s.

TRAVELLING RUGS, CARRIAGE RUGS, PLAIDS AND WRAPS.

LONDON DEPOTS:—3 and 4, Princes-street, Cavendish-square, W.; 30, Piccadilly, W.; 80, Sloane-street; 456, Strand, W.C.; 42 and 45, Fore-street, E.C.; 85 and 86, Cheapside, E.C.; 153, Fenchurch-street. Brighton: 59, East-street, Leeds: 23, Commercial-street. Aldershot: 13, High-street.

ORIENT COMPANY'S YACHTING CRUISES.
The Steamship "GARONNE," 3,876 tons register, 3,600 h.p. will leave London on the 22nd November, for a 35 days' Cruise,
To MADEIRA, TENERIFFE, WEST INDIES, AZORES, &c.,
Fitted with Electric Light, Electric Bells, Hot and Cold Baths, &c.
Managers { F. Green & Co. / Anderson, Anderson, & Co. } Head Offices, Fenchurch-avenue, London.
For particulars apply to the latter firm, at 5, Fenchurch-avenue, E.C.; or to the West-end Branch Office, 16, Cockspur-street, London, S.W.

AMUSEMENTS.

ADELPHI THEATRE.—A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers.—A New Drama of Real Life, by Henry PETTIT, entitled WOMAN'S REVENGE, Every Evening at 8. Messrs. Charles Warner, Charles Cartwright, Herbert Flemming, Rudge Harding, John Carter, and E. W. Gardiner, Misses Elizabeth Robins, Mary Rorke, F. L. Forster, and Fanny Brough. Box plan at theatre. Telephone 7,040. Open at 7.30.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.—Manager, P. J. HARRIS.—Every Evening, at 8.15, MOROCCO BOUND. John L. Shine and Charles Danby; Misses Violet Cameron and Minnie Palmer. Preceded, at 7.45, by Rox Harley, the inimitable Mimic of Popular Actors. Box office 10 to 10. Doors open 7.30.

ALHAMBRA THEATRE.—Open 7.45.—Two BALLETS, Operatic Music, and Varieties. At 8.40, the New Grand Romantic Ballet, Four Tableaux, entitled FIDELIA. At 10.30, CHICAGO, and Grand Ballet of Nations. Frequent Change of Programme. Telephone 5,065.

THE EMPIRE.—Leicester-square.—Grand Programme.—Two Grand Ballets, Second Edition of ROUND THE TOWN and CATRINA. Unqualified success. Unrivalled VARIETY ENTERTAINMENT. Magnificent Orchestra. Doors open at 7.45. No free list.

LONDON PAVILION.—Grand and Unsurpassed Programme. Dan Leno, Marie Leyton, James Fawn, Bessie Bellwood, Mons. Ganivet, Sisters Macarte, Charles Godfrey, Kate James, Little Chip, Minnie Cunningham, W. Kenway, Florrie Gallimore, Tom Leamore, Jennie Valmore, Charles Ignell, Nellie Navette, Harry Atkinson, Tiny Websters, Evans and Luxmore, Blind Troupe, Flo Hastings, Ada Lundberg, The Leonards, Arthur Rigby, Brothers Horn.—EVERY EVENING. Doors open at 7.30. Admission from 1s. Manager, Mr. EDWARD SWANBOROUGH.

PALACE THEATRE.—Managing Director, Sir AUGUSTUS HARRIS.—FULL LICENCE.—The HANDSOMEST THEATRE in EUROPE. The finest Variety Entertainment in London. Prices from 6d. EVERY EVENING at 8. At 10, A PAL O' ARCHIE'S.

TIVOLI, Strand, London.—Cool and Well Ventilated.—Open EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, and SATURDAY MATINÉE, at 2.30, with STAR PROGRAMME, embracing every Artiste of note now in London.—Manager, Mr. VERNON DOWSETT.

NIAGARA FALLS in WINTER.
Finest Sight and Coolest Place in London.
NIAGARA HALLS, St. James's Park Station.
DAILY, 10 to 10 p.m. Admission 1s. Children 6d.
Tickets, including admission, all Dist. and Met. Ry. Stations.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker-street Station, in connection with all railways. Through bookings at all Metropolitan stations.—Magnificent Group containing Portraits of H.R.H. the Duke of YORK, H.S.H. the Duchess of YORK. Royal Tiger Hunt, H.R.H. the Prince of Wales in the howdah; Juno, the famous war elephant, charging a Tiger. Political Celebrities, Cabinet Ministers past and present. Grand Scenes and Tableaux. Music all day. Refreshment Bars, &c. Chamber of Horrors, Portrait Models of Thomas Neill, Frederick Deeming, Mrs. Pearcey, &c. Admission, 1s.; Children under twelve, 6d. Chamber of Horrors, 6d. Open from 10 to 10.

EARL'S COURT EXHIBITION
OF
GARDENING AND FORESTRY.
THE GARDEN OF LONDON.
OPEN DAILY, 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.
ALL ROADS LEAD TO EARL'S COURT.
BAND of H.M. GRENADIER GUARDS. The EXHIBITION MILITARY BAND, GRAND ORGAN, STRING BAND.
ILLUMINATIONS.—Tens of Thousands of Electric, Gas, and Vauxhall Lights, arranged with regard to colour.
FERNERIES, FOUNTAINS, WATERFALLS.
ADMISSION ONE SHILLING. SEASON TICKETS (Half Price), 10s. 6d., available till End of Season, admitting to the Main Building, Exhibition of Gardening and Forestry, Central and Western Gardens, and to one of 2,000 Free Seats at Captain Boyton's World's Water Show.
CAPTAIN BOYTON'S WORLD'S WATER SHOW, EARL'S COURT.
HALF-MILE CHAMPIONSHIP SWIMMING RACE on SATURDAY NEXT.
TWICE DAILY at 3.30 and 8, RAIN or SHINE.
Admission to Grand Stand 6d. to 5s., and 2,000 free seats.

The ONLY Antiseptic Saline.

SALT REGAL

FOR ALL
Bilious and Nervous Disorders,
SUCH AS
Sick Headache, Constipation,
Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion,
Disordered Liver.

At all Chemists throughout the world, in bottles, 1/6 and 2/9.

Office: 49, ISLINGTON, LIVERPOOL.

FARADAYS'
FITTINGS

Electric Light Works
3 BERNERS ST. W

SCOTTADIE

THE ROYAL SCOTCH WAREHOUSE

115 & 115A REGENT STREET
LONDON W.

For
Coats & Ulsters.
Travelling Cloaks.
Carriage Rugs.
Travelling Wraps.
Shawls. Mauds.
Shetland Shawls.
Shooting Stockings.
Scotch Tweeds & Homespuns for Suits & Gowns

Telegraphic Address—Scott Adie, London

DREW & SONS,
PICCADILLY CIRCUS, LONDON, W.

PATENT "EN ROUTE" TEA BASKET

Packed free of charge on receipt of cheque.

Two-person size, complete, as sketch, with Silver Plated Kettle Regd. Spring Screw Cap, £2. 17s. 6d., or all fittings Silver Plated, £4. 10s.

Four-person size, Plain Metal £4. 14s., in all Silver Plated, £6. 10s.

N.B.—Either of these "En Routes" fitted with Drews' Patent Railway Attachment, lid and fall tray. Two-person size, 7/6; Four-person size, 10/6 extra to above prices.

NOTE.—All "En Routes" are now fitted with Drews' new patent sponge-packed lamp, with entirely new system of burner, specially adapted for travelling purposes, being superior in every way to the old lamp and boiling kettle more quickly. These lamps fit all Drews' baskets and can be had separately. Polished Brass, 5/-. Polished Nickel, 7/6.

£20 TOBACCONISTS COMMENCING. Illd. guide, post-free, "How to open respectably £20 to £1,000." Tobacconists' Outfitting Co., 186A, Euston-rd., Ldn. Mngr. H. MYERS, Est. 1886.

"TRUTH" HOTEL LIST.

BATH.—LANSDOWN GROVE HOTEL.—Desirable residence, in beautifully wooded grounds, 400 feet above sea level, facing south, and protected from north and east. Air dry and bracing. Assembly and Pump Rooms within easy distance. Omnibus free to and from Hot Mineral Baths. Billiards, Tennis Lawn.

BOURNEMOUTH.—NEWLYN'S ROYAL EXETER HOTEL. In a beautifully sheltered position and its own private grounds. Only 100 yards from the lovely Pavilion Gardens, and two minues from the Pier. Accommodation, appointments, and views unsurpasset Excellent cuisine. Table d'hôte at 7 p.m. Omnibus at East Station.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HÔTEL MÉTROPOLE.—On the East Cliff, facing the sea, three minutes' from East Station. The largest, and most magnificent Hotel in Bournemouth. Now open to receive visitors. Inclusive terms from 10s. 6d. per day.
GEORGE ALEXANDER, Manager.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HOTEL MONT DORE.—"The finest Hotel on the South Coast."—L. & S. W. Railway Guide. Adjoining the hotel is a large Winter Garden, containing a covered tennis court, lounge, and a unique Bath Establishment, comprising Turkish, sea-water, pine, and other Baths. For tariff and full particulars, address THE MANAGER.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.
Splendid position facing the sea.
BOARDING TERMS
from 10s. 6d. per day.
According to the position of rooms selected.

BUXTON.—The PEAK THERMAL ESTABLISHMENT. A High-class Hydropathic Hotel. Mineral water and other baths. Resident physician. Electric light. Passenger lift. Magnificent public rooms. Excellent cuisine. Table d'hôte 7 p.m., separate tables. Terms moderate.—Telegrams, "Thermal, Buxton."

CALLANDER & TROSSACHS HYDROPATHIC.—Splendid Drives. Good Fishing. Lawn Tennis. Golf.
Terms from £2 12s. 6d. per week.
Apply to the MANAGER.

CHESTER.—QUEEN RAILWAY HOTEL, connected with the General Station by covered way. Porters in scarlet livery on the platforms attending trains day and night. Billiards. Lifts to all floors. Telegraph office in the Hotel. Telegraphic address, "Queen, Chester." Telephone, No. 27, Chester Exchange. H. T. GOULD, Manager.

FOLKESTONE.—THE LEAS HOTEL, situated in private grounds, adjoining fashionable promenade. Sea views. Redecorated and newly-furnished throughout. Passengers' lift. Certified sanitation. Excellent cuisine. Moderate tariff.

FOLKESTONE.—ROYAL PAVILION HOTEL, facing Sea. 200 Apartments. Near landing-stage for Continent. Large winter garden. Table d'hote at 7 p.m.
G. SPURGEN, Proprietor.

FOLKESTONE.—BATES' HOTEL, West Cliff Gardens, and LONGFORD PRIVATE HOTEL, The Leas. Oldest established and most select Family Hotels in Folkestone. Reduced terms during Winter and Spring months. Pension (new Coffee-room) at Bates' Hotel.—G. L. HART, Proprietor.
Sanitation Certified.

GAIRLOCH HOTEL, LOCH MAREE, ROSS-SHIRE.—This magnificent hotel is situated amidst the finest Highland scenery in the West coast of Scotland. Accommodation for over 200. Good Fishing. Large posting establishment. Swift steamer from Oban every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

GRAND CANARY.—THE MÉTROPOLE.
Newest and best Hotel.
Delightful position, fronting the sea.
Terms most moderate.

LONDON.—QUEEN'S-GATE MANSIONS, South Kensington, S.W. (close to Hyde Park, Albert Hall, and Imperial Institute) with all the advantages of a first-class residential hotel; public dining, drawing, billiard, and smoking rooms; hydraulic lift to every floor; electric light throughout.—Tariff on application to MANAGER.

LONDON.—The COVENT GARDEN HOTEL, Covent-garden.—Most central FAMILY HOTEL, within five minutes' of Law Courts and Somerset House. Hydraulic lift. Quiet rooms. Electric light. Table d'hôte, 6.0 to 8.30 (open to non-residents). Moderate charges. Night porter. Telegrams, "Replete, London," Telephone 783.—M. A. S. BROWNE, Proprietor.

MALVERN.—The Most Charming Luft-Kuhr Ortin England. THE IMPERIAL HOTEL offers every modern comfort, is surrounded by its own grounds, and commands splendid views. Brine (Droitwich) Baths now open for the season.—For tariff, apply to the Lessee and Manager, F. MOERSCHELL.

MATLOCK BATH.—ROYAL HOTEL.—Hydropathic Baths of every description. Medical Man. Healthful situation; extensive grounds, greatly admired. Large swimming bath. Billiards. Dairy farm. Splendid fishing.—Also NEW BATH HOTEL, with extensive grounds, fishing, &c. &c. Terms very moderate. 'Bus meets all trains.—T. TYACK, Proprietor.

NEWQUAY, Cornwall, The Biarritz of England.—ATLANTIC HOTEL, "the finest Hotel in the county." Splendidly situated. Full view of the Atlantic from Trevose Head to St. Ives. Ocean view from every window. Beaches, caverns, and cliff scenery unrivalled. Bracing climate. Bathing, yachting, fishing. Delightful excursions. Magnificent rooms. Strictly moderate charges.

NORWOOD (UPPER).—The QUEEN'S HOTEL, near the Crystal Palace. Specially adapted Suites of Apartments for families and permanent residents. Winter boarding. Terms from Three Guineas. A limited number of single rooms at 2½ guineas.

PORTRUSH (Giant's Causeway), co. Antrim.—NORTHERN COUNTIES HOTEL. Facing the Atlantic. Bracing air, magnificent scenery; tennis; Golf links, the finest in Ireland; surf and deep sea bathing, sea-water baths. Table d'hôte dinner, from 6 to 8 p.m. French cuisine. Charges very moderate. The HOTEL is UNDER RAILWAY MANAGEMENT.

SALISBURY.—The WHITE HART FAMILY HOTEL, nearly opposite the Cathedral. The largest and principal Hotel in the City. Table d'hôte (two hours each meal) at separate tables daily. Carriages for Stonehenge and other places of interest in the neighbourhood at fixed inclusive charges. Tariff on application to H. T. BOWES, Manager.

ST. LEONARD'S-ON-SEA.—The ALEXANDRA HOTEL, Eversfield-place, due south, facing the sea. Hydraulic lift to all floors. Billiard-room. Conservatory. Electric light in all public rooms. Table d'hote at separate tables, at 7.—Under the Management of Mr. and Mrs. PERCY BEER (Late of Bailey's Hotels, London).

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WELLINGTON HOTEL, Mount Ephraim. Under the distinguished patronage of his Grace the late Duke of Wellington, K.G., the leading nobility and gentry, &c. 422 ft. above sea level, south aspect; elegantly furnished; piano in every sitting-room. Cuisine, English and French; Table d'hote, large Dairy Farm.—BRABY, Proprietor.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—ROYAL KENTISH HOTEL.—Largest, best appointed, facing the Common, close to Chalybeate Springs and Parade. Table d'hôte (separate tables). Inclusive terms, 12s. per day. Tariff of MANAGER.

All applications for spaces in this List should be made to the ADVERTISEMENT MANAGER,
"TRUTH" BUILDINGS, CARTERET STREET,
QUEEN ANNE'S GATE, S.W.

THE CROSVENOR HOTEL
BELGRAVIA, LONDON, S.W.
Well known for Wedding Breakfasts and Dinner Parties.
TABLE D'HÔTE OPEN TO NON-RESIDENTS.
Covered Communication to three Railway Stations.
The only Terminus Hotel of the Brighton Railway Company in London.
Electric Light throughout.

BRISTOL HOTEL,
Burlington Gardens, London, W.
(Between Bond street and Regent-street, and close to Piccadilly).
Lighted by Electricity throughout. New Hydraulic Lift to all floors.
THE CHOICEST OF WINES. FRENCH CUISINE OF HIGHEST CHARACTER.
SEPARATE ENTRANCE TO RESTAURANT IN CORK STREET, OPEN TO NON-RESIDENTS.
Luncheons at fixed price of 4s.; Dinners at 10s. 6d. or à la carte.
Private Rooms for Parties of Four or more.
NO SUPPERS.
TELEPHONE No. 3,507.

LANGHAM HOTEL,
PORTLAND-PLACE, LONDON, W.
Situated in the most fashionable, convenient, and healthy locality. Artesian Well Water. Electric Light throughout. Moderate Tariff.
Table d'Hote 6.30 until 8.15.
Under the Management of WALTER GOSDEN.

ST. JAMES'S PARK, S.W.
QUEEN ANNE'S MANSIONS.
(QUEEN ANNE'S GATE, OPPOSITE ST. JAMES'S PARK STATION).
Finest view. Most central position. Near Houses of Parliament, Victoria, and Charing Cross. Suites of Rooms, Furnished or Unfurnished, having all comforts and privacy of home, at moderate outlay compared with expense of keeping house. All servants supplied and catering done by the Management. Rents include attendance, electric light, lifts, hot and cold water, &c.
Address, MANAGER.

GRAND HOTEL, JERSEY.
LARGEST AND BEST APPOINTED HOTEL IN CHANNEL ISLES, AND THE FINEST SITUATION IN JERSEY.
Directly facing the Channel. Best Sands and Safest Sea Bathing opposite the Hotel. Magnificent Public Rooms. Swimming Bath. Tennis Courts, &c.
TABLE D'HÔTE DINNER at 7 p.m. (separate tables) "best in Jersey."
Terms Moderate (inclusive or à la carte).
Telegrams—"Grand, Jersey." SYDNEY ROGERS, Manager & Secretary.

Perfect Quietude. Perfect Rest. Perfect Peace.
The WALTON PARK HOTEL,
Clevedon, Somerset.
(Four Hours from London.)
BILLIARDS. TENNIS.
A City Solicitor writes as follows:—
"When I feel jaded and worn out with the hard work and worries of London life, when the intellect seems clouded, and the temper ruffled at trifles, I run down to Clevedon; there, lying on the rocks by the water side, I can enjoy perfect quietude, perfect rest, and perfect peace; there I can forget the petty worries of everyday life, and believe that life is worth living. With exhilarating air, a cosy hotel, an excellent table, a good bottle of wine, and a kind hostess, I can enjoy what few City men enjoy—the pleasure of existence. I return to London in a few days, a new man, to the wonder of my friends, who know not the secret of my elixir of life."
—— Terms Moderate. ——
WALTON PARK HOTEL, CLEVEDON.

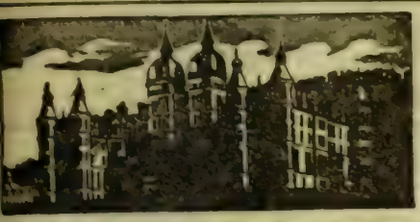
ALBANY HOTEL (ROBERTSON TERRACE), HASTINGS.

Finest position on the whole sea front. Enlarged and superbly furnished. ully lit with Electric Light in every room. Passenger Lift. Dining, Drawing, eading, Writing, Smoking, and Billiard Rooms. Table d'Hote 7 p.m. Moderate ariff. No charge for attendance. C. A. SCHWABE, Manager.

BUXTON, DERBYSHIRE.

THE PALACE HOTEL.

This large and elegantly-appointed high-class Hotel contains upwards of 200 rooms. The hotel occupies the finest position in Buxton, and is surrounded by its own grounds of six acres. Ground-floor sitting-rooms and bed rooms. Magnificent public rooms. American elevator. Table d'hôte at separate tables.
A. CROSS, Manager.



Peebles Hydropathic.

Largest & Finest Hydropathic in Scotland.

Beautifully situated on the River Tweed, 20 miles south of Edinburgh. Over 30 acres of Pleasure Grounds, including Lawn Tennis and Bowling Greens, Golf Course, large Conservatory. Bedrooms are very large and airy. Magnificent scenery. Splendid drives. Terms from £3. 3s. per week.—For rooms apply to the MANAGER.

THE MANAGER, IMPERIAL HOTEL, ABERDEEN (patronised by the Royal Family), begs to call the attention of old customers and intending visitors to the fact that it is through no fault of his that their Porter or Boots is not visible on the arrival of the trains, but because the Palace or Station Hotel Company have monopolised the right to have their porters within the barriers at the station to the exclusion of those of the other hotels in town.

ILFRACOMBE.—The RUNNACLEAVE Private HOTEL. 120 beautifully-appointed rooms. Recreation-hall, to seat 500, with fitted stage; carriage, yacht, tennis, photographic dark room, billiards, and in-door skating rink, free of charge until August. Chef de cuisine. Moderate tariff.

SOUTHPORT.—PALACE HOTEL.—Summer Season. Charming Seaside Family Resort. Extensive grounds. Electric light. Tennis. Golf links. Splendid baths.

ILFRACOMBE.—ILFRACOMBE HOTEL.—Unrivalled sea frontage and open surroundings. Seven lawn-tennis courts. Large swimming bath. New lounge hall. 250 rooms.—Tariff of MANAGER.

LIQUEUR OF THE GRAND CHARTREUSE.

This most excellent Liqueur, the great preventive of Indigestion, and almost certain remedy for sea sickness, can now be had of all Wine Merchants, and at prices much lower than formerly.
Sole Consignee, W. DOYLE, 35, Crutched Friars, London, E.C.

MILD INDIAN CIGARS. OBTAINABLE EVERYWHERE.

BAHADUR

SPÉCIALITÉ:—THICK LEGS & THIN FEET.

A Want Long Felt, met at Last.

GOLF, SHOOTING, and CYCLING

STOCKINGS!

HOMEKNIT.
Free from all Seams.

Made of pure long staple Scotch Wool, full length, broad ribs, double heels and toes, most comfortable in wear, guaranteed to give satisfaction.

Colours: Navy Blue, Black, Light and Dark Grey, Heathers, and Fancy Mixtures.

ALL SIZES—1/9, 2/3, 3/6.

Spécialité:
THICK LEGS and THIN FEET, 2/6, 3/6.

THE HIGHLAND CHECK,
(As Illustration.)
Hand-Knitted, for Cycling, Golf, or Shooting, 3/6 & 4/6
Thick legs and thin feet 5/6
Postage, 3d. per pair; 2 pairs, 4½d.
Terms: Strictly Cash with Order

A. W. GAMAGE,
126, 127, 128, 129, HOLBORN, E.C.

"JAP" CARPETS

We have just received a shipment of Carpets and Rugs of Japanese Manufacture from our Agents in Hiogo, and as we are able to sell them at a very low price, we offer them to our Customers in preference to submitting them to the Wholesale Trade. They are novel and artistic in design and colouring, and of thick pile.

CARPETS.

8 feet long	by 6 feet wide	... ...	28/-	each.
10 „	9 „	... ...	50/-	„
12 „	9 „	... ...	63/-	„

RUGS.

3 feet long	by 1 ft. 6 in. wide	...	2/6	each.
4 „	2 feet wide	... ...	5/-	„
6 „	3 „	... ...	8/6	„

A FEW MIRZAPORE CARPETS, 9 ft. by 6 ft. ... 27/6 each.
KURD RUGS, 5 ft. by 3 ft. ... ... 5/9 „
BANGALORE RUGS, 6 ft. by 3ft. ... 5/- each.
KURD CARPETS, 9 ft. by 4 ft. 6 in. ... 21/- „

Catalogues of all the best Floor Coverings free.

TRELOAR & SONS

LUDGATE HILL, LONDON, E.C.

MAPPIN & WEBB'S PATENT TABLE KNIVES.

SAMPLES & PRICES FREE.

"UNEQUALLED FOR HARD WEAR."

Only London Addresses, 2, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C. (Facing the Mansion House) 158, OXFORD STREET, W.

MANUFACTORY—NORFOLK STREET, SHEFFIELD.

CAMEO CIGARETTES

A PHOTOGRAPH IN EVERY PACKET.

A SEPARATE MOUTHPIECE FOR EACH CIGARETTE.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

£500 REWARD.

NEW CURE FOR RHEUMATISM.

MELANOCA EMBROCATION.

The Great English Oil of PEPPERMINT Cure succeeds where all others fail. See this paper, 27th July, page 174.

Gives almost immediate relief and never fails to cure the very worst cases of Rheumatism, Sciatica, Lumbago, &c., &c.

MELANOCA CURES HEADACHE, NEURALGIA, &c. immediately applied.

Of Chemists, &c., at 1/1½ and 2/9, or post-free of the Proprietors. Wholesale of F. Newberry & Sons, London.

Genuine English Oil of Peppermint, 1/-, 2/-, and 3/- per Bottle. The above reward will be paid if our Oil is not Genuine English, also if the above preparations are not prepared with it.

Full particulars free. Quote No. 25.

THE MELANOCA COMPANY, MITCHAM.

BENGER'S Food.

For Infants, Children, and Invalids.

"Humanly speaking, 'Benger's Food' entirely saved baby's life. He could digest nothing until we began the 'Benger.' He is now rosy and fattening rapidly."—Extract from Private Letter.

GOLD MEDAL AWARDED

INTERNATIONAL HEALTH EXHIBITION.

TINS, 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., 5s., and 10s., OF ALL CHEMISTS, &c.

SIX GOLD MEDALS. Non-Mercurial.

Goddard's Plate Powder

THE BEST and SAFEST article for CLEANING SILVER and ELECTRO PLATE. Sold in Boxes, 1s., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. each, by Grocers, Oilmen, Chemists, &c., everywhere.

ILLUSTRATED PRICE LIST POST FREE.

CARTER 6A, NEW CAVENDISH ST.

PORTLAND PLACE, LONDON, W.

LITERARY MACHINE

For holding lamp, meals, &c. in any position over an easy chair, bed or sofa. Deliciously luxurious. A most useful gift. PRICES from £1.1s.

INVALID COMFORTS

Walking Machine for the lame

Adjustable Couches and Beds, £2.

Exercising Chairs £5.5s.

Reclining Boards £1.1s.

Commodes £1. Leg Rests 10s. 6d.

Easy Chairs £2.10s.

Commode Chairs £2.10s.

Carrying Chairs, £1.

Bed Tables 7s. 6d.

Crutches 10s. 6d.

Folding Couch Chairs 10s. Bed Rests 10s.

BATH CHAIRS

From £1.5s.

SELF-PROPELLING CHAIRS

£2.2s.

Invalid Carriages

Perambulators

Rubber Tyres

From £1.10s.

JOHN CARTER, 6a, New Cavendish St., Portland Place, London, W.

Telgrams—BATH CHAIR, LONDON. ILLUSTRATED PRICE LISTS POST FREE.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER

Prevents the Hair from falling off.

Restores Grey or White Hair to its ORIGINAL COLOUR.

Being delicately perfumed it leaves no unpleasant odour.

IS NOT a dye, and therefore does not stain the skin or even white linen.

Should be in every house where a HAIR RENEWER is needed.

Ask your Chemist or Hairdresser for

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

Price 3s. 6d. per large Bottle.

Prepared only by the

ANGLO-AMERICAN DRUG COMPANY, Ltd.,

93, FARRINGDON ROAD, LONDON, E.C.

FLORILINE

FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH.

IS THE BEST LIQUID DENTIFRICE IN THE WORLD.

Prevents the Decay of Teeth.

Renders the Teeth Pearly White.

Is perfectly Harmless and Delicious to the Taste.

Of all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the World, 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE TOOTH POWDER,

Put up in Glass Jars, price 1s.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

MEMBERS OF THE STOCK EXCHANGE are NOT ALLOWED to ADVERTISE for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than their own principals.

Brokers or Agents who advertise are not in any way connected with the Stock Exchange, or under the control of the Committee.

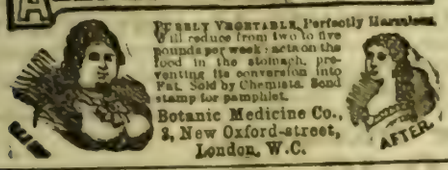
List of Members of the Stock Exchange who act as Stock and Share Brokers may be obtained on application to

FRANCIS LEVIEN,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.

Committee Rooms, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

LONDON AND COUNTY ADVANCE AND DISCOUNT COMPANY, Limited.—Cash advanced from £10 to £500, without preliminary fees or deductions for interest, for short or long periods, repayable by easy instalments, at moderate rates, upon approved security. Bills Discounted. Forms free. Offices, 57 and 58, Chancery lane, W.C.—JOHN STONE, Secretary.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT



PURELY VEGETABLE. Perfectly Harmless. Will reduce from two to five pounds per week; acts on the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into Fat. Sold by Chemists. Send stamp for pamphlet.

Botanic Medicine Co., 3, New Oxford-street, London, W.C.

CORNS! BUNIONS! NAILS! And all Diseases of the Feet Successfully Treated, Without Pain, by Mr. GARDNER, 85, Regent-street, W. Highest surgical testimonials (Sir Wm. Jenner, &c.). Also testimonials from the Prime Minister, Bishop of London, H.R.H. Prince Christian, &c. CORN, BUNION, and Chilblain Ointment absolutely cures gouty and all painful affections of tender feet, soft corns, stiff and enlarged toes and joints, &c. Post free 15 stamps. SKIN TONIC BALSAM gives great PURITY OF COMPLEXION, removes Redness, Roughness; also promotes healthy action and Softness of the Skin. 19 or 33 stamps.

TOO FAT. Dr. GORDON'S

Elegant Pills cure STOUTNESS, rapidly and certainly. State height, weight, and send 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., or 11s. to DR. GORDON, 24, Hart-street, Bloomsbury, London.

ALL FAT PEOPLE

can safely Reduce Weight and cure Corpulency permanently by taking TRILENE TABLETS (Regd.) for a few weeks. They are small, agreeable, harmless, and never fail to IMPROVE both HEALTH and FIGURE without change of Diet. An English Countess writes: "Your Trilene Tablets act admirably." Send 2s. 6d. to THE TRILENE Co., Sole Proprietors,

70, FINSBURY PAVEMENT, LONDON.

THE GREAT QUESTION OF HEALTH. WHAT TO DRINK?

PITKEATHLY TABLE WATER.

As a remedial agent in cases of sluggish liver, plethoric states of the system, chronic affections of the organs of respiration and circulation, gastric derangement and biliousness, it has been pronounced by medical men of high authority as most efficacious.

"I use the Aërated Pitkeathly largely, and value it."—Dr. MATTHEWS DUNCAN.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

London: INGRAM & ROYLE, 52, Farringdon-st., E.C., and at Liverpool.
" WM. BEST & SONS, 22, Henrietta-street, Cavendish-square, W.

Sole Proprietors, REID & DONALD, Perth.

THE LATE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD,
SIR MORELL MACKENZIE,
OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,
MISS EMILY FAITHFUL,
THE LATE GEN. W. T. SHERMAN,

and many other persons of distinction, have testified to the remarkable efficacy of Himrod's Cure for Asthma.

Established nearly a Quarter of a Century.

Prescribed by the Medical Faculty throughout the world. It is used as an Inhalation and without any after bad effects. A free Sample and detailed testimonials free by post. In tins, 4s. 3d. British Depôt—46, Holborn Viaduct, London; also of NEWBERY & SONS, BARCLAY & SONS, LYNCH & CO., J. SANGER & SONS, W. EDWARDS & SON, JOHN THOMPSON, Liverpool, and all wholesale Houses.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

CLARKE'S
WORLD-FAMED
BLOOD MIXTURE

"CLARKE'S BLOOD MIXTURE is entirely "free from any poison "or metallic impregnation, does not contain any injurious "ingredient, and is a "good, safe, and useful "medicine."

ALFRED SWAINE TAYLOR, M.D., F.R.S., Lecturer on Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology.

Warranted to cleanse the Blood from all impurities from WHATEVER cause arising. For Scrofula, Scurvy, Eczema, Skin and Blood Diseases, and Sores of all kinds, its effects are marvellous. It is the only real specific for Gout and Rheumatic Pains, for it removes the CAUSE from the blood and bones. Thousands of testimonials. In bottles, 2s. 9d. and 11s. each, of all Chemists. Sent for 33 or 132 Stamps, by the Proprietors—THE LINCOLN AND MIDLAND COUNTIES DRUG CO., LINCOLN.

BEWARE OF WORTHLESS IMITATIONS.

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES TO PRIVATE INSURERS.

THE IMPERIAL INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED. FIRE. Est. 1803, 1, Old Broad-st.; E.C., & 22, Pall Mall, S.W. Subscribed Capital, £1,200,000. Paid-up, £300,000. Total Funds, £1,000,000. E. COZENS SMITH, Gen. Man.

THE EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY OF THE UNITED STATES.

LONDON OFFICE: 81, CHEAPSIDE, E.C.

ASSETS OVER .. .. £19,500,000.
SURPLUS EXCEEDS .. .. £5,100,000.

This Society originated the Tontine System of Life Assurance, under which the premiums paid form a lucrative investment, and not an expense, affording provision for old age as well as immediate family provision in the event of death.

ABSOLUTE SECURITY. LOW PREMIUMS. LARGE PROFITS.

Before assuring elsewhere, send for Prospectus and Illustrative Pamphlets.

A. MUNKENBECK, Manager for Great Britain and Ireland.

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE

63, Threadneedle-street, London, E.C.
FOUNDED 1710.
THE OLDEST PURELY FIRE OFFICE IN THE WORLD.
SUM INSURED IN 1892,
£391,800,000.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.—Holborn Bars, London.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF LIFE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITY BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
REVERSIONS PURCHASED.

Invested Funds, £16,000,000.

The last Annual Report can be obtained on application to the Secretary.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE COMPANY, Limited
No. 10, ST. SWITHIN'S LANE, LONDON, E.C.
General Accidents. | Personal Injuries.
Railway Accidents. | Death by Accident.
C. HARDING, Manager.

BIRKBECK BANK.—(Estab. 1851). Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane. Two and a-half per cent. interest allowed on deposits, repayable on demand. Two per cent. on current accounts, calculated on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £100.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, can be obtained, post free, on application to FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

CASH ADVANCED PRIVATELY. UNION DEPOSIT BANK.

No. 17, KING WILLIAM ST., Charing Cross, London, W.C.
(ESTABLISHED 1867.)

ADVANCES MADE in TOWN or COUNTRY at a FEW HOURS' NOTICE, Without Public Enquiries, for Short or Long Periods,
From £30 to £5,000,
To Ladies and Gentlemen, Merchants, Farmers, Traders, or any responsible persons upon their
NOTE OF HAND ALONE.

ALL TRANSACTIONS STRICTLY PRIVATE.

Also upon security of Furniture, Stock-in-Trade, Reversions, Deeds, Leases, Life Policies, Legacies, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Farm Stock, &c., without mortgage expenses, from one to 15 years, repayable by easy instalments, or so long as the interest is paid, the capital may remain.

NO SURETIES REQUIRED.

Distance no object. No delay, and no unnecessary expenses charged.
FIRST LETTER OF APPLICATION IMMEDIATELY ATTENDED TO.
A Gentleman sent direct from the Bank to carry out all advances.
Current accounts opened in accordance with the usual practice of other London Banks.
Prospectus gratis, or post free on application. Personal visit preferred.
Interest allowed on deposits, 4½, 5, and 6 per cent.
Apply to the SECRETARY.

JOHN SHAW, STOCK & SHARE DEALER.

HEAD OFFICE:—
WARDROBE CHAMBERS, DOCTORS' COMMONS, LONDON, E.C.

BANKERS:—
CAPITAL AND COUNTIES, Ludgate-hill, Long Acre, Piccadilly, and Brighton Branches.
LONDON AND MIDLAND, Newgate-street and Tooley-street Branches.

DIRECT PRIVATE TELEGRAPH WIRE between LONDON and BRIGHTON Offices.

FULL PARTICULARS of SPECIAL ARRANGEMENTS for DEALING sent post free on application.

COVER SYSTEM.—The loss is limited, the profits are unlimited, and there is such an independence in acting that the principle must and does recommend itself to business men—indeed, it is the only method on which they deal—for speculative accounts.

£5 COMMANDS £500 STOCK.
£10 COMMANDS £1,000 STOCK.
£50 COMMANDS £5,000 STOCK.
£500 COMMANDS £50,000 STOCK, and so on in proportion.

NO OTHER LIABILITY WHATEVER.

JOHN SHAW, STOCK AND SHARE DEALER,
LONDON, BRIGHTON, MANCHESTER, AND DUBLIN.

PLAYER'S NAVY CUT.

BEAUTIFULLY COOL AND SWEET SMOKING.

Sold only in 1-Ounce Packets, and 2, 4, 8-Ounce, and 1-lb. Tins, which keep the Tobacco in fine Smoking condition.

Ask at all Tobacco Sellers, Stores, &c., and take no other.

SMOKERS ARE CAUTIONED AGAINST IMITATIONS.

The GENUINE bears the Trade Mark—"NOTTINGHAM CASTLE"—on every Packet and Tin.

PLAYER'S NAVY CUT CIGARETTES, in Packets containing 12, And Tins of 24, 50, and 100.

Write for the New Patterns.

HENRY PEASE & CO.'S SUCCESSORS

(DARLINGTON)

PURE WOOL SERGES

—(FOR SEASIDE AND AUTUMN WEAR.)—

In Light Weighted Yarns for Ladies' Yachting Costumes, Seaside and Travelling Dresses. Gentlemen's Boating and Tourist Suits. Stouter Yarns for Boys' and Girls' Rough Wear.

The latest productions in TWEEDS, SERGES, and HOMESPUNS, DIAGONALS, BENGALINES, WHIPCORDS, HOP SACK CLOTHS and HABIT CLOTHS, SHOT EFFECTS in FANCY WORSTED SERGES and entirely New Weavings of the WORLD-RENOWNED DARLINGTON GOLD MEDAL MERINOS, CASHMERES, and CROSS-WARP SERGES.

Any Article not approved exchanged within seven days. Carriage Paid on all orders to any railway station in Great Britain, and to Dublin, Belfast, Limerick, Cork, and Waterford.

DRESSMAKING.—Arrangements have been made with Madame Foret, a high-class Dressmaker in the West-end, to make up our materials for customers. While the Style, Fit, and Workmanship will be of the best, the Prices Charged will be very moderate. Self-measurement Forms, Patterns, &c., on application.

HENRY PEASE & CO.'S SUCCESSORS, THE MILLS, DARLINGTON.

PEARS

·ich· diene·

SOAP MAKERS

BY

Special Appointment

To HER MAJESTY

The Queen

and HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS The

Prince of Wales.

OUR PUZZLES.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 757.—PARODY OF MR. RUDYARD KIPLING'S STYLE.

OUTSIDER (real name and address will be published next week) £2 2 0

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Buildings, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on post-cards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand: whilst in the case of new competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 752.

I have not forgotten this competition, but the decision is one that obviously cannot be made in a hurry. Next week, however, I hope to be able to make an announcement on the subject.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 758.

The Prize in this competition has been awarded to M. T. P. The fact that M. T. P.'s answer was made in rhyme, I may add, has in no way influenced my judgment.

PRIZE ANSWER.

The Closure-King should seek the Isle of Man,
And show the House of Keys his lock-jaw plan.
To Darwen, golfer Balfour, turn thy mind,
For there, perchance, the missing links thou'lt find.
Eastward Sir William Harcourt straight should run
To worship, as of yore, the rising sun.
Our Joe, who's 'neath a ban, should surely go
To Margate Sands, where twangs the old banjo.
To some hot clime should Morley hurry off,
Don flannels, and his irksome Sister doff.
Marseilles would be Lord Randolph's best resort—
The Gulf of Lyons should furnish splendid sport.
Tim Healy should repair to famed Gravesend,
For there of Sexton he might make a friend. M. T. P.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 762.

The usual Prize of Two Guineas is offered this week to the competitor who FURNISHES THE QUOTATION FROM SHAKESPEARE, OF NOT MORE THAN FOUR LINES IN LENGTH, WHICH APPARENTLY DEMONSTRATES MOST CLEARLY THAT THE BARD MUST HAVE HAD AN ANTICIPATORY KNOWLEDGE OF THE BICYCLE.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 The real name and the address of AWFUL WARRIOR, winner of Prize No. 756, are G. M. H. PLAYFAIR, Esq., 20, Russell-road, W. Mr. Playfair has most kindly requested me to hand over the amount of his prize, two guineas, to the TRUTH Toy Fund.

It is a curious coincidence, of which I was not aware until it was pointed out to me by Mr. Playfair, that six years ago he was a winner of a similar prize in TRUTH. Then, as now, certain verses had to be written on the model of Praed's "Good Night to the Season," the given subject being "The Jubilee."

MARITZBURG.—Very many thanks for your excellent recipe for a cooling drink.

G. H. DAVIS.—You will see that I have turned your suggestion to account. Let me thank you very much for sending it.

B. M. E. H. M.—Thanks for your letter. Your contention is fair enough, but I hardly think it applies to the case in point.

ADA.—There was no limit to the number of quotations which could be sent in, provided no one of them exceeded four lines in length. It was an omission of mine not to have added, in the first instance, the names of Gani and Newnham to yours as having sent the same quotation.

J. C. ADAM.—Many thanks for your cricket anecdote.

THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 759.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS.—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

COUPLETS AND QUATRAINS CONTAINING A RHYME TO THE WORD "WASP" AS COMMONLY PRONOUNCED.

RECIPTS FOR NATURALIST'S BOTTLE.
Take of Cyanide Potassium,
And of Calcium Metaphosp;
Well mixed secundum artem
To kill butterfly or wasp.
Jonserrette.

Why W A S P spells wasp
The reason it not easy to show:
Perhaps the old root of vespa was "vosp,*
So we turn the "a" sound to "o."
Pyx.

* Judging from analogy, the old Roman "voster," "vostrum," &c., changed into the more recent "vester," "vestrum," &c.

If W A with an S and a P
When rightly pronounced we call "wosp,
'Tis evident then, that to make it agree,
G R A S should be "grosp."
Strip Jack.

Our arbitrary English tongue
Decrees that W A S P is wosp;
But the worm that Cleopatra stung
Is sounded asp, not "osp."
Mordecai.

'Twas not a gospel word he spoke
When punctured by a wosp,
I grieve me much indeed to say
'Twas el without the gosp.
Coqnesigrue.

Pray should we say prosperity, or empasise the "prosp"?
Alas! the thing is getting scarce as any rhyme to wasp.
Tom Nissed.

Had Mr. Pickwick's precious nose
Been stung severely by a wasp,
Sam Weller would, we may suppose,
Have named the noxious insect "vosp."
Eboracum.

When told that b o u g h spelt "bow,"
The Frenchman coughed and said, "Excuse my cow,"
And hearing that my theme was sounded "wosp,"
He gasped and cried, "Ze Ongleesh makes me gosp."
Eboracum.

'Twas God who made a stinging wasp,
Although we know not why;
Yet if we see him in a knosp*
To kill him we shall try.
Cobbett.

* A bud (see Webster).

"I am stung," said Philip, running like a madman,
"by a wasp."
"Gracious goodness!" I responded. "Let me take you to the hosp——"
But before I'd time to finish what I had meant to say,
He had vanished from my sight, and skedaddled clean away.
Stalwart.

Not till syllable-changing shall prosper,
And "prosper" be written "erprosp,"
Will the fierce wasp-destroyer (or wasper)
Write poems in praise of the wasp.
Radstone

Sandy makes wasp in sound to rhyme with asp,
The rasp in raspberry Pat pronounces "rosp";
Their meaning if at first you fail to grasp,
Try with the berry, but not with the wasp.
Marplot.

In June we often see the wasp
Light on the undeveloped knosp
Of tree or flower, destroy the fruit,
And spoil us of our plums—the brute.
Eoforwic.

Lovely is this insect, with its silky sheen and golden gloss. 'P!
See, a breath disturbs it; through the window floats the busy wasp.
Malda.

Rallentando, sospirando (often written rall. and sosp.),
Like the dying breezes sighing sings aloft the golden wasp.
Malda.

There was an old man who got thirsty and hot,
In pursuing a troublesome wasp;
Then he drank of "Kops" ale such a wonderful lot,
Till at length he pronounced the word "Kosp."
Plumeplerre.

The creature which I call a wasp,
It's very indiscreet to grasp.
Authorities pronounce it "wosp,"
But equally they shun its closp.
Jubal.

A BOY'S TRAGEDY.
He said he did not fear a wasp
At all.
They met; and now he lies in hospital.
Jubal.

A Birmingham man he may win your respect,
And his sting be as sharp as the sting of a wasp,
But he can't pronounce "a" in a fashion correct,
For a stamp he calls "stomp" and a clasp he calls "closp."
Ken.

The Cockney, frolicsome and gay,
If he but chance to see a wasp,
As through the fields he takes his way,
Cries, "Crikey! Look at that 'ere vasp."
Almayiva.

Tease wasp
It'll sting,
Quick hosp ital bring.
Stanchion.

In Norway, 'tis true, the insect is blue,
And is called by natives "a rosp,"
But, as a real pest, it comes off second best
With the yellow-bag, or English wasp.
Suo Marte.

If "bedder," "rugger," be the fads
So dear to Oxford undergrads,
Sure I, to find a rhyme to wasp,
May shorten prosper into prosp.
T. Leaves.

Metathesis has changed a name,
And altered wopse to wasp;
Metathesis may do the same,
And alter copse to cosp.
T. Leaves.

"I wish you every happiness, my dear;
Long may you live," he said, "long may you prosp"—
Then stopped, and as he jerked and dodged 'twas clear,
His speech was interrupted by a wasp.
T. Leaves.

Since an unaccented vowel disappears, to rhyme with wasp
Maybe "gossip" in the future will be shortened into "gosp."
T. Leaves.

TRUTH challenges people to find him a line
To a difficult word, and that's "wasp";
Well—take a cos lettuce and then add a pea,
Cock together, and you will have "cosp."
Kia Ora

In amber and black she looks fine,
With diamond necklace and knosp;
If she stings you at times, I opine
'Tis the pain of a waist like a wasp.
Point d'Espoir

My peaches are blooming and fine,
They hang on the wall like a knosp
Of old carvers' art—why repine
If they each have been pierced by a wasp?
Point d'Espoir.

RIP VAN WINKLE.
He raised the wine-cup, rosy red,
Though in it lurked a drowning wasp;
"Here is your vare good health," he said,
"And may you all live long and prosp——"
[The last syllable disappears in the liquor.]
Œdipus Jun

No rhyme, you say, exists for "wasp,"
And yet you ask for one or two.
Confound it all, or rather, "Cosp ette" will do.

Italian? But an English wasp
Must have an English rhyme. If so,
Poor insect, none exists; that's Gosp el truth, I know.
Bara.

The Masses would be asses called, pronouncing gossip as go'sp;
And yet the Classes them surpasses, pronouncing wasp as wosp.
Sol.

I knew a young lady, a native of Glossip,*
Whose waist is so small that she's known as "The Wasp.
Dorothea.

* Glossop.

The preacher began, "Friends, my text from the Gosp——"
He suddenly stopped. He was stung by a wasp.
Dorothea.

"The ninety-ninth chapter of the Gosp——"
[illegible] to St. Mark, he would have said;
But stopped, because a sacrilegious wasp
Sat down on his venerable head.
Tureen.

My name is Anthony Crospe.
My friends should give me money,
I've caught the very last wasp,
And saved their jam and honey.
Dallington.

If bound for rest and change, choose not an inausp icious shore like Dungeness in Kent;
For there you'll meet a winged foe, the wasp,
Ten thousand strong, each one on mischief bent.
Esperanza.

You're asking for a word to rhyme with wasp; well,
Here's the nearest I can find, and this is "gosp el."
Veritas.

AFTER BURNS.

Just now I've ta'en the fit o' rhyme,
An' grip my pen with willing clesp,
My fancy working up sublime—
Ye powers! I've claughted on a wasp.
Dora.

AT K— KIRK, AUGUST 13, 1893.

The text you'll find, my brethren, in the Gosp—
(Further proceedings closured by a wasp.)
Oslek.

Jemmy Johnson was stung by a venomous wasp.
"Oh, take me" (the words were his last) "to the Hosp-
Oslek.

On Sunday last, good parson Burd
Had reached, "Thus endeth the Gosp——"
He didn't say the rest of the word.
On his nose there pitched a wasp.
Jo.

As I walked in the garden wid Jerry
I plucked a most illigant rausp;*
But as I was atin' the berry
I was shtung by a murderin' wasp.
Chaucer Junior.

* Raspberries are called "rausps" in Ulster. See "Glossary of Antrim and Down," published by the English Dialect Society, page 82. (This word is pronounced so as to rhyme exactly with wasp.)

Down south fruit-growers have not much prospect of good crops. There's too much wasp.
M. A. R.

This was my dream: To tame a wasp. Reality
A sting in quittance of my hosp-itality.
Awful Warrior

Six hundred corpses of the dreaded wasp
Lie on my window-sill, and this is Gospel truth; and you who doubt may come and see
The means employed to slay this confrérie.
Vespa.

He drained the mug—then gasped in fright,
"I'm choked, as sure as gosp——"
For even holy words stick tight,
Obstructed by a wasp.
Shepton.

This tale would not come from the ward of a hospital, had I warded the tail of a wasp.
Winifred R.

Answers have also been received from Yellow Jacket, Girouette, Kirkmouse, Scotus, Viator, Nim-Nim, Snux, Infelix, Moonlighter, M. T. P., X. Q. Q., Sans Avoir, Shamrock, and numerous other competitors, of whose names I will give a list next week.—The P. E.

PHONOGRAPHS.—The Edison-Bell Phonograph Corporation, Limited, give Notice that they are the owners of the British Patents for the Edison-Bell Phonographs; and that Legal Proceedings will be taken against all persons selling, using, or exhibiting Phonographs not obtained from them.
By order,
W. M. CROWE,
Secretary.

Edison House,
Northumberland-avenue,
London, April, 1893.

THE Edison-Bell Phonograph Corporation, Limited, of London, have the Sole Right to Sell and Use Edison-Bell Phonographs in the United Kingdom, and all other persons claiming such rights, either as representing me or the North American Phonograph Company, do so without authority.
THOMAS. A. EDISON.

LONDON, EDINBURGH, and GLASGOW ASSURANCE COMPANY, Limited. (Established 1881.)

SUBSCRIBED CAPITAL £395,113
UNCALLED CAPITAL 182,353
LIFE, INDUSTRIAL, ACCIDENT.
CLAIMS PAID ..... £625,318 4s. 4½d.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.
S. BARCLAY HEWARD, Esq., Chairman.
WM. ABRAHAM, Esq., M.P.
Major-General E. A. BERGER.
SAMUEL HARRIS BOOTH, D.D.
WILFRED A. BOWSER, Esq.
FREDERICK G. CASH, Esq.
T. V. COWLING, Secretary.
Sir JOHN N. CUTHBERTSON.
JOHN H. DICKSON of Corstorphine, Esq.
ROBERT M. MOIR, Esq.
C. WEEDING SKINNER, Esq.
THOS. NEILL, Industrial Manager.
APPLICATIONS FOR AGENCIES INVITED.
CHIEF OFFICE: Insurance Buildings, Farringdon-street, London, E.C.

SURPLICE SHIRT.
MADE TO MEASURE.
MADE ON THE PREMISES.
GENTLEMEN'S Complete OUTFITTERS.
PRICE LISTS ON APPLICATION.
SAMPSON & Co.
268, 270, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

CARPET CLEANING.

CARPETS and TAPESTRIES Cleansed from dust by PURE AIR.
Impossible to damage the most delicate fabric.
Collection and Delivery free.
Send for Prices and Particulars to your Upholsterer, or
The Compressed Air Carpet & Tapestry Cleaning Co.
Brook Green, W. Office: 94, Victoria-st., Westminster.
N.B.—The Trade and Public are invited to visit our Works, and convince themselves of the bona fides of our process.

ASK FOR
DR. RIDGE'S
The Perfect Food for Children and Invalids.
Patent Cooked
FOOD.
CAUTION. All the Genuine Packets and Canisters are enclosed in White Wrappers, the words DR. RIDGE'S PATENT COOKED FOOD are printed boldly thereon, so that none need be deceived or mistaken.
PREPARED AT THE ROYAL FOOD MILLS, LONDON, AND SOLD RETAIL BY ALL LEADING CHEMISTS AND GROCERS THROUGHOUT THE KINGDOM.

PUREST IN ENGLAND. SODA, SELTZER, LITHIA, POTASH, LEMONADE, GINGER ALE, ETC.
BOURNE
Supplied in 6 Dozen Cases Carriage Paid by TABLE
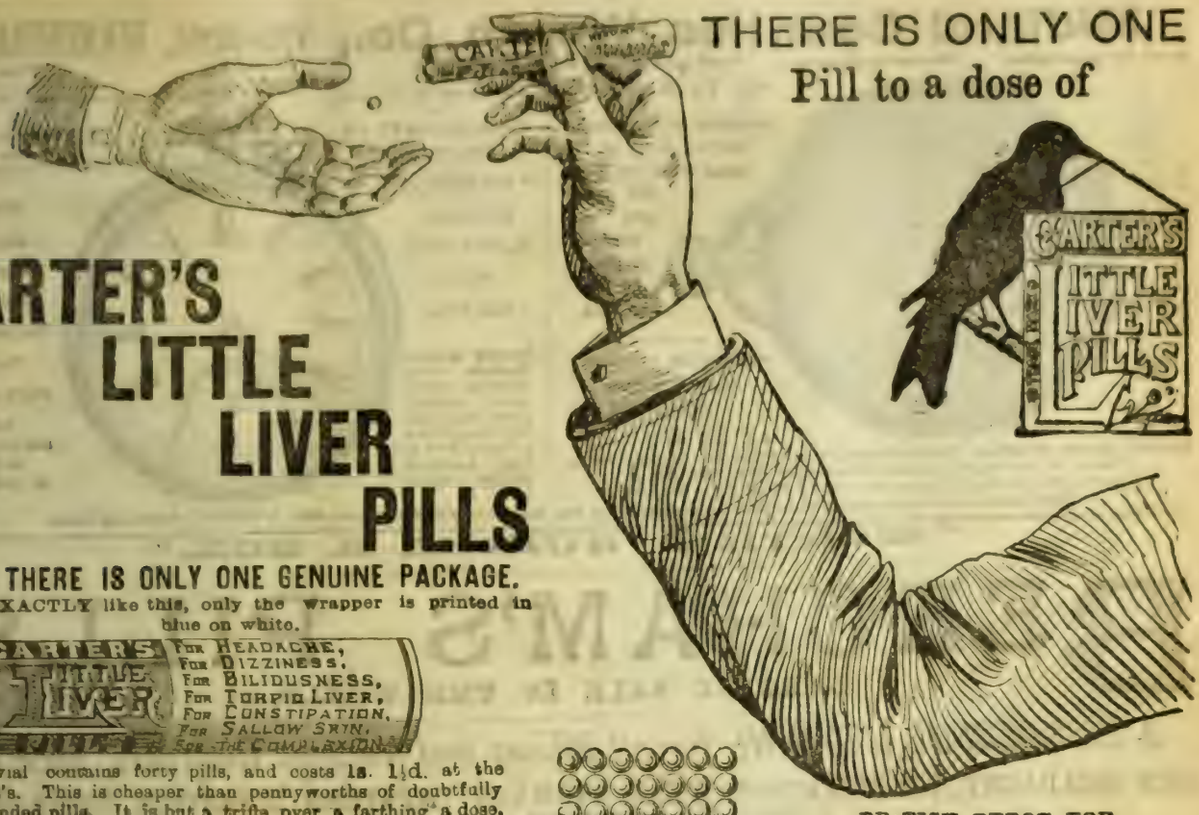
Analysis, &c., on Application.
R. M. MILLS & CO., BOURNE, LINCOLNSHIRE.
WATERS
West-End Agent, D. WHEATLEY, 16A, North Audley-st., W.
City Agents, ALEX. D. RAE & CO. (late Hardy & Co.), Chemists, 23, Fenchurch-street, and 6, Railway-place, E.C.;
And of all CHEMISTS, WINE MERCHANTS, &c.

DECAY OF THE TEETH
arises from various causes, but principally it may be attributed to early neglect or the indiscriminate use of tooth powders and pastes, which give a momentary whiteness to the teeth while they corrode the enamel. The timely use of that delicate aromatic tooth-wash,
FRAGRANT
SOZODONT
will speedily arrest the progress of decay, harden the gums, and impart a delightful fragrance to the breath. The formula of Sozodont includes only botanic ingredients, and it contains only the purest and most salutary of these.

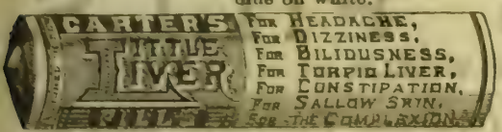


CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS

THERE IS ONLY ONE Pill to a dose of

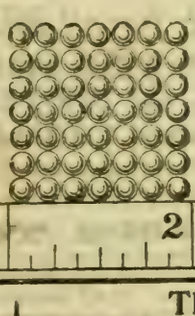
AND THERE IS ONLY ONE GENUINE PACKAGE.

It is EXACTLY like this, only the wrapper is printed in blue on white.



The vial contains forty pills, and costs 1s. 1½d. at the Chemist's. This is cheaper than pennyworths of doubtfully compounded pills. It is but a trifle over a farthing a dose, for ONE PILL IS A DOSE, though they are so small that FORTY-NINE of them only measure one inch square.

Cure TORPID LIVER WITHOUT FAIL. SICK HEADACHE, MALAISE, DISTRESS FROM EATING, and SALLOW COMPLEXION promptly done away with.



BRITISH DEPOT FOR

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS,

46, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

THE ROYAL WEDDING PERFUME.

H.R.H. The Duchess of York has graciously accepted a supply of "ATKINSON'S WHITE ROSE," describing it as a "Charming Scent."

It is the "sweetest of sweet odours." Atkinson's is the only genuine.

Of all Chemists, Perfumers, and Dealers, and of the Manufacturers, 24, Old Bond Street, London.

TAMAR INDIEN GRILLON

Very agreeable to take.

A LAXATIVE AND REFRESHING FRUIT LOZENGE FOR

CONSTIPATION,

HÆMORRHOIDS,
BILE,
HEADACHE,
LOSS OF APPETITE,
GASTRIC AND INTESTINAL TROUBLES.

Box 2s. 6d., stamps included.
Sold by all Chemists and Druggists.

E. GRILLON,
69, Queen-street, Cheapside, London.

"The Cup of the Prince, the Peer, and the Peasant."
"The most popular and healthful Beverage of the Century."

By Her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent.

"MERSANO"

A SPARKLING NON-ALCOHOLIC WINE.

Recommended by all the leading medical faculty as the only perfect and health preserving tabu drink. The most welcome friend in every sick room, and indispensable on every table.

CERTIFICATE OF HONOUR and GOLD MEDAL have been awarded for the special excellence of "Mersano."

Wholesale from Local Agents in all parts of the Kingdom. Any difficulty with local supply, communicate with the Patentees:—

Forbes, Maxwell, & Co., Ltd., Aberdeen.

SAMPLE BOTTLE POST FREE NINE STAMPS.

6d. per Bottle.

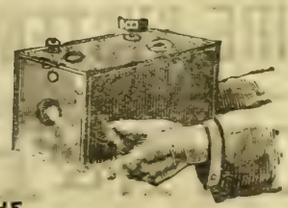
To be had Everywhere.

The Camera that takes the World!



THE

KODAK

No previous knowledge of Photography necessary.

"YOU PRESS THE BUTTON, WE DO THE REST,"

(Unless you prefer to do the rest yourself)

AND THE PICTURE IS FINISHED.

Price from £1 6s.

EASTMAN PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS CO. LD., 115-117 OXFORD-ST., LONDON, W.

SEND FOR PRETTY, ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, POST FREE.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

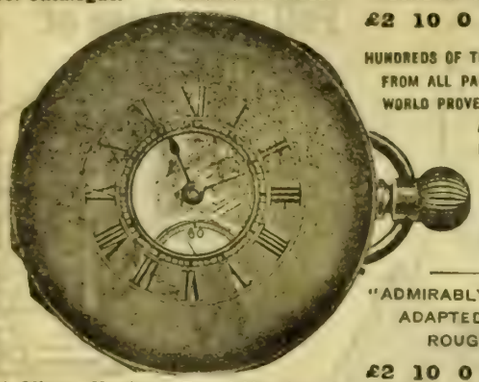
WORLD'S FAIR route to Chicago.
JAPAN and CHINA.—Fastest, finest, and only twin-screw Royal Mail Steamers on Pacific Ocean leave Vancouver every three weeks.
AROUND the WORLD Trips for £125.
SUMMER TOURS through Canadian Lakes and "Rockies."
FREE FARMS and Cash Bonus for Settlers.

For Tickets and Free Guide Books, apply Passenger Department, Canadian Pacific Railway, 67 and 68, KING WILLIAM STREET, LONDON, E.C.; 7, James-street, Liverpool; 105, Market-street, Manchester; 67 St. Vincent-street, Glasgow.

Midland Counties Watch Co., Vyse-street, BIRMINGHAM.

Send for Catalogue. Wholesale Prices. Send for Catalogue.

CATALOGUES CONTAINING OVER 1,000 ILLUSTRATIONS POST-FREE UPON APPLICATION TO ANY PART OF THE WORLD.



£2 10 0

HUNDREDS OF TESTIMONIALS FROM ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD PROVE THE VALUE AND EXCELLENT TIME-KEEPING QUALITIES OF OUR WATCHES.

"ADMIRABLY ADAPTED FOR ROUGH WEAR."

£2 10 0

Gents' Silver Keyless Demi-Hunter, in Plain or Engine-turned Cases, a thoroughly reliable timekeeper. £2 10s. 0d.

Purchase from the Manufacturers at a saving of 25 to 50 per cent.

25s. 25s.

LONDON OFFICE AND SHOW ROOM: 15, QUEEN VICTORIA ST., E.C. (Near Mansion House.)

LONDON OFFICE AND SHOW ROOM 15, QUEEN VICTORIA ST., E.C. (Near Mansion House.)

"THE CHEAPEST THOROUGHLY RELIABLE SILVER WATCH EVER MADE."

Gents' Silver Watch, finely finished movement, crystal glass, timekeeping qualities guaranteed, 25s. Ladies' ditto, ditto, 25s.

SEND FOR CATALOGUE CONTAINING HUNDREDS OF TESTIMONIALS OF THIS AND OTHER WATCHES. Gratis and Post Free to any part of the World.

Cheques and P.O. Orders to be made payable to the Company's Manager, Mr. A. PERCY, Birmingham.

"WORTH A GUINEA A BOX."

BEECHAM'S PILLS.

LARGEST SALE IN THE WORLD.

A WONDERFUL MEDICINE for all Bilious and Nervous Disorders, such as

SICK HEADACHE, CONSTIPATION, WEAK STOMACH, IMPAIRED DIGESTION, DISORDERED LIVER, and FOR FEMALE AILMENTS.

Prepared only by the Proprietor, THOMAS BEECHAM, St. Helen's, Lancashire.

Sold by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Dealers everywhere, in Boxes 9½d., 1s. 1½d., & 2s. 9d. each. Full directions with each box.

BEECHAM'S TOOTH PASTE.

Will recommend itself; it is efficacious, economical, cleanses the teeth, perfumes the breath, removes tartar, and prevents decay. It is composed of the best known ingredients for neutralising the acids of the mouth, preventing all deleterious deposits upon the teeth, and is a pleasant and reliable dentifrice.

BEECHAM'S TOOTH PASTE is put up in collapsible tubes. Of all Druggists, or from the Proprietor, for ONE SHILLING, postage paid.

PIANOS ON THE THREE YEARS' HIRE SYSTEM.

This system is carried out extensively, liberally, and equitably by CHARLES STILES & CO., 40 and 42, Southampton-row, Holborn, W.C. The pianoforte becomes the absolute property of the hirer at the expiration of three years, or may be returned at any time, at the option of the hirer. The rates charged are the same as for ordinary hire, and no addition is made to the price. PIANOS, GRAND and UPRIGHT, new and second-hand, by BORD, BECHSTEIN, and other high-class Makers, at from 10s. 6d. to 100s. per month. Lists and all particulars will be forwarded post-free on application to STILES & CO., 40 and 42, Southampton-row, Holborn, London, W.C.

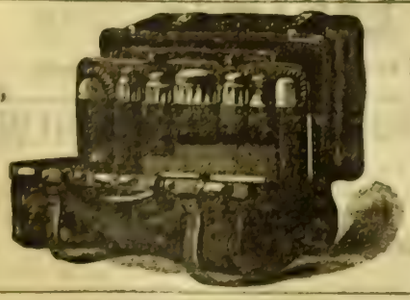
BROWN & POLSON'S

Has 35 Years' World-wide Reputation. # CORN FLOUR

FISHER'S GLADSTONE BAG.

18-in. Brown Cowhide, PLATED, £6. SILVER, £7. 10s. FITTED COMPLETE.



18-in. Brown Cowhide, PLATED, £6. SILVER, £7. 10s. FITTED COMPLETE.

CATALOGUES FREE.

FISHER, 188, STRAND.

WILL BE PUBLISHED SEPTEMBER 15.

In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, pp. 668, price 7s. 6d.

CONTAINING THIRTY THOUSAND QUOTATIONS AND A MOST COMPLETE CLASSIFIED INDEX.

DICTIONARY OF QUOTATIONS

FROM ANCIENT AND MODERN, ENGLISH AND FOREIGN SOURCES.

Including Phrases, Mottoes, Maxims, Proverbs, Definitions, Aphorisms, and Sayings of Wise Men, in their Bearing on Life, Literature, Speculation, Science, Art, Religion, and Morals, especially in the Modern Aspects of them.

Selected and Compiled by the

REV. JAMES WOOD,

Editor of "Nuttall's Standard Dictionary."

LONDON: FREDERICK WARNE & CO., AND NEW YORK.

Printed for the Proprietor by WYMAN & SONS, Limited, Great Queen-st. W.C. and published at 10, Bolt-ct. Fleet-st. E.C. in the Parish of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st. Queen Anne's-gate, S.W.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 871. Vol. XXXIV. Thursday, September 7, 1893. Price Sixpence.

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor should be sent direct to the Editorial Offices, Carteret-street, S.W., and not to the Publishing Offices in Bolt-court, Fleet-street.

No communication can be dealt with in the current issue of Truth if received later than the First Post on a Monday.

ENTRE NOUS.

THE Prince of Wales leaves Homburg at the end of this week, and he is expected to pay a brief visit to Denmark before returning to England. The Duke of Fife is reserving all the best covers in Mar Forest for the Prince of Wales, during whose visit to Braemar there will be a series of deer-drives.

On Saturday several of the evening papers announced that the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Cambridge have accepted an invitation from Sir Henry James to visit him at the end of this month at Shoreham, Kent, for partridge-shooting. This is a perfect fabrication. There is practically no partridge-shooting at Shoreham Place, Mr. Mildmay's delightful seat near Sevenoaks, of which Sir Henry James is the tenant. The Prince of Wales is to be a guest there in December for a couple of days for pheasant-shooting, which is the great sporting feature of the place.

The Duke and Duchess of York left Sandringham on Thursday evening, after a fortnight's residence at the Bachelor's Cottage, and proceeded to Balmoral on a visit to the Queen. The Duke and Duchess are going from Balmoral to Braemar, where they will be the guests of the Duke and Duchess of Fife at New Mar Lodge for about a fortnight, after which they are to return to Sandringham, as their proposed visit to Denmark has been abandoned.

The Duchess of Teck, who is now in the Engadine with her youngest son, Prince Alexander, is to pay a visit to the Empress Frederick at Cronberg when on her way home to England; and during next month H.R.H. and the Duke (who is now at Gmunden) will be the guests of the Duke and Duchess of York at Sandringham for some time.

A contemporary states that the Queen paid her second visit to Stowe last year, which is incorrect, for her Majesty has not been at Stowe since 1845. It is also untrue that the father of the late Duke of Buckingham embarrassed himself by the entertainments which he gave at Stowe in honour of Louis Philippe, who, as a matter of fact, was never at Stowe in his life. The great grandfather of the late Duke wasted a great deal of money about eighty years ago in entertaining the French Princes, who were afterwards respectively known as Louis XVIII. and Charles X.

Duke Alfred of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha will come to England about the middle of November in order to wind up his affairs in this country, when he is to deliver up to the Queen his uncle's insignia of the Garter, of which order the late Duke was a "Knight Companion" for nearly forty-nine years, and his George is a very fine one, and exceptionally valuable.

Duke Alfred of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha will have to vacate Clarence House "within a reasonable period," and that abode is to be granted by the Queen to the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. It was enacted by the Queen in 1838 that if any member of the Royal family became a Reigning Sovereign, when in the occupation of a house or apartments belonging to the Crown, then such member must surrender the said house or apartments "within a reasonable period" after his or her succession. This was done by the advice of Lord Melbourne, in order to prevent the possibility of a repetition of the trouble which was then occasioned by King Ernest of Hanover. He had been granted the apartments in St. James's Palace, which are now occupied by the Duke and Duchess of York, by George III., but when he became King of Hanover in 1837 it was, of course, expected that he would vacate his apartments, and the Queen had intended to give them to the Duchess of Kent. King Ernest, however, positively refused to surrender the apartments, maintaining that his father had granted them to him for his life, and, after a deal of wrangling, he succeeded in retaining them until his death in 1851. Hence the arrangement I have mentioned.

The old practice of granting Royal residences with benefit of survivorship has been for many years discontinued, until the Queen recently revived it. For many and grave reasons such grants are highly objectionable. During the reign of William IV. a Court official was granted apartments in St. James's Palace, with benefit of survivorship, the result being that the quarters were occupied by himself, and then by his widow, for nearly sixty years, and an excellent house was alienated from the Court during that preposterous period.

Prince Alfred of Edinburgh is in very delicate health, and he has suffered for years from a dangerous internal malady, and has to observe a strict regimen. Prince Alfred will in future be known as the Hereditary Prince of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha. The next heir to the throne is the Duke of Connaught, who also has but one son, and then comes the Duke of Albany. If the English line failed the succession would pass to Prince Philip of Saxe-Coburg Gotha, who is the son-in-law of the King of the Belgians, and the possessor of the great Kohary estate in Hungary.

A rumour has reached the Court that the Cesarewitch is likely to marry the Princess Sybil of Hesse, who is a daughter of the late Landgrave Frederick William, a grand-niece of the Queen of Denmark, and a first cousin of the Duchess of Connaught. Princess Sybil, who was born in June, 1877, is now staying at Fredersborg with her mother, the Landgravene of Hesse, who is a sister of the late Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia. Princess Sybil is a sister of Prince Frederick Charles of Hesse, who was married last winter to the youngest daughter of the Empress Frederick.

The King of the Hellenes, who has arrived at Copenhagen from Aix-les-Bains, will stay for several weeks in Denmark, after which he is coming to England, and he will be the guest of the Prince and Princess of Wales at Sandringham early in November for a few days, and is afterwards to visit the Queen at Windsor Castle before he returns to Athens, where the Duke of Sparta is acting as Regent during his Majesty's absence from Greece.

A correspondent of the Neue Freie Presse of Vienna, being much exercised in his mind as to the health of President Carnot, who—as he says—is every week reported to be about to submit to some internal operation of a very dangerous description, he took himself to Fontainebleau in order to learn the truth. The old lady who sells visitors bread to feed the carp in the pond assured him that the President is out every day, and appears to be in perfect health. The invalid who shows people over the Palace confirmed this, and said that President Carnot, who resides in the portion of the Palace where the retinues of Kings and Emperors used to be lodged, often comes privately and alone into the main building, and has one after another room opened for him as he wanders about. This invalid told the correspondent that once, when he was showing a party over the palace, he observed a lady dressed in black, who was always lagging behind the others as they were taken from room to room. In vain he urged her to keep pace; she seemed unable to tear herself from some of the apartments. At length he recognised her, and allowed her to muse in peace amongst the scenes of her vanished splendours.

Old—and in many cases inane—customs die hard, as witness the mummery at a "Royal Proclamation" in Edinburgh. Heralds, pursuivants, and trumpeters, in gorgeous raiment, and costing the country some hundreds per annum, with a military escort and the garrison band, marched last Saturday from the Sheriff Court buildings to the Market Cross, there to declare that "after a day to be fixed by the respective Governors, sovereigns and half-sovereigns coined prior to the reign of Queen Victoria shall not be current or legal tender in the colonies of Fiji, the Cape of Good Hope, and Natal." What earthly connection Scotland has with sovereigns in Fiji, &c., does not appear; but, of course, the heralds must do something for their salaries, and occasionally air their apparel to rid it of the moths.

For the Truth Hotel List, see page 508-509 in the present issue.
For Amusements, see page 509.

A paragraph has gone round the papers which states that the Queen has "lent" the Thatched House Lodge in Richmond Park to General Lynedoch Gardiner, who is one of her Majesty's equerries. This is untrue, for I am informed that the residence, with its grounds, has been granted by warrant to General and Mrs. Gardiner, with benefit of survivorship. If the place had been merely "lent" to General Gardiner he would scarcely have gone to the expense of altering, enlarging, and redecorating the house, and of making expensive improvements in the stables and grounds. General Gardiner has paid for everything that has been done since the death of Lady Bowater, although the Office of Works employés have carried out the improvements.

Dublin, after the excitement of the Horse Show, returned last week to its normal state, a very deserted one at this season, especially this year, when September has begun as if it were still the middle of June. The tourists and "trippers" have the streets all to themselves in the once car-drivingest capital in Europe. Lord Houghton left the Viceregal Lodge last week for England, and will be in London for the debate on the Home Rule Bill in the House of Lords.

Sir George Wombwell will shortly entertain a small shooting party at Newburgh Park, his family seat in the North Riding of Yorkshire, including the Duke of Cambridge, who is also to be the guest of Lord Downe, at Danby Lodge, near Whitby.

Lord and Lady Fingall have been paying a farewell visit to Killeen Castle, the family residence in Meath. It is now passing out of Lord Fingall's possession, having been bought in the Landed Estates Court, with its demesne. Meath, remarkable in the old days for its Royal Palace of Tara, is in these times known chiefly to fame as a happy hunting-ground. The voices of hounds and huntsmen make the echoes around Tara, where the sound of the harp is no longer heard.

Much regret has been excited in the Hamilton district of Lanarkshire by the death of Mr. Forrest, of Udston, who was one of the best-known and most popular country gentlemen in the county. Mr. Forrest had for many years taken an active and a very useful part in all local business, and he was for six successive years Provost of Hamilton, and filled many important public offices. He was an enthusiastic Volunteer and Freemason, and a very sagacious farmer. He owned three estates in Lanarkshire, two of which had belonged to his family for centuries.

Nemesis.

Lines written after reading the account of the "Lift" incident at the Stores.

Men's manners now have reached a stage,
No more to be commended,
Which clearly shows us that the age
Of chivalry is ended;
Even politeness, once displayed
With purpose so persistent,
Must be considered, we're afraid,
As wellnigh non-existent.

When woman would a-shopping go,
So altered now the case is,
She must not think man will bestow
On her the choice of places.
The deference to her once shown
One hardly now discusses;
But she must fight to hold her own
In lifts, and trams, and 'buses.

Still worse, the men who, dead to shame,
Join in this ugly tussling,
If censured, with excuses claim
To justify their hustling.
Women, say they, cannot complain
If manners have grown rougher,
Since their own acts have, in the main,
Induced the ills they suffer.

If they had played a wiser part,
Instead of counsel scorning;
If they had taken more to heart
Man's oft-repeated warning:
They would have seen that their design
To better their condition,
Could only serve to undermine
Their former strong position.

Alas, though, they instead began
Perfervid platform-speaking;
For years against their tyrant, man,
For vengeance they kept shrieking;
Love, marriage, domesticity,
They vowed were mere frivolity;
Their sex was frenzied to be free,
And rampant for equality.

Affection? What for that cared they,
Whilst it involved a bridle?
Man's worship? That they mocked alway
They loathed to be man's idol!
They vowed of social slavery
They'd never be promoters;
Wives, mothers, they would never be,
Unless they first were voters.

Man tried in vain in this absurd
But stubborn course to shake them;
What wonder, then, if at their word
He's now inclined to take them?
What wonder if they do not find
His conduct quite so knightly;
Or if at times he seems inclined
To treat them impolitely?

Of course it's wrong of man to be
In such a way affected;
But, after all, we must agree
It's what must be expected
The lack of deference displayed,
The rudeness which so vexes,
Come of the efforts that are made
To equalise the sexes.

Let women, then, if they'd be wise,
Cease this insane dissension,
Nor try absurdly to revise
Dame Nature's fixed intention.
Let them all bad advice reject,
Let higher aims direct them;
Let them, in short, themselves respect
And men, too, will respect them!

The Duke of Hamilton has hitherto refused to lease or sell any land in the island of Arran for building purposes, but now he has decided to "feu" on an extensive scale; and during his recent stay at Brodick Castle the plans which had been drawn up were approved by him. It is understood that the terms and the localities of the proposed building operations will shortly be announced.

Principal Cunningham, of St. Andrews, who died on Friday, was one of the most eminent ecclesiastics in Scotland. He was minister of Crieff for forty years, and in 1886 Mr. Gladstone appointed him to be Principal of St. Mary's College, in succession to Principal Tulloch. He was a distinguished pupil of Sir William Hamilton, and of "Christopher North," and for a short time he studied under Dr. Chalmers. Dr. Cunningham was for nearly fifty years a very prominent member of the General Assemby, and he was an admirable debater. He was decidedly Broad in his Church views, and strongly progressive, being in favour of the opening of museums on Sundays, and other reforms. The "innovations" in the choral services, which for years excited so much and such bitter controversy, were early introduced at Crieff, and Dr. Cunningham took a leading part in the anti-patronage movement. He was an ardent Liberal in his politics, and took a very active part in several elections, notably in the great Perthshire contest of 1868, when he advocated the cause of Mr. Parker (who won the seat from the Tories) both with his voice and with his pen. His brilliant and interesting "Church History of Scotland," which obtained a wide popularity, has become a standard book.

It is stated that last week there was a sale of furniture at Gweynynog Hall, Denbighshire, at which £53 was paid for "Dr. Johnson's chair," which article excited keen competition. It is added that Dr. Johnson "spent much of his holidays at the hall." This is a strange farrago of nonsense, for Johnson was only in Wales once in his life, during the summer of 1774, when he made a tour with the Thrales. He may have visited "the hall" during that expedition, but his stay there must have been very brief. It is a pity that people do not take the least trouble to verify the wild stories which are now so constantly being circulated about departed celebrities.

A record was established at the sale of the late Mr. Graham's celebrated Yardley flock of Shropshire sheep, which was attended by breeders from all parts of the world. The enormous price of 250 gs. was paid by Mr. Judge for the well-known prize ram, Doncaster Royal, and 175 gs. for one of his sons. Shearling rams were run up to 110 gs., and 36 gs. was paid for a ram-lamb, while a pair of ewes realised 14 gs. per head, and 6 gs. per head was the price paid for a pair of ewe lambs. The flock altogether realised about £3,400.

Hôtel Burlington, Boscombe, Bournemouth. Perfectly unique!!! Over 200 rooms, practically designed, sumptuously appointed, and fitted throughout with all the comforts of a well-arranged country mansion. Acres of matured grounds. Most moderate tariff, forwarded by Manager, or obtainable, with illustrated brochure, at the Burlington and Buckingham Palace Hotels, London. Bournemouth East Station.

There has been for some time in Dresden a sort of English show. The other day the contents were sold by auction. A Panorama of Tel-el-Kebir, 100 yds. long, that had cost £1,600, sold for £1; a life-size statue of Shakespere, in "Gips," for 2s. 6d.; one of Milton for 5s. 6d.; a bust of Chatham, for 6s.; a Cromwell for 8s.; a Darwin for 3s.; Lord Cairns, for 7s.; Professor Wilson for 1s.; and Newton for 4s. Cromwell seems to have brought in the highest amount; next to him Lord Cairns, although I should have thought that his name would have been unknown in Germany.

The Feast of St. Partridge has been appropriately celebrated by the publication of a new engraving after Mr. A. Thorburn's drawing called "Breaking up the Covey." This new print forms a capital companion-picture for one after the same artist's work depicting grouse driving, which Messrs. Leggatt Brothers, of 62, Cheapside, issued a short time ago. Sportsmen, I feel sure, will appreciate both these reproductions, for Mr. Thorburn has made a name by his very accurate drawings of what I may call sporting birds.

Another fine art publication which must be considered well-timed is the photogravure which Messrs. Henry Graves & Co. are producing of Mr. T. J. Gullick's oil painting of Christopher Columbus, entitled, "Land! Land! Land!" The original picture is to be sent forthwith to America for exhibition in the United States; but in the meantime I have had a look at it. That the artist has taken great pains in painting it is evident, and it is not perhaps his fault that the Columbus is somewhat disappointing. But with his long silvery locks, and pale thin face, the great navigator looks more like a meditative saint than a sailor of action. I am inclined to think, indeed, that Mr. Gullick would have painted a more convincing picture had he been a little less bound by the authorities he has so scrupulously consulted.

The second series of the "Diplomatic Reminiscences" of Lord Augustus Loftus will be published next month by Messrs. Cassell, and the book ought to be very entertaining, as it deals with his experiences at Munich, Berlin and St. Petersburg.

The article by Mr. Albert Vandam in the current number of the Fortnightly Review would seem to have been reposing for about two years in the archives of that periodical. It is difficult to explain on any other hypothesis how such an exceptionally able and well-informed writer should be ignorant, as in this article he appears to be, of the second marriage of M. Rouvier, which occurred in 1891 when that gentleman was Minister of Finance. If the error is to be explained in this way, the incident shows once more how unfair it is for an editor to keep a contribution by him for a long period, and eventually use it without giving the writer an opportunity of bringing it up to date.

No one do I admire more as a journalist than Mr. Stead. He writes clearly and forcibly, and manages to give a point to common-place. When he takes up a subject, he presents it in all its phases, and renders it interesting. I doubt, however, whether he will make much of what he calls "Borderland," a subject that he proposes to treat quarterly in a review. The subject is as old as the hills. Either to A certain experiences have occurred, or B has told him that they have occurred to B. The experiences are usually such as might be the result of delirium. But A ascribes them to some supernatural source, and on this he founds a theory that dead persons can and do communicate with living ones. The experiences in the case of Mr. Stead assume the form of his taking a pencil in his hand, approaching the hand to a piece of paper, when writing is traced upon the paper by the pencil, aided by the hand. Mr. Stead is convinced that a departed lady, of the name of Julia, communicates in this way her observations to him. This he considers proved, because he is not conscious that he is under the influence of his own mind, and because "Julia" sends messages to Miss E., which greatly surprise her, as they deal with facts only known to herself and Julia. Moreover, Julia has shown that she could predict future events, as she revealed that Mr. J. Morley would be elected for Newcastle by a majority of 140, and he was elected by a majority of above 1,700.

There is exceedingly little in these experiences different from those of many others which have been paraded for the last twenty years. The revelations used to be traced by a toy called Planchette; of late years Planchette has been replaced by the hand of the operator. Not one single vestige of proof does Mr. Stead produce that the writing is from a supernatural source. Beyond a small circle of somewhat credulous persons, this explanation has never proved acceptable. And, so far as I can see, we are now called upon to accept the supernatural origin, because Mr. Stead himself believes this and is supported in his belief by Miss E.

"Julia" gives an account of what occurred to her immediately after her death, and this, too, has to be accepted as fact by the faithful. One would suppose that a spirit from beyond the world would throw considerable light upon the conditions of existence there. Julia does nothing of the sort. Emerging from a body she got into another body, found all her deceased friends awaiting her, was put under the guardianship of an angel, arrayed in white and with wings on its back, and since then she seems to have been consumed with an overpowering desire to communicate with Mr. Stead, who she apparently prefers to the angel, or to the society of departed spirits in which she moves.

C.O.M. Whisky.—This well known Brand, 50s. per case, free to every Railway Station.—Andrews & Co., Dame-st., Dublin, Proprietors C.O.M. brand.

Pfungst Frères' Extra Quality Champagnes.—This select brand can be supplied through any Wine Merchant, or by the Agents, J. L. Pfungst & Co., 23, Crutched Friars, E.C.

Now, with all respect to Mr. Stead, we really want very much more evidence before we accept all this as gospel truth. If Julia really can foresee the future and communicate it to him, he must perceive, as a skilled journalist, what an advantage this gives him. Let him in his next number inform us of ten distinct events that will occur during the coming six months. There must be nothing vaguely oracular in the prophesies. We must have dates and names. If all these prophesies are fulfilled, then it will be worth while to inquire further into the modus operandi. As it is, I no more believe in Julia than I do in unicorns; indeed, very much less evidence would convince me of the existence of the latter than of the former. In the meanwhile, as that very practical man, Dr. Ray Lancaster, suggests, I would advise all inclined to credit these supernatural manifestations to frequent the performances of conjurers. They will find that the latter do things far more wonderful than the Julias of the other world, and that they do them under the eyes of a large number of spectators.

What will happen to us when we die, I do not know; nor does any one. Many revelations have been vouchsafed, but never yet has the truth of the revelation been absolutely proved. Mrs. Besant and her theosophic friends have given us a revelation which, I gather, they obtained from some person, more or less ethereal, and resident somewhere in Thibet. Mr. Stead pins his faith to Julia. Others pin their faiths to others. A sensible person, therefore, makes the best of things in this world, and leaves his future to Providence in another.

It is surprising how well one manages to get on without reading the interesting expressions of opinion upon men and things which each day are submitted to the public in the newspapers. Men are divided into those who accept the views of others, and those who take the liberty to think out their own views, just as some can only maintain themselves at the top of the water with corks, whilst others do not need them. An Englishman, when he is abroad, does well to confine his thirst for information upon current events to the telegrams in the newspapers of the country in which he finds himself, and to form his own conclusions respecting them. What are newspaper articles? Merely the opinions of certain Joneses, Browns, and Robinsons, who have professionally to give forth their utterances, but who are neither wiser nor better than any one else, although they clothe their utterances in oracular language, as though they had been specially sent on earth to decide authoritatively upon everything and everybody. I should like to see a daily newspaper started that gives the news and nothing but the news. I am perpetually hearing about the influence of the Press, and am asked to believe that it is increasing. I doubt this. I should say, indeed, that it has diminished. In some cases there may be a writer of such force and ability that he proves himself a guide, philosopher, and friend. But this is rare—very rare. The generality of newspaper articles carry absolutely no weight. When they had a practical monopoly of publicity it was otherwise, but nowadays there is a perfect mania for meetings, the speeches at which are usually published in the locality where they are delivered. These speeches are seldom better or worse than the articles, but there is some sort of understanding about them that is lacking in the newspaper "we." Against this "we" I have always raised a protest, more especially when "we" strives to convey the impression that it has a sacred mission. "We" simply means a proprietor or proprietors of a newspaper, that goes into the newspapering business, just as another man may go into the tallow business, with a view to make money by it, and who employs several men with a facility to write quickly and clearly upon every current subject. Of all the humbugs that ever palmed themselves off as oracles, "we" is the greatest.

Last week the Carl Rosa Company produced "Tannhauser" at the Gaiety Theatre, Dublin, with immense success. During the four weeks of their stay in Dublin their repertory was remarkable for the absence of the old, threadbare operas. "The Pagliacci" and "Othello," with several other novelties, attracted crowds each night of the engagement.

I have always taken an interest in the reduction of the prices at London theatres, and I am glad therefore to see that Mr. John Hollingshead is going to try the experiment of opening the Princess's Theatre at prices ranging from 6d. to 5s. per seat. I wish him every success. For success it is, of course, required first and foremost that the quality of the entertainment shall be kept up while the prices are put down, but Mr. Hollingshead is too old a hand not to know that.

Mr. Gladstone's appointment of the Rev. C. E. Osborne to the Crown living of Sighill, Durham, has given much satisfaction in the Diocese of Winchester, and particularly at Portsmouth, where the Prime Minister's nominee has for several years been doing excellent work in connection with the Winchester College Mission.

The preferment by the Bishop of Winchester of the Rev. Canon Hoste to the valuable rectory of Meonstoke, to which I referred last week, will vacate the important living of Farnham, of which the net value is about £800 a year, with house. This benefice is also in the gift of Bishop Thorold, who has been staying during the last month at Newquay, on the coast of Cornwall. Canon Hoste has been Rector of Farnham for eighteen years, having been presented by Bishop Harold Browne in 1875.

Mr. Paget, the High Church Vicar of St. Pancras, has recently made himself very unpopular in the parish. The Vestry had built a band-stand in a disused burial-ground,

THE IMPERIAL, EAST CLIFF, BOURNEMOUTH.—Position, appointments, and cuisine unsurpassed. 100 rooms. Luxuriously furnished. Electric light. Private omnibuses meet trains. Telegraphic address, Imperial, Bournemouth.—CHAS. A. REINGPACH, Manager.

"TOILET LANOLINE" softens, clears, and preserves the skin, and should be used in every household. "Toilet Lanoline" protects the skin from the effects of exposure, and adds to the natural beauty. In collapsible tubes, 6d. and 1s.; in small boxes, 3d., from all chemists and druggists. Wholesale depôt, 67, Holborn-viaduct. The genuine bears the trade-mark, "Lanoline."

and there was music by a band, which attracted large audiences of the poorer inhabitants. Mr. Paget, however, objected to the playing of the band, but the Vestry would not stop it, and he went to the Court of Chancery, which issued an injunction prohibiting any more music on the spot. The poor people now threaten to punish the Vicar by withdrawing their children from his Church schools.

Much regret has been excited in West Sussex by the death of the Rev. John New, who had been Rector of Duncton for thirty-four years, and he was previously Curate of that parish for more than ten years. He was one of the most zealous and successful parish clergymen in the Diocese of Chichester, and was much beloved by his neighbours of all classes. He took a most active part in superintending the village schools, which were built during his incumbency, and which have long been widely known as being about the best in Sussex. The living of Duncton, which is worth about £450 a year, with house, is in the gift of Lord Leconfield.

One or two of my clerical readers take exception to a paragraph in last week's TRUTH respecting the failure of the Rector of "a certain village in the West of England" to allow any abatement of his tithe, after he had recognised the straitened circumstances of the farmers by setting his face against subscriptions for the purpose of celebrating the Duke of York's marriage. The Rector's brother clerics point out that the tithe is now so reduced that a rector cannot be expected to voluntarily reduce it further. To this I should answer that the farmer must first live, and that if he ceases to do so the tithe-owner will cease also. However, I am inclined to think that the West Country Rector deserves more praise for putting a stop to touting in connection with the Royal Wedding than he does blame for not remitting any of his tithes.

In the course of a tithe case in Carmarthen County-Court the other day, the Rev. Rees Morgan, a Nonconformist Minister, was giving evidence, and stated, in answer to a question, that he objected to paying tithes. The Judge thereupon remarked:—

> Very likely. People have generally an objection to be hanged, but they are hanged all the same. I should have a most strenuous objection to it, but the law is stronger than I, and I think it should succeed.

Unless the reporter has done him an injustice, the learned Judge seems to have here solemnly recorded his conviction that he ought to be hanged. Far be it from me to contradict him.

The British Association is to meet at Nottingham next Wednesday, under the presidency of Professor Sanderson. A large number of excursions have been arranged for the diversion of the members, including Welbeck Abbey, Chatsworth, and Haddon Hall, and to the Midland Railway works at Derby.

A trade society asks me to make public the following case. In consequence of an advertisement, an iron-safe engineer at Bilston applied for work to an individual at Falkirk. After some correspondence, terms were agreed to, and the engineer, who had been out of work, and had to borrow the money for his railway fare, travelled to Falkirk. On his arrival, he found there was no work for him, and no prospect of any, and he had to tramp back to Staffordshire on foot, begging his bread as he went. What could induce a man to perpetrate such a cruel fraud, it is difficult to see; but the experience of the Bilston mechanic may serve as a warning to others.

The Coupé Company, to whose generous efforts to give poor children happy days in the country I referred last week, send me a letter which contains the following very noteworthy passage:—

> Our only difficulty has been to get the right class of children. Clergymen have thought it an opportunity to give their favourite Sunday-school pupils and choir boys an outing at our expense. Charitable and missionary organisations seem surrounded with a clique of "deserving" and duly appreciative children, who are thoroughly experienced in treats of all kinds, and can be calculated upon to turn up at the appointed place at the appointed time. The children we want, however, are the gutter brats who are not connected with any mission or Sunday-school, and who have had no other treat this year; but how can we get them? Who will hunt up the drunken or absentee parents to obtain the necessary permission? It wants some one with time and tact, for often the parents' last trace of self-respect is that which makes them keep their children at home lest their rags and filth should disgrace them before their more respectable neighbours.
>
> In conclusion, however, we ought to say that the parties sent us by "The Children's Happy Evening Association" and two or three other people were most carefully selected.

There is no doubt that the difficulty here mentioned besets all undertakings of this kind. It is only to be got over, as Lady Jeune gets over it in the management of her Country Holiday Fund, by securing the co-operation of those who are in close personal contact with the poorest of the poor. Should the Coupé Company be disposed to repeat their experiment next year, I shall be very glad to do all in my power to secure such co-operation, and I hope that I may be able to prevail on others who have carriages and horses at liberty—not job-masters only, but private owners as well—to lend their resources for the same purpose. Up to the present time 270 children have been taken for drives by the Coupé Company, and over 200 more are to be taken in the course of the present month. If the idea were more widely taken up these numbers might be multiplied by fifty.

I have received the following amounts towards Lady Jeune's Poor Children's Holiday Fund:—

N. G., 15s.; Two Little Girls, 5s.; E. M. T., 5s.; E. F. G., 5s.; S. D. J., £5; H. A. H., £10; F. E. F., 10s.; Vigilans, £1; A. H., £1. 1s.; X. Y. X., £5; C. D. Kemp-Welch, £2. 2s.; D. T., £1; Mary M. Murray, £1. 1s.; M. E. A. P., 10s.; Ewart and Eric, £1. 1s.; F. M. H. Albany, 10s.; Ada (Puzzle Prize), 14s.; G. W., 10s.; George Arthur, 10s.; Mammon Reader, £1; F. F. W., £2; Yvonnette, £1; C. H. T., 10s.; L. H. Frecheville, £2. 10s.; W. Emery Stark, £1. 1s.; R. E. T., 4s. 6d.; G. Pontifex, £2; O. J. S., 10s.

I have received £2. 2s. from "Awful Warrior" (Puzzle Prize No. 256) towards this year's Toy Fund.

China and Glass. — Messrs. Goode, Artists and Designers solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

Family Washing only.—Collection and delivery twice daily. For families leaving Town, work delivered day following collection, and with three days' clear notice, household work collected and delivered prior to families arriving in Town. Under new management.—Belgrave Steam Laundry, 196, Ebury-st., Belgravia, S.W.

I am glad to hear that a Departmental Committee on the subject of military education has been sitting at the War Office to consider various points raised by a Memorandum which was lately addressed to Mr. Campbell Bannerman by Mr. Walter Wren. Mr. Wren has, of course, his own axe to grind in this matter, and he would probably be the last to deny it; but it so happens that Mr. Wren's interest lies in the direction of sound military training and of open competition for commissions, and he ought therefore to have public opinion behind him.

The question, so far as the public is concerned, is a very simple one. Although purchase has been abolished, commissions in the Army are still the monopoly of the rich. One of the chief reasons for this is that the entrance examinations are so arranged as to give a special preference to the Public Schools, to which only the sons of rich men go. One of the most mischievous things Mr. Stanhope did while in office was to strengthen the Public Schools' monopoly. His successor cannot do a wiser or a more democratic thing than to break it down. Army education should be planned on the lines which are most likely to produce a supply of qualified officers, and which have been tested by the experience of Continental nations. If the Public Schools cannot conform to these lines, so much the worse for the Public Schools. To shape the education of officers in order to suit these establishments is an outrageous absurdity.

The Indian trooping season is to begin to-morrow, when the Serapis is to leave Portsmouth for Bombay with the 5th Dragoon Guards. The present system of conveying troops to and from India is cheaper than it would be to hire vessels. The average cost per head of conveyance by the troopships is £7. 18s., whereas the use of hired transports recently involved an expenditure of £10. 7s. 7d. per head. The troops, moreover, are very much more comfortable under the present system.

A characteristic bundle of official correspondence, adorned with the usual allowance of red tape, has been submitted to me relative to the case of a Temporary Engineer Clerk, who seems to have been most unjustifiably treated. The man, then holding the rank of Lance-Corporal, joined the R.E. Departmental Staff as a Temporary Clerk, in the expectation of being appointed Permanent Engineer Clerk in due course. After being stationed for some years in one of the least-attractive colonies, discharging highly-responsible duties, he was strongly recommended by his Commanding Officer for appointment as Permanent Clerk; but immediately upon his application being received at the War Office, a circular letter was issued laying down that for this appointment a first-class Certificate of Education is indispensable. Such a certificate the man in question had not got, and for want of it he seems to be hopelessly debarred from further promotion. The Horse Guards circular purports to declare an old regulation rather than make a new one; but it also clearly implies that it had not been previously understood that the first-class certificate was necessary in such a case as this; and beyond all question the man whose case led to the issue of the circular did not know that the certificate would be required, and had no means of knowing it. To all intents and purposes, therefore, he is the victim of a piece of ex post facto legislation.

News has reached me from more than one source of another "saddle-cutting" case, this time among the 18th Hussars. The regiment has been engaged in the autumn manœuvres, and was last week encamped at Coal:, near Swindon, where the occurrence took place. I understand that six men have been under arrest in connection with the affair, but the actual culprit has not been discovered. On this occasion there ought to be a thorough inquiry. Such incidents have been increasing of late in a very ugly manner, and it is time that, in place of a more or less vindictive punishment of anybody to whom suspicion attaches, some serious attempt was made to discover the real cause of the discontent thus manifested.

My attention has been called to a curious case in which the Officer commanding the 2nd Black Watch has refused permission to a Colour-Sergeant to re-engage on completion of twelve years' service, on the ground—so far as he can be induced to state any grounds—that the Colour-Sergeant is not respected by the men. The Colour-Sergeant considered himself so unjustly treated that he placed himself in the hands of a firm of solicitors, but up to the present time he has been unable to obtain satisfaction of any kind. The Commanding Officer in question has only held that position for twelve months. The N.C.O., on the other hand, has held his position for several years. It is absolutely denied on his behalf that there is the slightest foundation for the C.O.'s allegations; but this is not material, for even if the man's conduct had been unsatisfactory, he ought to have had some hint or warning before he is summarily dismissed from the Service. It is nothing short of iniquitous that when a man is given by Act of Parliament the right to a pension on completing twenty-one years' good service, and has, on the strength of this, served with credit for twelve years, his career should be cut short without warning, on the strength of a vague allegation which can hardly be proved or disproved, and which is, more likely than not, merely the expression of some private personal antipathy. I should hope that Mr. Campbell-Bannerman will interfere to prevent such a result, which is not calculated to increase the attractions of the Army as a profession.

An attempt is being made, I am told, to obtain a further inquiry into the recent illegal punishment of a Colour-Sergeant at Hamilton Depot, which has already been referred to several times in TRUTH. It may be remembered that the man was punished for making a disturbance in his quarters at night, and in TRUTH for August 24 I mentioned that I had been given to understand that the gravamen of the offence consisted in his having assaulted his wife. This is now indignantly denied in a further communication which I have received from the Colour-Sergeant's friends, and there seems every reason to believe that, so far from the wife being the aggrieved party, it is the husband who is the victim of his wife's misconduct. With a very little trouble, Colonel Lynch could have ascertained the truth about the matter, but he seems to have made no attempt whatever to do so, and in the most off-hand way sentenced the man to a punishment which he had no lawful power to impose. The impression among the N.C.O.'s friends is that he has been punished on a stupid suspicion that he has sent information to TRUTH from the Depot. It is, at any rate, certain that an illegality has been committed, and I have strong evidence that there is for some reason a vindictive feeling at work against the man. If, therefore, he desires a Court-martial or other inquiry into his case, he ought to have it.

Why not cultivate your hair? Encourage it and strengthen it or, if your hair is grey or white, the natural colour can be restored by a few applications of Mrs. S. A. Allen's World's Hair Restorer.

An N.C.O. who has been for several years manager of a regimental grocery-bar asks my advice under these circumstances:—A newly-arrived officer who has become President of the Committee insists that there ought to be a balance of profit to the amount of £5 or £6 every month, and tells the manager that if he cannot make such a profit he had better resign. The manager says that a surplus can only be obtained by selling small quantities at a higher rate than the prices quoted for the articles (e.g., dividing a fivepenny loaf into eight pennyworths). If he does this, he is disobeying the instructions of the Committee, and possibly incurring imputations of dishonesty. As he declines to do so, he is called upon to resign. I should have thought that he ought to place himself in the hands of the Committee. From the official regulations on the subject, I gather that the duty of the Committee is to fix the prices at the lowest point which will cover expenses and waste. Profit-making is foreign to the purposes of the concern. On what principle, then, can a President incite the manager to fabricate a profit by departing from the prices which the Committee fixes?

The Broad Arrow pooh poohed the other day the suggestion that corruption and dishonesty prevail to any serious extent in the Regimental Depots. This is a point on which I must reluctantly claim to be better informed than my contemporary. I had abundant facts before me when I said that these places "tend to become sinks of iniquity," and my information has been very considerably extended since I gave the full particulars of the Bodmin scandal. Here is the statement of a credible witness concerning one depot as to which I have previously heard nothing:—

> I can testify to the systematic misappropriation of mess moneys here by the men whose duty it is to expose and stop all irregularities. The Sergeant Major, though he does not actually perform the duties of the other members of the Committee, more often than not abuses the trust and authority placed in him to a greater extent than the others, conniving at their frauds and receiving a share of the proceeds. The receiving of money from tradesmen in the shape of discounts by the Sergeant Major, President, Treasurer, and Caterer, goes on all round, and tends among other things to create an illegal traffic in liquor. I have seen the passages and back doors of a Sergeants' Mess literally crowded with soldiers and civilians, and frequently among them a sprinkling of police—civil and military. I have known of a caterer putting upwards of £20 in the bank after his period of caterership, and I have seen brewers' bills ranging from £70 to £120 per month. Surely Commanding Officers must see that this cannot come from the members exclusively. The idea of a liquor-book being kept is a good one, but what is the use of it when those whose duty it is to keep it are also under inducement to falsify it?

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. Restores the colour. Renews the growth. Arrests the fall. Cleanses the scalp.

It may be said that if such a rotten condition of things prevailed very generally, the facts must leak out. One very good reason why they do not lies in the fact that nearly all members of a Sergeants' Mess get their turn in office, and consequently their share of plunder. But among those who seriously dislike the system the most potent motive for silence is, of course, the risk which attaches to speaking out. This is what makes Quarter-master-Sergeant Wilson's case such a demoralising object-lesson for the whole Army, and why it is of such vital consequence that the decision of the Court-Martial should be rescinded.

From a paragraph in the current number of the Broad Arrow, it appears that from my having omitted to notice some recent observations of that publication the Editor supposes that when he contradicts any statement published in TRUTH I am under an obligation to correct my remarks in accordance with his views. If I omit to notice them, he assumes that I am confounded and reduced to silence by his superior knowledge and wisdom. I am sorry to disturb this comfortable view, but the precise opposite of this is more often the truth. When I omit to notice any "corrections" with which my contemporary is good enough to favour me, it is usually because I consider them transparently absurd and unworthy of serious notice. It was so in the case to which the Broad Arrow refers of "the milk episode at Taunton Depot."

In regard to this matter, my contemporary represents me as publishing a "cock-and-bull story, conjured up by aggrieved correspondents," and as having been led into error by my unfortunate "credulity." There is no secret as to where my information came from. It was supplied to me by a respectable firm of solicitors, in a letter written for publication. It was confirmed by a tradesman in the town, and by at least half a dozen military correspondents in the Depot. This is the cock-and-bull story which imposed on my credulity. Further, the Broad Arrow in its correction did not challenge a single material fact in my statement. It merely added some additional facts (which I already knew) in support of the ingenious theory that the reason for excluding two milk dealers from the Barrack-rooms and married quarters was the fear of infectious disease, in the face of the admitted fact that the two boycotted dealers were still supplying the Hospital—actually the Hospital!—and the Officers' Mess. I regarded this "correction" of my "cock-and-bull story" as a cock-and-bull correction. That this would be the official answer I knew, not only before I saw the Broad Arrow, but before I wrote the paragraph, and I wrote the paragraph accordingly. My credulity may be great, but it is not capacious enough to enable me to swallow this official correction. I may be an ass, as the Broad Arrow is good enough to suggest, but even my sinuine intelligence penetrates this thinnest of special pleading. As I give the public credit for being at least as intelligent as myself, I do not suppose that such a correction could impose upon anybody outside the Broad Arrow office, and, judging from one communication which I have received, I should say it did not impose upon any one inside it. That is why I treated the paragraph as unworthy of notice.

I may take this opportunity of stating, however, that the facts in regard to the "Milk Episode at the Taunton Depot" are precisely as I originally represented in TRUTH. They are beyond dispute, and have not been seriously disputed. It is open to every reader to form his own opinion as to the motives which underlie the order to which I referred, and of the honesty of the official defence published in the Broad Arrow

The armoured battleship Monarch, which was built at Chatham about twenty years ago, is now being reconstructed and re-engined at the same yard, at a cost of £100,000.

Owing to the loss of the Victoria, the Colossus, which had just previously left the fleet on her way home to pay off, has been ordered back to fill the vacancy, although her relief, the Hood, was already on the spot. This order was signalised by the crew drawing all the pay they had saved for their English leave, getting uproariously drunk, breaking their leave, and otherwise misconducting themselves in a manner which resulted in five being sent to prison at Malta, three put in cells, and others subjected to minor punishments. Up to this time the Colossus had been an exceptionally well-behaved ship, and though I would not suggest that the fact of their being threatened with a fourth year in the Mediterranean is any justification for this outburst, it seems to me that the Admiralty have gone out of their way to provoke it. There is no immutable law which requires a certain number of ships to be always maintained in the Mediterranean, and if there were, some other ship should have been sent out in the Victoria's place, without imposing an extra turn on men who have completed their duty and earned their holiday.

While the Colossus was at Malta, three of her four 47-tons guns, which had been found defective, were replaced by new guns. Immediately afterwards one of the new guns was found to be as bad as the old ones, and it cannot now be fired. Besides the additional light here thrown upon the condition of our big naval guns, it might have been supposed that such a state of things would supply an additional reason against keeping the Colossus in the Mediterranean.

I see that an aluminium boat is being built to be taken into the interior of Africa, and there are, I believe, several aluminium electric launches on the Lake of Zurich. The metal is now produced cheaply and in vast quantities. A boat made of it is lighter than one made of wood. Why, then, does not Mr. Messum, or some other enterprising boat builder on the Thames, make racing eight-oars of aluminium, and why does not the Electric Launch Company make aluminium steam launches? There may possibly be a reason, but, if so, what is it?

I have to thank several correspondents who have written to me in support of the views expressed a fortnight ago in my article on the position of ships' doctors in the merchant service. I am glad to know that there is a very general consensus of opinion among those best qualified to judge in favour of a more direct control of the Board of Trade over sanitary and medical arrangements at sea. In the absence of any new facts, I see no reason for devoting further space to the subject at present, but I can promise that I shall return to it whenever opportunity occurs.

From a reference to the matter in an Indian medical paper, I am glad to infer that there is some prospect of official attention being given to the position of the Warrant Officers of the Indian Medical Service, respecting which some remarks appeared in TRUTH on June 22 last. A minor matter in connection with the case of these officers has since been brought to my notice. It seems that, in addition to their princely stipend of £4 per month, Government allows them some 35 rupees per annum for renewal of kit. The kit in question includes, besides a suit of civilian clothes, three uniforms (khaki, white, and blue), and it would be extremely interesting to know on what principle 35 rupees was arrived at as a reasonable allowance for this purpose.

A great deal of undesirable discontent has been gratuitously provoked in the Bristol Post Office by the promotion of a junior first-class sorting clerk over the heads of ten of his seniors. There cannot be any legitimate reason for this step, as several of the men passed over have already been engaged upon the duty of the higher grade, and it is idle to pretend that not one of them is qualified for it. Such manifestations of favouritism exercise a most demoralising effect upon the Service, and ought to be restrained by the superior authority; but unhappily "superior authority" itself too often offends in the same manner.

In TRUTH of August 10 I published a long letter from a farmer giving a detailed account of his treatment at the hands of his landlords and their agent, the landlords being the trustees of a nobleman who is a minor. The names of all parties concerned were suppressed by me, for reasons which I explained. It seems, however, that after the appearance of his letter in TRUTH, the farmer in question wrote to the Earl of whose trustees he held, calling his lordship's attention to the letter, and informing him that it referred to his own case, adding that he was also calling the attention of the tenantry and others to this "dishonourable conduct."

Before buying Gentlemen's Fur-lined Coats and Ladies' Sealskin Jackets, see Phillips's fine stock. Everything guaranteed one-half West-end price.—PHILLIPS & Co., 52 & 53, Newgate street, E.C. Sealskin Jackets re-modelled and re-dyed to latest fashion.

In consequence of this step, I have been requested to publish a lengthy statement setting forth the agent's version of the transactions, and his answer to the farmer's allegations against himself personally. Seeing that no names were given in the letter as I published it, it seems to me unnecessary that I should go again over the whole story of the tenant's grievances, and give in detail the answer to each item. As regards this part of the letter, it is enough to say that the tenant's statement is challenged in nearly every material particular. But as the letter contained certain imputations against the agent personally, and as the writer has been so ill-advised as to proclaim in the neighbourhood where the parties are known who the individual is to whom he referred in his letter to TRUTH, I cannot refuse to give the agent's answer to those imputations. Under the circumstances, however, it seems to me even more desirable than it was before that the names, both of the parties and places concerned should not be published. The few persons who know to whom the original letter referred, will know equally who is referred to in the answer. The letter stated:—

> The agent had not then held this appointment long, and had had no experience in such matters. He had been unsuccessful in a very different line of business. He had then become organising secretary to the Conservative Association at a small salary, and the fact of his holding such office was supposed to have been the reason of his appointment by the late Earl to the agency. Upon my applying for the farm, he inquired as to my financial position, also as to whether I was an active politician, as the Earl would not upon any account accept a Liberal as tenant. My assurance that I did not take an active part in politics appeared to satisfy him, and I signed the usual agreement. . . .

The agent's answer is as follows:—

> With reference to the statement that "I had had no experience in such matters" at the date referred to, I had farmed on my own account for about twelve years, and had been appointed by the late Lord—— agent for his estate, upon which I held a farm, and was in 1888 acting both for the late Lord—— and the present Lord——. I had also had about ten years' experience in valuing, buying, leasing, and supervision of licensed and other properties for a brewery of which I was managing partner, and much other experience.
>
> As to the expression "unsuccessful in a very different line of business," if it means that I have been bankrupt or compounded with my creditors, as is usually meant by such a phrase, it is utterly untrue. I joined the firm founded by my grandfather (in 1808), but carried on by my father in 1868, and remained a partner in it till 1883, when it was converted into a limited liability Company, and I was appointed a Director, which Directorship I still hold. For about ten years I managed a brewery which my father bought, but soon after his death, in 1883, the brewery was sold. After this I retained the occupation of my farm at ——, and the Directorship of —— & Sons. I was appointed in 1884 or 1885 Organising Secretary to the —— Conservative Association (the salary £200, though what the amount of salary has to do with the matter I don't know). Shortly afterwards I was appointed Secretary to the —— Orphan Asylum and Secretary to the —— General Infirmary, and in 1887 agent to the late Lord ——, and shortly afterwards to the late Earl ——. I then retired from the Secretaryship to the Conservative Association and to the Orphan Asylum, but retained the Infirmary and some other business, which I still keep.
>
> I have been Sheriff and Mayor (1882) of ——, and since 1883 have been and still am an Alderman of the City. I am also Chairman of the General Purposes Committee of the Corporation, Chairman of the ——shire Chamber of Agriculture, Chairman of the Governors of the —— Grammar School, a member of the —— Commissioners, and of several other public bodies. This seems to show that I am not considered incapable or unsuccessful in business by those amongst whom I have lived all my life. The late Lord ——— knew my father, and the first favour he showed me was more than twenty years ago, when, during his year's tenure of the High Mastership of an ancient Guild, he nominated me to fill the first vacancy that occurred during his Mastership. For many years I had frequent intercourse with his Lordship, who had ample means of judging of my business ability and character, and it is not fair to say in order to stigmatise me as a mere politician instead of as a man of business, that the fact of my holding for a short time the organising Secretaryship to the Conservative Association induced the late Lord —— to appoint me his agent.

The publication of the foregoing statement will, I hope, satisfy all parties concerned, so far as my share in the matter is concerned. If, however, it is still desired, I shall be happy to give publicity to the names of the Earl, the agent, and the farmer, but it must be understood that I do it solely at their request.

The experience of the castaways who recently landed on the Calf of Man, as described in last week's TRUTH, appears to be no uncommon one. A party who landed on the "Calf" a year or two ago, were peremptorily ordered off by the monarch of the island, who thus expressed his mind to them:—"I don't want any of you English here. You have got my money, and I have got my land. You can keep my money, but you must also keep away from my land." It would seem from this that the Calf originally belonged to John Bull. That the present owner is keeping the Calf is clear, but that "we English" are keeping his money is less obvious. I should like to know where it is. It would seem, at any rate, that keeping the Calf has not had a very salutary effect upon the manners of its keeper.

A LAMENT AND A PROTEST.

[There are signs at several of our most fashionable watering places this season that the Bathing-Machine is doomed.—Evening Paper.]

Alas! and alack! that such news there should be—
Is nothing, then, sacred, O! Progress, to thee?
Is there no institution, however revered,
That is not foredoomed from thy path to be cleared?
Is there nothing our race has determined to cherish
But what is predestined too surely to perish?
Remorseless, O! Progress, thou ever hast been,
But thou mightest have spared us—
Our Bathing-Machine!

Things around us have changed, but Improvement's endeavour
Has left that Machine as ungainly as ever.
Years have come and have gone, but it creaks and it groans
As when it first rattled down over the stones;
Generations have passed, but it jolts to this day,
As it jolted when first it was got under way—
It is still the same awkward, bare, clumsy, unclean
Unshapely, unbearable—
Bathing-Machine.

Its discomforts have never been bated one jot,
It is draughty and damp, yet insuff'rably hot;
When it starts one is bumped; one falls down when it stops;
Through the cracks in its framework the sea-water slops;
Its steps are oft broken by which one gets in,
And 'tis hard to get out without barking a shin;
In short, no one knows what discomfort can mean
Till he takes a sea-bath from—
A Bathing-Machine!

Avaunt, then, Oh Progress, and likewise Avast!
And spare us this relic beloved of the past.
Aye, think what thou doest, we humbly implore,
Ere this primitive nuisance is swept from our shore.
For if nothing that's old and played out must remain,
Why, what will our Tories have left to maintain?
Our unique House of Lords all in vain they will screen,
It will not be more safe than—
The Bathing-Machine!

The Kidderminster Sewage Farm appears to be a costly item in the expenditure of that borough, for it is alleged that in the course of a few years it has involved a loss to the ratepayers of about £10,000. A public meeting was held last week at which the Corporation were vigorously attacked for their "wanton waste of the public money and one of the Town Councillors admitted that the expenditure on the farm had been "enormous and extravagant."

Having referred last week to the nuisance caused by the Town Hall clock at Eastbourne, I find that I am in danger of being asked to stop all the chiming clocks in the kingdom. If I could do so I would—I mean, of course, during the night time only; but as I fear it is impossible, I shall not try. There are, however, clocks here and there specially deserving of condemnation. A case in point is Tunbridge Wells, where a Roman Catholic church in the very heart of the town has been endowed, by somebody's misplaced piety, with a maddening set of chimes which clang day and night. The special objection to this peal is that it is at work close to the windows of the Infirmary, the inmates of which are presumably in special need of rest and quiet. Surely the authorities of a church should be the first to perceive this and act upon it.

Some very disgraceful revelations were made at the meeting of the Horbury Local Board last week with regard to the overcrowding of cottages in that Yorkshire village. In one case, it was stated, a cottage with only one bedroom, in which there is no fireplace, is inhabited by eleven persons—four adults and seven children. These wretched beings have been herded together in this way for twelve months, and the Medical Officer of Health informed the Board that he had no doubt there were lots of similar cases in Horbury. It is to be hoped that prompt and vigorous measures will be taken to put an end to the scandal, and if heavy penalties could be imposed on the owners of the overcrowded property it would be so much the better.

The Local Government Board have declined to interfere with the recent appointment of a master and matron at Haslingden Workhouse, which had been objected to on the ground that the selection was made by a spin of the coin. This appears to me an eminently sensible decision on the part of the Whitehall authorities. Having an intimate acquaintance with Bumble's ways, they are no doubt convinced that tossing up is quite as satisfactory a method of settling a question as leaving it to his judgment. The latter process is just as uncertain and the result is just as likely to be wrong. In fact, no harm would be done if Bumble were to follow the example set at Haslingden whenever he is in a similar difficulty.

A ratepayer of Shelf, near Halifax, complains of the action of the newly-elected School Board of his district. For fifteen years the Board contained a Liberal majority, and the meetings were always open to the reporters. Now the Tories are in a majority of one, and at their very first meeting they closed the doors against the Press. Probably these gentlemen have from their own point of view good cause to keep their proceedings private, but a number of the ratepayers hold the opinion that such secrecy on the part of a public body is extremely objectionable, and they want to know whether the course adopted by the Board is legal. I believe that it is. It is one of the penalties which Shelf must pay for having a Tory School Board.

The Walsall Guardians lately addressed to the Judge of the local County Court, his Honour Judge Griffith, an interesting memorandum on the effect of imprisonment for debt in increasing pauperism, together with some suggestions for regulating imprisonment, with a view to avoiding the pauperisation of debtors' families. An ordinary mortal engaged in discharging delicate and responsible public duties would have been thankful for this communication. A Judge, however—even a County Court Judge—is not an ordinary mortal. So exalted is his station that he must not be officially addressed (except at the appointed time and place) without violence to the Constitution; and so profound is his wisdom that it is an insult to suggest that he can have anything to learn in this world. Accordingly, Judge Griffith sent this answer to the Guardians:—

I am in receipt of your communication of the 25th inst., and the only thing which induces me to answer it is the excess of its impropriety. I have hitherto administered the law entrusted to me to administer after considering all the circumstances which ought in my judgment to be considered in its administration, so far as I have been able to ascertain them, and certainly the rating of your union is not one of those circumstances. I shall continue to administer it in the cases which shall in future come before me on consideration of all the grounds in each case which I think ought to be considered, unprejudiced, so far as may be by your remarks, which I cannot avoid thinking a gross impertinence, the rating of your, or any other, union being, in the case of imprisonment for culpable remission in the payment of a judgment debt, an utterly immaterial consideration.

The following entry has just been discovered in the Report Book of the Chaplain of Salford Workhouse Infirmary. It seems a pity that such a choice collection of literary flowers should be allowed to bloom unseen:—

August 4, 1893.

Visited through all the wards in F, G, and H Pavilion, and ministered to the sick and afflicted ones some of those sovereign remedies and divine cordials which are essential to the conviction, rectification, resuscitation, consolation, assimilation, and ultimate restoration of our poor sin-stricken natures, infected and enfeebled by a thousand and one maladies consequent upon and incident to such a state, and which assert and show themselves in every conceivable form, and amongst all sorts and conditions of men. And which sovereign remedies are alone desirable for that heaven-given and divinely-certified pharmacopœia—the Word of Life.

The case of the workhouse boys at Colchester who were asked out to tea at General Miller's, and spent the afternoon pulling up weeds, has another side to it, and as I referred last week to one side, it is only due to General Miller that I should explain the other. In a letter which he has written to a local paper, the General explains that a friend who had done the same thing, suggested to him that he should make use of the boys in this way; and he adds that the work was very light, that the boys pulled weeds, and rested as they pleased; that they had a good tea with cake, &c., waited on by the General's servants; that they played in the field and ran races for money till dusk; and that they gave every indication of having heartily enjoyed themselves. It also appears that the General has since received the thanks of the Guardians. I really think that he deserved them. At the same time, it is clear from General Miller's own letter, that if the boys had not been put on the job, a man would have been paid to do it; and it also appears that this was equally true in the case of General Miller's friend—another officer, General Montagu. There are obvious objections to allowing workhouse children to displace adult labour, and the Guardians will have to bear that side of the question in mind.

I have received from Yarmouth a curiosity in the shape of one of the summonses issued in connection with the prosecution of Sunday traders in that town. The curious feature about the document is that the form of words applicable to this particular offence, instead of being written in to the printed form, is filled up in lithograph, or some other similar process, showing that the summonses are kept in stock ready to be issued wholesale. Persecution, rather than prosecution, seems to be the right name for this mode of enforcing the law. But, like most others, this particular persecution seems to be quite abortive.

Certain proceedings that took place the other day before Mr. Denman at the South-Western Police-court should be read in conjunction with the particulars which I have recently given of the doings of Benabo, the Stepney rent-collector. By an Act of George II., if goods are "fraudulently and clandestinely" removed in order to avoid distress, the landlord may claim double their value. The same Act—a noble monument of landlord-made law—gives the landlord under the same circumstances power to follow the goods within one month and to forcibly distrain upon them. In the case in question, a clerk at Clapham, who had complained in vain to his landlord of the state of his house, moved out of it on May 30 last, to another house close by. The removal is clearly proved to have taken place in the afternoon in broad daylight. The clerk left his new address with another tenant in the same house. At the time of removal he owed five weeks' rent. On the day after his removal a man named Spearing, who collected the rents of the property, obtained the new address from the other tenant. He went to the clerk's new address, and knocked, but could not get an answer. He took no other step of any kind until August 17, when he applied for a summons under the Act of George II.

A lad in Spearing's own employ stated that on May 27 he had informed the clerk's wife that, unless the rent then due was paid, a distress would be levied. This unsupported statement was the sole evidence of "fraudulent" removal; but on this, and in the face of the clearest evidence that the tenant had moved in broad daylight and left his address, Mr. Denman arrived at the imaginary conclusion that the goods had been removed both "fraudulently and clandestinely." He had, further, before him the admission of Spearing in cross-examination that he was frequently obtaining summonses under the same Act, and the significant fact that the agent had made no subsequent attempt to recover the rent or to use the power of distress given by another section of the Act; but he nevertheless ordered the rent to be paid, and the same amount, £4 5s., to be paid as the "double value" of the goods. The Act itself is an anachronism which ought to be swept away; but it is a still worse anachronism that Magistrates should strain its provisions to this extent, in order to assist landlords who use the Act to extort from poor people double the amount they owe. I would suggest to Mr. Asquith, who is always ready to attack abuses of this kind, that there is here an excellent opening for him to do a useful piece of work.

The Ulverston Bench heard a case the other day in which one Wilson was charged with being drunk on licensed premises. A solicitor explained that Wilson was of such a highly-nervous temperament that he would rather be fined than appear at Court, and also that he admitted having had a certain amount of drink, though he would not call himself "properly drunk." Whatever other evidence might be adduced, in the ordinary run of cases of drunkenness the absence of the defendant, coupled with such an admission, would have been regarded as sufficient ground for the imposition of a fine. As, however, the summons against Wilson was dismissed, as well as that against the publican, labourers and other humble persons who may be subjected to a similar charge are wondering whether the highly-nervous temperament excuse will get them off. I do not think so. Wilson is a tradesman, not a labourer. And that makes all the difference.

To fine a farmer £10 and costs (with the alternative of two months' hard labour) for insufficiently feeding his stock, seems a somewhat excessive dose of justice in such a season as the present. The sentence was imposed last week at Maidenhead upon a Cookham farmer. There was strong evidence that the animals in question—some twenty milch cows, a bull, and five cart horses—were in a very emaciated condition, and quite without food; but there was evidence on the other side that, the cows had recently been feeding in a meadow which had originally been intended for hay, and witnesses for the defence denied that their condition was as bad as was alleged by the prosecution. It is difficult to understand on what principle a farmer should wilfully starve some five-and-twenty animals, and it is quite certain that all over the country feed has been desperately scarce, and stock half-famished in consequence. So strong was the indignation among the farmers in the district at the sentence, that at the next market a subscription was raised sufficient to cover the whole amount of the fine and costs, and I think that the farmers' view of the case might with propriety be adopted by the Home Secretary.

A worthy gentleman at Clitheroe writes me in indignant terms respecting a decision of the county magistrates there. Two engineers were fined for emitting steam from a traction-engine on the highway. The offence was proved by Colonel Starkie, who, whilst driving a dog-cart, met the engine, which, besides emitting steam, was making a great noise, and travelling along the middle of the road. The traction-engine, it seems, was conveying a boiler to a mill at Clitheroe, and my correspondent therefore considers the conduct of Colonel Starkie and the Bench deserving of severe condemnation as a wanton interference by "squires" with the interests of "trade and commerce." I differ from him, and for once find myself on the side of the "squires." A traction-engine on the highway is, under any circumstances, a nuisance and a danger, and the regulations for its working cannot be too stringently enforced.

In preparation for the sporting and travelling season, ladies and gentlemen should visit Ulster House, Conduit-st., W., where their orders for every kind of garment will have prompt and careful attention.

The following is my Legal Pillory for the week. The discredit of occupying the first place in the list has been easily won by the Bridgwater County Bench, whose two decisions afford a most instructive illustration of the spirit in which many of the Great Unpaid exercise their powers. From a remark made by the Chairman in Chapman's case, it seems that the Bench felt some doubt whether they ought not to send that ruffian to prison. As, however, he had only committed what the Chairman characterised as a "very brutal" assault on a woman of seventy-nine—his own mother, too—it was decided to let him off with a fine. When Dinham was dealt with, no hesitation as to the course to be pursued troubled the magisterial mind. He had been guilty, not of personal violence towards anybody, but of the far more heinous crime of poaching, and he was, therefore, sentenced to a month's imprisonment without the option of a fine. Considering that it was the man's first offence, the Home Secretary will, I hope, at once order the release of this victim of game-preservers' injustice. With regard to the other cases in the list, attention may be particularly directed to the sentence passed on a boy of fourteen for embezzlement at Malvern, and to a reverend Canon's treatment of three children who had damaged turnips "to the amount of 1d.," at Bedlington :—

Bridgwater County Petty Sessions. Before Mr. T. P. Broadmead, Sir F. H. Hartwell, the Hon. H. B. T. Strangways, Messrs. W. Gooding, C. N. Greenhill, W. B. Broadmead, W. L. Winterbotham, and G. B. Sully. George Chapman, convicted of assaulting his mother, aged seventy-nine. He pulled her by the hair, shook her, and knocked her down. Fined £1 and costs.

Bridgwater County Petty Sessions. Before the same Magistrates. William Dinham, shoemaker, charged with poaching. He had been drinking on the evening in question, and said he was led into the field by two other men, who were seen by the game watchers, but escaped. Dinham's first offence. One month.

Grimsby Borough Police-court. Before the Mayor (Alderman Doughty), Aldermen Veal and Jackson, Messrs. Southworth, Oates, Morton, and Connell. Williamson Tacey, charged with an aggravated assault on his wife. He hit and kicked her, and when she tried to escape knocked her down and kicked her again. He had previously ill-treated her, and she was granted a separation order. Fined 40s., including costs.

Grimsby Borough Police-court. Before the same Magistrates. Leonard Hartshorn, a fishing apprentice, charged with disobeying orders and absconding. Fourteen days.

Kidderminster Borough Police-court. James Powell, charged with assaulting Wm. Tovey, whom he knocked down, kicked, and knelt upon. Tovey was rendered unconscious. Fined 20s. and costs.

Kidderminster Borough Police-court. Edward Guest charged with vagrancy by sleeping in an out-house. Two months.

Aldershot Petty Sessions. Before Mr. F. H. Fitzroy and Major Newcome. John Pocock charged with unlawfully wounding John Bailey. Prosecutor said that on July 6 prisoner attacked him with a hammer and beat him, and he had been unable to work since. Fined 15s. including costs for a common assault.

Aldershot Petty Sessions. Before the same Magistrates. John Townsend, William Dutton, and John Stewart, pleaded guilty to stealing nine apples from a garden. Six weeks each.

Birkenhead Police-court. Before the Mayor (Alderman Rawliffe) and Mr. T. L. Dodds. John Wylde, charged with assaulting Kate Rogan, his former sweetheart, by striking her in the face and in the side, knocking her down. Fined 2s. 6d. and costs.

Birkenhead Police-court. Before Alderman Willmer and Mr. G. Atkin. T. H. Pilcher, a boy of fifteen, charged with stealing a horse-rug and attempting to rob a till. He was without home or parents, and slept in a pig-sty, whither he took the rug to lie on. Two months.

Ayr Sheriff Court. James M'Ewen, drover, charged with cruelty to a lamb. He caught it by the head, twisted it round, kicked it on the stomach, and dragged it till it dropped. Fined 7s. 6d. and costs.

Ayr Sheriff Court. George Davies and John Campbell, convicted of poaching. Sixty days each.

Daresbury Petty Sessions. William Eastham, charged with cruelly ill-treating a mare. The animal was heavily overladen, and defendant was seen beating her with a heavy stick. She died on the roadside the same day. Fined 10s. and costs.

Wallingford Borough Bench. Before the Mayor, Charles West, aged 67, a man with a wooden leg, charged with absconding with workhouse clothes. Seven days.

Birmingham Police-court. Before Messrs. J. D. Goodman, J. B. Lloyd, Manton, and Wilders. William Sparrow, charged with assaulting William Glover. By a blow on the jaw prisoner knocked prosecutor down, and falling on him pressed his knees on his ribs. In consequence Glover was suffering from congestion of the lungs. Fined £3 and costs.

Stratford Petty Sessions. Before Colonel S. L. Howard and Mr. C. H. Binney. John Calder, aged seventeen, charged with entering a shop. He was found in a dust bin at the rear of the premises covered up with paper. Dealt with as a vagrant. Three months.

Kilmarnock Police-court. Samuel Garrick, charged with assaulting Janet Stirling by seizing her by the hair, dragging her about, and kicking her on the cheek, knocking a tooth out. Fined £2.

Malvern Petty Sessions. Before Mr. C. M. Berington, Colonel Heywood, and other magistrates, William Humphreys, a milk boy, aged 14, charged with embezzling £1 13s. 3d. One month.

Derby Police-court. James Austin, convicted of assaulting a lad named Tomlinson. He struck the lad violent blows on the head with a stick, causing a wound which penetrated to the bone. Several previous convictions. Fined 10s. and costs.

Esrick Petty Sessions. Before Captain M. D. Jefferson and Mr. Guy St. Maur Palmer. Nathan Turner and Fred Turner, charged with game trespass. Fined £2 each and costs, or one month.

Bedlington Petty Sessions. Peter Bradley (7), Edward Ellicott (9), and John Tirney (9), charged with damaging turnips to the amount of 1d. Canon Whitley said that in the protection of the farmers' interests the Bench must give the youthful delinquents a lesson. Fined 5s. each, in default four days' imprisonment. The parents pleaded inability to pay the fine, and in consequence the boys were detained.

I am not at all surprised to learn that the disparity between certain sentences passed in the High Court of Justiciary in Glasgow last week has created a general feeling of amazement and indignation. A young man named M'Kenna, charged with the murder of his step-daughter, a baby of two years, was found guilty of culpable homicide. Most people who heard and read the evidence considered that the jury took an extremely merciful view of the case, for the prisoner had subjected the defenceless infant to ill-treatment and violence so atrocious as to be well-nigh incredible. Lord Adam, after telling M'Kenna that he had behaved with "the grossest cruelty and inhumanity," sentenced him to seven years' penal servitude.

On the same day in the same Court Lord Adam condemned a young man convicted of criminally assaulting a girl between thirteen and sixteen years of age to ten years' penal servitude. I have always advocated exemplary punishment for this offence, and if the sentence had stood by itself I should not probably have noticed it. But if causing the death of a child by a deliberate, long-continued course of brutality is deserving only of seven years' penal servitude, it is surely monstrous to give three years more for the other crime. An extraordinary code is followed, however, in the High Court of Justiciary. A man charged with a street robbery received precisely the same sentence as M'Kenna.

STAR & GARTER HOTEL, Richmond Hill, S.W. High, dry, & healthy. Famed for its Guild and Corporation banquets, wedding breakfasts, balls, &c. Unrivalled winter residence.—CHAS. JAMES, Manager.

For gross and unblushing partiality in the dispensation of "Justice," a recent performance of the Harrogate Magistrates will be hard to beat. The son of a Baronet was charged with drunkenness, and it appeared that when arrested he "hit and kicked like a wild beast," and had to be handcuffed and conveyed to the police-station on a hand-cart. This promising young gentleman —whose name, I regret to say, is not given in the newspaper-cutting sent to me—was mulcted in the small sum of half-a-crown, which he could have paid many times over out of the money found in his possession. In the same Court working men, also convicted of drunkenness, but without a penny in their pockets, were fined from 5s. to 10s. each, with a term of imprisonment as an alternative. It will, I fancy, be difficult to persuade these men that the law is the same for the rich as the poor—at least, when Harrogate J.P.'s administer it.

I have been favoured with a letter in reference to two Cheltenham cases which figured in the Pillory last week. The writer suggests that the man convicted of assaulting his wife was sufficiently punished by a fine because the appearance of the parties denoted that the grey mare was the better horse, the complainant being a determined, robust woman, whilst the defendant was a weak-looking person. Of the soundness of the deduction I cannot, of course, express an opinion, as I had not the advantage of seeing the couple, and the local papers do not embellish their police-court reports with portraits. But I may remind my correspondent that it is not always safe to judge by appearance. Puny men are sometimes disposed to be the biggest bullies. As to the second case, in which two persons were sent to prison for sleeping out, I am informed that the woman is a disreputable creature of forty-six. But she was not charged with being a disreputable creature, but with sleeping out, and for this so-called offence a sentence of ten days' hard labour is, in my view, ten days too long.

I have been gratified this week by the receipt of two contributions for my Anti-Pillory which, unlike some my readers send in, merit such publicity. In the Leeds Police-court John Newton Sharpe, a bus proprietor, was convicted of cruelty to sixteen horses, which were kept in what the Stipendiary described as a "loathsome cellar." The place had no ventilation and was altogether in a wretched state; twelve of the horses were more or less diseased; and they were "fed upon horrible stuff not fit for any animal." Sharpe had been previously convicted, but instead of being let off with the customary fine he was on this occasion sentenced to a month's hard labour, and ordered to pay the costs of the prosecution. He has entered an appeal, and the decision of the Quarter Sessions will be watched with interest. The second case comes from Tewkesbury, where the County Magistrates very properly sent a man named William Green to gaol for three months for beating a pig to death. I commend the action of the Leeds Stipendiary and the Tewkesbury J.P.'s to their magisterial brethren.

One of the latest developments of the competition craze is a complete newspaper entitled Good News, and published by an Englishman at Ostend. The paper boasts of some literary contents of the "paste-and-scissors" order, but it is obviously a mere vehicle for "missing word" and other competitions, of which there are about a dozen in each number. Such a paper must of course be almost exclusively circulated through the post, and why on earth our Government should stultify itself by first prosecuting newspapers which carry on this business in England, and then acting as a news-agent for a similar publication issued across the Channel, I cannot comprehend.

A gentleman in Illinois, having seen a reference in Truth to some of the operations in America of the man Sturman and his pretended "Society of Science, Letters, and Art," writes to me thus:—

> I recently received an invitation purporting to come from Sir Henry V. Goold, Bart., to become a Fellow of this Society, and accepted, though I knew nothing of the Society, because my friend, Dr. W——, was elected at the same time.
>
> Can you give, confidentially, some reliable information regarding this Society, its methods, and more especially its reputation and influence among other societies in England?

It so happens that only last week I stated very clearly the position of Sturman's swindle among bonâ-fide literary and learned societies in England, and in answering my American correspondent I have sent him a copy of those remarks. As it would seem that the name of Sir Henry V. Goold, Bart., is calculated to deceive the American public into the idea that Sturman's concern has a man of some social position at the head of it, I may further add, that Sir Henry is an obscure and impecunious Irish Baronet, some eighty years of age, whom Sturman has persuaded, for a small consideration, to lend his name to the undertaking. In the interview which I have published, at which Sturman was so good as to take me into his confidence respecting the Society, it was explained that when there were any funds available for dividend, Sir Henry got "a bit." As, however, Sturman and his family are a first charge on the funds, it is to be feared that the President's "bit" is considerably less than the lion's share.

I have the highest regard for the Times, and have observed with full appreciation how the editing of the paper has improved since recent changes in the management; but I would suggest that in one respect there is still wide room for improvement—namely, in the treatment of rogues and swindlers. Only on Thursday last Rimmel's Toilet Vinegar has for over half a century sustained its high reputation as an indispensable toilet requisite. Delightfully cooling to the skin. 96, Strand; 180, Regent-st.; 64, Cheapside.

Brandauer's Circular-Pointed Pens. Neither scratch nor spurt. Glide over the roughest paper with the ease of a soft lead pencil. A 6d. assorted sample box of any stationer.

he Times published a "warning," in which one "P. F." rote thus :—

In spite of a letter which appeared last year in your columns arning the public against an impostor who writes from an ddress in the Old Kent road, I find that he is still in full swing nd apparently trading upon the good nature and gullibility of he public with much success.

hen follows a full description of the modus operandi of he notorious swindler Ernest Day, winding up with the ngenuous observation, "I have ascertained for a fact that his is only a new dodge of an arrant impostor." Surely he Times might be better informed than thus to warn its eaders against a "new dodge" which has been denounced n TRUTH on an average once a fortnight for the last two ears. And what can be more childish than to refer to his notorious swindler as "a certain imposter who writes rom an address in the Old Kent-road?" Why cannot a aper like the Times speak out boldly and to the point in ealing with a scoundrel of this type?

From time to time I am implored by working men in Australia to warn their comrades over here against migration to that part of the world. One of these ommunications has just reached me from the "Unemployed Committee" at Brisbane. I gather from it that n July 12 a deputation of the unemployed of Brisbane, 00 strong, presented to the House of Assembly a petition igned by 1,438 men out of work, representing, with those dependent upon them, 4,943 persons of the unemployed lass. This is about 10 per cent. of the population of Brisbane. Such figures ought certainly to act as a leterrent to working men who think that they can mprove their position at the Antipodes, and it ought to lo something to check the enthusiasm of those who are o anxious to assist them in that direction.

The two following advertisements from last Thursday's Morning Post point a very useful moral, and one which I have often endeavoured to impress upon young ladies who have to earn their own living. When you can earn £50 a year as a cook, why go for £25 as a governess? Not only is the pay higher in the former case, but the work s vastly more agreeable, and the position, in most cases more dignified :—

Wanted, situation as cook-housekeeper; thoroughly understands her duties in all its branches; four years' good character from present situation, four years in last situation; age 40; wages £50 per year.

The Hon. Mrs. Orr-Ewing recommends a governess, who was with her for 4½ years; willing to take entire charge; teaches thorough English and drawing, with rudiments of French, music, and Latin; children under nine preferred; salary £25-£35.—The Hon. Mrs. A. E. Orr-Ewing, Cambusmore, Callander, N.B.

A fire occurred the other day in the village of Penmaenmawr. A provincial contemporary, in describing the occurrence incidentally remarks that "at 1 o'clock midnight the servant got up as usual to commence her washing." If this is the usual day's routine, it would be interesting to know when the servant goes to bed, and at what time she finishes the washing. I daresay it would also interest some of my lady readers to know whether there is any difficulty in getting servants at Penmaenmawr.

HOUSE DRAINAGE.—Sanitary work of every kind contracted for.—The Sanitary Engineering Co., 65, Victoria-street, Westminster.

With reference to the announcement in a Cumberland paper of Mr. Gladstone's reception into the Church of Rome, I have received the following valuable information from "A Primrose Dame":—

Sir,—With regard to the gentleman who witnessed Mr. Gladstone's reception into the Church of Rome, but who withholds his name, allow me to suggest, on good authority, that being himself a pervert to Rome, he has doubtless received, like Mr. Gladstone himself, his order from that Church. It is no unusual thing for perverts to be kept openly faithful to the Church of England by the Church of Rome, for reasons which are not far to seek nor hard to understand.

I know a family personally, of which one member had for years been privately a member of the Roman Catholic Church while ostensibly a member of the Church of England. The secret was not divulged until the day of his death, when a Roman Catholic Priest claimed his rights and proved the truth of them. Not one of this gentleman's family had a suspicion of the fact, he having been permitted, if not ordered, to pose before the world as a member of the Church of England by a regular attendance at Divine Service in his parish church once every Sunday.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

A PRIMROSE DAME.

Habitation No. 1,448, No. 42,111.

Truly alarming is the vista of possibilities which this Primrose lady opens up. At this rate where can we ever be secure against the emissaries of Rome? They may be busy among us on every side, worshipping in our churches, writing letters to the Rock, and spouting in Exeter Hall. The Archbishop of Canterbury may be a Jesuit in disguise, so may General Booth. So may I. If anybody says we are, it will be impossible, so far as I can see, to prove the contrary, except by waiting till we die, and seeing whether a Catholic priest comes to claim us for his own.

A well-known and active Liberal has just handed me an invitation addressed to him from the "Primrose Club," in which he is invited to join that institution at the usual subscription of one guinea per annum. It appears from the circular that 5,500 individuals have now been induced to enrol themselves on these terms, and it is said that the "Club" is becoming "one of the most popular Conservative institutions in the metropolis." On what ground a concern can be called a "Conservative institution" which makes no inquiry respecting its members' politics, and which is ready to admit the most zealous Radicals if they can only be induced to part with a guinea, I fail to understand. Personally I should not care to make No. 5,501 in this crew even at such a modest figure as one guinea.

A large party of Gloucestershire Primrose Leaguers visited their member, Mr. Colston, at Roundway Park, his place near Devizes, last week. They went by road, and, when stopping at the inn in the small village of Atworth, they attacked a large orchard, and entirely despoiled all the trees of their fruit, after which they ravaged an adjoining garden. Then these rowdy Tories drove off, taking with them all the fruit they had stolen, and of which they had so enormous a quantity that for some miles they pelted all pedestrians with apples and pears. It is stated that these Primrose Leaguers "had evidently partaken freely of strong drinks, as their language and conduct were disgraceful in the extreme." At night, several policemen were waiting for the party at Atworth, but on reaching the village the horses of the breaks were whipped up, and they went through at a gallop.

A party of several hundreds of Norfolk Conservatives made an excursion to Windsor last Thursday, and were specially privileged to inspect the Royal Gardens. The official programme of the excursion states that they were to be met on the North Terrace and conducted round by six guides provided by Mr. Owen Thomas, the Queen's head gardener. As regards the manner in which this special privilege was obtained, the following information is also afforded by the programme:—

> On arrival of the train at the L. & S.-W. Railway Station, Windsor, the visitors will be met by S. Hoare, Esq., M.P., to whom the thanks of all are due for the special permission granted to view St. George's Chapel and the Royal Gardens.

It would appear from this that the member for Norwich himself possesses and exercises the right to admit visitors to the Royal Gardens. That, I need hardly say, is not the case, and it would be interesting to know how and by whom Mr. Hoare was enabled to obtain this favour for the special benefit of his constituents, seeing that it has been formally and firmly refused to other applicants. The Queen herself, I am quite sure, would not show such a favour to excursionists of one political complexion and withhold it from others; and she would be the last to approve of party capital being made out of the obtaining of such a favour.

The following post-card discloses one of the hitherto undetected crimes of Mr. Gladstone. How many still lurk in the back-ground only a Tory can accurately conjecture. I hope that the present one, at any rate, may prove of use to Primrose orators and subsidised country journalists:—

> Sir,—The dirtiest trick Gladstone ever did was at the time the Great Northern Railway abolished second class, when he wrote rejoicing at such a thing. So he would try to make the upper classes herd with swine to gain his ends. What rampant tyranny! Such a low, mean, dirty trick to gain the support of the working men is surely the ugliest thing in his life.
>
> H. R.
>
> Dublin, August 30, 1893.

A Dorsetshire correspondent informs me that the Tories will not support Mr. Farquharson, M.P., if he persists in again contesting the Western Division of that county, and it is understood that the official candidate of the Party for this seat is to be Mr. G. W. Horner, a well-known and popular agriculturist, and a prominent member of the County Council.

A statement recently appeared in print to the effect that Mr. Mundella was preparing a Bill to reform the constitution of Mercantile Marine Offices and withdraw them entirely from the management of Local Marine Boards. This statement has, I believe, no foundation, but it is very much to be desired that Mr. Mundella would turn his attention in this direction. The Local Marine Boards, composed as they are largely of shipowners and retired master mariners, are eminently unfitted to control offices one of the chief functions of which is to administer justice between shipowners and seamen. There has also been serious discontent among the staffs of some of the offices so controlled—notably Glasgow. The policy of the Board of Trade for many years past has been to prevent the creation of new Local Boards, and to group the old ones under a "Unification" scheme; and it would be much more business-like to bring the entire system under the direct control of Whitehall.

We are likely to hear a good deal about the Home Rule Bill having passed the House of Commons with most of its Clauses—and those by no means the least important ones—undiscussed. The Liberals will urge that this was due to the Unionists spending so much time in talking on the first Clauses. On the other hand, the Unionists will urge that, if the discussion had been too long on these Clauses, it was the business of the Liberals to propose the Closure on each of them after sufficient time had been passed in talking on them, and that a Bill giving effect to a vast alteration in the relations that up to now have united Great Britain and Ireland, must in its nature involve such multifarious and complicated details that an entire Session would not be too long to devote to it.

But whether people ascribe the blame to the Liberals or to the Unionists, the hard fact will remain, that most of the clauses of the Bill were put to the vote without any discussion, and that this is a most undesirable mode of legislating on the part of the Legislative Assembly. Take, for instance, the redistribution of seats schedule. It reduced the County Constituencies, and it retained a considerable number of what we in England should be inclined to term somewhat petty towns. This may have been sound or not. But what would have been said had a Bill dealt in this fashion with regard to Great Britain without explanation or discussion? Take another of the undiscussed clauses. It may be desirable that there should be two Chambers in Ireland, and it may be equally desirable that the Upper Chamber should be elected by those alone possessed of a high property qualification. But what would have been said had such a proviso found a place in the County Council's Bill, and if the House of Commons had been told that they must aye or nay on it without discussion?

The primary mistake of the Government was to begin the Session too late; the second mistake was to spend Easter in bringing in Bills which the Session did not afford time to pass; the third mistake was not to have, from the moment that the Bill went into Committee, apportioned the time that it was to occupy, so as to ensure adequate, and no more than adequate, discussion on each clause. Ministers knew beforehand what would be the tactics of their opponents, but they left it to Providence to interpose to render those tactics impossible. On such occasions Providence is not in the habit of interfering. Experience on other Bills was of no avail, for there was as much difference between this Bill and others as between the parturition of an elephant and of a mouse. The compartment scheme of closure always seemed to me to be playing into the hands of the enemy.

Borwick's Baking Powder. Pure & wholesome, assists digestion.
Borwick's Baking Powder. Guaranteed to be free from alum.
Borwick's Baking Powder. It has the largest sale in the world.

If the vast majority in the country were in favour of Irish Home Rule, all these errors of tactics would have been of small importance. But this is not so. In England, in fact, the majority is against it. In our ultimate appeal to the country we should, therefore, have remembered that we could not afford to give our opponents a plausible argument against us, and, most unquestionably, the fact that the Bill was not discussed is a plausible argument which the Unionists will make the most of.

Personally, I do not think that any proviso in a Bill should be passed without discussion. Such a course may be productive of immediate advantage, but it is fraught with danger to representative Government. A precedent was adduced for this. What was it? That the Tories had passed a Coercion Bill under similar conditions. This may be an ad hominem argument against the Tories, but it is a stronger argument against Liberals adopting it, for it proves how the Tories will use the weapon in future that we have taken from their quiver and brandished against them. I do not believe in Liberals justifying their action on Tory precedents.

The rules of procedure of the House of Commons are most cumbersome, and require change. We ought, therefore, to alter them; but to change them in order to pass only one particular Bill has a taint of arbitrariness about it that is not to my liking. I am no believer in Alexanders drawing their swords to cut Gordian knots. This plan of solving difficulties is one most dangerous to liberty, for who knows in the future what Alexander may wield the sword, and what knots he may cut?

The whole trouble arises from the House of Commons being overcharged with business, and the sole real remedy is for it to delegate a portion of its business to subordinate Committees. If you give a man a dozen pair of boots to make, and insist upon his making them in the time during which only one pair can be properly made, the dozen pair will be worthless. Turn it, twist it as you like; if the Imperial Parliament is to fairly discuss all matters that come before it, then it must limit its functions to Imperial matters. The power of the Executive has increased, and is increasing; and as it increases, so is the power of the people, through its appointed representatives, decreasing. To go back to one of the instances of an undiscussed clause that I have cited. Avowedly the constituencies did not decide that there should be an Upper House in Ireland elected by a few comparatively rich men, for at the last election no one knew that such a proposal was in contemplation. Far from having declared themselves in favour of it, the Radical majority had declared for one man one vote, and against any special voting power being given to the rich man on account of his wealth. Was it then reasonable that such a proviso should have been forced down the throats of the people's representatives, without one word being urged in favour of it?

I prefer the Bill of 1885 to that of 1893. The first was a well-conceived scheme of Home Rule, and represented Mr. Gladstone's own views. I do not know exactly whose views the Bill of 1893 represents. But, be the cooks who they may, too many of them have spoilt the broth. The first Bill had in it the advantage of finality, and it left to us Home Rule in our affairs. The second Bill has no finality, and it allows eighty Irish Members to come over when they please and kindly settle all our local affairs for us, having themselves secured the boon of settling some of their local affairs themselves without let or hindrance from us. We must take human nature for what it is, and the Irish are neither worse nor better than other human beings. As Irishmen, making the interests of Ireland their first consideration, is it not obvious that they will make their votes upon British local matters, not dependent upon merits, about which they know nothing and care less, but upon Irish issues coming before the Imperial Parliament? If Canada had no Parliament of its own, there would be grounds for the Canadians being represented in our Imperial Parliament. But, having a Legislature, what could be more absurd than that they should be represented in the Imperial Parliament in such numbers that they would have it in their power practically to settle our liquor traffic or our system of education? The present Bill is not Mr. Gladstone's—it is that of Mr. Gladstone and Co., and the Co. has spoilt it.

The plan proposed in the United States of increasing the currency by allowing any bank to deposit United States bonds, and to issue an equivalent of notes on consideration of the bonds bearing no interest whilst deposited, is one which surely might be adopted by us. If, then, our banks against the deposit were to issue one pound and ten shilling notes, I believe that they would be greedily absorbed by the public. We should thus increase our circulating medium, and save interest upon a considerable portion of our debt. It is true, as the bi-metallists say, that the country would be better off were the volume of our currency increased. What is not true, however, is that this can be done with advantage by throwing a vast quantity of silver into circulation, and maintaining its value artificially by establishing a fixed ratio between gold and silver. The mistake that the bi-metallists make is not to perceive the difference between ratio and value. The value of a metal depends upon cost of production. A ratio between two metals can be established by agreeing to exchange one against the other at a fixed rate. Suppose that any State in the world were to offer to exchange an ounce of gold against a pound of silver. The ratio would remain an ounce to a pound, so long as this exchange were open to all comers. But what would be the result? Supposing that it cost less to produce a pound of silver than an ounce of gold, the production of gold would cease.

In every country where there is a small note circulation the note is preferred to coin, provided that the note is represented by its full equivalent in something—be it metal or be it bonds—because notes are more portable than gold; and provided also that the note circulation based on bonds is not in excess of the internal requirements of the country. Having a debt, why should we not use it, in order to increase our circulation at no cost to ourselves, but rather at a profit to ourselves? In order to make the security on which the notes would be issued against bonds absolutely secure, we might allow issue against two-thirds face value of consols, paying to the bankers who deposit them one-third of the interest on them.

There is another wasteful absurdity in regard to our circulating medium, which ought to be looked into. Silver is a mere token coinage, the shilling being intrinsically worth far less than the twentieth of a pound. The more shillings, therefore, that are coined and absorbed the greater is our profit. But why have silver tokens? Why not have notes? In this case the profit would be far larger. It is much easier to make a die and to coin shillings than it is to make a complicated engraved plate, and to strike off notes. The danger of spurious notes, therefore, being thrown into circulation is far less than of an issue of spurious shillings. Consequently, were notes to replace silver tokens there would be far less risk of our coinage being augmented by the operations of coiners. So large is the profit on coining shillings, and so comparatively easy is their production, that I have not the slightest doubt that a considerable percentage of our silver coins have never come from the Mint.

Were I Chancellor of the Exchequer, I should at once make my country a present of fifty, or one hundred millions, by allowing the issue of notes against deposit of consols, and by substituting paper tokens for silver tokens. As I am not, I make a present of the plan to Sir William Harcourt.

We really must realise that our possession of India does not necessarily imply that we have any special rights over the rest of Asia. Very possibly it would be convenient to us were no other European Power to put its foot within a thousand miles or two of our Eastern possessions, but such a doctrine is not likely to be accepted by the world. I thought the French foolish to endeavour to carve out an Eastern empire for themselves; but, if they think otherwise, it is not likely that they will alter their views. We seized on Burmah, suppressed the King, annexed the country, and treated all Burmese who struck a blow for the independence of their land as rebels. Our plea practically was that it would be advantageous to us to become the owners of this kingdom, and I remember that it was frequently urged that there would be a clear profit on the transaction. About two years ago it was suggested that Siam should be included within the sphere of our influence. The suggestion, however, did not find favour with the then Tory Government. On the eastern side of Siam are the French possessions. The French appear to be treating Siam much as we treated Burmah. Great is the indignation of our Jingoes.

For my part, I hardly see how we can legitimately complain. What is sauce to the English goose is sauce to the French gander. Either we have a defensive treaty with an independent kingdom, or we have not. If we have, we are bound to defend it against aggression: if we have not, we derive no right from the fact that we import into it certain goods. As a matter of fact, I believe that in this particular case most of our imports consist of opium, which is consumed by the Chinese residing in Burmah. We shall, therefore, do well to accept the inevitable. It is, indeed, not without certain advantages. An Independent Siam will be a bone of contention between us and the French. If France acquires a protectorate over it, the bone will belong to France, and this is far better than that she and we should snarl and intrigue over it.

But attention being drawn to India owing to the Siamese question, at once that of Herat comes to the fore. Who does not remember the excitement of our Jingoes over Pendjeh? It is not, however, perhaps known that whilst we were insisting that its possession by Russia would lead to the fall of our Indian Empire, the Ameer of Afghanistan telegraphed that, far from wishing that it should be included in Afghanistan, he preferred that it should not be. Russia has now for some years owned it, and we have forgotten all about it. Eventually Russia will have Herat. It lies on the Russian side of the mountain chain that protects our north-western frontier, and it would be impossible for us to defend it. What, then, is the use of our snapping and snarling? The district in which it is situated might be made very productive by irrigation. We object to this, because we wish deserts to separate us from Russia. This is hardly in accordance with civilisation. Herat might be useful to Russia as a frontier fortress, but it is absolutely useless to us, and, as I have said, indefensible.

What amuses me in all this is that our Jingo-Tory Press, which a little while ago lauded Lord Rosebery to the skies, and insisted that he would force the Liberals to carry out the Jingo creed in all parts of the world, are now abusing him because he appears to be treating the Asiatic question with sound common-sense, and does not allow himself to be made an instrument by Mr. Curzon, and such-like gentlemen, who, having travelled in the East, consider that we ought to rush into war with France, Russia, or any other Power that interferes with the strange view, that we own, or ought to own all Asia.

The hatred and distrust with which the Royal Niger Company is regarded by all independent Englishmen having interests in that portion of Africa are strikingly shown in the correspondence which I have received in consequence of the reference to the matter in last week's Truth. I give as a sample the following letter from a well-known Liverpool firm:—

Old Castle Buildings, 26, Precsons-row, Liverpool,
August 31, 1893.

Dear Sir,—We are glad to see that you are interesting yourself in the affairs of the Niger Chartered Company.

In the interests of Free Trade and native rights the Press should urge the removal of what is no less than an insuperable obstacle to the progress of the district in question.

The mercantile community of Liverpool—which is, as you are aware, the English centre of the West African trade—has persistently set forth to successive Governments the obstacle sented to free commercial enterprise by the granting of charter powers, which enable the Company to manipulate the authority given, to the extinction of all rival trade.

The Niger was found a free river when this Company unfortunately got the Government of the day to grant them chartered powers. It has now become closed to all commerce but their own. This is a fact, and no professions of the Company as to their honestly carrying out the provisions of the charter can set aside the inference to be drawn from this fact.

They found a numerous class of traders getting a livelihood in the river, and an active enterprise at work in its development, which they have totally annihilated.—Yours truly,

JOHN HOLT & Co.

Another correspondent from the same quarter, who dwells specially upon the dark dealings of the Niger Company with the natives, also remarks, in regard to the tariffs, that although African merchants complain, with good reason, of the duties imposed in the French settlements on the West Coast of Africa, yet "these are as nothing compared to the exorbitant tariffs in force, contrary to every principle of free trade, in the territories under the sway of the Royal Niger Company." The Charter of this Company, and the powers conferred under it, must, I suppose, now be accepted as unalterable facts, and any attempt to modify either of them would doubtless provoke a storm of indignation among all the champions of vested interests—more especially as Mr. Chamberlain is a large shareholder in the Company. This, however, only makes it the duty of a Liberal Government to restrain with a firm hand any abuse of the Company's powers, or any usurpation of new territorial rights; and for this reason all bonâ-fide complaints of independent traders against the Company ought to receive a most attentive hearing.

SCRUTATOR.

ABOUT ONE E. P. BARRETT.

BEGGING-LETTERS have been circulated in enormous quantities during the last few months from "St. Saviour's, Stockwell Park-road," by an individual signing himself E. P. Barrett. Mr. Barrett does not beg for himself, but for two ladies, Mrs. Mitchinson and Miss Hogarth. The following is the text of his appeal on their behalf:—

"MADAME,—Will you kindly excuse a total stranger addressing you? But my attention has been lately directed to the widow of a Vicar of the Church of England—Mrs. Mitchinson, who, with her sister, Miss Hogarth, is now at 3, Kemerton-road, Herne Hill, S.E.

"Mrs. Mitchinson is the widow of the late Rev. Henry Clarke Mitchinson, M.A., who died a few months ago, and who at the time of his decease, and for twenty-six years previously, was the beloved Vicar of Christ Church, Rotherhithe.

"Since his death Mrs. Mitchinson has found her means painfully straightened (sic), and I happen to know that at the present time the circumstances of these sisters (who are also descendants of the famous Hogarth) are not only trying, but actually distressing. With a laudable desire to help themselves, they have sought to obtain lodgers, but hitherto without success, so that they are out of the poorer thus far by the amount thus spent in writing and advertising.

"You will, I am sure, forgive me for writing this note. I am greatly concerned for them, and can only say if you are so good as to send me a small sum for their benefit, how thankful I shall be to hand it to the widow, who shall herself, if you wish it, forward you an acknowledgment.

"The Lord Bishop has written expressing his sympathy, and the Charity Organisation Society, after due inquiry, has provided £1 for the purchase of a few necessary articles.

"I beg to enclose my card, and with much anxiety on their account shall await your kind reply.—Faithfully yours,

E. P. BARRETT.

As regards the two ladies here mentioned, I desire neither to say nor suggest anything unfavourable. The account given of their circumstances above is substantially accurate; where it is inaccurate is in regard rather to what is omitted than what is stated. It is true that Mrs. Mitchinson is in straitened circumstances, but she is by no means destitute. Her husband left her a legacy of £100, his furniture, and the residue of his estate, which produces about £50 a year. She and her sister have taken a small house, and endeavour to let lodgings. In this apparently they have not been successful; but they are not reduced to beggary, and probably they would not beg on their own account.

Who, then, is Mr. E. P. Barrett who is begging for them so vigorously? He is, or was formerly, a Nonconformist minister. Before that he was a jeweller. A few years ago he issued certain appeals on his own account. In 1889 he offered his services to a local committee of the Charity Organisation Society as paid agent at a salary of 25s. per week. From these circumstances it would appear (1) that Mr. Barrett is hardly in a position to devote his time and labour gratuitously to collecting money on behalf of other persons in "straightened" circumstances; (2) that he is hardly a gentleman of such independent and substantial position as to be the most desirable trustee who could be found for a charitable fund of this character. On this view of the circumstances, having learned so much about Mr. Barrett, I sent a representative to interview both the ladies and the gentleman. From the former my representative learned that Mr. Barrett was in the habit of handing them over a pound or two from time to time, the total amount received up to the present time being between £30 and £40. From Mr. Barrett himself my representative endeavoured to obtain some sort of account of his receipts. At first he stated that he could not give the amount of his receipts without reference to his accounts, which unfortunately were not at hand at the moment. My representative said that he was not particular to a pound or two, and would be satisfied if Mr. Barrett would give him a round figure. The reverend gentleman then absolutely refused to mention any sum, pleading that the question was not a fair one. Nothing more could be extracted from him.

On this recital of facts, any charitable person will, I think, see that there is no reason at all why money should be sent for the relief of Mrs. Mitchinson and her sister, and every reason why such money, if it be sent at all, should not be sent through the Rev. E. P. Barrett. I hope that what I have said will prevent any more being sent, and I shall be glad if it should also lead to my receiving additional information concerning Mr. Barrett himself, whose character and history seem to stand in need of further elucidation.

AN IMMACULATE FARM-PUPIL AGENCY.

Although for some little time past I have had no occasion to refer to the matter, my readers are aware that the traffic in "farm pupils" for exportation to the Colonies—chiefly Canada—has been the subject of frequent warnings in TRUTH. I have warned parents and guardians until I am almost tired, that the system of paying heavy premiums in order to have lads taught farming in Canada is a radically rotten one; that most of the agencies established over here for the purpose of placing pupils on this system are frauds; and that the only rational way of educating a lad as a farmer is to send him out to study the business as a farm labourer. Similar advice has been from time to time given by the representatives of the Canadian Government over here, who uniformly discountenance all agencies engaged in the farm-pupil traffic. My attention has been lately called, however, to an agency of this kind, which claims to have been specially favoured with the approval of the Dominion Government, and as such a claim implies either that this concern is unique of its kind, or that it is sailing under false colours, it seems to merit some special notice.

The Agency is question is styled "The Anglo-Canadian Farm Pupil Association." Its offices are at 46, High-street, Sheffield, where Mr. Henry Howden, F.S.A., officiates as Secretary. The "President" of the Association is "Mr. James Aspdin, J.P.," and it boasts of a "Superintendent in Canada," in the person of the Rev. David Armstrong, D.D. The prospectuses and leaflets issued by this Association all suggest that it is something essentially different from any other Association in the same line of business. Among these documents is the following:—

THE ANGLO-CANADIAN FARM PUPIL ASSOCIATION.

CAUTION.

Having been called upon so frequently to assist young men who had been induced to come out here under false pretences by ignorant adventurers in England, professing to be able to procure for their victims permanent homes and employment in this province as farm pupils, I consider it my duty to caution both young men and their parents and guardians against the pretensions of such persons. Having made searching inquiries respecting their antecedents, I find that these pretenders have no practical knowledge of Canada or Canadian farming; that they have had no personal experience whatever in the supervision of farm pupils; are not in a position to carry out what they profess to do; they furnish no reliable references; and that guarantees given by such persons or so-called associations are utterly worthless. These facts may be fully established if due inquiries are made by intending farm pupils, therefore those entrusting their future in the hands of ignorant impostors can only blame themselves if the result of such a course is attended with disaster.

The Anglo-Canadian Farm Pupil Association, established in 1882, is the only organisation of the kind recognised by the Dominion Government. Its affairs are managed entirely by gentlemen of established reputation, who have themselves had many years' actual experience as pioneer settlers and in practical agriculture on this continent. It enjoys the entire confidence of our farmers here, and its system has met with the hearty approval and support of the pupils placed under it, as may be proved by reference to their friends in Great Britain, the names and addresses of whom may be obtained at the offices of the Association. These facts afford ample evidence of the reliable nature of the organisation, whose great success has only been achieved by the thoroughly practical and trustworthy way in which its work has been done in the past, this being a sufficient guarantee that its future undertakings will be faithfully and efficiently carried out in the same creditable manner.

DAVID ARMSTRONG, D.D.

Mooretown, Ontario, Canada.

Another similar document is in the form of a letter, which, according to Mr. Henry Howden, the secretary, has been addressed by the same Rev. David Armstrong, D.D., "to a number of clergymen in this country to whom that gentleman is personally known." The letter contains the following paragraph:—

Of late years many emigration schemes, on a somewhat similar basis to the one I refer to, have sprung into existence, but their fees were exorbitant and their promises so unreliable that Sir Charles Tupper, our High Commissioner, issued a circular letter condemning alike all private emigration schemes, but as I fully satisfied the Canadian Government that the one recognised by me was thoroughly reliable and very moderate in its charges, I received an official letter from the Department of Agriculture (dated May 30, 1885) exempting it from the condemnation referred to, and endorsing all emigration work done under my personal supervision. The system originated by Mr. James Aspdin, J.P., of this province, is the practical one, and under it the work is carried through in the most reliable manner.

A similar statement is made by Mr. Howden, the secretary, in a letter written by him a few months ago to a gentleman who was in negotiation respecting the settlement of his sons in Canada under the auspices of the Association:—

Some time ago, when the Canadian Government passed condemnation on all farm pupil agencies, both Dr. Armstrong and Mr. Aspdin were several days at the Government Houses in Ottawa, and not only received exemption, but were commended for the good work they were doing.

The manner in which these statements are put forward, and the fact that they are attested by the signature of a Doctor of Divinity, renders their accuracy a matter of public importance. Certain circumstances which have come under my notice tend to raise doubts as to their accuracy, and it is only fair that Dr. Armstrong and Messrs. Aspdin and Howden should have an opportunity of setting these doubts at rest.

The gentleman above referred to, who was in negotiation respecting the settlement of his sons, asked Mr. Howden for further information as to the circumstances under which the Association was "recognised by the Dominion Government." Mr. Howden replied:—

It was after waiting some days at Ottawa that the Rev. Dr. A and Mr. Aspdin succeeded in gaining an audience with the Government and explaining the good work they had and were doing, the work of this Association being carried on by philanthropic and not mercenary motive. Our interview was a private one, and the result private also. No Government is likely to undo one day what they had done the day before.

In reply to a further question, Mr. Howden repeated that this is "entirely a private matter," adding magnanimously, "it is not our wish to say a word against the doings of any one who has been so exceedingly kind to us." Now, what on earth does this mean? What purpose could possibly be served by Dr. Armstrong and Mr. Aspdin hanging about several days for an interview which was not only private, but of which the result was to be private also? What use was that to the Association? Again, if the result was "private," what do the Association mean by blazoning it abroad in all their publications? What does Dr. Armstrong mean by embodying the result in a circular which he has addressed to clergymen all over England? And who ever heard before of a Government Department embodying a "private" communication of this kind in "an official letter?" I trust that Mr. Howden will endeavour to answer these questions, for on the face of it his contention that this was "a private matter" appears to be nonsense.

But this is not all. It appears that so far back as 1889 an inquiry was addressed to the Canadian Government as to the genuineness of the claim of the Anglo-Canadian Farm Pupil Association. The following reply was written and signed by the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture:—

I am directed by the Minister of Agriculture to inform you in reply to your letter of the 20th ult. that the Rev. Dr. Armstrong of Mooretown, Ontario, is simply known to this Department by name, but the Government has no control over the organisation referred to by you as the Anglo-Canadian Farm Pupil Association, and it is in no wise recognised by the Dominion Government.

This communication was endorsed in a letter written by the High Commissioner for Canada on May 8 last, in which it is further stated "it would appear ..."

sociation to which you called attention was never at any e formally recognised by the Canadian Government." It ll be seen at once that this gives the lie direct to the etension of Mr. Howden that his Association is "the ly organisation of the kind recognised by the Canadian overnment." The least that this gentleman and Dr. rmstrong can now do is to publish the "official letter ted May 30, 1889," in which the Association is empted from the condemnation passed upon other encies of the kind. It will be universally admitted at after the Government has officially repudiated Dr. rmstrong and his colleagues, he has a perfect right to do is, even though the official letter was a private one.

Some explanation might well be given at the same me respecting the testimonials published by the Associa-n. A sheet of these is issued, but the initials and t the names of the writers are given. A note at the ad of them states, however, that "Visitors may see y of the letters from which the following extracts ve been taken, and numerous others on the same bject," which disposes of any suggestion that they e private communications. Parents and guardians are so informed that as soon as they have decided that he occupation and vacancies" meet their views, ferences to others whose boys have gone out will given. The gentleman to whom I have referred ove was given the names of two ladies whose sons d gone out. One of them did not answer; the other swer was not satisfactory, as the son was over twenty ars of age. The gentleman next suggested to Mr. owden that he should give him the names of two or ree clergymen whose sons had been placed. Mr. owden replied that they did not do this, as clergymen e too busy and do not reply. Now, among the printed stimonials are three purporting to come from clergymen, the Rev. S. C. S.," "the Rev. C. R. C.," and "the Rev. L. C." The original letters, it is alleged, can be seen the office. What objection can there be, then, to ving an inquirer the names and addresses of the riters? Why should those who desire to ascertain hether the testimonials are genuine be expected to vel to Sheffield for the purpose?

As the Anglo-Canadian Farm Pupil Association is to be garded, according to the Secretary, as a philanthropic d not a commercial undertaking, I should be sorry to ggest that it is not as beneficent an institution as it etends to be. But anybody can see that the above facts ise questions which require to be cleared up, and I ould strongly urge Mr. Howden to clear them up at ce. "Philanthropic" though its motives are, the ssociation charges from £17. 10s. to £27 (according to e class of passage) for every farm pupil it ships, and no tending emigrant will care to pay this amount even to a ilanthropist until his philanthropy is entirely above spicion. Even a payment of £17. 10s. for a steerage ssage may leave a margin for profit, and it would be interesting to know to what philanthropic purposes such profits, if there are any, are devoted. I hope, therefore, that while Mr. Howden is dealing with the points mentioned above, he will also inform me who, besides himself, Mr. Aspdin, and Dr. Armstrong, compose the "Association," and forward me a few of its recent annual reports and balance sheets, in order to show what profits are made, and how they are disposed of. When all this has been done, I shall be happy to do what the Canadian Government denies that it has done, and "exempt" the Association from the condemnation which has been passed in TRUTH upon all agencies of this nature.

CAUTION.—The Goldsmiths' & Silversmiths' Company, 112, Regent-street, W., beg to state that they have purchased the whole of the business of the Goldsmiths' Alliance, Limited (A. B. Savory & Sons), late of Cornhill, but the stock being old and unsuitable for the Company's trade was disposed of to the Public by auction at Christie's, and any statement to the contrary is inaccurate and misleading. The Company, having also bought the dies of the Goldsmiths' Alliance, Limited, is the only firm in a position to supply the Goldsmith's Alliance patterns.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

FONTAINEBLEAU UP TO DATE.

THE late Lord Lytton and Prince Hohenlohe preferred Paris in the August heats, when every one was out of town. It is certainly enjoyable when one has it all to oneself, or pretty nearly so. Still, one is glad to get away from it, and the time to do this is when days are long and nights cool in the country. The June and July nights are too short for coolness anywhere, but the August nights are calm, quiet, and refreshing. I thought Fontainebleau would be a nice place to seek a change at, but the hotels and boarding-houses were crowded, and there was not a vehicle to be had for drives in the forest, all the carriages being hired eight days or more in advance. However, a hospitable friend, a Fontainebleausian, unexpectedly turned up and insisted on my staying at his villa for a few days. The house was the perfection of country quarters, and its grounds opened on a lovely spot in the forest, watered with a purling rill. This meant freshness of air and vegetation. When tired of Nature, we fell back upon the show-places of the town, which, the Palace excepted, were new to me. An old house, wherein used to lodge the Secretaries of Henry IV., was, with many other abodes of interest, opened to me. The present occupant is a brother of M. Bapst, ex-Crown jeweller, who has not modernised it over-much. What one most admires is the old wainscoted hall and staircase, with banisters of massive carved oak. La Belle Gabrielle had a house close by. It is remarkable for the forged iron used in the gates, in the railings that separate the courtyard from the street, and in the balconies and banisters of stone stairs which have a stately, but, unless in fine weather, a too severe and chilling aspect. Italian architects, I daresay, as well as Italian painters, came to France when Fontainebleau was in its glory, and for some time after. I expressed surprise to my friend at the lovely Gabrielle not living in the Palace. There was no Queen Consort in her time, and even the austere Sully was half-reconciled to the idea of Henri IV. making her position a regular one. "Yes; but until that was done it showed her good sense and head for business to be in a house of her own. The money expended on it was sure not to return to the State if Henri predeceased her, and if he were unfaithful she had gear to fall back upon." Madame de Pompadour had rooms in the Palace of Versailles and the buildings in which the President now lodges were erected and furnished for her. But she had two châteaux—one at Bellevue and the other at Celle St. Cloud, near Versailles—and the exquisite bijou villa at Fontainebleau, which is now owned by Comte de Gramont d'Aster. Snugness and elegance were aimed at by her. The wainscotings are deeply carved in oak and painted white, as in the living-rooms of Louis XV. at Versailles. In her time there was no dining-room. Dining-rooms are a rather modern invention, and I fancy were borrowed from England. The hall, in old French chateaux, was the place in which meals were taken in common, and very often the kitchen, for the sake of warmth and getting dishes hot from the stewpan or the spit. The hotel de Luynes dates from the time of Francis I., as the salamander which enters into its stone and wood carvings shows. The Prieuré, where Comte and Comtesse d'Haussonville live, was the dwelling of the pious Dauphin, son of Louis XV. It is two miles from the Palace, and well out of the town. He got as far as he could out of the way of Madame de Pompadour. His Saxon wife was fond of the country, and they both tried to work out their salvation according to their own ideas in this—for the time in which they lived—solitude. La Prieuré has been magnificently fitted up by its actual possessors. Evidences of wealth and of modern ideas of comfort, not to say of luxury, are everywhere apparent. Electricity is brought into play in different ways. The library must be a great resource in wet weather. The Dauphin hated books and loved music. He had a baritone voice, which he in private devoted to psalm and hymn singing. But etiquette prevented him consecrating it to a devotional use in the Chapel Royal. The late Comte de Chambord had such a voice.

We took a drive over to the peach and vine growing commune of Thomery. I then went to call on Rosa Bonheur at Poz. Thomery grapes are the delicate thin-skinned species produced by the King's trellis at Fontainebleau. But the vines bearing them only date from 1824, when the good-natured Charles X. ordered cuttings from the Francis I. vine to be given to any rustic asking for them. The whole district may be called a peach and vine factory. The climate is ideal for fruit-production, it being sheltered from north and west winds. Fruit is grown everywhere. Walls skirting the highways and byways are covered with vines on the roadside when they face in the right direction. There is nothing rustic in the place, walls running in slanting directions in parallels at distances of ten yards. The shady sides are devoted to apple-trees, whose deep roots do not struggle for existence against the superficial roots of the vine. Where the soil does not suit the vine it suits the peach. Twice a year whitewash is used on the walls to kill the insects. Every wall is roofed with tiles to protect it from damp and to shelter the fruit-tree. Hot-house culture is resorted to also. But you are told that the fruit it produces is not to be compared in the subtle delicacy of its flavour and bouquet to what is sun-grown. One is struck with the healthiness of the Thomery children. It is said to be due to this fruit diet. The people of the place, having quantities of grapes and peaches which cannot be sent to market, live a good deal on them. Their air of well-being confirms Sir Isaac Holden's idea about sun-potentiality being locked up in fruit, and converted into nervous force when eaten by an animal, human or other.

Rosa Bonheur has survived most of her brothers and sisters. There were seven of them when she set out on her career. She is an old woman, small, sunburnt, and wrinkled as a peasant. The grey hair is cut short, and is still thick. As she wears a blouse, she dons a cloth cap. The ribbon of the Legion of Honour is pinned on her breast. It was given to her by the Empress Eugenie, in speaking of whom she heaved a sigh, and said, "Pauvre femme! Elle est si seule!" The accent of Bordeaux hangs on her tongue, but she has not Gascon loquacity. Her eye is "attentive," and is still bright. Somebody spoke of her masculine habiliments. She said, "In my situation they were the most convenient and decent. I should have missed all chances of success had I had to bear the weights of the skirts in fashion thirty-six years ago." This accomplished woman has two studios. One is like a stable, lighted from the roof. "I can be here," she says, "avec mes bonnes bêtes." She is fond of her cows, her horses, her gazelles, but does not like carnivoræ. They are only in their place in Africa or the jungle of India. Rosa Bonheur has a poet's eye for an ox. It appears to her a strong, plodding, patient being, made to be useful in a homely, unobtrusive way. The cow is the foster-mother of the human race, and the ox the humble labouring auxiliary. Rosa Bonheur's kine know her voice, and low when she pats them on the neck. They are kept in the open air when weather permits. Her studies are infinite in number. As she is rich enough to live according to her tastes, and to help relatives according to her generosity, she has greatly left off working for the dealers. Now and then she executes an order for some English or American amateur or dealer; but she won't bargain, and if they are not satisfied with her terms she says bon soir. The Paris Boulevard press she holds in horror. Those who write her up to-day would write her down to-morrow unless she sent them sops they might require. I think her studies will add immensely to her fame when they get known. But that will not be in her lifetime. Her heirs can do with them as they please. She looks tired, and I daresay is tired. Her vicarious maternity has been a source of satisfaction to her, but she has not got out of it and out of her wide-world fame all she craved for. However, she has no cause to complain. Her life has been one of high interests and satisfied instincts. She was a born lover of Nature, of animals, and learned how to use the pencil and paint-brush as easily as she learned to read. Her lot has been cast in pleasant places, and with relatives to whom she clave. She had also devoted friends. For society she had never any liking, and the genteel classes and she were out of touch. They were conventional, and she was only happy in being unconventional, and gauging her own gait just as she chose. Rosa Bonheur scorns the interview mode of advertisement. "I can never get reconciled to it," she says. She has long withdrawn from the Salon; not that she fancied her works too good or not good enough to send them; but her brother and sister, both of whom reached eminence more than a quarter of a century ago, were regular exhibitors. Two of one family she thought enough, and she did not want to get in their way.

The plague of wasps has been severely felt in the fruit gardens of Thomery. It is very hard to burn out their nests with petroleum, so many of them being on the verge of the forest, which for six months has been inflammable as tinder. What the rustics do is to hang bottles of sugared water on the trellises. Wasps go into them and get drowned. They are also lured to destruction by wine and water, and, better still, brandy and water, for wasps are inebriates. Their love of decayed fruit is to be explained from the alcohol in the fermenting or rotten part. A splendid glass wasp-trap is made with a bulb-shaped bottle with at bottom a deep "kick," having the top part cut out. The neck should be kept stopped up, and the bulbous bottle made to stand on three legs, and the "kick" filled with some intoxicating liquid. The wasps creep up the "kick" into liquid. As they cannot, should they get out of it and climb up the side of the phial, escape by the neck, where the alcoholic fumes are concentrated, they get more drunk and fall back to die the death that George, Duke of Clarence, aspired to.

Vipers swarm this year in the rocky and heathery parts of the Fontainebleau Forest. An alpenstock is a good precaution against them, as it enables one to grope one's way, and so reduces the danger of stepping on one of these noxious creatures. The venom under the tooth is, it appears, secreted more plentifully in hot than in cool weather. Dogs are constantly being bitten, and with deadly effect. An adult would not be likely to die from a viper's bite, but he would be in a bad way for at least six months.

On quitting Fontainebleau I made, en route for Aix, an excursion in the Forest of Morvan. It used to be the cheapest place in France, but American artists overrun it now and have made it dear. The inns are primitive in all respects and the cooking is the worst that could be found anywhere between Dunkirk and Marseilles. But the scenery is beautiful. One has rocky hills, woodland and grassy glades, peaceful tarns, and gushing springs.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

DEAR LADY BETTY,—M. Decrais, the newly-appointed Ambassador of France to London, arrived in England last week. On account of the then critical state of Duke Ernest of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha the Queen postponed until the Friday granting audience to M. Decrais for the purpose of his presenting his letters of credence, by which time the death of Duke Ernest, however, occurred. This event rendered it necessary for the proposed audience to be postponed again, and M. Decrais, after staying some days in London, returned to France without accomplishing the object of his visit. This contretemps is much to be regretted, for it appears that, ignorant of our Court and its ways, the French Ambassador felt that a personal objection to him has influenced her Majesty in acting in a manner most unusual in diplomatic etiquette. Moreover, in the present state of excitable irritation which prevails in France, this unintentional slight towards their Ambassador might aggravate the bad feeling which already exists against us in that country, the more so as the incident might by some people be connected with the controversy respecting Siam. Of course, neither personal feeling against M. Decrais nor any irritation with regard to the Siamese difficulty prompted the Queen to act as she has done in this instance. It merely happened that her Majesty did not feel able to grant the required audience, owing to the illness and subsequent death of her brother-in-law, the Duke Ernest. M. Decrais's son has remained in London, and it is expected that M. Decrais himself will almost immediately return here, when he will present his letters of credence to the Queen at Balmoral instead of waiting to do this until the Court returns some two months hence to Windsor.

The members of the Junior Carlton Club are at present enjoying the hospitality of the Conservative Club in St. James's-street, whilst their own premises in Pall Mall are being put into thorough repair. Meanwhile, the new decorations in the hall of the Conservative Club are in progress. It will be remembered that last autumn the task of supervising the redecoration of this hall was entrusted to a specially-appointed committee. When their labours were concluded and the club was re-opened the members expressed almost unanimous disapproval, and eventually a general meeting was held when it was decided to instruct the Committee to take steps to restore the hall so far as was practical to its original condition. Having spent £2,400 in white marble last year, the Committee are now about to spend another £1,000 in painting over this marble, which, at first sight, would seem to be in questionable taste. However, both the Club and the Committee are to be congratulated upon having after a year's deliberation discovered a solution to the problem which finds favour with the large majority of the members.

In the discussion in the Times upon the misuse of words, attention has been called to the common use in England of the French word chaperon, in the feminine—chaperone. This, of course, is a quite correct criticism. Chaperon is a masculine word, meaning a hood, as, for instance, in the celebrated nursery tale, "Le Chaperon Rouge." A hood being used to protect the wearer, the word has come to be used figuratively in the sense of one who "protects" another at social gatherings and entertainments. In France, chaperon is not frequently used, however, now in this sense, and, indeed, when so used, it is regarded in the light more or less of a slang term. To talk of chaperone in the feminine, as we do generally in England, is altogether wrong, for whether the chaperon is a man or a woman the word itself still retains its original gender. Still, I maintain that when a word is appropriated from a foreign language to describe some shade of meaning which we are otherwise unable to express, there is no reason to be too particular as to what modifications either in spelling or in signification we may find it advisable to make for our own convenience. But this does not apply to transforming chaperon, a hood, into a masculine or feminine word according to the sex of the person that wears it. This is obvious.

Sir Hubert Jerningham, K.C.M.G., the recently-appointed Governor of Mauritius, has been created by His Holiness the Pope a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Gregory the Great in recognition of the services which Sir Hubert rendered to the Catholic institutions in Mauritius after the disastrous hurricane of 1892. Membership of this Order is greatly prized in the Catholic world. Lord Bute is one of the few Knights Grand Cross of St. Gregory in England. Of course, though permitted to accept the honour, Sir Hubert will be unable to wear the insignia of the Order in his official capacity.

The following advertisement, which appeared in the Morning Post on Monday, is in every way attractive:—"Will any philanthropic person without kindred adopt pretty, bright little girl? 22, orphan, good family, owns small income," &c., &c.—Believe me to be, very truly yours, MARMADUKE.

SANITARY SURVEYS.—Fee for inspection and Report in London, 2Gs.—The Sanitary Engineering Co., 65, Victoria-st., Westminster.

SPORTING NOTES.

THE publication of the weights for the Cesarewitch and Cambridgeshire has been followed by the appearance of a long list of quotations on the former handicap, speculation being no doubt stimulated by the fact that there was practically no betting on the Leger. These early transactions simply represent the harum-scarum fancies of the public, who bet in absolute ignorance of the intentions of owners, and they are only misleading. It is quite certain that no genuine stable commission is yet in the market for the Cesarewitch, and the Cambridgeshire may be left entirely alone until after the decision of the longer handicap, and this abstinence is the more to be recommended because many animals which are sure to be well backed for the Cambridgeshire if they "go for" that race are also engaged in the far more valuable Duke of York Handicap at Kempton Park.

Why Major Egerton has handicapped Sir Hugo it is impossible to understand, seeing that Lord Bradford's horse was struck out of all his engagements several weeks ago. That the Cesarewitch horses are principally a moderate lot is shown by the fact that out of ninety-four which have been handicapped, only fifteen have 8 st. and upwards, and among them is Callistrate (8 st. 2 lb.), who is estimated to be the best three-year-old in the race, and he is made to give Wolff's Crag 2 lb., and Childwick, Self Sacrifice, and Son of a Gun each 11 lb. For the Cambridgeshire we find Callistrate handicapped at 8 st. 7 lb., or 6 lb. below Marcion and Isinglass, and 2 lb. below Laodamia, who has been well looked after indeed, considering that in the City and Suburban she was let off with 6 st. 7 lb.! If half the tales which were circulated at York about Self Sacrifice are true, she ought to have a good chance with 7 st. 5 lb. Ragimunde (who won so easily two years ago) has 7 st. 10 lb., and he is decidedly very well in, and Red Eyes has been strangely favoured in being allotted the same weight. La Flèche is by no means out of the Cesarewitch with 9 st. 7 lb. if she has recovered her form, but I doubt whether she will start in view of her other engagements.

The Cambridgeshire will be a very difficult and dangerous race to meddle with. Orme is, of course, top-weight with 9 st. 13 lb., but he is far more likely to run for the Duke of York Handicap at Kempton Park, which is worth twice as much as the Cambridgeshire, and the distance will suit the horse better, added to which his weight of 10 st. 2 lb. is really equal to 9 st. 9 lb. at Newmarket, for the shorter race is a 7 lb. heavier handicap. La Flèche is given 9 st. 7 lb., and 4 lb. below her is Suspender, who is not likely to stand training; and I suspect that Haut Brion (7 st.) will be the best from Bedford Cottage. Comedy is well in on her best form with 8 st. 6 lb.

A new volume of the General Stud Book, being the seventeenth, was published a few days ago, and it contains much interesting information. The last volume appeared in 1889, and since that period the business of breeding thoroughbreds has so much increased that there are now actually about 1,400 breeders of blood stock, a number which is likely to be very largely reduced before the close of the present year. Last year, 4,930 mares were accounted for, as against 3,917 in 1889. The list of "Horses sent Abroad" fills sixty two pages, and the exportation of thoroughbreds has been increasing, as in the 1889 volume forty-nine pages sufficed for this register. The United States and Belgium have bought horses very largely of late years, and there has been an increase in the trade with France and with Australia, but there has been a falling off in the number sent to South America and to Germany.

A twaddling article, entitled "Blair Athol," has been going round the papers, which is only worthy of notice because it contains a fiction which has been a hundred times contradicted and exposed. It is asserted that when Blair Athol was sold in 1872, after the death of Mr. Thomas Blenkiron, "the foreigners tried hard to secure him." This is utterly untrue, for no foreigner was a bidder for Blair Athol, either directly or indirectly, although both the German and the Hungarian commissioners were importuned to compete for him. If it is now worth while to print a dissertation upon Blair Athol, surely the true story of his Grand Prix defeat might have been related. This tragedy is attributed merely to the fact that Blair Athol had been "upset" by his journey to France, but everybody knew very well that there was a strange secret history of that race.

I am told that Lord Rosebery does not intend to start the colt by Hampton out of Illuminata at Manchester, but that he will be reserved for the Middle Park Plate, which is a very wise decision. The colt is also engaged in the Criterion Stakes and in the Dewhurst Plate.

The simpletons who are so infatuated as to persist in betting early have experienced a very bad time over the autumn handicaps. Sir Hugo had been for some time first favourite for the Cesarewitch when it was found expedient to turn him out of training. Marcion was actually backed down to 16 to 1 for the Cambridgeshire, and now it appears that he is not likely to be again seen on a racecourse this season. It may be hoped that Marcion's ailments are only temporary, and Mr. Vyner is acting very wisely in throwing him up for a time, with the expectation that he will stand another preparation next season, in which case we shall, no doubt, see him running against Isinglass for the Gold Cup at Ascot.

Marcion could not have lost the Doncaster Cup and the Doncaster Stakes on Friday. The former race will fall to Red Eyes if she is "slipped" for it; but she may very likely be reserved for the Cesarewitch, in which case Lady Rosebery ought to win. There is nothing to beat Harbinger in the Doncaster Stakes, as he meets Canning upon very much the same terms as when he formerly defeated him, and I fancy that he will be quite as well suited by the extra distance as Sir Robert Jardine's horse.

Marcion has also been first favourite for the Prix du Conseil Municipal of £4,000, which is run at Longchamps on October 8, and in which a number of English horses have been engaged—notably La Flèche and Ravensbury. I understand that Fra Angelico is in reserve for this race, and his meeting with La Flèche would be very interesting. The mare will have to give him 3 lb.

It is high time that the conditions of the Doncaster Cup were altered, for they are at present exceedingly asinine and absurd. The winner of certain races (nine in number) carries 10 lb extra, or of any race exceeding a mile, value £900 (handicaps excepted), 7 lb. extra. Consequently, the winner of the Hardwicke Stakes at Ascot has only 7 lb. extra, while the winner of the Alexandra Plate has 10 lb., and the winner of the Queen's Vase has no penalty whatever, nor has the winner of the £8,000 race at Manchester. Marcion, having won the Ascot Cup, has 10 lb. extra; but Orme, having twice won the Eclipse Stakes (or about eight times the value of the Gold Cup), would have only 7 lb. extra. There ought to be a 10 lb. penalty for all winners of any race value £2,000, and 7 lb. for any race value £1,000.

Lady Stamford's stud at Newmarket is to be dispersed, and the mares (twenty-one in number), foals (sixteen), and seven yearlings, will be sold at Newmarket on the Cesarewitch day. Geheimniss, who is the best known of the mares in this stud, would probably have done better if she had not been sent year after year to Barcaldine.

The late Lord Calthorpe's stud will be sold on the following day (Thursday, October 12), and also his horses in training, including Buckingham and several dark two-year-olds. This sale will be the most important event of the kind during the present year. Petrarch, Satiety, and Crafton are the stallions, and the mares are a grandly-bred lot, including Seabreeze, Stray Shot, Heresy, Devote, and Ste. Alvere. There will be a brisk competition for such animals as these, although many persons have tardily discovered, to their cost, that a mare of unexceptionable pedigree may be mated year after year with the most fashionable sires without ever producing a good winner. The breeding of thoroughbreds is a pure lottery, and the most lavish expenditure is not the sure, certain, and speedy road to success, as so many people have been gulled into thinking.

Minton's (Limited). Minton's China.—A visit to Messrs Mortlock's extensive collection in Oxford-st. and Orchard-st. will conclusively prove the superiority of taste and lowness of price for which this house has been so celebrated during the last century.

Tuesday next will be one of the most important nomination days of the year, as a great number of stakes are then to close, including the Doncaster St. Leger and Park Hill Stakes for 1895. It would be a good thing if the Stewards of the Jockey Club were to order the closing of the Epsom Derby and Oaks to be postponed until the Tuesday after Doncaster, when all the yearling sales of the season are over, and this would be a most popular reform among owners. Among the races closing at Newmarket are the Newmarket Stakes of £4,500, and the Craven Stakes of £500, for 1895; and for 1896, the Princess of Wales's Stakes of £10,000, and the Jockey Club Stakes of £10,000. These two events are for now foals and yearlings to run at three and four years old. The one race is run during the First July Meeting over the B.M., and the other over the A.F. at the First October Meeting. The Stewards stipulate for 250 entries in each stake, or there will be no race, and this seems to me, under present circumstances, to be a practically prohibitive condition, but they do their best to attract public breeders (at the expense of others) by giving £400 to the nominator of the winner, and £200 to the nominator of the second. The Champion Stakes of £1,000 (1895) closes also next Tuesday, and with the same idiotic conditions. This would be a race worth winning if there were rational conditions respecting the sweepstakes. The stewards have certainly mastered the art of making much show with little substance. The steward of Molière's miser remarks that there is no difficulty in giving a good dinner with plenty of money, but that the really great cook is he who can produce a satisfactory banquet with no money at all. The authorities at Newmarket, and at all the gate-money meetings, give very little money in reality to their stakes, but it is exhibited with such judicious ostentation that superficial observers (which means 999 people out of every thousand) believe their liberality to owners to be most munificent, whereas their arrangements are usually characterised by a flea-skinning parsimony.

I hear that Mr. D. Baird intends to start Galloping Dick for the £5,000 stake at Kempton Park on October 6, which is about the most valuable two-year-old race of the season. Galloping Dick won the Richmond Stakes at Goodwood with such consummate ease that his 10 lb. penalty will not stop him here if he likes to do his best. Seventy animals have been left in for this race, but they are a very moderate lot, there being nothing better than Wherwell (who will be receiving 15 lb. from Galloping Dick), Wedding Bell (10 lb. extra), Go Lightly (5 lb. extra), Schoolbook (10 lb. extra), and Queen's Favour. Bullingdon was withdrawn last October. Mr. Baird has a second string in St. Florian, own brother to Silene, who was very backward when he ran at Goodwood, but he was one of the best-looking of the two-year-olds that were seen out at that meeting.

Next week there will be racing at Warwick, Ayr, Great Yarmouth, Lichfield, and Kempton Park, but at none of these meetings is the sport likely to be of the slightest general interest. The next meeting at which the racing will be important is Manchester, as Leicester has lost its interest now that the Royal Handicap has disappeared from the programme. There was a prodigious deal of trumpeting from all quarters when the Leicester meeting was established, and the Portland Stakes, Prince of Wales's Stakes, and Royal Handicap were very nice races, but the managers of this fixture do not stay, and each of their great events was abolished after a very brief trial.

RATIONAL DOG FEEDING.—Give wholesome and nutritious food (Spratt's Patent Meat Fibrine Dog Cakes). Do not give tit-bits and dainties because your dog, like a spoilt child, prefers what suits his palate. See that the Dog Cakes are stamped "Spratt's Patent" and a "×," as cheap and innutritious imitations are often substituted for extra profit. Pamphlet on Canine Diseases post free, SPRATT'S PATENT, Limited, Bermondsey, London.

MAMMON.

FROM MOSES MOSS TO BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN, In discussing last week the question as to whether the crisis on the Stock Exchange was mending, I came to the conclusion that we should probably see a rapid recovery in the markets during the present month, should further favourable advices come to hand from the United States. This improvement has already set in, especially in the American department, and has spread to some extent to the Foreign, South American, and Mining Markets, Home Rails alone having undergone a reaction, due chiefly to the coal strikes, which are still making serious inroads into traffics.

STOCK EXCHANGE PROSPECTS.

The course of events in the States, however, will govern the position for the present, and if further progress is made in the process of recuperation which has now commenced, and if the repeal of the Sherman Act by the Senate be followed up by judicious legislation on currency matters, a complete change will gradually be brought about in the general outlook. That the Senate will pass repeal seems more than probable, the more so as the full weight of the influence of President Cleveland, who has returned to Washington, will be thrown into the scale. The suggestion has been revived of a bond issue, partly for the purpose of covering the deficit which is expected for the current financial year, and as this measure, if the bonds should partly be placed in Europe, would threaten the stock of gold here, it is not surprising that the Bank of England should follow a very conservative course. It is, in fact, to be hoped that no attempt will be made to reduce the official minimum until the requirements of gold up to the end of the year can be sufficiently gauged. After all a 5 per cent. Bank rate is not onerous, and it can have no adverse effect upon the Stock Markets, as the speculative account is very small. In the meantime, the further sharp advance which has taken place in American Rails is fully bearing out my anticipations, and the pessimistic scribes who have been, and are still, advising investors to refrain from making purchases, have put themselves distinctly in the wrong. Some of these writers have boasted a great deal of late about having foreseen all the troubles through which we have passed; but the fact is that, being always in the habit of predicting evil, they must be right some time or other. It is a source of sincere satisfaction to me that so many of my readers have made purchases, on my urgent advice, at the very bottom, many in order to average, others as fresh operations, and that they, therefore, now, so to say, "stand on velvet." Depend upon it, Ben, the time is not far off when a similar strong recovery will take place in the South American and mining departments, and there can be no better opportunity than the present for effecting purchases—for investment, not for speculation—of depreciated stocks of this kind. When once a general advance sets in, it will be found that there is absolutely no stock about, and that prices will consequently jump up on very small transactions.

HOME RAILS.

The July statement of the Brighton Company showed a gross decrease of £19,564, and a net decrease of £21,726 owing to an increase of working charges. A great deal of fuss has been made by some of my contemporaries about the policy adopted by the Company of adjusting the traffic in order to arrive at a fair comparison with the previous year, owing to the holiday traffic; but I really do not see that there is anything to grumble at, as the matter has been carried out fairly and above board, a footnote being appended to the statement. The August gross traffic has also been very disappointing, there being a distinct falling off in the passenger movement. Evidently people had been tempted by the fine weather to travel so much in the earlier part of the year that they have not availed themselves of the regular holiday season to the same extent as last year. But henceforth the comparison will be with smaller traffics last year, and it will be interesting to watch the next few returns. To judge from the attitude of the London Bridge contingent, who are still on the "Bear" track, the turn has not yet come; but these 'cute operators change their position sometimes very suddenly. In the meantime, whenever the price of Brighton "A" dropped below 147 during the week, it quickly recovered again to about that quotation. Dover "A" has been a firm market, and is about two points up for the week. There has also been some speculative inquiry for low-priced stocks, such as Metropolitan District, which have recovered 1, and little Chathams, which are fractionally better. Sooner or later these stocks will, no doubt, be taken up again by operators, as there is, compared with former values, a margin for a good rise. This also applies to Caledonian and North British Deferred, but in this case the dividend announcement has yet to be awaited. Another batch of very large traffic decreases consequent upon the coal strikes has further depressed the "Heavies" which were, moreover, found to be in better supply at the settlements, as shown by the back changing to a contango in most instances. The only redeeming point about this unfortunate coal strike is that it will probably secure immunity from similar movements for some years to come, as it will evidently end in favour of the coal-owners. The strike in South Wales is already terminating in this way, notwithstanding which Great Western show a fall of two points for the week. Sheffield "A," although very cheap, are also being kept down by the strikes. The fall in Great Eastern has made further progress, the strike and the new issue of Preference stock, which will at once put an interest charge of £25,000 per annum before the Ordinary stock, affecting the price temporarily. Eventually, however, the addition to the capital will, no doubt, become productive.

The Rise in Yankee Rails.

It has come at last, the sharp advance in Yankee Rails which I have been predicting, and which, although it will no doubt be broken by occasional reactions, bids fair to make yet very considerable progress. It will make the bilious writers, who have prevented their readers from buying stocks at the very cheap level prevailing quite recently, and who do not see even now any justification for the rise, look very foolish. A glance at the following table, which gives the comparison of the present quotation with those of the day on which in many stocks the lowest prices were touched, and with the prices prevailing last year, is instructive at this juncture:—

	Highest in 1892.	Lowest in 1892.	July 31, 1893.	Sept. 4, 1893.
Atchison	47⅞	33¼	13	21¼
Do. 2nd Mort. "A" Bds.	69⅞	54¼	32	45¼
Atlantic Firsts	40½	28⅛	18⅜	24
Canadian Pacific	97½	87¼	70	78½
Central Pacific	36⅛	28¼	18¼	22¼
Denver	19⅜	15¼	9¼	11
Do. Preferred	56¼	46¼	28	31
Erie	35⅞	23⅛	9¼	15⅞
Do. Second Mort. Bds.	112⅜	103⅜	64	76
Louisville	87⅜	66⅞	51⅜	57
Milwaukee	86⅞	77⅜	49⅜	62½
Mis., Kan., Texas	21	14	9½	12⅜
Norfolk Preferred	57½	38⅜	19½	24½
Nor. Pac. Preferred	74⅜	46⅞	20½	24⅜
New York Centrals	122⅜	111	99½	106
Ohio and Mississippi	24⅛	19½	12½	16⅜
Ontario	23⅛	18	12⅜	15½
Readings	32½	20	6	9½
Do. First Income Bonds	81½	70¼	24	34
Union Pacific	51⅜	37⅛	17½	24⅛
Wabash Preferred	34¼	23¼	12⅞	17⅛
Do. "B" Deb.	51⅜	35⅞	20½	28½

Here is a nice little object-lesson for the pessimists. Since the commencement of August, when the lowest prices were touched, and when they advised strict abstention from all operations, a rise of from 3 to 14 dols. has taken place, many of the stocks, to which I drew special attention, having scored heavy advances. Thus, Atchison Second Mortgage "A" bonds, which I strenuously advised my readers to stick to or to buy more of, have risen from 32 to 45¼. Milwaukees, also, one of my special recommendations, are up 13 (from 49⅜ to 62⅜), while a big rise is also marked in Atchison shares, Erie and Erie Second Mortgage bonds, Norfolk Prefs., Ohios, Readings and Reading Income bonds, all of which I have recommended. Perhaps the cantankerous individuals who (although constituting a very small minority amongst my numerous, intelligent, and fair-thinking correspondents) have been pestering me with absurd and idiotic complaints, will now take a back seat. The financial position in the States continues to mend, the New York Bank statement showing a very marked improvement. The premium on gold and currency has disappeared, and there are strong indications of the policy of hoarding being discontinued, as confidence is reviving. As regards the Sherman Act, its repeal by the Senate is, according to latest advices, likely to come about earlier than had been anticipated, and thus the road will be open for a general financial improvement, and a revival in commercial and industrial circles, which will, no doubt, react upon Railroad traffics. Neither will there be any more fear of receiverships and the outrageous talk which was indulged in by the City Editor of the Standard some time ago about the possibility of the Atchison going into a receiver's hands, may be finally dismissed. That Company has, by the way, obtained all the assistance it wanted, although the following statement by the New York Daily Syndicate is not a correct version of the arrangement:—

> We are informed that the new money which the Atchison has got abroad for its note refunding is for five years at 95 at 6 per per cent. per annum interest on a gold basis. The Company has sixty days in which to make adjustment of the contract. This is better than the Pennsylvania did, and the difference in the class of security is a guarantee that Atchison's credit is better in London than the Pennsylvania. . . . . The Atchison property and its management command the confidence of every one who is familiar with the character of either. But for that confidence the would-be wreckers of values and credit might have succeeded in their effort to down the Company, at least temporarily. But they failed.

The fact is that when some three weeks ago many of the American lines were raising money in London, such as the New York Central at 5 per cent. and commission, the Union Pacific at 8 per cent. plus 5 per cent. commission for one year, the Louisville at 10 per cent., the Atchison Company offered 2,000,000 dols. Guarantee Fund Six per Cent. Mortgage notes, for five years from November 1, 1893, interest payable May 1 and November 1, at 95 in London, which is 92 New York, principal and interest being payable in gold. These notes, besides being a mortgage on the main line, are further secured by the deposit in trust with the Union Trust Company of New York of a similar amount of General Mortgage Four per Cent. Gold bonds, and since the notes constitute practically the only lien free from the control of the trustees of the General Fours, they are virtually ahead of all other outstanding obligations of the Company. The present price of these notes (subject to extension for five years as above) is 95, London terms and interest from May 1 last, and therefore, including profit on redemption and exchange, yields little short of 8 per cent. to the investor. It is understood that the bulk of these notes has been placed, which is not surprising, as they are really cheaper than the Four per Cent. Gold bonds which at 76 yield only 5¼ per cent., and rank, moreover, before these. I believe, however, that the jobbers have still got some of these notes, which it may pay an intelligent investor to pick up, as they have not participated as yet in the important rise of the Second Mortgage bonds and other Atchison securities, the more so as an official quotation will be applied for shortly. By the way, the continued weakness of Louisville and Nashville shares is really suspicious, and I consider that some explanation should be given by the Directors. The traffic decreases do not sufficiently account for the persistent offers of blocks of shares from the other side of the Atlantic. A rumour has obtained currency, according to which the Company has been selling a portion of the 40,000 reserve shares in its Treasury. The story ought either to be confirmed or contradicted. Canadian Pacifics and Grand Trunks have improved in sympathy with the Yankee market, as I said they would, Trunks being assisted by a satisfactory July statement.

A Fair Beautiful Skin.—By washing with Sulpholine Soap the natural tint and peach-like bloom of a perfect complexion is ensured.

Six Receiverships.

A forcible illustration of the effect of the exceptional stringency which has prevailed in the money markets of the United States is the fact that receivers are now in control of a larger amount of railroad property than ever before at any one time in the history of the railroads of the United States. The only over worked man in the country, as the Wall-street Daily News puts it, now is the receiver. Curiously enough, one may travel by a direct route from New York to San Francisco without passing for a single mile over the line of a railroad now controlled by its stockholders. The amount of capital invested in these insolvent roads runs far into the millions. The following is a list of six railroads that have passed into the hands of receivers of late, with the amount of their liabilities representing the capital that has been invested in their construction and maintenance :—

	Miles.	Liabilities.
Northern Pacific	5,262	... $258,358,938
New York, Lake Erie, and Western ...	1,968	... 345,665,600
Richmond and Danville	3,356	... 115,456,124
East Tennessee, Virginia, and Georgia .	1,368	... 157,856,311
Central Railroad of Georgia	2,020	... 42,864,576
Philadelphia and Reading	2,222	... 232,629,003

Here is an apparent total of over a thousand millions of capital invested in the stocks and bonds of only six Corporations. If the additional amounts invested in the roads which they control were added, these figures would be more than doubled. What weighs upon the market more heavily than anything else in connection with these roads is the fact that their insolvency is due very little to mismanagement, and only secondarily to a falling off in the business. The primary reason in almost every instance has been the inability of the Company to secure money with which to carry on its operations, and at the same time take care of its floating debt. The Erie is probably the most excusable of all because that Company has no resources for necessary improvements and additions, except the net earnings, and it can be truthfully said that the road has been economically managed and improved as rapidly as possible out of its legitimate earnings. Nevertheless in doing this it has been impossible to accumulate any working capital, so that the Company for years has been obliged to carry a floating debt, to protect which it has had to rely entirely upon its income. Fortunately English investors are not interested to any extent in Richmond Terminal, the stockholders in which have been completely wiped out. Neither are they hit by the East Tennessee or Central of Georgia collapse. The Reading trouble, on the other hand, has hit many an investor on this side, but the fact that prices of these securities are again in the ascendant testifies to the more hopeful stage into which we are entering, and the report of the Receiver, which should furnish a clear statement of the position of the Company, is looked for with interest. The Northern Pacific went suddenly into the hands of the Receiver, although President Oakes had only just voluntarily furnished for publication assurances of the solvency of this Company, and it is even suggested that papers for the receivership were already in course of preparation at the time. It is probable, however, that both the Northern Pacific and Erie properties may be taken out of the Receiver's hands in a comparatively short time, as the trouble was chiefly caused by the exceptional difficulty of obtaining accommodation in view of the monetary stringency, and it is this view which has caused a marked recovery in the Northern Pacific Prefs. and Erie securities.

American Mortgage Companies.

It is impossible to tell, as yet, if the stoppage of the Equitable Mortgage Company of New York is only the forerunner of other troubles of a similar kind in the United States, or if it will remain a solitary collapse. It has, of course, been caused by the financial stringency in New York, it being stated that the Company has interest payments to the amount of a million dollars to make before December which it is unable to meet, but the difficulty in renewing Debentures is, perhaps, the chief cause of the trouble. The paid-up share capital amounts to £433,884, out of an authorised capital of £826,446, but there were at the date of the last balance-sheet on June 30, 1892, Debentures secured by real estate mortgages £2,221,131 apart from other Debentures and liabilities amounting to about £600,000. A number of the Debentures, which carry 4½ and 5 per cent. interest, have been placed in this country, and it is stated that the English Debentures are fully represented by deeds held here. The advances are made on ranch property to the maximum amount of 40 per cent. of the appraised value of the properties. It is somewhat curious that the Company did not make advances upon city property, which is really a security of a higher class than ranch property. I have for some years emphatically discouraged investment in the Debentures or shares of such Companies in the United States, which I considered to entail too much risk. Their position is not unlike the trouble of the Australian Banks which made advances on land during the boom. Reconstruction is, of course, proposed as the usual panacea, but I am doubtful if it will answer, and, in the best case, those interested will have to face a very unpleasant "lock up." My readers who got out of this kind of investment, or were prevented from making it on my advice, have reason to feel thankful. Of course, this collapse has absolutely no bearing upon the market for American Rails.

The Argentine Position.

Revolutions are the bane of Spanish-American Republics, and they are distinctly objectionable, especially from the investor's point of view; but the revolutionary movement at present in progress in some of the Argentine provinces may prove a blessing in disguise if it is carried to a successful end. It differs from ordinary revolutions in that it is openly encouraged by the existing Government, and has not been accompanied by the usual excesses. The administration of the Province of Buenos Ayres has for years been most disgraceful, and this festering sore having been left untouched by the revolution which turned out Juarez Celman and his crew, the Radicals of Buenos Ayres at last determined, with the tacit approval of the Del Valle Cabinet, to remove the trouble by forcible means. Interference by the National Government with the provisional authorities would have been illegal unless appealed to by the latter, or in the case of a very serious position. The Radicals have brought about all this; the objectionable Governor Costa has taken to flight, the National Government has intervened, and according to latest advices Señor Carlos Tejedos, the arbitrator appointed by the National Government, is making a wholesale clearance of the disreputable officials. The provincial troops, which have hitherto enabled the Governors to rob and oppress, have been disarmed; the Provincial Bank, which has been most dishonestly conducted, is passing under different control, and the legality of the constituted authorities is being inquired into. These were, according to latest mail news, the three reforms insisted upon by the Radicals and approved by the Government, not only in the Province of Buenos Ayres, but also in those of Santa Fé and San Luis. As to the Provincial Mortgage Bank, which suspended payment in April, 1891, it has been used as a milch cow by a dishonest clique for years, the whole capital of 33,000,000 dols. has been lost, and only 71,000,000 dols. of assets are left to meet 91,000,000 dols. of liabilities, while even quite recently, under the cover of a moratorium, the men at the helm recommenced to help themselves and friends to advances. It must be admitted that the means adopted to secure the cleansing of this Augean stable—viz., an official revolution—is somewhat strange, but it may be said to be justified by the end. It is now hoped that this drastic movement will be followed by wise legislative measures, and that an honest Administration in the province of Buenos Ayres will also act fairly by the foreign bondholders. Until the pacification of the provinces is complete, no general recovery is, of course, probable, but prices of Argentine Government bonds have recovered from the lowest, and there is also a hardening tendency in the Railway stocks, increases being anticipated in usually well-informed quarters. By the way, Messrs. Parish & Nield, who have been negotiating in Buenos Ayres with the National and Provincial Governments concerning the proposed amalgamation of the Buenos Ayres Great Southern and the Buenos Ayres Western Companies and the establishment of the central station in Buenos Ayres are now on their way back to London, having secured the Provincial authority, and being, apparently, in a fair way of obtaining that of the National Government and of Congress. The interests on the Cordoba and Rosario Five per Cent. Debentures has been paid, as to one-half in cash and one-half in deferred warrants. The latter is reckoned to be worth about ¾, so that with 2½ per cent. cash the return per annum is 3¼ per cent (or 1⅝ per cent. for the half-year). The Debentures have advanced to 50 ex. div., at which they are still very cheap, as they will no doubt eventually receive full interest. Cordoba Central (Central Northern Section) Five per Cent. Debenture stock has also advanced to 32. Central Argentine Ordinary stock is firm, and will no doubt participate in any upward movement of Argentine securities generally. From latest mail advices, it appears that the late Minister of Finance, Señor Demoria, has included the full service of the National Debt as arranged with the Rothschild Committee in his budget which was laid before Congress on August 11. This budget shows an estimated expenditure of 104,718,000 dols. paper against a revenue of 108,135,000 dols., giving an estimated surplus of 3,417,000 dols., which appears satisfactory. The Railway guarantees were not included in this budget, but a telegraphic enquiry elicited from the present Minister of Finance, Dr. Jose Terry, the reply that these were now before him, and that they would be paid. If this should prove correct, a very marked advance would be on the cards in Argentine guaranteed Railway stocks.

The Kaffir Circus.

It used to be an accepted theory of the Stock Exchange that the Yankee market and the Kaffir Circus objected to moving up simultaneously. Like all Capel-court theories, it does not, however, hold water in practice, and there is very little doubt that, if the improvement in American Rails continues, the Mining Market will follow suit, and there are already indications of a strong revival. A satisfactory feature is that the shares in Randt Gold Mines and in Transvaal Land Companies are shaking themselves free from the influence of the movements in Chartered British of South Africa shares. The latter have fluctuated widely, and although the news is for the nonce more peaceful, fresh disturbing advices may any day come to hand. The shares should, therefore, be left severely alone, together with United Concessions and Mashonaland Companies. Amongst Witwatersrand Mines, New Primrose, Meyer and Charlton, Jubilee, and Simmer and Jack have risen from ⅜ to ½, and fractional advances have taken place almost along the whole line, Kimberley Roodepoort being especially firm on the commencement of crushings this month. The August crushings are expected to again beat the record, and advices generally from the Rand are most sanguine as to the probability of a continued steady increase in the output. With reference to the New Rietfontein, the brief announcement is made that Mr. E. H. Dunning has graciously waived remuneration connected with the Life Governorship—a satisfactory proof of the force of public opinion. Prospects of the New Primrose are as favourable as ever, and when the whole fifty additional stamps—making 150 in all—are at work on this and on the Moss Rose Mine, which is now amalgamated with it, very large returns may be looked for. From the Glencairn a very satisfactory crushing would not be surprising for August, as the strengthened battery has been at work throughout that month. These shares are very cheap at 32s., as dividends are now in sight. I wonder when the May Consolidated will be reconstructed; it will not do any good until that is done. Fancy the Botha being re-christened, in an attack of flunkeyism, George and May! Amongst the coming mines some of the most promising are, as I have stated, the two Klerksdorp mines Afrikander and Buffelsdoorn. The former is expected to have a much larger crushing for August, and now that the lower levels are reached, will show better every month. The shares have risen to 1½, and it is being predicted that they will touch 2 at no distant date. The machinery at the Buffelsdoorn Mine has been so far completed that the battery will commence work in the middle of this month, the cyanide plant being already at work. Another coming mine is, I am told, the South Simmer and Jack. A shaft is being driven on the reef which is expected to be struck at comparatively moderate depth and, if the hopes of those connected with the property are fulfilled, this will be a second Simmer and Jack. The shares are quoted at from 22s. 6d. to 25s. There is a good deal of talk about the alleged tracing of the Nigel reef for a long distance, it being suggested that the Rietfontein and Nigel reefs form one series. On the other hand, I have heard some rather disquieting views concerning the deep-level properties, and a leading South African, who has recently returned from Johannesburg, gave it to me as his opinion that the capital of all the deep level Companies was inadequate, the promoters being well aware of this, but hesitating to go to the public for larger sums, well knowing that they would not get them. This would mean that reconstruction will have to be resorted to before the reef is struck. Oceana and Oceana Development shares have improved, and so have the shares of the Oceana Transvaal Coal Company, which have changed hands at a premium on the passing of the Volksraad of the Natal Railway Extension Bill to Johannesburg. I have already explained that this means that the Company's collieries (on which, by the way, according to a cablegram, sinking has begun) will obtain, in addition to the local demand, a share in the coal consumption of the Randt, which amounts at present to some 800,000 tons per annum. The inferior Boksburg and Brackspan coal now used, which contains a great deal of slate, would undoubtedly be replaced by the excellent Oceana coal, which is especially now adapted for use in furnaces. A further advance in Oceana stocks will, no doubt, take place in the near future. Another important piece of news is that of the sanctioning by the Volksraad of the railway from Pretoria northwards to Nijlstroom and Pietersburg, which should benefit properties in the north of the Transvaal. Diamond shares have been unsettled, De Beers being adversely affected by the revelations concerning the Company's connection with the British Chartered Company.

Indian, American, &c., Mines.

The feature amongst Indian Mining shares has been the strength of Mysore Reef shares, which have advanced about 5s. to 9s. 9d. on a cablegram to the effect that the lode in the bottom of the shaft 3 ft. wide contained visible gold, the ore assaying 2 oz. of gold per ton. As this discovery has been made in the lately-acquired Valley property of the Company which extends to some two miles, and is supposed to be a continuation of the famous Champion lode, it is considered most important. Champion Reefs have also improved, and so have, to a limited extent, Nine Reefs and Balaghat Mysore, increased attention being attracted to these properties. Amongst Australian Mines Day Dawn P.C. are steady, although the last crushing of 249 tons for 203 oz. is not particularly favourable, but better news is expected shortly, as the work of opening out on the underlie in several of the shafts is proceeding. New Queen shares have advanced on a cablegram announcing "a great improvement in sinking underlie," and the confirmation of the Sunburst reconstruction by the meeting of shareholders raises hopes of brighter prospects for that Mine. Amongst American Mines, an improvement in Richmond has been a feature; but St. John del Rey are lower, while Elkhorn have eased off. On my request, in reply to a shareholder in the Socorro Gold Mines, for a prospectus, another original shareholder in this unfortunate concern forwards some particulars. It appears that the capital was £15,000, in £1 shares, and that no meeting of shareholders has been called, or notice of such given, or report issued, since the formation of the Company. When my correspondent called last at the offices some years ago the Secretary told him that they had about £2,000 in hand, and were holding off waiting for some development in the adjoining Organos Mine. It looks almost as if the promoter and Directors had combined to allow this mine to quietly go to sleep after the shareholders had parted with their money. Will the Directors explain, or can some of my readers throw further light upon this matter? In Caratals some dealings have taken place at from 9d. to 10d., and I am told that important deliberations are proceeding, which should enable the Board to make a speedy announcement. With regard to the Springdale Gold Mining and Milling Company, of Denver, Colorado, to which I referred last week, I may state, in reply to inquiries, that this Company owns three mines, but that the present returns are being obtained from the Van Dam Mine. These shares have been dealt in at from 3s. to 3s. 6d. There has also been some demand for Jay Hawk, Holcomb, and Colombian Hydraulic.

My Letter Box.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

Government, &c., Bonds

Delta.—There seems to be some question about the resumption of cash payments after the three years, and I should not buy yet.

Banks, Trusts, and Financial.

Irlandais.—Although this Colonial Bank seems to be soundly managed now, I do not recommend deposits for lengthy periods with such institutions, as you can invest in stocks to yield similar returns safely. Jusc.—A wealthy American office, but for the purposes of investment I should prefer holding stocks. Sphinx.—No, I do not like this outside concern. Deal with a member of the Stock Exchange. Engineer, Belfast.—No, I do not approve of this insurance scheme, and should advise you to select in preference the good English Life Offices. Donegal.—Both the banks named are high class, and, if you like this kind of investment, there is nothing against it. The two American Railroad bonds are sound, but amongst those mentioned in TRUTH of August 17, under "Yankee Rails," you will probably find some more advantageous bonds. Canon.—1. If you can sell at a small sacrifice, do so. 2. I do not think much of the Insurance Company in question. Nil Desperandum.—The two banks (Nos. 1 and 2) named are good second class, but should be quite safe. 3. I do not like the Land Company in question.

Home Rails.

Trent.—No, I see no reason for selling Brighton "A" at present. C. T., Hull.—Yes, Metropolitan Districts are a fair speculative purchase at present price.

American and Foreign Rails.

H.R.S., Victoria-street.—You should hold all your American Rails, Nos. 1, 7, and 12, for higher prices, and average the same by buying some cheap stocks, such as Milwaukees, Atchison Second Mortgage bonds, Ohio, &c. There is no option but to hold the South American securities Nos. 4, 5, 8, 9, 11, 13, and 14, as they will improve again. No. 2 is a good investment, and ought to be averaged. I do not like No. 6 or 10, which you should sell. No reason to sell No. 3 now. Buttercup.—Yes, you should buy Central Pacifics and Ohio and Mississippi Common on a reaction. M. C. W.—There is a fair prospect of an improvement in this Railway stock. Hold. First Preference Holder.—"Hope eternal" swells the Grand Trunk breasts. I trust that your hopes will be realised, but I may at least claim having foreseen the decline of the First Prefs. to 42, and although there is now, as I foreshadowed last week, a prospect of a further recovery in sympathy with the Yankee market, future earnings will govern the price. Junior Reform, Liverpool.—Cordoba and Rosario Debentures are the first charge on this line, and should be bought for investment. Do not sell the Havannah Debentures now. S.—No reason to sell this Debenture stock now, but you might make the exchange on a further recovery. Constant Reader, Braintree.—No reason to sell these Debentures at present as the tendency is upwards. Major.—Thanks. I am glad you got in so cheap in American rails on my advice. It was only a question of time to see them move up, and the other prophets, as you say, are quite wrong this time.

Mining Shares.

I. O. W.—It all depends upon the question if you bought new or old shares. Did you not stipulate for this with your stockbroker? Marshall.—You cannot, of course, obtain a yield of 11 per cent. without some risk, but the bonds are a good speculative purchase. You have paid too much commission on the Mining shares; 1d. is ample. Prospects are good. W. O'C.—With a little patience you will see Holcomb Valley improve, but you must now await the result of the machinery which will shortly be at work. If you are a holder of New Primrose and Glencairn, do not sell. They will improve as soon as the depression passes off. Den.—Certainly, Paarl Central, Zoutpansberg, and Balkis Land should be held, and you might safely average. Rialto.—The only way in dealing with Mining shares, if well selected, is to hold during times of depression. The turn generally comes very suddenly. All your South African Mining shares should be held. A. S. T.—It is obviously impossible to be always right, especially in Mining shares, although I endeavour to obtain the most reliable information. Patience, however, is necessary, especially in the case of low-priced shares, which must be looked upon as a kind of gamble, but sometimes take a very sudden turn. General.—This so-called Mine is a swindle. Have nothing to do with it. Colonial.—Yes, this hawking about of Australian Mining Companies with irregular private prospectuses is objectionable. Be careful. Amateur Investor.—If you really have bought new Paarl Central shares, which appears to be correct according to your statements, you should insist upon receiving same, and in that case you should refuse to execute the transfer, and return it to the brokers. I suppose you have a copy of your order. What does your contract state? The documents are returned.

Industrial Companies.

Chester.—I do not recommend purchases of the Industrial shares mentioned. Paccha and Jaz Pampa Nitrate shares are cheap, and worth buying. Dauntmere.—Yes; there is every prospect of this concern resuming dividends in time, but it requires some patience. J. L. C.—As it turns out, some of the directors were tarred with the Jabez Balfour brush. These have retired, and the new management will doubtless pull the Company right again. H. D., Faversham.—1. This Company has suffered with other industrial undertakings through the general depression. You should hold for a recovery. 2. Sell the Brewery shares when you get a good opportunity. Nemo.—Hold Arauco Prefs., but do not average yet. Lively.—With all due deference you have bought "Berthas" too high and sold Mexican Rails too low. Circumstances, however, appear to be working in your favour as regards "Berthas," and you had better practise masterly inactivity for a week or two. There seems to be a "Bear" squeeze on Mexican Rails. A. McD., Edinburgh.—I have no special information on this Company, but I have never recommended it, and should advise you to sell if you can. H P H, Falmouth.—No option but to hold at present; there seems to be a fair prospect of an improvement.

Mixed Investments.

J. A., Manchester.—It is a Railway and Coal Company, which should do excellently as soon as affairs in Chili are mending. The slightest demand would cause a jump in the shares, which should be held. Prospects of the Mining Company are not so bad as they look; they will, no doubt, again get upon the reef, and you should wait. The postal order is returned, as I make no charge, and I cannot reply by letter. Lancer.—All the American Railroad bonds should be held as promising investments. The Brewery Prefs. are good value. With regard to the Mining shares, I do not entertain any favourable view. Missolonghi.—Hold the Trust stocks Nos. 1 and 3 for an improvement, which is probable. I hold a most unfavourable view of No. 4, which I have repeatedly expressed. Sell if you can. Hold No. 5 and No. 7, which will, no doubt, recover. No reason to sell the Insurance shares, No. 6. L. N.—Your letter has been forwarded to the Holcomb Valley Gold Mining Company, whose offices are at 14, Cornhill, E.C. B. G.—1. You should hold Costa Rica Railway shares for a recovery. 2. No reason to sell now. 3. Hold the Diamond shares. 4. I have always advised against the Chili Mine when it was in the hands of the former clique, but you are right to hold your Caratals now for an improvement. 5. Hold.

Various Investments.

Rupee Paper has recovered again to 65½, it being understood that the India Council hopes after all to gradually raise the price of the rupee to the value of 1s. 4d. originally fixed when the Indian Mints were closed. There is, in fact, no other reasonable course open but to go on with the experiment now. Silver is slightly lower at 33½d., and it is not unlikely that a further moderate, if temporary, decline may be established when the U.S. Senate votes the Silver Purchase Repeal Bill. Mexican Government Six per Cent. stocks have had a slight set back, although the payment of the October coupon is fully assured. Mexican Railway stocks have benefited by the continued improved traffics, and a "Bear" squeeze is going on in the First Prefs. On the whole I should say that the First Prefs. are likely to recover further, but the Second Prefs. are comparatively much too high, and even Mr. Mackusick has for the nonce stopped puffing them, probably seeing that the case is—at present, at least—hopeless. With regard to a Dalziel cablegram reporting very serious damage and interruption of traffic through washouts on the Mexican Southern Railway, I hear officially that the matter has been greatly exaggerated, and that the damage done is nothing like the amount stated, also that, as the rainy season is now all but over, it is hoped that there will be no recurrence of these mishaps. I mentioned last week the offer which one of my correspondents had received by letter, dated August 15, from Mr. H. Norman Wilson, of 30, Regent's Park-road, N.W., of ten Founders' shares (£10 fully paid) in the Alliance Financial Corporation, Limited, at £10. 10s., stating that the nominal price in the financial papers was £22. 10s. per share. Another correspondent now forwards a letter, dated August 25, which he received from Mrs. A. Stampe, of 7, Lambourne-road, Clapham, S.W., in which the very same offer of ten Founders' shares at £10. 10s. is made in very similar terms. This is, to say the least of it, a curious coincidence. I asked last week what the real value of these Founders' shares actually was. I am now wondering if these are two different lots of ten Founders' shares on sale, or if it is possibly the same parcel? Also, if Mr. Wilson knows Mrs. Stampe?—Your affectionate uncle,

MOSES.

All Rights Reserved.]

QUEER STORY;

A DONCASTER TRIPLE EVENT.

"MY good fellow, you're talking arrant drivel. I say money can do everything, and no one but a silly fool would dispute it."

The speaker paused, knocked the ash off his cigar, and looked contemptuously at the man sitting in the opposite seat. The latter flushed up—for no one likes to be called a silly fool—even inferentially. His right hand closed; but he did nothing. In good truth he could not afford to do anything.

The two men were sitting alone in a first class-compartment of the last train that runs from Newmarket to King's Cross. It was the third day of the Houghton Meeting, from which they were returning. The elder of the two men—the one who spoke so contemptuously of the other's opinion—was a burly, red-haired, vulgar looking man of eight or nine and twenty, gross and sensual; but the keen cold eyes relieved the face of the expression of stupidity which would otherwise have been caused by the pendulous jowl, low forehead, and flabby cheeks. His name was Martin Swire. He was the son of an army contractor, who, having proved his patriotism by supplying our troops with shoddy great coats and paper boots, died, leaving his son an income of forty thousand a year. The other occupant presented a marked contrast. He was a well-favoured young fellow, a couple of years the other's junior. Without being strictly handsome he had a pleasant, cheery face and kindly eyes. He was, moreover, cleanly built and lithe, and had that aforementioned strong right hand closed, it would have been closed to some purpose. But, as we have already said, Harry Shackleton could not afford to actively resent the insults of "his friend," so he contented himself with replying:—

"No one realises the advantages of money more thoroughly than an impecunious wretch like myself; but I deny your proposition all the same. Money can do much, but it cannot do everything."

"What can't it do?" said Swire, brutally. "If you want a title, subscribe enough to a political fund and you'll get it. Is there a girl in London short of Royalty itself that a man with a hundred thousand a year couldn't marry if he wished? Let him go in for journalism, he can buy up the best brainwork in the market; for racing, he can win what he likes, the Big Handicaps or the Classic races."

"No, no," interposed Shackleton, eagerly, "that is the one thing he cannot do. He may do all you say, though I doubt it. He might possibly make sure of a handicap by simply buying up the best weighted horses at fancy prices, but no man can make sure of winning the three Classic races. For here honour and glory are concerned; which have no cash equivalent. Certain owners would not sell a horse they believed in at any figure; and, as for breeding, you might spend millions without a single success. Look at the great Earl of Derby, look at Lord George Bentinck. Look at owners now living who give thousands for yearlings which never even start. No, no, Swire, you're wrong."

"Well," said Swire, grimly, "I'm always prepared to back my opinion. Will you bet me the recognised odds for a triple event—I don't know what they are, but we can easily find out—that I do not own the winner of next year's Two Thousand, Derby, and St. Leger?"

"Oh, I don't know that I'm prepared to do that," said Shackleton; "it's a big thing, and if it did happen to come off I might not be able to pay with ease."

"In that case I shouldn't contradict a man. Chaps who funk putting their opinion to practical test had better not have opinions; or, at least, had better keep them to themselves. That's always the way with you infernal gassers. Talk, talk, talk, and do nothing."

"I don't funk backing my opinion," said Shackleton, hotly.

"Very well, will you bet?"

"I will," answered Shackleton, stung to madness by the insulting tone of Swire's challenge: "and now what are we to bet in—fivers?"

"Fivers—pooh! What are you talking about? Why, I shall have to buy a horse. There's the training ex's, and all the rest of it. Can't do it under 'fifties.'"

"That's too much, I couldn't pay you," said Shackleton. "Shall we compromise and say 'ponies.'"

"Done!" said Swire, quickly, with a gleam of triumph in his eyes.

The bets were duly entered and ere they parted at London it was agreed that the proper odds should be ascertained from a book-maker of high repute with whom they both had transactions, and that they should loyally abide by his decision.

Six years before, Martin Swire and Harry Shackleton had lived on the same staircase at St. Boniface College, Oxford. Shackleton was an orphan who had never been to a public school, and had inherited a nice country property in the North of England worth about £4,000 a year. He went up to St. Boniface, knowing no one in the College, and thus, to his social and moral disaster, he chummed with the senior man who lived just opposite. Swire was "barred" by the better class of men as a vulgar, loud-voiced, moneyed sporting man, who did nothing for the College except give disreputable "wines"; and thus poor Harry suffered vicariously for his chum's evil reputation. Swire left in due course; and, though Harry, after his mentor's departure, gradually obtained that social recognition of the College which so good a lad deserved, he never discontinued his intercourse with his former friend. The truth was, Shackleton, like too many home-bred boys, had an innate love for gambling, in every phase of which fascinating vice Swire was an adept.

He always spent part of his vacations with Swire, and, as racing was the latter's favourite pursuit, Master Harry found them rather expensive. This, however, only proved an incentive to further speculation, and as soon as he had taken his degree and left St. Boniface he became an habitual frequenter of race-courses.

In the meantime Swire's father had died, leaving his only son an enormous income. It was the old story of the iron pot and the earthenware pipkin. Unsuccessful speculations were nothing to the rich contractor's son; they were terribly serious to the young country squire. Again and again he found himself without ready money—that ready money so essential to back the "absolute certainty" which was to recoup him for all his former losses. But the rich friend was ever at his hand, ever ready to advance the ready money on a gradually increasing mortgage on Shackleton Hall.

At last Harry Shackleton realised the true position of affairs, namely that unless he pulled up sharp, ruin would stare him in the face. He had spent all the ready money accumulated during his minority. He owed Swire no less than £20,000 on mortgage, and he was, happily, beginning to distrust both his own judgment and the bona fides of his friend; for it too frequently happened that "the good thing" the latter put him on to did not "come off," and that when Swire did bring off a coup, it was single-handed, that gentleman having inadvertently omitted to mention the fact to his friend.

Accordingly Harry took a sharp pull at himself. He at once let Shackleton Hall, taking rooms for himself in London. He limited his wagering to an occasional fiver, and not only did he forbear borrowing more from Swire, but he actually succeeded in paying off during the last two years £1,500 of the existing debt. Curiously enough, Swire seemed most reluctant to receive it, and so far, indeed, from being thereby mollified, his manner gradually became so unbearably rude to his quondam associate that the latter avoided him as much as possible, and it was by a mere accident that they travelled together from Newmarket.

Three days later, Shackleton received a letter from the bookmaker to whom they had referred the terms of the wager. It was briefly to the effect that the fair odds for such a wager would be 1,000 to 1. Shackleton was horrified. Of course he was aware that the odds in a mere double event were very high, but he had scarcely anticipated so large a price for the treble event. He, however, comforted himself with the reflection that the odds are fixed in exact ratio to the improbability of success.

Still, even the possibility of losing £25,000 is disquieting; and his apprehensions were not allayed when he saw in the next day's Sportsman that Mr. Swire, the well-known backer of horses, had bought Sunbeam, the winner of the Middle Park Plate and present favourite for the Derby, for no less a sum than £6,000.

* * * * *

The day of the Two Thousand came—an ideal day—warm and dry. Harry Shackleton watched the race with beating heart, an emotion which seemed to change to dull despair when he saw Sunbeam leaving his field as though they were standing still, and winning by three comfortable lengths.

Swire had bought a treasure, and he knew it. He smiled grimly at Shackleton as he met him in the paddock twenty minutes later. Still Shackleton tried to hope on. There were six weeks before the Derby. Much can happen to a horse in that time. It may again turn wet, and many a hot favourite has stuck in the Epsom mud. The Hill and Tattenham Corner are, besides, factors which have to be reckoned with.

Fate, however, seemed to be against Harry Shackleton. Sunbeam throve on hard work. The barometer kept as high as his own spirits were low, and universal report said that the crack could gallop down hill as easily and with as long a stride as he could go on the flat. And when the great cockney holiday came round, and Sunbeam stood at 3 to 1 on, Shackleton cursed his folly with the bitterness of despair. The field was limited to eleven runners. The flag fell to an even start. When they re-appeared down the hill Sunbeam was lying third, close behind was Defender an outsider at 20 to 1, belonging to Mr. Robert Herbert, an old and respected owner of horses. The horse that was then leading, Birdcage, came round the corner with a slight advantage. At the distance Defender came up with a rattle, and passed him. That well known and awful shout went forth, "The favourite's beat"! Denny on the favourite was already beginning to move in his saddle. Closer and closer they came, Defender still leading by a length and a half, Sunbeam making up ground inch by inch, Birdcage third. Harry Shackleton watched the two horses as they appeared to his frenzied glance crawling up the straight. Could Defender retain his lead? Impelled by some evil genius, Lipsham, the fashionable but not very experienced light-weight, who was riding Defender, turned his head to take stock of his adversary. Not one jockey in a thousand can look round without ceasing to balance his horse. Defender swerved slightly. At once Sunbeam was at his girths: the pair passed the Grand Stand locked together. Denny at the supreme moment met his effort, and Sunbeam, thanks to sheer horsemanship, won the Derby by the shortest of short heads.

Shackleton was watching the last race but one with languid interest, when he felt some one touch him on the shoulder. He turned sharply. It was Martin Swire. He stammered his congratulations. Swire smiled sardonically. "Well, you see, Shackleton, I mean to win that bet. I've pulled off two events out of three already. Begins to look awkward, eh? Harry."

"It does so," replied Shackleton, dejectedly, "and how the devil I'm to pay you if you do win, I don't know."

"That's very simple," said Swire. "Sell Shackleton Hall. I'll buy it, deduct my bet and mortgage debt and hand you the balance to go on with."

"Sell Shackleton!" re-echoed Harry, in horror. "Never."

He turned away and hurried back to the station. All the way home the horrid suggestion rang in his ears. It would, indeed, be retribution for his folly had he to sell the home of his fathers, where so many generations of his family had lived, and where he had spent the happy days of his boyhood. Then the thought struck him. Could it be that Swire had long coveted that property and had endeavoured to gradually involve him into financial difficulties which would ultimately necessitate its sale?

This in truth was actually the case. Years ago Martin Swire had cast envious eyes upon the charming property of his friend. It was just the place he would like to have himself. He thought that the possession of Shackleton Hall would give him what he so much wanted—a certain position in the county. So, after the manner of his kind, regardless of any claims of friendship, he resolved to obtain his heart's desire. His method was very simple. He persuaded Harry to invest large sums on horses which he himself knew were not meant to win, and then lent his victim ready-money on mortgage. And had not Harry's suspicions been aroused, and had he not pulled up betimes, the mortgages would have covered the property and then have been foreclosed. His sudden fit of prudence deranged Swire's plans, and the latter realised that his only chance of obtaining Shackleton Hall was by a sudden stroke. Hence the artful conversation in the train—the contemptuous challenge to his victim—the bet on the triple event; to win which subsequent facts showed he was prepared to go any lengths.

Although Swire's suggestion increased Shackleton's depression at the moment, his spirits rose when he came to view the position dispassionately. The Derby had certainly been won by Sunbeam, but not in the way the Two Thousand had been won. It was no longer a case of "Eclipse first, the rest nowhere." Defender had beyond doubt proved himself a formidable opponent. The horse had not been sent to the post in the very best condition. He had been villainously ridden. The stable had not realised his true merits. He was a strong, compact horse, and the additional distance in the St. Leger would be all in his favour. Above all, Shackleton knew that the services of a first-rate experienced jockey would be secured. Mr. Herbert, the owner, was a Squire in his own county. He did not live at his property, because a long and unsuccessful career on the turf had involved him in the most awful mesh of financial embarrassments. To all appearances he was as jaunty and as prosperous now as he had ever been. But a few of his intimate friends were only too well aware that there was scarcely a money-lender in London to whom he was not indebted. A win in the Leger, with bets, if it did not put him actually on his legs, would at least defer the day of reckoning. He was a man of singularly sweet disposition and personal charm of manner, and Shackleton had little doubt that, even if the children of Israel proved obdurate as to further advances, he could obtain from his personal friends enough money to give Defender every opportunity of winning. There seemed, therefore, an even chance that the triple event might not come off after all.

Nevertheless, Shackleton had terrible moments of apprehension, and he groaned in the spirit when he saw, in his mind's eye, his old friends at Shackleton groaning under the yoke of the brutal, unscrupulous cad he now knew Swire to be.

Imagine, then his joy, his relief, his ecstasy, when he saw one morning, at the latter end of July, a head-line in the bill of a sporting paper—"Breakdown of the St. Leger Favourite." He dashed into the shop and tore open the paper. At once he read that Sunbeam when galloping the previous afternoon had put his foot into a broken drain-pipe which was concealed by the tan, had fallen heavily and had so sprained the stifle joint that there was no hope of his moving out of the stable for at least three months.

Harry rushed to his Club to see if there was any corroborative evidence. It was true! A telegram, moreover, came in soon after to the effect that Sunbeam had been already scratched. Shackleton Hall was saved!

So, at least, thought the joyful Harry as he wended his way towards Swire's rooms in Bond-street. So malignant had been the latter's conduct in the matter, that Harry could not forbear seeing him in the moment of disappointment. Moreover, the "pony," which he had little doubt Swire would hand over at once, would come in handy.

He met Swire coming out of his rooms walking towards St. James's-street.

"Of course, my dear fellow," said Shackleton, "if it had not been for that beastly bet, I should have been devilish sorry for you. But frankly, though, it's deuced hard luck on you. I cannot tell you how relieved I am now that the bet's settled."

"Settled," said Swire curt'y. "It isn't settled; far from it."

"Why, what do you mean?" said Shackleton. "Isn't it true, Sunbeam's scratched?"

"Certainly; but if you refer to your betting-book you will see that I never wagered that I should win the Two Thousand, Derby, and St. Leger races with the same horse. I simply said that I should own the winner of each of the Classic races. I now intend to buy the horse that I think will win the St. Leger."

Angry and chagrined at his disappointment, Shackleton retorted, "Well, you'll find it a pretty stiff job to buy a horse now worth saddling. Lord Hartopp and Sir Joselyn Loxdale won't part with their's for an empire, and as for dear old Bob Herbert, he couldn't afford to sell Defender. He means to gallop out of all his money difficulties on Defender's back."

Swire stopped short, looked at Shackleton with his usual expression of insulting superiority, whistled softly, and then said abruptly,

"Good morning, Shackleton, I'm going to see a chap in Sackville-street on business."

Shackleton watched his burly form down the street. He stopped at a door, rang, and entered. Harry knew the house. It was that of a well-known West-end money lender.

The London season came to an end, and Harry went for a month's yachting cruise with a fairly light heart. He left his letters behind him, and never even glanced at a newspaper. The First of September came, and he returned to England and went straight to a little farm he still retained on his property, and had a couple of days partridge-shooting. He then thought, as he was near Maltbourne, where Mr. Herbert, like many old-fashioned North-country sportsmen, trained his horses in preference to Newmarket, he would drive over and have a chat on the Leger prospects. When he arrived Mr. Herbert and his trainer were looking at a yearling. He noticed his old friend looked old and worn and harassed.

"Well, Mr. Herbert, how are you, and how's the crack?"

The old Squire shook his head and groaned. "He's gone, Harry, he's gone."

"Gone—you don't mean to say he's dead?"

"Not dead, my boy, but almost as bad—he's sold."

"To whom?" asked Shackleton, with a horrible feeling of dread.

"Come here, my boy, and I'll tell you." He took Shackleton by the arm and led him into a paddock where they were alone. "He's sold to that black-hearted ruffian, Swire. Don't look so reproachful, for God's sake, Harry. I couldn't help it. By some means or other that remorseless scoundrel learnt that I was in the hands of the money lenders. He went to Lawson, the money-lender in Sackville-street, at the end of July. Bought up from him every bit of paper of mine he could, and then employed him to get hold of every acceptance of mine in the market. This done, a fortnight ago he came to me and threatened to sell me up right away unless I parted with Defender.

"What could I do?" continued Mr. Herbert. "I was in his clutches. I could not meet my bills without selling up the old place, and so I let the brute take my pet, the horse I'd bred and nominated, and trained, and loved like my own child. I made, however, the condition that he would not scratch him, which, if his book happened to be that way, he's quite capable of doing, and I have ensured my friends who've backed Defender having at least a run for their money."

"My God, yes!" cried Harry, "there's no fear of him scratching him, the remorseless brute!"

"Why, Harry, my boy, what is the matter?" said the old man, as he saw Harry Shackleton's face white as a sheet.

After some hesitation, for he was fearful of paining his old friend, Harry told the whole story. How Swire had once been his friend, how he in a moment's anger had been entrapped into this foolish wager, how Swire had pursued his purpose with the malignity of a fiend, and how if Defender did win the St. Leger, his only means of paying the debt was the sale of Shackleton.

The old man listened with glistening eyes. Harry's father had been his chum at Eton—he loved the boy dearly.

"Oh, my poor boy, what can I say to you? Sell Shackleton—no! that must not be. Why, Harry, I shot my first partridge there. Devilish near hit the keeper, too. Many a jolly day your poor father and I had with your grandfather's harriers, Harry! Slow as a top, they were; but we'd lots of fencing. Poor Geoffrey had a pony with a wall-eye that I used to ride in the holidays. Couldn't see a yard, but jump—why he could!—Ah! but no matter, that's long ago, dear lad! Perhaps, perhaps, something will turn up. What, you must be going? Well, Harry, I shan't go to Doncaster: that I couldn't stand. Still less, after what you've just told me. But keep your heart up, something may turn up."

Harry took the old man's proferred hand. He noticed that it was thin and white. He saw, moreover, that his old friend's face was very pinched and worn, and his lips trembled.

It is scarcely necessary to say that Harry, on the contrary, did go to Doncaster. If he was to be ruined he might as well know the worst at once. That race is now common history. Defender led as they came out from the dip, and in the hands of the all-conquering Denny won in a common canter by six lengths.

"Well, Harry Shackleton," said Martin Swire, a few minutes after Denny had weighed in, "do you now realise the power of money?". There was a gleam of triumph in his cold blue eyes, as he continued gently: "Will it be quite convenient for you to settle on Monday?"

Shackleton was about to say it would be as convenient then as at any other time, when a friend of his, a racing man, came up and said: "Here, Harry, here's a wire for you; the boy has been carrying it about in the paddock some time, but you were up in the stand. So, seeing you talking to Swire, I brought it to you myself."

Harry thanked him and opened it; then gave a cry of horror. The telegram ran thus:—

From Robert Herbert, 121, Duke-street, London, to Henry Shackleton, Grand Stand, Doncaster.

DEAR BOY,—I have made to you the only reparation in my power. Before my valet takes this to the Post Office, I shall be a dead man.

"Good God!" he cried, "dead man! Why, that means that Bob Herbert has committed suicide. What could have induced him to do so? Reparation," he continued in an undertone; "reparation, what can he allude to?"

"Bob Herbert killed himself," said the friend who brought the wire. "Poor old chap! He was a devilish good sort. Worried to death by bill discounters. By the way, Shackleton, what time was the wire handed in, eh?—1-50. Phew! That's a bit rough on you, Swire, if the old gentleman has kept his word."

"Why, how the devil can the death of a bankrupt old fool like that affect me?"

"Only this way, my friend," said the other, who, hardened as he was, was disgusted at Swire's brutal tone, "that by the death of the nominator before the race, Defender was not eligible to start for the St. Leger, and, of course, will now be disqualified."

Swire uttered an awful imprecation. The triple event was lost.

In such wise were the fair acres of Shackleton kept in the old family.

Though years have passed since then, Harry never thinks of that pale, gentle, up-turned face, and the bottle of choral in the thin white hand, that he does not feel that some things, even those most cherished, can be bought too dearly.

ULSTERS, OVERCOATS, and CAPES are kept ready for immediate use at Ulster House, Conduit-street, W.

MUSIC.

THE LATE "MASTER OF THE MUSICKE."

SIR WILLIAM CUSINS, who died of acute pneumonia in the Engadine last Thursday, was a well meaning man, born, as the saying goes, with a silver spoon in his mouth. Eventually, to adopt a favourite phrase of the late Carl Rosa, his boots grew too big for his feet; and when, early this year, her Majesty, to whom he owed so much, very rightly asked Sir Arthur Sullivan to compose the "Imperial March" for the opening of the Imperial Institute, Cusins took umbrage, and to the great delight of a certain member of the Royal Family, resigned the Mastership of the Music, to which Sir Walter Parratt, of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, was forthwith appointed. Cusins was born in 1833, and as a child he lost his father, whereupon he was taken in hand by his two aunts. One of those ladies brought him to Brussels, where she was then residing, to study under Fétis, but he soon went back to his other aunt, Mrs. Anderson. Miss Lucy Philpot, who was the teacher of the pianoforte to our present Queen and to other members of the Royal family, had, in 1820, married the late George Frederick Anderson, then Master of the Music. Anderson and his wife did everything in their power for young Cusins, and, thanks to Royal influence, he was twice "King's Scholar" at the Royal Academy of Music, where he studied, at not a penny of cost, under Cipriani Potter, Sterndale Bennett, and Sainton. Again, as a child of fourteen, his aunt secured for him the appointment of organist at Her Majesty's private chapel, and a membership of the private band; his uncle Anderson, who was then himself a violinist, introduced—in defiance of the well-known rules of the Royal Academy—the boy to the opera and other orchestras, and in 1867 Uncle Anderson, then treasurer and practical ruler of the Society, gave his nephew the conductorship of the Philharmonic Concerts. Three years later, in 1870, Anderson resigned to his nephew the post of "Master of the Musicke." This therefore was nepotism in its crudest state. However, on Uncle Anderson's death, in 1876, Sir W. Cusins' authority began to wane. By 1883 the Philharmonic Society was reduced to its last hundred pounds, and Cusins resigned, first to half a dozen conductors, afterwards to Sir A. Sullivan. He also left the Royal Academy, and for the post of Principal of the Guildhall School of Music he was very soundly beaten last year by Sir Joseph Barnby. In recompense he was knighted. Sir W. Cusins was not a great composer, and very few people who were present at the revival of his oratorio "Gideon" recently would probably care to hear it again. But he was an excellent teacher of the pianoforte, and a very fair pianist and violinist, and he wrote a capital work on the "Messiah" manuscripts, which at Buckingham Palace were, of course, under his charge. Sir William Cusins inherited an ample fortune from his Uncle Anderson, who lived in the days when a handsome present was the readiest passport to a hearing by Royalty. Cusins himself, however, was a man of strict probity, and under his reign "tips" were abolished. It need hardly be said that they are not at all likely to be revived under Sir Walter Parratt.

It has been contended that comic opera is under a cloud, and at any rate it is generally admitted that the next success in this direction will be achieved by a strong libretto rather than by the music. The exact reasons of the production of "Peterkin" at the Royalty on Monday will therefore not be quite apparent. A bibulous youth, son and "butt" of a miser, is intended by her mother to be the husband of the heroine. That the lady chooses for herself and elopes with a young cavalry officer may be taken for granted; and this, so far as plot is concerned, is all that the three acts of "Peterkin" contain. It is perfectly true that a gentleman of ample proportions disguises himself in a domino, and for a time passes off as the heroine, and that in a Kentish village, early in the century, when the landing of Bonaparte was daily expected, the inhabitants revel in a fancy-dress ball of a character which would not a little amuse Sir Augustus Harris. But these incongruities do not trouble modern managers of comic opera. It will suffice to add that the music is a melodious mixture of Rossini, early Verdi, and the waltz writers, and that the company are mostly provincials, the heroine being a débutante, a pupil of Signor Camerana, the composer, who for a considerable period was a teacher of singing at Manchester. It might, however, have been a dull evening had it not been for the humour of the gallery, and, indeed, the round of cheers which greeted an unfortunate expression vouchsafed by an officer to a young gentleman, who was obviously a stage novice, "Can't you see that now is the time to act?" quite convulsed the house.

Mr. Sims Reeves did not, after all, make his reappearance at the Promenade Concerts on Monday, and his rentrée is now postponed till Friday. Not unnaturally, the veteran tenor appears to be nervous, and he therefore decided to take a short trip to Paris before he began his newest farewell. Perhaps, also, he has qualms of conscience. It is not every man of his age, who little more than two years after Madame Christine Nilsson and Mr. Irving had assisted him at "a thankful, a final, and a grateful, though not a sad, farewell" at the Albert Hall, would come out again at the Promenade Concerts.

Sir Augustus Harris has resigned the Managing Directorship of the Palace Theatre, still, however, keeping his seat on the Board. "Druriolanus" is well out of the Palace management, and he will now have more time to attend to his other affairs. Next week he sends out a provincial opera company, and although, in accordance with the usual course in such matters, the statement may very likely be contradicted, I should not be at all surprised if, after the present tour, he were invited to resume his old position on the Carl Rosa Company.

The Worcester Festival comes off next week. Musical people are this year not taking so great an interest in the affair as usual, for there are no novelties, and the bulk of the chorus are to be imported from Leeds. Norwich is the great musical festival of the present year, and for the Eastern Counties' celebration Mr. Randegger and his committee have drawn up an excellent programme.

The big concert-hall in Langham-place, now to be rechristened the Queen's Hall, will be opened in November under the direction of Messrs. Sinkins and Newman. The Middlesex Choral Society, who were to have inaugurated the building, will now, I believe, be disbanded, or, at any rate, will be merged in the new choir. Tuesday evening choral and orchestral concerts at cheap prices are spoken of, and if the affair were energetically directed it ought to have a good chance.

The new Queen's Hall, at any rate, has a splendid organ, and this fact should wake up the directors of St. James's Hall. Whether there is room for a large organ in the Piccadilly establishment I am not aware, but although it is better than the music-box, which was superseded about fifteen years ago, the St. James's Hall organ is certainly not worthy of our leading concert-room.

It seems that "Samson et Dalila" is to be produced at Covent Garden on or about the 18th inst., and Madame Sanz came specially to London on Saturday to rehearse the soprano part. The chorus voices were, however, even then being tried, and it is therefore quite possible that the production may be postponed for a few days. M. Saint-Saëns will come specially from Bordeaux to conduct.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM.—In reading three companion volumes of exceeding interest, "The Great Book Collectors" (1), "Early Printed Books" (2), and "Books in Manuscript" (3), I was many times reminded of Goethe's saying, "Literature is a fragment of fragments. The smallest part of what has been done and spoken has been recorded; and the smallest part of what has been recorded has survived." The very physical basis of immortality (!) is itself the most mortal of substances. "Unfortunately, of all possible materials for permanent record, papyrus is amongst the worst. Even when first written on, it must have seemed ominous that a heavy stroke was wont to pierce and scratch the smooth surface, so much so that in all papyrus records the writing is of necessity light, and hardly distinguishable into up and down strokes. This foreshadowed the time when, on the complete drying of the substance in course of years, the residium would be fragile, friable, and almost as brittle as dry leaves." But supposing this dust to which immortality has trusted itself survives and is decipherable, it is not always, or often, or perhaps ever, what the poet, priest, or prophet originally wrote:—

All who know human nature, or who have studied palæography, will acknowledge that the probability against two consecutive leaves in any M.S. being really correctly transcribed is about a hundred to one.

What an appalling reflection to Protestants, who may be holding some damnable doctrine on the faith of a transcriptional error in a text! Voltaire's "martyrs of a diphthong," whose bodies only were burned because of a superfluous "i" are enviable by comparison. Then, again, immortality has to run the gauntlet through the ages of Goths and of fires. What is to prevent some infallible Pope issuing an uncompromising decree like that of the Caliph Omar in 638, who burnt the Alexandrian Library on the indisputable ground, that if the books in it were unorthodox they were pernicious, and, if orthodox, superfluous? Apropos at once of book-collectors and of the Pope, I must recommend to you most strongly an exquisitely printed volume from the famous Orpington Press, "Three Letters and An Essay by John Ruskin 1836—1841, Found in his Tutor's Desk" (4). The letters are astonishing as the productions of a boy, even of a boy of genius, as much for the originality and uncompromising assurance and force of the opinions expressed as for the finished style of their expression. What do you think of these boy's first impressions of St. Peter's and of Rome as it was under Papal rule?

St. Peter's I expected to be disappointed in. I was disgusted. The Italians think Gothic architecture barbarous; I think Greek heathenish. Greek, by the by, it is not, but has all its weight and clumsiness without its dignity or simplicity. As a whole, St. Peter's is fit for nothing but a ball-room, and it is a little too gaudy even for that.

Yet the impression of this perpetual beauty [of Rome] is more painful than pleasing, for there is a strange horror lying over the whole city, which I can neither describe nor account for; it is a shadow of death, possessing and penetrating all things. . . . . It is all like a vast churchyard, with a diseased and dying population living in the shades of its tombstones. . . . The population seem degraded, diseased, unprincipled, and good-natured in the extreme. Their utmost aim is to obtain the capability of idleness, their highest pleasure to lie basking in the sun, coiled in their filth, like lizards.

I cannot say that the essay on Scott, Bulwer, and Byron is as worthy of the Master as the letters, but even in it you can trace the dawn—sometimes in purple streaks—of his later style. Suppose I read out to you the following passage, you would know Ruskin wrote it, but you would not know, and could never guess of whom he wrote it:—

His writings are full of an entangled richness of moving mind, glittering with innumerable drops of rosy and balmy and quivering dew, instinct with a soft, low thrilling whisper of thought, like that which the young fairies hear from the green grass and kind flowers as they grow, and change, and sigh, beneath the hushed light of the star-inwoven noon of night, and we listen to the low voice of his musing until it melts away into our spirit, as if its sweet harp-like music rose up out of our own mind, as if its mysterious flowing were from the deep fountains of our own heart.

This of Bulwer! A singularly brilliant and versatile author certainly, but about as like a young fairy as the Windsor elves of Parson Evans. Nor can I think that Mr. Ruskin would hold to-day by his early opinion that Bulwer has more imagination of a certain kind than Scott. The mention of Scott reminds me to advertise you of the appearance of "The Abbot" (5) and "The Monastery" (6), each adorned with ten fine etchings, in Mr. Andrew Lang's "Border Edition." You will be rejoiced, also, to hear that new and cheap (half-crown) editions of Mr. Thomas Hardy's and of Mr. R. D. Blackmore's novels are being issued, of which "The Return of the Native" (7) and the immortal "Lorna Doone" (8) (with a portrait of the author) have already appeared. I think it is a pity that Mr. Blackmore has omitted the Preface to the twentieth edition with its amazing revelation that this incomparable romance dropped stillborn from the press, and owed its resurrection to the marriage of the Marquis of Lorne!

A certain auspicious event occurred just then, and gave you golden wings. The literary public found your name akin to one which filled the air, and as graciously as royalty itself endowed you with imaginary virtues. So grand is the luck of time and name; failing which more solid beings melt into oblivion's depth.

Is there anything in the "Curiosities of Literature" more grotesque than that so brilliant a book would have died at birth but for the resemblance between its heroine's name and that of the bridegroom of a Royal marriage? The "thirty millions, mostly fools," finding, like Saul, a kingdom in following their father's asses! The Marquis of Lorne in giving his name to an English Princess, thus did the public as precious and unconscious a service as the heroine of "Ideala" (9) (of which original novel a fifth edition has just appeared) did the beggar-woman whom she presented with her purse in place of the sixpence she took from it to give her. From a tract I took up the other day I gathered that a considerable body of Christians are expecting the immediate advent of a female Messiah, and the author of "Ideala" is incomparably the most ear-piercing voice crying in the wilderness to prepare the way of this woman avatar that has yet been heard. Lady Wilde also, in her "Social Studies" (10), cries "How long, O Lord, how long?" and quotes this vigorous adjuration of the poet to her supine sisters:—

Still as before and as now, balls, dances, and evening parties,
Shooting with bows, going shopping together, and hearing them singing,
Dangling beside them, and turning the leaves at the dreary piano;
Utter divorcement from sense, mother earth, and object of living.

Ye unhappy statuettes, ye miserable trinkets!
Poor alabaster chimney-piece ornaments under glass cover!
Come, in God's name, come down! The very French clock by you
Puts you to shame with its ticking; the fire-irons deride you;
Come, in God's name, come down! Do anything; be but something.

In their essay "On Girl" the authors of a series of papers "From Wisdom Court" (11), whose self-conscious and almost pert smartness and staccato style soon weary you, bring the same indictment against the sex with less force than flippancy. It is not ungenerous merely, but unjust, for these critics to forget that, if man is as God made him, woman is as man made her.—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, very sincerely yours,

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

(1) "The Great Book Collectors." By Charles Isaac Elton and Mary Augusta Elton. (London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner, & Co.)
(2) "Early Printed Books." By E. Gordon Duff. (London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner, & Co.)
(3) "Books in Manuscript." A Short Introduction to their Study and Use, with a Chapter on Records. By Falconer Madan, M.A. (London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner, & Co.)
(4) "Three Letters and an Essay." By John Ruskin. 1836-1841. Found in his Tutor's Desk. (London and Orpington: George Allen.)
(5) "The Abbot." Two vols. Ten Etchings. By Sir Walter Scott, Bart.
(6) "The Monastery." Two vols. Ten Etchings. With Introductory Essay and Notes by Andrew Lang. (London: John C. Nimmo.)
(7) "The Return of the Native." By Thomas Hardy. (8) "Lorna Doone." A Romance of Exmoor. By R. D. Blackmore. (London: Sampson Low, Marston, & Co.)
(9) "Ideala." A Study from Life. By Madame Sarah Grand. (London: William Heinemann.)
(10) "Social Studies." By Lady Wilde. (London: Ward & Downey.)
(11) "From Wisdom Court." By H. Seton Merriman and S. A. Tallentyre. Illustrated by E. Courboin. (London: William Heinemann.)

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—We have learned to appreciate some of the difficulties of housekeeping in the country since we came down here. Sarah has left us for her annual visit to her old father and mother in the far North, and as she never requires reminding of anything, and, in fact, acts as a memory to us, we find ourselves in many a small predicament during her absence. She has been with us so long that in some ways our positions are quite reversed. For instance, before she went she said to me, "Miss Madge, I know you'll forget no end of things that ought to be attended to, so I've made out a list of things to help you a bit." But, even with the help of this document, which must have cost the good old soul an immensity of trouble (you should see the wonderful spelling, never twice alike!) I am always getting cornered down here where the shops have plenty of certain articles on one day and none at all the next. In London omissions can readily be rectified by sending to the shops or stores. Our present cook, "obliging" us in the absence of Sarah, is what the latter would call "a muddler without any head." She never thinks of anything till the moment she wants it, and just as we are on the doorstep starting for the river she will send up a message that there is no flour in the house for the tart, or no rice for the curry, or no milk for the sauce. Or, when we are at our sleepiest and laziest, thoroughly enjoying the dolce far niente of a hot afternoon, we are informed that she forgot to order the meat yesterday, and the butcher does not come round again till Saturday. What do you feel like when in a very lazy mood and a very large problem like that is suddenly set before you? Does an inclination steal over you to let dinner slide, a feeling that nothing matters much but the delicious, dreamful ease of the moment? If there were only Maud and myself, I fancy that the great meal of the day would dwindle to something very insignificant indeed while our good Sarah is away. But, fortunately, there is Father to think of, and, as Charlie is always about, there is a double incentive for making the menu a fairly good one. Consequently our "obliger's" want of memory is exasperating.

However, it sometimes leads to the adoption of a pis aller which turns out a great success. The other evening, when cook had forgotten to make a savoury we had ordered, I told her to try some cheese pancakes, and found that she possesses quite a gift in this direction! Have you ever tasted them? They are made just like ordinary pancakes, but with grated cheese mixed up in the batter before frying. She is also remarkably clever at a cheese fondu, and though that is rather a winter dish, having to be served on a hot-water dish in a boiling condition, yet there is a certain chilliness in the evenings now that renders a simmering fondu by no means unseasonable.

I do not know how we should manage without a store of tinned things to fall back upon; such "delicacies" as boneless truffled roast chicken, or a 2 lb. or 4 lb. tin of delicious pressed beef. We brought with us a hamper of such "yachting stores" as these, and find them immensely appreciated. At first, when we mention tinned meats to any of our friends, they almost invariably say "Oh, I have a horror of them!" but they as invariably end by being converted. Some of the cheap tinned goods are, doubtless, unreliable. How can they be expected to be anything else? But those with the names of good firms on them, and sold at prices that cover the cost not only of good food but of preserving and tinning it, can always be depended upon.

You ask me about the fashions for autumn, as you want to buy some clothes. There is nothing very decisive just yet, but so far as one can judge from what is already revealed, skirts will continue to fit closely round the hips, spreading into fulness round the hem. The very hideous umbrella skirts do not seem to increase in favour. Are they not ugly? Jackets are half-length, and fit in tightly to the figure at the back, but fall straight in front for the most part, though some fit tightly. Almost all jackets are turned back from the throat in revers, more or less sharply pointed. When the jacket is tight it often ends in a full triple basque, which is very becoming to a slim figure. I have just been examining one of these that Lilla bought for herself during a hurried visit to town. She finds that she is too stout for the style, and has asked me to try to get it changed for her. The bodice and basque are separate, the former being finished with a rolled collar and revers, both edged with a wide band of handsome brown and gold galloon. The three basques are laid on a silk foundation, similar to the lining of the bodice part. Each section overlaps the other by about two inches, and is finished with a row of stitching. This basque is sewed into a wide waistband of the cloth, which is in a beautiful chestnut shade, and the belt itself is finished with a row of stitching at either edge.

So much depends upon the quality of the cloth in these coats that one cannot be too particular to choose the best. The folds in which the basques hang are graceful or the reverse in exact proportion to the fineness of the material. When there is a collar with some little fulness, this is quite as obvious. There are none of the rampant upstanding curves in collars now, such as made some of us look such lunatics last autumn. Any fulness that there is falls quite soft and limp, being cut round a circle, so that the fulness is formed naturally by the droop of the material.

The full basques are worn on evening dresses now, and on slight figures are very pretty, obviating the rather trying plainness of a close-fitting skirt upon the hips. Like some of those on the jackets, these evening basques are fulled very lightly into a waistband, so that the dress can be worn with or without them.

Can you understand the popularity of white veils? We cannot. When the sun shines on them the wearer is almost blinded, and only the most perfect of complexions look well through them, the most delicate of pink and white. When really lovely colouring is seen through a thin white veil, I grant you that the effect is well worth the inconvenience of not being able to see very well in a bright light, but then these perfect complexions are few and the white veils are many. On sallow faces they are simply disfiguring, their whiteness bringing out all the yellow tones of the skin. Either a very costly and admirable make-up, or delightful youth with its inimitable texture and tint, is needed to prevent a white veil from being a gibe and a sneer at the wearer.

There is a rumour that long, floating veils are coming in, and I see that some one, commenting upon this, calls them unbecoming. They are quite the reverse, for there is something in the shifting movement of the lace or spotted net that makes the complexion look its very best.

I notice that Georgiana Lady Wolverton has adopted the Spinning Wheel as the official organ of the Needlework Guild that was founded by her and has now developed into such a very large charitable organisation. The Spinning Wheel is a weekly paper, published at a penny, for the reading of "mothers, wives, and daughters," and a column will henceforth be devoted to the affairs of the League. There are now fifty branches all over the country, so that there must be plenty of news to exchange, interesting incidents in connection with the work itself and its distribution, and valuable suggestions as to what articles are most needed by the poor of any special district. Lady Wolverton has every reason to feel proud of the Guild, which she has seen grow from the germ of her own benevolent idea into such a far-reaching system which does much to bring the well-to-do and the poor together. The Duchess of Teck has for some years been General President, and the Duchess of Albany is President of the Middlesex branch. The Duchess of York took an active interest when she was still Princess May, and is just of the nature to do so still, notwithstanding the flood of fresh interest that has poured into her life with her marriage.

The Henley Town Regatta afforded us a pleasant day's outing, and was one of those picturesque sights which remain in the memory for years. Scarlet canoes were important factors in the colour scheme, and an outbreak of Japanese sunshades also contributed largely to the general effect. This article is one of the many that are scarcely successful individually, though very much so when numerously represented. A crew dressed in white and yellow had yellow Japanese sunshades, and were to be congratulated upon their triumph in the artistic line.

COSTUMES FOR SCOTLAND, &c.—Messrs. REDFERN beg to announce that they have designed some very practical Gowns for ladies visiting Scotland, either for Shooting, Travelling, Golfing, &c., to which they invite an inspection.—27, New Bond-street, W.

MAJOR HOWE & CO.'s fashionable Boots and Shoes (ready-made or to measure) for Ladies, Girls, and Gentlemen.—16, Coventry-st., W.; 400, Strand, W.C.; 81, Gracechurch-st., City; 13, Queen Victoria-street (Mansion House), London. (Klenrusha, Polish.)

We are really improving, as a nation, in our colour ideas, and now that men are joining in with women in the sartorial study of the beautiful and the becoming, we may look forward with sanguine anticipation to a brilliant future. I love colour. Do not you?

Waste is wicked, as we all know, and I see that The Table gives a recipe for converting the rinds of water-melons into a sweet preserve. It has once or twice occurred to me that they would make a good imitation of preserved ginger if carefully prepared. The method is rather lengthy, but not particularly troublesome.

There is one department of our cottage housekeeping that is uncommonly pleasant. It deals with the kitchen-garden. No one knows what vegetables can taste like who has not had them perfectly fresh from the garden for cooking. The marrows, late peas, runner beans, and lettuce here taste quite differently from what they do in town. Our salads also are great successes by reason of the lettuce and small cress being gathered perfectly fresh, and not allowed to knock about so that the leaves get bruised. Have you ever tasted boiled lettuce, by the way? It is excellent. The trees are full of apples, and these, too, taste ever so much better when freshly gathered off the trees; and as to plums, the flavour and the bloom of them is wonderfully improved by this circumstance.

This dish, which is particularly savoury, is remarkably easy to prepare. The merest novice could cook it as readily as an experienced cook:—

Select four tomatoes of medium size and not over-ripe, and cut them into slices of about an eighth of an inch in thickness. Take the same number of slices from any cold joint you may have at hand. Select a plate for the oven which can be sent to table; on this place a small jam jar, around which put alternately a slice of tomato, then one of meat, until a circle is formed. Remove the jar carefully so as not to disarrange the form, and fill the space with a hillock of fine breaderumbs. Well season with pepper, salt, and the grated rind of a lemon. Over this scatter chopped ham or bacon, then screen with finely minced parsley. Set the dish in a quick oven, and when the contents are half cooked, lay little pieces of butter here and there. Around the rim of the plate lay a row of mushrooms which have been skinned and stalked, put a little butter on each one, and dust over with pepper. When the meat is done, squeeze over the whole the juice of a lemon, and pour a gill of good gravy round the dish. Send to table at once on a larger dish covered with a fringed d'oyley.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

MARIANI WINE

This inimitable's COCA WINE is an aid to intellectual exertion, and is indispensable to brain-workers and others who suffer from Debility, Exhaustion, Mental Depression, Dyspepsia, Sleeplessness, Voice Fatigue; also to promote Convalescence. Written Testimonials from over 2,000 Physicians. "A powerful rejuvenator and renovator of the vital forces." Sold by Chemists, Grocers, and Stores, or delivered free by Importers, WILCOX & CO. 239, Oxford-st., London. 4s. per bottle, or 45s. dozen. Be sure and ask for MARIANI WINE.

MOURNING FOR IMMEDIATE WEAR.

Messrs. JAY'S

Large and well-assorted STOCK includes a choice and varied selection of COSTUMES, MANTLES, and MILLINERY, suitable for any degree of Mourning, and ready for IMMEDIATE WEAR. Orders to special instructions are executed in a few hours, and Ladies are Waited Upon in any part of the country without any extra charge whatever.

JAY'S,
REGENT STREET, LONDON.

JOHN EXSHAW and CO.'S BRANDIES

SUPPLIED DIRECT TO THE PUBLIC.

No. 1	66/- per doz.	Very Old Liqueur	140/- per doz.
Liqueur	84/- ,,	Magnificent Old do.	175/- ,,
Fine Liqueur	96/- ,,	Grand Champagne	200/- ,,

SAMPLES FORWARDED.

CHAMPAGNES.

Jules Champion & Co.'s 1889 (in Bottles only)	68/- per doz.
Moet & Chandon's Dry Imperial 1884 (in Bottles only)	105/- ,,
Ditto ditto ditto 1889 (in all sizes)	84/- ,,
Lebeau & Co. (in Magnums and Bottles only)	54/- ,,

CLARETS.

Ch. L Croute 1889	24/- per doz.
Ch. Brane Cantenac 1889	36/- ,,

(Bottled at the Chateau).

All the BRANDIES sold at the Bars of the Covent Garden Promenade Concerts are supplied by JOHN EXSHAW & CO.

POWELL, TURNER, & CO.,
28, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S, S.W., and 23, FINCH LANE, CITY.

CHUBB'S ARMOUR PLATE SAFES

FOR JEWELS, BOOKS, AND CASH.

Illustrated Price Lists Post free.

Chubb & Son's Lock and Safe Coy, Ld.
128, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, LONDON.

GAIETY RESTAURANT, STRAND.
THE VIENNESE STRING BAND WILL PLAY DURING
3/6 DINNER, 6 to 8.30 SEPARATE TABLES. NO CHARGE FOR ATTENDANCE. 5/-

JOHANNIS

KING OF NATURAL TABLE WATERS.

Promotes Digestion. Prolongs Life.
Prevents Gout and Rheumatism.

SPRINGS: Zollhaus, Germany.
LONDON OFFICES: 25, Regent Street, Waterloo Place.

Mr. HELBRONNER, Ld.
300 & 302, OXFORD STREET, W.
ECCLESIASTICAL AND DOMESTIC EMBROIDERERS.
Weavers of Dress Silks,
Decorators, Upholsterers, &c.

LADIES' HOSIERY.

Ladies requiring stockings for comfort, elasticity, and wear-resisting qualities should ask for the Patent TRIPLE SPLICED INSTEP HOSE, which are undoubtedly the best produced. They are made in Cotton, Lisle Thread, Summer and Winter Cashmere, Spun and Pure Silk.

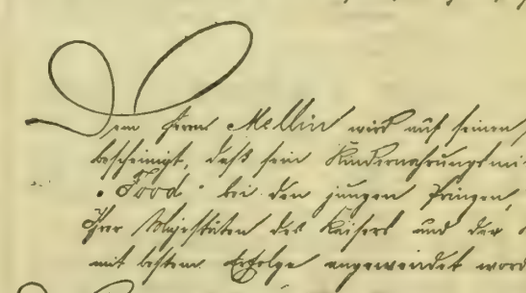
Each pair is stamped with the Registered trade mark, "MUSA DYE," and "PATENT TRIPLE SPLICED INSTEP HOSE, No. 20,778" on sole of foot.

To be obtained of all the best Hosiers and Outfitters in the United Kingdom.

Ladies experiencing any difficulty in obtaining these goods are requested to write to the patentees, who will forward them the address of the nearest vendor. This will ensure their having the genuine article.

Wholesale only of the Patentees:
DEBENHAM & FREEBODY,
Fletcher Gate, Nottingham.

UNIQUE TESTIMONIAL
FROM
HER IMPERIAL MAJESTY THE
EMPRESS of GERMANY



TRANSLATION.

Berlin, April 14th, 1893.

At Mr. MELLIN'S request, it is hereby certified that his "Food" for Children has been used with the best results by the young Princes, Sons of their Imperial Majesties, The Emperor and Empress.

The Cabinet of Her Majesty the Empress and Queen.

AN ILLUSTRATED PAMPHLET ON THE FEEDING AND REARING OF INFANTS.

A PRACTICAL AND SIMPLE TREATISE FOR MOTHERS,
Containing a large number of Portraits of Healthy and Beautiful Children together with Facsimiles of Original Testimonials which are of the greatest interest to all mothers, to be had with Samples Free by Post, on application to

MELLIN'S FOOD WORKS, STAFFORD ST. PECKHAM, S.E.

(The Original Firm Established 1810.)
Mappin Brothers
"Queen's Cutlery."
(PROTECTED)

By Her Majesty's Special Warrant.

"Queen's" Cutlery is the finest in the World, has stood the test of over 80 years, supplied to the public by the actual manufacturers, direct.

Mappin Corporate is on all in Queen's Queen's Brothers' Trade Mark Manufactures Plate and Cutlery.

Queen's Works, Sheffield.

Only London Show Rooms: 220, REGENT ST., W.; & 66, CHEAPSIDE, E.C. (Next Sir John Bennett's.)

Queen's Plate. (PROTECTED.)

Queen's Cutlery. (PROTECTED.)

ILLUSTRATED PRICE LIST and SAMPLES POST-FREE.

Everyone furnishing should see Mappin Brothers' goods before deciding elsewhere.

Inspection invited at the London Show-Rooms.

SELECTIONS of Goods forwarded to the Country on APPROVAL.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

GRANT ALLEN'S New Novel, "THE SCALLYWAG," is now Ready in 3 vols., at every Library.

WALTER BESANT'S New Novel, "THE REBEL QUEEN," will be ready, in 3 vols, at every Library, on SEPTEMBER 15.

History of the Consulate and the Empire of France under Napoleon. By L. A. THIERS. A New Edition, with 36 Steel Plate Illustrations. Complete in 12 vols., demy 8vo, cloth [illegible] each. The FIRST VOLUME is just ready.

The Gun-Runner. A Romance of Zululand. By BERTRAM MITFORD. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"'The Gun-Runner,' is positively thrilling. . . Will be read with breathless interest [illegible]."—World.

Dr. Pascal. By ÉMILE ZOLA. Translated by ERNEST A. VIZETELLY. With an Etched Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"Of great power and interest."—Westminster Gazette.

Also, uniform in size and price.

THE DOWNFALL. By É. ZOLA. | THE DREAM. By É. ZOLA.

Link by Link: Detective Stories. By DICK DONOVAN. Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s., cloth, 2s. 6d.

"A volume of capital stories."—Morning Post.

A Trying Patient, &c. By JAMES PAYN, Author of "By Proxy" &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"Delightful reading. . . . The book will please everyone."—Scotsman.

"To Let," &c. By B. M. CROKER, Author of "Diana Barrington" &c. Post 8vo, boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

"An excellent book for all who love delights."—Globe.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, Piccadilly, W.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. PARR.

CAN THIS BE LOVE?

BY MRS. PARR,

Author of "Adam and Eve," &c.

1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

Messrs. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY beg to announce a New Edition, at Half-a-Crown, of Mr. CLARK RUSSELL'S NOVELS, uniform in style and binding with the Cheap Editions of the Novels of Mr. William Black, Mr. Thomas Hardy, and Mr. R. D. Blackmore, now being issued. The WRECK of the GROSVENOR, with Photogravure Portrait of Mr. Clark Russell from a painting showing him at the age of seventeen, when in the merchant service, is NOW READY, crown 8vo, bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

CHEAP EDITIONS AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

SABINA ZEMBRA. By WILLIAM BLACK. Price 2s. 6d. Being the New Volume in the uniform issue of Mr. Black's complete Novels.

CRADOCK NOWELL. By R. D. BLACKMORE New and Cheaper Edition. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

LORNA DOONE: A Romance of Exmoor. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

NEW and POPULAR EDITION (the THIRTY-EIGHTH).

With Photogravure Portrait of the Author, expressly taken for this Edition. Crown 8vo, bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

"We suppose there are still some people so unfortunate as not to have read 'Lorna Doone.' They should hasten to buy this volume."—St. James's Gazette.

THOMAS HARDY'S NOVELS.

Author of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles."

New Issue in uniform crown 8vo Volumes, cloth, 2s. 6d. each.

FAR from the MADDING CROWD. With Photogravure Portrait of the Author, from a Photograph by Wheeler, of Weymouth. [Ready.

The MAYOR of CASTERBRIDGE. [Ready.

The TRUMPET-MAJOR. [Ready.

The RETURN of the NATIVE. [Ready.

A PAIR of BLUE EYES. [Ready.

The HAND of ETHELBERTA. [Shortly.

TWO on a TOWER. [Shortly.

A LAODICEAN. [Shortly.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd., and all Booksellers.

LADY WOLVERTON'S NEEDLEWORK GUILD.—President—H.R.H. the DUCHESS of TECK.—Notice to Vice-Presidents, Associates, and Members throughout the United Kingdom.—On and after WEDNESDAY next the GUILD'S REPORTS, Notices, &c., will appear in the Spinning Wheel, the official organ of the Guild. The paper may be ordered through any Bookseller, Newsagent, or Railway Bookstall, and is published at 1d. weekly.

Fifth Edition, Crown 8vo, paper cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

FOODS for the FAT:

HOW TO CURE CORPULENCE.

By Dr. YORKE DAVIES, Licentiate Royal College Physicians, London.

"I strongly recommend it to fat people."—Lady's Pictorial.

"The fattest will rise up and call the doctor blessed."—World.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, Piccadilly, W.

"Without question the PALL MALL MAGAZINE is remarkable among the popular illustrated monthly periodicals for the number and beauty of its pictures, and the high finish which characterises them." DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"The PALL MALL MAGAZINE is rapidly taking to itself a position as one of the most readable and best of English magazines."—DAILY GRAPHIC.

PALL MALL MAGAZINE.

SEPTEMBER NUMBER NOW READY. (EDITED BY LORD FREDERIC HAMILTON, M.P., AND SIR DOUGLAS STRAIGHT.) PRICE ONE SHILLING.

BIMETALLISM: A STUDY.

"THE CASE FOR SILVER." By W. H. GRENFELL, Esq., Ex-M.P. for Hereford.

"THE CASE FOR GOLD." By WILLIAM WALDORF ASTOR.

By SIR F. LEIGHTON, Bart., P.R.A., Engraved by BISCOMBE GARDNER.

OTHER CONTENTS.

DUTCH PEASANT GIRL. Coloured Frontispiece. From an original painting by Miss E. G. COHEN.

THE TRUE LEGEND OF THE ZEPHYR AND THE ROSE. By the COUNTESS OF CORK AND ORRERY. Illustrated by E. M. JESSOP.

THE SERE, THE YELLOW LEAF. Part I. By Madame SARAH GRAND. Illustrated by W. H. MARGETSON.

AT ANCHOR—TAKING IN STORES.

RUSSIAN JEWRY. Part I. By HALL CAINE. With Illustrations drawn from Types of Russian Immigrants at the London Docks by Miss E. COLLIS.

AN IMPERIAL CITY. By Sir LEEL GEDEIN, K.S.I. With Illustrations by H. BREWER and FRANCIS MASEY.

DICK DENHOLME. By J. KEIGHLEY SNOWDEN. With Illustrations by J. GULICH, and a full-page Engraving by BISCOMBE GARDNER.

THE FOLLIES OF FASHION. Part III. By Mrs. PARR. With Illustrations from Dr. Parr's Collection of Old Prints.

ROME IN AMERICA. By RAYMOND BLATHWAYT. Illustrated with portraits of the Roman Hierarchy in America.

"THE CHILDREN'S PLAYGROUND." From an original drawing by ROBERT BARNES, R.I., engraved by J. R. SMITH.

A DUTCH EXTERIOR. By W. L. ALDEN. With Illustrations.

PEOPLE WE HAVE MET. No. 3. "The Sportsman." From an original drawing by "RAB."

A NEW EXPLOSIVE. By ROBERT BARR. Illustrated by A. RITCHIE.

THE CALL TO DUTY. From an original drawing by G. L. SEYMOUR.

SOCIETY: THE REMNANT. By Mrs. LYNN LINTON.

THE PARTRIDGE. By "A SON OF THE MARSHES." With Illustrations by G. E. LODGE.

CLARINDA'S BEAUTY. By NORMAN GALE. Illustrated by Miss VERA CHRISTIE.

WITHOUT PREJUDICE. By I. ZANGWILL. With Thumb-Nail Sketches by L. BAUMER.

PALL MALL MAGAZINE DRAWING COMPETITION (No. III.). "THE PRINCIPAL INCIDENT OF THE SUMMER HOLIDAYS." As anticipated by (a) Paterfamilias, (b) Materfamilias, (c) Edith (aged Nineteen), (d) Dick (aged Fourteen). By Mr. H. STRATTON, Mr. W. J. URQUHART, and Miss VERA CHRISTIE.

Editorial Offices: 18, Charing Cross-road, W.C.; Publishing Offices—London: GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, Limited, Broadway, Ludgate Hill, E.C.; Manchester: GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, Limited, 16, Jackson's Row; New York: The International News Company; Toronto: The Toronto News Company; Montreal: The Montreal News Company.

Copies on sale at all Railway Bookstalls, Newsagents, and Railway Bookstalls in Great Britain and Ireland.

NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES.

NOW READY

THE TRANSGRESSION OF TERENCE CLANCY.

By HAROLD VALLINGS. Author of "The Quality of Mercy." In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

PERDITA. By Mary E. Mann.

Author of "A Lost Estate," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

THE BISHOP'S WIFE: A Sketch.

By DAYRELL EDELWNEY. In 1 vol., crown 8vo. 6s.

"The relations of the charming Bishop and his wife are sketched with tenderness and refinement. . . . The Critic."

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street.

The New "Pseudonym."

THE PASSING OF A MOOD, AND OTHER STORIES. By V., O., C.S. 24mo, paper, 1s. 6d.

"THE ENGLISH TAUCHNITZ." New Volume.

Chronicles of a Health Resort. By A. HELPER. Pocket size, 6¾in. by 4¼in., stiff paper, 1s. 6d.

THE ACADEMY says:—"The book is full of brightness and humour, with here and there a pretty and winning pathetic touch."

THE HEART OF MONTROSE, AND OTHER STORIES. By MRS. WILLIAM HARTROPP, Author of "Fleur de Lis," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

SOME COUNTRY SIGHTS AND SOUNDS. By PHIL ROBINSON. Crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 6s.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster-square, E.C.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

IN THREE VOLUMES.

W. E. NORRIS'S NEW NOVEL,

THE COUNTESS RADNA.

SARAH GRAND'S NOVEL,

THE HEAVENLY TWINS.

(The Fourth Thousand will be ready on the 7th inst.)

DOROTHY LEIGHTON'S NOVEL,

AS A MAN IS ABLE.

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

"TRUTH"

CAN BE OBTAINED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING AT

THE GALIGNANI LIBRARY,

242, RUE DE RIVOLI, PARIS.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

SEPTEMBER.

MR. GLADSTONE AND THE CRISIS. By W. H. Greenfell.
IMMORTALITY AND RELIGION. By Grant Allen.
THE ORIGIN OF CLIMB. By W. Lewis Jones.
THE CLIMBING OF HIGH MOUNTAINS. By W. M. Conway.
THE MILITARY AND THE MAGISTRATES. By George Irving.
UNDER BRITISH PROTECTION. By J. Theodore Bent.
1793–1893. By Albert D. Vandam.
A PALACE IN THE STRAND. By Major Martin A. S. Hume.
ENGLAND'S RIGHT TO THE SUEZ CANAL. By Capt. Whitehouse.
DEVELOPMENT OF ATHLETICS IN THE UNITED STATES. By Caspar W. Whitney.
PASSAGES FROM AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY. By Edward Dowden.

HISTORY OF THE GOLD COAST OF WEST AFRICA.

By A. B. ELLIS, Colonel 1st West India Regiment. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. [This Day.

THE LIFE OF SIR RICHARD FRANCIS BURTON,

K.C.M.G., &c. By his Wife, ISABEL BURTON. With numerous Portraits, Coloured and other Illustrations, and Maps. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 42s.

"It is a long time since a work so replete with varied and thrilling interest has been produced. . . . The book is not only a valuable contribution to the history of the Victorian age, but a noble tribute of affection, reverence, and admiration to the memory of a dead hero by a woman in every way worthy of association with his astounding life achievements and unique intellectual powers. . . . . a product of rare and highly cultivated intelligence."—Daily Telegraph.

BIRDS IN A VILLAGE. By W. H. HUDSON, Author of

"The Naturalist in La Plata," "Idle Days in Patagonia," &c. Square crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

The Graphic says:—"The book is one to read, delight in, and appreciate. Mr. Hudson belongs to the school of Thoreau and of John Burroughs; but he is better than the last because he is more suggestive, with a finer vein of poetry running like a fugue through his writing."

CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited, London.

1/- 1/-

QUEER STORIES

—FROM—

"TRUTH."

"The special qualities of 'Queer Stories from Truth' (TRUTH office, 8vo, pp. 204) are already well known, and they are as evident in this as in previous collections. The vein is mainly of a somewhat cynical character."—Manchester Guardian.

"TRUTH" Publishing Office,

10, Bolt-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

STERILITY IN WOMEN: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. By J. B. RYLEY, M.D., M.R.C.S., London.—A New Illustrated Edition of this work is Now Ready. Price 3s. 6d.; post-free, 3s. 8d. London: HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY,

FOUNDED IN 1842. LIMITED.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE (either New or Second-hand) of the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum. LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for books exchangeable by the Library Messengers) from Two Guineas per annum. COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum. N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage. LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

TOWN AND VILLAGE CLUBS SUPPLIED ON LIBERAL TERMS.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books Gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the Leading Books of Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand, at greatly Reduced Prices. LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; and 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C. (Mansion House End).

"TRUTH" HOTEL LIST.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HOTEL MONT DORE.—"The finest Hotel on the South Coast."—L. & S. W. Railway Guide. Adjoining the hotel is a large Winter Garden, containing a covered tennis court, lounge, and a unique Bath Establishment, comprising Turkish, sea-water, pine, and other Baths. For tariff and full particulars, address THE MANAGER.

BOURNEMOUTH.—NEWLYN'S ROYAL EXETER HOTEL. In a beautifully sheltered position and its own private grounds. Only 100 yards from the lovely Pavilion Gardens, and two minues from the Pier. Accommodation, appointments, and views unsurpassed. Excellent cuisine. Table d'hôte at 7 p.m. Omnibus at East Station.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HÔTEL MÉTROPOLE.—On the East Cliff, facing the sea, three minutes' from East Station. The largest, and most magnificent Hotel in Bournemouth. Now open to receive visitors. Inclusive terms from 10s. 6d. per day.

GEORGE ALEXANDER, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.
Splendid position facing the sea.
BOARDING TERMS
from 10s. 6d. per day.
According to the position of rooms selected.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms.

GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

BUXTON.—The PEAK THERMAL ESTABLISHMENT. A High-class Hydropathic Hotel. Mineral water and other baths. Resident physician. Electric light. Passenger lift. Magnificent public rooms. Excellent cuisine. Table d'hôte 7 p.m., separate tables. Terms moderate.—Telegrams, "Thermal, Buxton."

CALLANDER & TROSSACHS HYDROPATHIC.—
Splendid Drives. Good Fishing. Lawn Tennis. Golf.
Terms from £2 12s. 6d. per week.
Apply to the MANAGER.

CHESTER.—QUEEN RAILWAY HOTEL, connected with the General Station by covered way. Porters in scarlet livery on the platforms attending trains day and night. Billiards. Lifts to all floors. Telegraph office in the Hotel. Telegraphic address, "Queen, Chester." Telephone, No. 27, Chester Exchange. H. T. GOULD, Manager.

EDINBURGH.—CLARENDON HOTEL.—The finest site in Princes-street, opposite the Castle. Perfect sanitation. Table d'hôte, separate tables. English management. "The most economical first-class Hotel in Scotland." Strongly recommended. Boarding terms. Apply for tariff.

FOLKESTONE.—BATES' HOTEL, West Cliff Gardens, and LONGFORD PRIVATE HOTEL, The Leas. Oldest established and most select Family Hotels in Folkestone. Reduced terms during Winter and Spring months. Pension (new Coffee-room) at Bates' Hotel.—G. L. HART, Proprietor. Sanitation Certified.

FOLKESTONE.—THE LEAS HOTEL, situated in private grounds, adjoining fashionable promenade. Sea views. Redecorated and newly-furnished throughout. Passengers' lift. Certified sanitation. Excellent cuisine. Moderate tariff.

FOLKESTONE.—ROYAL PAVILION HOTEL, facing Sea. 200 Apartments. Near landing-stage for Continent. Large winter garden. Table d'hote at 7 p.m.

G. SPURGEN, Proprietor.

GAIRLOCH HOTEL, LOCH MAREE, ROSS-SHIRE.—This magnificent hotel is situated amidst the finest Highland scenery in the West coast of Scotland. Accommodation for over 200. Good Fishing. Large posting establishment. Swift steamer from Oban every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

GRAND CANARY.—THE METROPOLE.
Newest and best Hotel.
Delightful position, fronting the sea.
Terms most moderate.

LONDON.—The COVENT GARDEN HOTEL, Covent-garden.—Most central FAMILY HOTEL, within five minutes' of Law Courts and Somerset House. Hydraulic lift. Quiet rooms. Electric light. Table d'hôte, 6.0 to 8.30 (open to non-residents). Moderate charges. Night porter. Telegrams, "Replete, London," Telephone 783.—M. A. S. BROWNE, Proprietor.

LONDON.—QUEEN'S-GATE MANSIONS, South Kensington, S.W. (close to Hyde Park, Albert Hall, and Imperial Institute) with all the advantages of a first-class residential hotel; public dining, drawing, billiard, and smoking rooms; hydraulic lift to every floor; electric light throughout.—Tariff on application to MANAGER.

MALVERN.—The Most Charming Luft-Kuhr Ortin England. THE IMPERIAL HOTEL offers every modern comfort, is surrounded by its own grounds, and commands splendid views. Brine (Droitwich) Baths now open for the season. Very convenient for visitors to the Worcester Festival, September 10 to 15.—For tariff, apply to the Lessee and Manager, F. MOERSCHELL.

MATLOCK BATH.—ROYAL HOTEL.—Hydropathic Baths of every description. Medical Man. Healthful situation; extensive grounds, greatly admired. Large swimming bath. Billiards. Dairy farm. Splendid fishing.—Also NEW BATH HOTEL, with extensive grounds, fishing, &c. &c. Terms very moderate. 'Bus meets all trains.—T. TYACK, Proprietor.

NEWQUAY, Cornwall, The Biarritz of England.—ATLANTIC HOTEL, "the finest Hotel in the county." Splendidly situated. Full view of the Atlantic from Trevose Head to St. Ives. Ocean view from every window. Beaches, caverns, and cliff scenery unrivalled. Bracing climate. Bathing, yachting, fishing. Delightful excursions. Magnificent rooms. Strictly moderate charges.

PORT OROTAVA, Teneriffe.—HOTEL MARTIANEZ (late GRAND).—First-class, standing in a beautiful garden. Shady verandahs, large public and private rooms. Billiards, tennis. Good cooking, good wines, excellent spring water.

Manager, J. R. EGGER.

PORTRUSH (Giant's Causeway), co. Antrim.—NORTHERN COUNTIES HOTEL. Facing the Atlantic. Bracing air, magnificent scenery; tennis; Golf links, the finest in Ireland; surf and deep sea bathing, sea-water baths. Table d'hôte dinner, from 6 to 8 p.m. French cuisine. Charges very moderate. The HOTEL is UNDER RAILWAY MANAGEMENT.

SALISBURY.—The WHITE HART FAMILY HOTEL, nearly opposite the Cathedral. The largest and principal Hotel in the City. Table d'hôte (two hours each meal) at separate tables daily. Carriages for Stonehenge and other places of interest in the neighbourhood at fixed inclusive charges. Tariff on application to H. T. BOWES, Manager.

ST. LEONARD'S-ON-SEA.—The ALEXANDRA HOTEL, Eversfield-place, due south, facing the sea. Hydraulic lift to all floors. Billiard-room. Conservatory. Electric light in all public rooms. Table d'hote at separate tables, at 7.—Under the Management of Mr. and Mrs. PERCY BEER (Late of Bailey's Hotels, London).

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—ROYAL KENTISH HOTEL.—Largest, best appointed, facing the Common, close to Chalybeate Springs and Parade. Table d'hôte (separate tables). Inclusive terms, 12s. per day. Tariff of MANAGER.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WELLINGTON HOTEL, Mount Ephraim. Under the distinguished patronage of his Grace the late Duke of Wellington, K.G., the leading nobility and gentry, &c. 422 ft. above sea level, south aspect; elegantly furnished; piano in every sitting-room. Cuisine, English and French; Table d'hote, large Dairy Farm.—BRABY, Proprietor.

All applications for spaces in this List should be made to the ADVERTISEMENT MANAGER,
"TRUTH" BUILDINGS, CARTERET STREET,
QUEEN ANNE'S GATE, S.W.

THE GROSVENOR HOTEL
BELGRAVIA, LONDON, S.W.
Well known for Wedding Breakfasts and Dinner Parties.

TABLE D'HÔTE OPEN TO NON-RESIDENTS.
Covered Communication to three Railway Stations.
The only Terminus Hotel of the Brighton Railway Company in London.
Electric Light throughout.

BRISTOL HOTEL,
Burlington Gardens, London, W.

(Between Bond-street and Regent-street, and close to Piccadilly).
Lighted by Electricity throughout. Now Hydraulic Lift to all floors.
THE CHOICEST OF WINES. FRENCH CUISINE OF HIGHEST CHARACTER.
SEPARATE ENTRANCE TO RESTAURANT IN CORK STREET, OPEN TO NON-RESIDENTS.
Luncheons at fixed price of 4s.; Dinners at 10s. 6d. or à la carte.
Private Rooms for Parties of Four or more.
NO SUPPERS.
TELEPHONE No. 3,297.

ST. JAMES'S PARK, S.W.
QUEEN ANNE'S MANSIONS.
(QUEEN ANNE'S GATE, OPPOSITE ST. JAMES'S PARK STATION)
Finest Site. Most central position in West End, near Houses of Parliament, Victoria, and Charing Cross. Suites of Rooms Furnished or Unfurnished, having all comforts and privacy of home, at moderate outlay compared with expense of keeping house. All servants supplied and catering done by the Management. Rents include attendance, electric light, lifts, hot and cold water, &c.
Address, MANAGER.

ALBANY HOTEL
(ROBERTSON TERRACE), HASTINGS.

Finest position on the whole sea front. Enlarged and superbly furnished. Only Hotel with Electric Light in every room. Passenger Lift. Dining, Drawing, Reading, Writing, Smoking, and Billiard Rooms. Table d'Hote 7 p.m. Moderate Tariff. No charge for attendance.
C. A. SCHWABE, Manager.

BUXTON, DERBYSHIRE.
THE PALACE HOTEL.

This large and elegantly-appointed high-class Hotel contains upwards of 200 rooms. The hotel occupies the finest position in Buxton, and is surrounded by its own grounds of six acres. Ground-floor sitting-rooms and bed-rooms. Magnificent public rooms. American elevator. Table d'hôte at separate tables.
A. CROSS, Manager.

Perfect Quietude. Perfect Rest. Perfect Peace.
The WALTON PARK HOTEL,
Clevedon, Somerset.
(Four Hours from London.)
BILLIARDS. TENNIS.
A City Solicitor writes as follows:—
"When I feel jaded and worn out with the hard work and worries of London life, when the intellect seems clouded, and the temper ruffled at trifles, I run down to Clevedon; there, lying on the rocks by the water side, I can enjoy perfect quietude, perfect rest, and perfect peace; there I can forget the petty worries of everyday life, and believe that life is worth living. With exhilarating air, a cosy hotel, an excellent table, a good bottle of wine, and a kind hostess, I can enjoy what few City men enjoy—the pleasure of existence. I return to London in a few days, a new man, to the wonder of my friends, who know not the secret of my elixir of life."
— Terms Moderate. —
WALTON PARK HOTEL, CLEVEDON.

ILFRACOMBE.—ILFRACOMBE HOTEL.—Unrivalled sea frontage and open surroundings. Seven lawn-tennis courts. Large swimming bath. New lounge hall. 250 rooms.—Tariff of MANAGER.

HOTELS, &c.

GRAND HOTEL, JERSEY.

LARGEST AND BEST APPOINTED HOTEL IN CHANNEL ISLES, AND THE FINEST SITUATION IN JERSEY.

Directly facing the Channel. Best Sands and Safest Sea Bathing opposite the Hotel. Magnificent Public Rooms. Swimming Bath. Tennis Courts, &c. TABLE D'HOTE DINNER at 7 p.m. (separate tables) "best in Jersey." Terms Moderate (inclusive or à la carte)

Telegrams—"Grand, Jersey." SYDNEY ROGERS, Manager & Secretary.

THE MANAGER, IMPERIAL HOTEL, ABERDEEN (patronised by the Royal Family), begs to call the attention of old customers and intending visitors to the fact that it is through no fault of his that their Porterage Boots is not visible on the arrival of the trains, but because the Palace or Station Hotel Company have monopolised the right to have their porters within the barriers at the station to the exclusion of those of the other hotels in town.

ILFRACOMBE.—The RUNNACLEAVE Private HOTEL. 120 beautifully appointed rooms. Recreation-hall, to seat 500, with fitted stage; carriage, yacht, tennis, photographic dark room, billiards, and in-door skating rink, free of charge until August. Chef de cuisine. Moderate tariff.

SOUTHPORT.—PALACE HOTEL.—Summer Season. Charming Seaside Family Resort. Extensive grounds. Electric light. Tennis. Golf links. Splendid baths.

DREW & SONS, PICCADILLY CIRCUS, LONDON, W.

PATENT "EN ROUTE" TEA BASKET

Two-person size, complete, as sketch, with Silver Plated Kettle Regd. Spring Screw Cap, £2. 17s. 6d., or all fittings Silver Plated, £4. 10s.

Four-person size, Plain Metal £4. 14s., in all Silver Plated, £6. 10s.

N.B.—Either of these "En Routes" fitted with Drews' Patent Railway Attachment, lid and fall tray. Two-person size, 7/6; Four-person size, 10/6 extra to above prices.

NOTE.—All "En Routes" are now fitted with Drews' new patent sponge-packed lamp, with entirely new system of burner, specially adapted for travelling purposes, being superior in every way to the old lamp and boiling kettle more quickly. These lamps fit all Drews' baskets and can be had separately. Polished Brass, 5/-, Polished Nickel, 7/6.

SCOTTADIE

THE ROYAL SCOTCH WAREHOUSE

115 & 115a REGENT STREET

LONDON W.

For
Coats & Ulsters.
Travelling Cloaks.
Carriage Rugs.
Travelling Wraps.
Shawls. Mauds.
Shetland Shawls.
Shooting Stockings.
Scotch Tweeds & Homespuns for Suits & Gowns.

Telegraphic Address—Scott Adie, London.

ELOCUTION, EXTEMPORE SPEAKING, ORATORY.—Professor HAYSACK, whose Pupils are among the first clergymen, doctors, barristers, solicitors, public personages, and nobility, GIVES INSTRUCTION. Voice strengthened, defects corrected.—70, Talbot-road, Bayswater.

£20 TOBACCONISTS COMMENCING. Illd. guide, post-free, "How to open respectably £20 to £1,000." Tobacconists' Outfitting Co., 186A, Euston-rd., Ldn. Mngr. H. MYERS, Est. 1886.

AMUSEMENTS.

ADELPHI THEATRE.—A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers. A New Drama of Real Life, by Henry Pettitt, entitled A WOMAN'S REVENGE. Every Evening, at 8. Messrs. Charles Warner, Charles Cartwright, Herbert Flemming, Leslie Hunting, John Carter, and E. W. Gardiner; Misses Elizabeth Robins, Alma Stanley, F. L. Forster, and Fanny Brough. Box plan at theatre. Telephone 5,643. Open at 7.30.

DALY'S THEATRE, Leicester-square. Opening Night, Saturday September 16. AUGUSTUS DALY'S COMPANY of COMEDIANS (Miss Ada Rehan, Mrs. Gilbert, James Lewis, Geo. Clarke, Arthur Lewis, &c.) in DOLLARS AND SENSE (for fourteen Nights and Two Matinées). Tuesday, October 3, THE FORESTERS, by the late Lord Tennyson, music by Sir Arthur Sullivan. Box-office, September 9 and daily, 9 to 5. Seats also at all Libraries.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE. Manager, F. J. HARRIS.—Every Evening, at 8.15, MOROCCO BOUND. John L. Shine and Charles Danby; Misses Hilda Glenn, and Minnie Palmer. Preceded, at 7.45, by Rex Harley, the unsinkable Minnie of Popular Actors. Box office 10 to 10. Doors open 7.30. Matinée Saturday Next.

ALHAMBRA THEATRE.—Open 7.45.—Two BALLETS, Operatic Music, and Varieties. At 8.40, the New Grand Romantic Ballet, in Four Tableaux, entitled FIDELIA. At 10.30, CHICAGO, and Grand Ballet of Nations. Frequent Change of Programme. Telephone 35,965.

THE EMPIRE.—Leicester-square.—Grand Programme.—Two Grand Ballets, Second Edition of ROUND THE TOWN and KATRINA. Unqualified success. Unrivalled VARIETY ENTERTAINMENT. Magnificent Orchestra. Doors open at 7.45. No free list.

PALACE THEATRE.—Managing Director, Sir AUGUSTUS HARRIS.—FULL LICENCE.—The HANDSOMEST THEATRE in EUROPE. The finest Variety Entertainment in London. Prices from 6d. EVERY EVENING at 8. At 10, A PAL O' ARCHIE'S.—Manager, Mr. CHARLES MORTON.

TIVOLI, Strand, London.—Cool and Well Ventilated.—Open EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, and SATURDAY MATINÉE, at 2.30, with a STAR PROGRAMME, embracing every Artiste of note now in London.—Manager, Mr. VERNON DOWSETT.

LONDON PAVILION.—Grand and Unsurpassed Programme. George Lockhart's wonderful Performing Elephants, Marie Leyton, James Fawn, Charles Godfrey, Kate James, Leo Stormont, Little Chip, Harry Pleon, Minnie Cunningham, G. W. Kenway, Florrie Gallimore, Tom Leamore, Jennie Valmore, Charles Bignell, Nellie Navette, Harry Atkinson, Tiny Websters, Evans and Luxmore, Selbini Troupe, Flo Hastings, Ada Lundberg, Fred Mason, Arthur Rigby, Brothers Horn.—EVERY EVENING. Doors open at 7.30. Admission from 1s.—Manager, Mr. EDWARD SWANBOROUGH.

EARL'S COURT EXHIBITION
OF
GARDENING AND FORESTRY.

THE GARDEN OF LONDON.

OPEN DAILY, 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.
ALL ROADS LEAD TO EARL'S COURT.

BAND of H.M. GRENADIER GUARDS and SCOTS GUARDS. The EXHIBITION MILITARY BAND, GRAND ORGAN, STRING BAND.

ILLUMINATIONS.—Tens of Thousands of Electric, Gas, and Vauxhall Lights, arranged with regard to colour.

FERNERIES, FOUNTAINS, WATERFALLS.

ADMISSION ONE SHILLING. SEASON TICKETS (Half Price), 10s. 6d., available till End of Season, admitting to the Main Building, Exhibition of Gardening and Forestry, Central and Western Gardens, and to one of 2,000 Free Seats at Captain Boyton's World's Water Show.

CAPTAIN BOYTON'S WORLD'S WATER SHOW,
EARL'S COURT.
More STARTLING NOVELTIES. CONSTANT CHANGE of PROGRAMME.
TWICE DAILY at 3.30 and 8, RAIN or SHINE.
Admission to Grand Stand 6d. to 5s., and 2,000 free seats.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker-street Station, in connection with all railways. Through bookings at all Metropolitan stations.—New Portrait Model of Duke Alfred Saxe Coburg. Magnificent Group containing Portraits of H.R.H. the Duke of YORK, H.R.H. the Duchess of YORK. Royal Tiger Hunt, H.R.H. the Prince of Wales in the howdah; Juno, the famous war elephant, charging a tiger. Political Celebrities, Cabinet Ministers past and present. Grand Scenes and Tableaux. Music all day. Refreshment Bars, &c. Chamber of Horrors, Portrait Models of Thomas Neill, Frederick Deeming, Mrs. Pearcey, &c. Admission, 1s.; Children under twelve, 6d. Chamber of Horrors, 6d. Open from 10 to 10.

NIAGARA FALLS in WINTER.
Finest Sight and Coolest Place in London.
NIAGARA HALLS, St. James's Park Station.
DAILY, 10 to 10 p.m. Admission 1s. Children 6d.
Tickets, including admission, all Dist. and Met. Ry. Stations.

CARPET CLEANING.

CARPETS and TAPESTRIES Cleansed from dust by PURE AIR.

Impossible to damage the most delicate fabric.

Collection and Delivery free.

Send for Prices and Particulars to your Upholsterer, or

The Compressed Air Carpet & Tapestry Cleaning Co.

Brook Green, W. Office: 94, Victoria-st., Westminster.

N.B.—The Trade and Public are invited to visit our Works, and convince themselves of the bona fides of our process.

ESTATES, AUCTIONS, &c.

STIRLINGSHIRE.—N.B.

THE MAGNIFICENT RESIDENTIAL ESTATE OF

DUNMORE

FOR SALE.

This well-known ESTATE will be exposed to PUBLIC SALE, within Dowell's Rooms, No. 18, George-street, Edinburgh, on FRIDAY, the 29th day of SEPTEMBER, 1893, at TWO o'clock afternoon.

UPSET PRICE, £150,000.

If not sold as a whole, the Estate will afterwards be offered in LOTS.

LOT FIRST will form the EASTERN PORTION of the ESTATE, which is detached from the remainder, and forms a very compact and desirable subject, comprising the Mansion-House, with Dunmore Woods, Policy Parks, the Home Farm, Dunmore Village, &c. UPSET PRICE, £65,000.

On First Lot being sold, the REMAINDER of the Estate will be offered in LOTS, each comprising a SEPARATE FARM. The Farms are of various sizes, with the addition of Woodlands in some cases.

The MANSION HOUSE, containing some magnificent apartments and very ample accommodation, is charmingly situated, overlooking the River Forth, and amidst the well-known Policies and Woods of Dunmore. The garden is large, with extensive glass-houses. The Stables and Kennels are first-rate. There is Gas made on the property, and the Drainage and Sanitary Arrangements are excellent.

The SHOOTING is very good.

The EXTENT of the whole estate is 3,984 Acres, of which 614 Acres are Woodlands bearing excellent timber.

The RENTAL of the whole Estate is £6,817 11s. 3d., and the Public Burdens £[illegible] 8d.

For further particulars apply to Messrs. DUNDAS & WILSON, C.S., 16, St. Andrew-square, Edinburgh, who have the Title-Deeds, Leases, Articles of Roup, &c., and who will arrange for the property being shown to intending purchasers.

The Proprietors will consider private offers, and reserve right to sell whenever a suitable offer is received, but do not bind themselves to accept any offer.

ALDRIDGE'S.

"THE ROCKET" COACH HORSES.

On Wednesday next, Sept. 13, Will be SOLD, at Aldridge's,

THE 35 HORSES

Which have been working during the Season between Boxhill and London; Also the Blue-roan Team belonging to W. H. MACKENZIE, Esq.; and several of his private Horses.

Full Catalogue will be forwarded. On view next MONDAY.

W. & S. FREEMAN.

GROSVENOR GARDENS.

FOR SALE,

A DESIRABLE FAMILY RESIDENCE,

Situated on the preferential side of these gardens. The house has just been handsomely decorated and thoroughly sanitated by the owner for his own occupation, and an additional large room, suitable for a billiard-room, has been built out behind. There are six reception rooms, twelve bed-rooms, and three bathrooms, and the offices have been greatly enlarged. The direct lease to be sold, and two-thirds of the purchase money could be left on mortgage at 4 per cent.—Apply to

Messrs. LUMLEY & CO., 22, St. James's-street, London, S.W.

HYDE PARK AND PORTMAN ESTATES. — Messrs. FREDERICK A. MULLETT, BOOKER, & CO.'S Registers of the Select Furnished and Unfurnished Residences, TO BE LET and SOLD, may be inspected daily at their Auction and Estate Agency Offices, Albion House, Hyde Park-square (the corner of Albion-street), W.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent Gratis. The List includes Private Asylums, &c.—Address, Mr. O. B. STOCKER, 8, Lancaster-place, Strand, W.C.

SPLENDID SEA GOING STEAM YACHT. Great bargain. Ready for sea. Crew for season. Eight berths, six sofas. Price, £2,350 in easy instalments. Address, YACHT, care Lee & Nightingale, Liverpool.

TREATMENT OF INEBRIETY.

Dalrymple Home,

Rickmansworth, Herts.

For Gentlemen under the Act and Privately,

TERMS—2 TO 5 GUINEAS.

Apply to—R. WELSH BRANTHWAITE,
Medical Superintendent.

COALS.—The Marquis of Londonderry supplies SEA-BORNE COAL from his DURHAM COLLIERIES: Londonderry Wallsend, 28s.; Fitting-on Wallsend, 27s.; Primrose, 26s. 6d.; Seaton Wallsend, 25s. per ton. Cash on delivery. Seaham Wharf, Nine Elms-lane, Vauxhall.

THE EARLSWOOD ASYLUM for IDIOTS.

Nearly 600 afflicted cases are receiving special care and education.

FUNDS urgently REQUIRED.

Special provision is made for the reception of Private Cases on payment.

H. GERARD HOARE, Esq., J.P., Treasurer.
JAMES DOWNING, Secretary.

Cheques or Postal Orders may be crossed Messrs. Hoare, Bankers, 37, Fleet-street, E.C.

Offices, 36, King William-street, London Bridge, E.C.

DO CHIRA OIDE NISHAIMAS-KA.

JAPAN, CHINA, AUSTRALASIA.—Varied, picturesque, and fastest route is via Vancouver.

CANADA AND UNITED STATES.—Through tickets to all points; luxurious dining cars, sleeping cars, mountain hotels.

ROUND THE WORLD.—By arrangement with the P. & O. Company, and all Atlantic Lines via Japan or Australia, price £125.

FREE FARMS. With Cash Bonus to Settlers in the North-West.—For berths and descriptive pamphlets, apply PASSENGER DEPARTMENT, Canadian Pacific Railway, 67 and 68, King William-street, E.C.; 7, James-street, Liverpool; 105, Market-street, Manchester; 67, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow.

ORIENT COMPANY'S YACHTING CRUISES.

The Steamship "GARONNE," 3,876 tons register, 3,000 h.p. will leave London on the 22nd November, for a 65 days' Cruise,

To MADEIRA, TENERIFFE, WEST INDIES, AZORES, &c.,

Fitted with Electric Light, Electric Bells, Hot and Cold Baths, &c.

Managers { F. Green & Co. / Anderson, Anderson, & Co. } Head Offices, Fenchurch-avenue, London.

For particulars apply to the latter firm, at 5, Fenchurch-avenue, E.C.; or to the West-end Branch Office, 16, Cockspur-street, London, S.W.

PHONOGRAPHS.—The Edison-Bell Phonograph Corporation, Limited, give Notice that they are the owners of the British Patents for the Edison-Bell Phonographs; and that Legal Proceedings will be taken against all persons selling, using, or exhibiting Phonographs not obtained from them.

By order,
W. M. CROWE,
Secretary.

Edison House,
Northumberland-avenue,
London, April, 1893.

THE Edison-Bell Phonograph Corporation, Limited, of London, have the Sole Right to Sell and Use Edison-Bell Phonographs in the United Kingdom, and all other persons claiming such rights, either as representing me or the North American Phonograph Company, do so without authority.

THOMAS. A. EDISON.

SPÉCIALITÉ:—THICK LEGS & THIN FEET.

A Want Long Felt, met at Last.

GOLF, SHOOTING, and CYCLING

STOCKINGS!

HOMEKNIT.
Free from all Seams.

Made of pure long staple Scotch Wool, full length, broad ribs, double heels and toes, most comfortable in wear, guaranteed to give satisfaction.

Colours: Navy Blue, Black, Light and Dark Grey, Heathers, and Fancy Mixtures.

ALL SIZES—1/9, 2/3, 3/6.

Specialité:

THICK LEGS and THIN FEET, 2/6, 3/6.

THE HIGHLAND CHECK,
(As Illustration.)

Hand-Knitted, for Cycling, Golf, or Shooting, 3/6 & 4/6
Thick legs and thin feet 5/6
Postage, 3d. per pair; 2 pairs, 4½d.

Terms: Strictly Cash with Order.

A. W. GAMAGE,
126, 127, 128, 129, HOLBORN, E.C.

MILD INDIAN CIGARS. OBTAINABLE EVERYWHERE.

BAHADUR

LIQUEUR OF THE GRAND CHARTREUSE.

This most excellent Liqueur, the great preventive of Indigestion, and almost certain remedy for sea-sickness, can now be had of all Wine Merchants, and at prices much lower than formerly.

Sole Consignee, W. DOYLE, 35 Crutched Friars, London, E.C.

WINDERMERE HOUSE, BARNES, S.W.

Head Master . . MERVYN F. VOULES, M.A.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR PUBLIC SCHOOLS, ARMY, NAVY, &C.

The School is within three minutes' walk of the station. Convenient trains from the West-end. Small classes and individual attention. Good cricket ground. Organised games. Day boarders have dinner and tea at the school, and prepare their work under the superintendence of a Master. No home lessons. Limited number of boarders received.

For further particulars apply to the HEAD MASTER.

"JAP" CARPETS

We have just received a shipment of Carpets and Rugs of Japanese Manufacture from our Agents in Hiogo, and as we are able to sell them at a very low price, we offer them to our Customers in preference to submitting them to the Wholesale Trade. They are novel and artistic in design and colouring, and of thick pile.

CARPETS.

8 feet long	by 6 feet	wide	... ...	28- each.
10 ,,	9 ,,		... ...	50- ,,
12 ,,	9 ,,		... ...	63- ,,

RUGS.

3 feet long	by 1 ft. 6 in.	wide	...	2 6 each.
4 ,,	2 feet	wide	... ...	5- ,,
6 ,,	3 ,,		... ...	8 6 ,,

A FEW MIRZAPORE CARPETS, 9 ft. by 6 ft. ... 27/6 each.
KURD RUGS, 5 ft. by 3 ft. ... 5/9 ,,
BANGALORE RUGS, 6 ft. by 3ft. ... 5/- each.
KURD CARPETS, 9 ft. by 4 ft. 6 in. ... 21/- ,,

Catalogues of all the best Floor Coverings free.

TRELOAR & SONS

LUDGATE HILL, LONDON, E.C.

The Burglar Bewildered.

HOW?

THROUGH THE

HOMACOUSTIC

WHAT IS THE HOMACOUSTIC?

The HOMACOUSTIC is a contrivance connected with Speaking Tubes, which entirely supersedes, for indoor purposes, not only the Telephone, but all other existing arrangements for indoor inter-communication.

HOW WAS THE BURGLAR BEWILDERED?

The owner of the house fortunately had a Homacoustic commutator fixed in his bedroom. This commutator placed him in direct communication, not only with his butler's rooms, but with seven other rooms in the house.

Directly he heard the Burglars he explained the state of affairs through the Homacoustic to his butler, and to the occupants of the other rooms; arranged what should be done, and they were thus all enabled to pounce on the Burglars together, and catch them red-handed, without their being even aware that their presence was so much as suspected. There was no ringing of electric bells, no creeping about the house to warn the inmates, NO PERSONAL DANGER.

The Homacoustic is far more dreaded by Burglars than any existing arrangement of "Protection from Burglary," for whereas when an electric bell rings, though it may probably arouse the inmates, it also acts as a warning to the Burglars themselves to be off.

NO HOUSE IS REALLY SAFE

— WITHOUT THE —

HOMACOUSTIC

Independent of its protective advantages, the Homacoustic is invaluable in all private houses for everyday use, and in all properly arranged business premises it is an absolute necessity.

The Homacoustic is automatic, not mechanical. Once fixed, always in working order. Its first cost is its last cost.

With the Homacoustic there is no blowing into pipes. The automatic whistle is always in position. One speaks and listens at the same time. The tube is closed when not in actual use. Ordinary speaking tubes can be utilised.

The HOMACOUSTIC SAVES TIME, TEMPER, & TROUBLE.

HOMACOUSTIC SPEAKING TUBE COMPANY,
22, QUEEN STREET, LONDON, E.C

THE HOMACOUSTIC.

WHAT IS THE HOMACOUSTIC?

THE HOMACOUSTIC is a contrivance connected with Speaking Tubes, which entirely supersedes for indoor purposes not only the Telephone, but all other existing arrangements for indoor inter-communication.

THE HOMACOUSTIC

Is Automatic, not Mechanical. Once fixed always in Working Order. Its first cost is its last cost.

WITH THE HOMACOUSTIC

There is no blowing into pipes. The automatic whistle is always in position. One speaks and listens at the same time. The tube is closed when not in actual use. Ordinary speaking tubes can be utilised.

ONE (No. 4) HOMACOUSTIC

Places the speaker in communication with any Number of Rooms.

THE HOMACOUSTIC

Is of special value and inestimable convenience not only in business establishments, but in all Private Houses.

The Homacoustic Saves Time, Temper, and Trouble.

For Detailed Particulars, Copies of Testimonials, &c., write to the MANAGER,

Homacoustic Speaking Tube Co.,

22, QUEEN STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Where every description of Homacoustic Instrument is on view.

STATHAM'S WATERPROOFS.

Chesterfield Coat 21/- | Regulation (Cape all round) 30/-

CARRIAGE PAID.

Any size up to 52 inches long. Larger sizes, 1/- extra for every two inches.

Best make, thoroughly Waterproof, and adapted for any climate.

Book of Patterns of all kinds of Tweed, Cashmere, and other Waterproof Cloths sent post free on application.

H. STATHAM & CO.,

11, CORPORATION STREET, MANCHESTER.

CAUTION.

JOHN CARTER respectfully informs the Public that Alfred Carter, of Holborn Viaduct, London, having in his Advertisements, Catalogues, and in other ways represented that his business is the original business carried on and known as CARTER, at 6a, New Cavendish-street, Portland-place, London, and also having infringed the Trade Marks belonging to the original business, the Hon. Mr. Justice North has granted a permanent injunction restraining him "from representing or leading any person to believe that he is carrying on the business" (referring to the original business known as CARTER, carried on at 6a, New Cavendish-street, Portland-place, London), and also restraining him from any further infringement of the Trade Marks, Copyrights, Catalogues, Circulars, or Advertisements of the original business.

JOHN CARTER would feel obliged if the Public will inform him of any further misrepresentation.

For full Illustrated Catalogue of Invalid Furniture and Bath Chairs write to

CARTER'S SOLE ADDRESS,

6a, New Cavendish-street, Portland-place, London, W.

THREE GOLD MEDALS.

The Y & N Exquisite Model. Perfect Comfort. Guaranteed Wear.

Patent Diagonal Seam Corset

Will not split in the Seams nor tear in the Fabric. Made in White, Black, and all the fashionable colours and Shades in Italian Cloth, Satin, and Coutil; also in the New Sanitary Woollen Cloth. 4/11, 5/11, 6/11, 7/11 per pair and upwards.

CAUTION.—Every genuine Y & N Corset is stamped "Y & N Patent Diagonal Seam No. 116," in oval on the lining.

Sold by Drapers and Ladies Outfitters in the United Kingdom and Colonies.

ESTABLISHED 1818.

Ten Prize Medals.

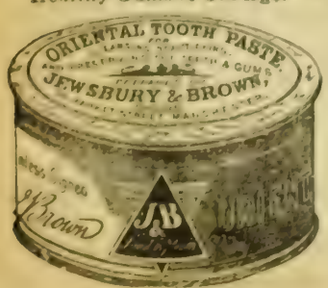
PETER F. HEERING'S COPENHAGEN CHERRY BRANDY.

Sold by all Wine Merchants, and at all Bars and Hotels.

JEWSBURY & BROWN'S

White, Sound Teeth, Healthy Gums to Old Age.

Oriental Tooth Paste.



CAUTION.—The only genuine is JEWSBURY & BROWN'S.

Pots 1/6 and 2/6. All Chemists.

60 YEARS IN USE.

PURE IRISH

LINEN SHIRTS

Tailor-Made Direct from Ireland.

Save 30 per Cent.

Made of the most durable Long Cloth, and fitted with the finest Linen Ireland can produce.

MADE TO MEASURE.

FIT AND STYLE GUARANTEED IN THE LATEST FASHION.

Half-a-dozen Pure Irish bespoke Shirts, securely packed, delivered free to any address in the Kingdom for 33/-, 39/-, or 45/-. Foreign Postage Extra.

Sample Shirt to Measure, Post Free for 5/6, 6/6, or 7/6.

Dress Shirts with fine Irish Linen Fittings, Six for 39/-, delivered free. A Sample Dress Shirt to Measure, Post Free for 6/6.

Old Shirts re-fitted with New Irish Linen Fronts, Cuffs, and Neck-bands for 2/3 and 2/9 each. Returned Carriage Free. Coloured Shirts, best quality. French Cambric 30/-, Oxford Cloth 33/- per half-dozen. Patterns Free. Four-fold Irish Linen Collars, best quality, 7/6 per dozen. General Catalogue post free.

For Measure, send size of Collar, Chest, and Height, or an old shirt.

TAAFFE & COLDWELL,

Army Shirt Tailors, 81, Grafton St., Dublin.

CAMEO CIGARETTES

A PHOTOGRAPH IN EVERY PACKET.

A SEPARATE MOUTHPIECE FOR EACH CIGARETTE.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

FAC SIMILE OF STAMP ON BACK OF EVERY TWO YARDS OF ALL GENUINE

CHIPPING NORTON TWEEDS

W. BLISS & SON, MANUFACTURERS

W. BLISS C. NORTON

Specialty for HUNTING & RIDING BREECHES, Tweed Suits, Boys' Wear & all HARD WEAR

TOO FAT. Dr. GORDON'S Elegant Pills cure STOUTNESS, rapidly and certainly. State height, weight, and send 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., or 11s. to DR. GORDON, 24, Hart-street, Bloomsbury, London.

FARADAYS'
FITTINGS

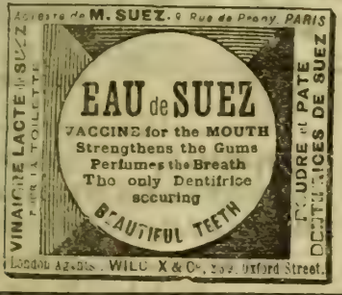
Electric Light Works

3 BERNERS ST. W

REAL GERMAN HOLLOW GROUND
KROPP RAZOR

NEVER REQUIRE GRINDING.

Black Handle .. 5/6 | A Pair, Ivory Handles, | Duplex Strop 7/6
Ivory Handle .. 7/6 | in Rus. Leather Case, 21/- | Kropp's Strop Paste, 6d.
From all Dealers.—Wholesale: OSBORNE, GARRETT, & CO., LONDON, W.



WOODS' PATENT GALVANISED
STEEL WIRE MATTRESSES & BEDSTEADS.

Carriage Paid, and Liberal Cash Discount allowed.

Guaranteed for Five Years.

EXHIBITED
CARRYING
ONE TON
At LIVERPOOL, MANCHESTER, and other EXHIBITIONS.

SHOW ROOMS:
128, BOLD ST., LIVERPOOL.

Catalogues and Prices free on application to the
LONGFORD WIRE, IRON & STEEL CO., LTD,
WARRINGTON.
Please mention this Paper.

Trade "OPTIMUS" Mark.

Photographic PRIZES £105 Competition.

Entry Form post free on application.

The Largest Selection of PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS in the World. Best Value Given. Before buying Opera or Field Glasses, Microscopes, or other Optical Instruments, write for CATALOGUE, which is sent POST FREE.

"OPTIMUS" PHOTOGRAPHIC OUTFITS.

Rayment's Wide Angle, Long Focus, Rack Camera, Three Double Dark Slides, "Optimus" Rapid Rectilinear Lens, Instantaneous Shutter, Tripod, and best Waterproof Case.

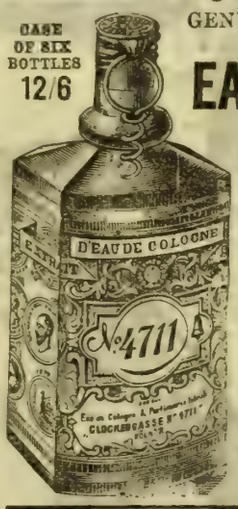
For Plates of the following dimensions—

Ins. $4\frac{1}{4} \times 3\frac{3}{4}$	$6\frac{1}{2} \times 4\frac{3}{4}$	$8\frac{1}{2} \times 6\frac{1}{2}$	10 × 8	12 × 10	15 × 12
£10	£12	£15	£20	£23	£30

PERKEN, SON, & RAYMENT, 99, HATTON GARDEN, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON

AN ALWAYS ACCEPTABLE PRESENT.
An Original Case of MÜLHENS'

CASE OF SIX BOTTLES 12/6



GENUINE NO. 4711 BRAND OF
EAU DE COLOGNE.
THE PUREST & STRONGEST, YET MOST DELICATE EVER PRODUCED.

THE WORLD says: "Anyone desirous of getting a thoroughly genuine Cologne, cannot do better than send for a bottle of the '4711' Double Extract. Once having used it, repetition is a foregone conclusion."

Large selection of Choicest Perfumes, Toilet Soaps, &c. Quintuple Concentrated Extracts, made from Fresh Flowers gathered at Grasse.

Of All dealers in Perfumes, or at the
LONDON BRANCH:
62, NEW BOND ST., W.
(ONE DOOR FROM BROOK STREET.)
Price Lists on application to Mr. C. REUTER, Manager. And at COLOGNE, NEW YORK, VIENNA, RIGA, and ODESSA.

ALL FAT PEOPLE

can safely Reduce Weight and cure Corpulency permanently by taking TRILENE TABLETS (Regd.) for a few weeks. They are small, agreeable, harmless, and never fail to IMPROVE both HEALTH and FIGURE without change of Diet. An English Countess writes: "Your Trilene Tablets act admirably." Send 2s. 6d. to THE TRILENE Co., Sole Proprietors,
70, FINSBURY PAVEMENT, LONDON.

The ONLY Antiseptic Saline.

SALT REGAL

FOR ALL
Bilious and Nervous Disorders,
SUCH AS
Sick Headache, Constipation,
Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion,
Disordered Liver.

At all Chemists throughout the world, in bottles, 1/6 and 2/9.

Office: 49, ISLINGTON, LIVERPOOL.

You Want a Typewriter.

TRADE MARK.

REGISTERED.

Does it not strike you that a machine invented by one of the first mechanical geniuses of the day,
That in two years has obtained an unprecedented sale,
That has been adopted by one Emperor, one King, several Princes and Princesses, and 20,000 ordinary users.
That has obtained the highest awards wherever exhibited,
That has gained Five Gold Medals,
That has even found its way into the Vatican at Rome,
That has received hundreds of testimonials,
That has found profitable occupation for thousands of operators,
That has been adopted by the principal Railway Co.'s, Chief Engineering Firms, Technical and other Schools,
That is the easiest to learn, does the best work, and
Has no filthy ink ribbon,

Contractors to

Her Majesty's Government,
The Colonial Governments,
The Indian Government,
The French Government,
and others.

Is the Typewriter you Want?

THE YŌST IS ALL THIS AND MORE.

Full Particulars from—

YŌST TYPEWRITER COMPANY, Limited, 40, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

BRANCH ADDRESSES:—MANCHESTER: 3, Deansgate. BIRMINGHAM: 78, Temple-row. LIVERPOOL: 67A, Lord-street. GLASGOW: 112, St. Vincent-street. BELFAST: 9, Rosemary-street. LEEDS: 21, New Station-street. PARIS: 36, Boulevard des Italiens.

ABSOLUTE GUARANTEE OF HYGIENIC VALUE BY THE "LANCET."

Special Report.

JULY 1st, 1893.

"The Marza Wine is agreeable to the palate, and is valuable not merely as a stimulant, but also as a Tonic, from the presence of a considerable quantity of Iron, also Coca, Phosphorus, and Pepsine. The formula of Marza Wine is a commendable one, and thoughtfully planned."

MARZA WINE

The Latest, Only Palatable, and Scientific Iron and Coca Wine.

MARZA WINE

SUPPORTS THE CONSTITUTION

MARZA WINE

MAKES RICH RED BLOOD, AND GIVES TONE AND VIGOUR TO ALL THE VITAL ORGANS.

MARZA WINE

IS INVALUABLE FOR

Convalescents

ESPECIALLY AFTER

ACCOUCHEMENT, INFLUENZA,
PLEURISY,
PNEUMONIA,
FEVERS, &c.

For Feeble and Debilitated Men and Women and Growing Children.

AWARDED THE

GOLD MEDAL

For Purity, Palatability, And Excellence.

Price 3s. 9d. per large bottle, 42s. per doz. everywhere, or carriage paid of the

MARZA CO., LIM.

19, WILSON STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Recommended by Eminent Physicians for

ANÆMIA, INSOMNIA,
NERVOUS DEBILITY,
BRAIN FAG, INDIGESTION,
MENTAL DEPRESSION,
EXHAUSTION,
VOCAL FATIGUE,
NEURALGIA, &c.

FLORILINE

FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH

Is the BEST LIQUID DENTIFRICE in the WORLD.

PREVENTS THE DECAY OF THE TEETH.

Renders the Teeth Pearly White.

IS PERFECTLY HARMLESS AND DELICIOUS TO THE TASTE.

Is Partly Composed of Honey, and Extracts from Sweet Herbs and Plants.

Of all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the World.

2s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE TOOTH POWDER,

Only put in Glass Jars, Price 1s.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER

Prevents the Hair from Falling off.

Restores Grey or White Hair to its ORIGINAL COLOUR.

Being delicately perfumed, it leaves no Unpleasant Odour.

IS NOT A DYE.

Should be in every House where a HAIR RENEWER is needed.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST OR HAIRDRESSER FOR

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

Price 3s. 6d. per bottle.

SUN LIFE OFFICE

FOR BUSINESS FACILITIES

LARGE CASH BONUSES

AND SPEEDY SETTLEMENTS.

ESTD. 1810.

Apply for NEW PROSPECTUS at the Chief Office, 63, THREADNEEDLE STREET, E.C.

HARRIS C. L. SAUNDERS, General Manager.

BIRKBECK BANK.—(Estab. 1851). Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane. Two and a-half per cent. interest allowed on deposits, repayable on demand. Two per cent. on current accounts, calculated on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £100.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, can be obtained, post free, on application to FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

MEMBERS OF THE STOCK EXCHANGE are NOT ALLOWED to ADVERTISE for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than their own principals.
Brokers or Agents who advertise are not in any way connected with the Stock Exchange, or under the control of the Committee.
List of Members of the Stock Exchange who act as Stock and Share Brokers may be obtained on application to
FRANCIS LEVIEN,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.
Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

LONDON AND COUNTY ADVANCE AND DISCOUNT COMPANY, Limited.—Cash advanced from £10 to £500, without preliminary fees or deductions for interest, for short or long periods, repayable by easy instalments, at moderate rates, upon approved security. Bills Discounted. Forms free. Offices, 57 and 58, Chancery-lane, W.C.—JOHN STONE, Secretary.

CASH ADVANCED PRIVATELY.
UNION DEPOSIT BANK.

No. 17, KING WILLIAM ST., Charing Cross, London, W.C.
[ESTABLISHED 1807.]
ADVANCES MADE in TOWN or COUNTRY at a FEW HOURS' NOTICE, Without Public Enquiries, for Short or Long Periods,
From £30 to £5,000,
To Ladies and Gentlemen, Merchants, Farmers, Traders, or any responsible persons upon their
NOTE OF HAND ALONE.
ALL TRANSACTIONS STRICTLY PRIVATE.
Also upon security of Furniture, Stock-in-Trade, Reversions, Deeds, Leases, Life Policies, Legacies, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Farm Stock, &c., without mortgage expenses, from one to 15 years, repayable by easy instalments, or so long as the interest is paid, the capital may remain.
NO SURETIES REQUIRED.
Distance no object. No delay, and no unnecessary expenses charged.
FIRST LETTER OF APPLICATION IMMEDIATELY ATTENDED TO.
A Gentleman sent direct from the Bank to carry out all advances.
Current accounts opened in accordance with the usual practice of other London Banks.
Prospectus gratis, or post free on application. Personal visit preferred.
Interest allowed on deposits, 4½, 5, and 6 per cent.
Apply to the SECRETARY.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT

PURELY VEGETABLE, Perfectly Harmless. Will reduce from two to five pounds per week: acts on the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into Fat. Sold by Chemists. Send stamp for pamphlet.
Botanic Medicine Co., 3, New Oxford-street, London, W.C.

THE GREAT QUESTION OF HEALTH.
WHAT TO DRINK?
PITKEATHLY TABLE WATER.

AS a remedial agent in cases of sluggish liver, plethoric states of the system, chronic affections of the organs of respiration and circulation, gastric derangement and biliousness, it has been pronounced by medical men of high authority as most efficacious.
"I use the Aërated Pitkeathly largely, and value it."—Dr. MATTHEWS DUNCAN.
SOLD EVERYWHERE.
London: INGRAM & ROYLE, 52, Farringdon-st., E.C., and at Liverpool.
" WM. BEST & SONS, 22, Henrietta-street, Cavendish-square, W.
Sole Proprietors, REID & DONALD, Perth.

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES TO PRIVATE INSURERS.
THE IMPERIAL INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED. FIRE. Est. 1803, 1, Old Broad-st., E.C., & 22, Pall Mall, S.W. Subd. Capital, £1,200,000. Paid-up, £300,000. Total funds, £1,600,000.—E. COZENS SMITH, Gen. Man.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE COMPANY, Limited,
No. 10, ST. SWITHIN'S LANE, LONDON, E.C.
General Accidents. | Personal Injuries.
Railway Accidents. | Death by Accident.
C. HARDING, Manager.

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE

63, Threadneedle-street, London, E.C.
FOUNDED 1710.
THE OLDEST PURELY FIRE OFFICE IN THE WORLD.
SUM INSURED IN 1892,
£391,800,000.

(FIRE.)

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.—Holborn Bars, London.
EVERY DESCRIPTION OF LIFE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITY BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
REVERSIONS PURCHASED.
Invested Funds, £16,000,000.
The last Annual Report can be obtained on application to the Secretary.

ACCIDENTS OF TRAVEL

AND ALL OTHER ACCIDENTS INSURED AGAINST BY
The Railway Passengers' Assurance Company,
THE OLDEST AND LARGEST COMPANY PROVIDING FOR
ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
64, CORNHILL, LONDON. W. D. MASSY, A. VIAN, } Secs.

JOHN SHAW, STOCK & SHARE DEALER.

HEAD OFFICE:—
WARDROBE CHAMBERS, DOCTORS' COMMONS, LONDON, E.C.
BANKERS:—
CAPITAL AND COUNTIES, Ludgate-hill, Long Acre, Piccadilly, and Brighton Branches.
LONDON AND MIDLAND, Newgate-street and Tooley-street Branches.
DIRECT PRIVATE TELEGRAPH WIRE between LONDON and BRIGHTON Offices.
FULL PARTICULARS of SPECIAL ARRANGEMENTS for DEALING sent post free on application.
COVER SYSTEM.—The loss is limited, the profits are unlimited, and there is such an independence in acting that the principle must and does recommend itself to business men—indeed, it is the only method on which they deal—for speculative accounts.
£5 COMMANDS £500 STOCK.
£10 COMMANDS £1,000 STOCK.
£50 COMMANDS £5,000 STOCK.
£500 COMMANDS £50,000 STOCK, and so on in proportion.
NO OTHER LIABILITY WHATEVER.
JOHN SHAW, STOCK AND SHARE DEALER,
LONDON, BRIGHTON, MANCHESTER, AND DUBLIN.

MESSRS. H. HALFORD & CO., Stock and Share Brokers, 2, Royal Exchange Avenue, London, E.C. Daily CLOSING Price List and marked report on application. Speculative accounts opened on terms to be ascertained. Special business in "Options" at CLOSE MARKET PRICES. No "DISTANCES."

pears' soap

By Permission of the Proprietors of "PUNCH."

"Two years ago I used your Soap, since when I have used no other."

Punch, April 26th, 1884.

OUR PUZZLES.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 758.—HOLIDAY RESORTS FOR POLITICIANS.

M. T. P. (real name and address will be published next week) £2 2 0

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Buildings, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on post-cards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand: whilst in the case of new competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 752.

Nothing, I hope, will prevent me announcing the result of this competition next week.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 759.

As I may be able to publish a further selection of the "Wasp" verses I will not at present announce the winner in this competition.

I have already published one list of those who sent answers to this competition. Below will be found a supplementary list of names:—Stanchion, Bushranger, E. Culverhouse, R. W., Esperanza, Veritas, Maretimo, Qui Hy, Monkeudous, Cæsar's Corner, Felixicus, Nodding Violet, Whig, N. S. W., Moonshine, A. A., Blueskin, Nomenclator, Dion, Ivy Leaves, Tamson, Barnsdale, Jock, J. McGrigor Allan, Mos, Dallington, Limp, Thomas, Shlowmow, Strix, Plumpy, Trouville, Prince Tiptoe, Winton, Topsy, Offa, Theta, Gerardinus, Lunatic, Bel Demonio, Ferpoint, Tophett, Beg Oak, Libby, X. T. Y., Democritus, B. S., W. G. B., Harry Devon, Jacky, O. H., Simla, Felsberg, Caledonia, Haman, S. W. S., Waps, Mars, Ignoramus, Eager, Dorothea, F. Y., Bass Rock, Lorenzo II., Ramona, Quis, Tyro, D. D., D. N., Adventurer, Svonok, R. W., Uncle Tom, Spin, Fanny Adams, Buzz, Ombra, Vespasian, Hugo, R. E. J., G. Turner, Luna Paramé, La Zia, Excelsior, Gumph, Scotia, Maia, Calgarth, Marplot, Nurse, Victor, Traveller, Gil, Styx, M. A. R., W. M., Stingo, Topsy, B. R., Bee.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 762.

By an oversight I omitted to state last week that all answers to this puzzle must reach me at the latest by the morning of Monday, September 11.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 763.

Since Thomas Hood, at the request of a former Duke of Devonshire, invented a long list of facetious and sham titles for sham books for the filling up of blank spaces in the library at Chatsworth, many attempts have been made to rival the ingenuity of the author of "The Song of the Shirt." It is now proposed to make another essay in this suggesting of book titles by offering the usual prize of Two Guineas this week to the competitor who sends in

THE BEST TWELVE FACETIOUS TITLES FOR SHAM BOOKS TO BE USED FOR FILLING ONE OF THE DUMMY SHELVES ON A LIBRARY DOOR.

As possibly some of the readers of TRUTH may not understand what is required, I append a few specimen titles of the desiderated kind. Thus:—

"Cleopatra's Pearl," an autobiography, by the Venerable Bede. "Doubly Dammed; or, the Man with Two Mothers-in-Law." "Howe's Answer to Watt." "The Quaker," by Sir Christopher Hatton.

No list must include more than twelve names, and all answers must reach me by the morning of Monday, September 18.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 The real name and the address of "OUTSIDER," winner of Prize No. 757, are L. GIBSON, ESQ., 3, Church-street, Reigate.

CALCUTTA.—Your answer to Puzzle No. 760 arrived too late.

A NEWSENSE.—I handed your communication to the Editor.

GERARDINUS.—Many thanks for your suggestion. But how about the words "rep" and "nep"? Surely they are perfect rhymes for "step."

OLIVASTRO.—I hope to settle the matter next week.

QUEEN BESS.—There is, unfortunately, insufficient room to print your exhaustive itinerary; but I am much obliged to you for the information you have furnished, and the Time-tables, &c., you have sent me.

THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 760.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS.—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

HOW TO SPEND £20 TO THE BEST ADVANTAGE IN A FORTNIGHT'S HOLIDAY TRIP.

 I may say that many competitors in answering this question have gone into details far too much. Thus I find it impossible to make room for some of the more lengthy communications which I have received. THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

A most enjoyable trip would be to take steamer to Rotterdam, stay at Hotel Central, and after exploring town and neighbourhood, spend the remainder of the time at Scheveningen, a most delightful watering-place. This could well be done within £20.—Cygne.

A thoroughly enjoyable holiday tour, and one well within the limits of the time and means of your correspondent, is a fortnight in Norway—that most delightful of all countries. For a single traveller, when pleasant companions add to one's enjoyment, the tourist steamers are highly to be recommended. For the sum of £12. 14s. the Midnight Sun, for instance, and many others, will give a fortnight of unallayed delight among the fjords (whose waters being perfectly smooth, no fear of mal de mer need be apprehended). The odd pounds may be comfortably spent on separate tours from the boat, knick-knacks, &c. For those preferring a more independent course of action a tour in the neighbourhood of Bergen—return fare from Hull £6—where lies the most beautiful of Norwegian scenery, contains the acme of enjoyment. A journey down the Hardanger Fjord to Eide and Odde, then on to Voesvangen, Stalheim, Gutvangen, and back by the Sogne Fjord to Bergen gives an excellent idea of the country. If your correspondent will start for Norway unencumbered by much luggage he will find there more to be gained in the shape of enjoyment and health than in all the countries of Central Europe put together.—Tuck.

Start on Saturday night, St. Pancras to Edinburgh, tourist ticket (50s.). First day, Sunday, Edinburgh. Second day, take circular tour ticket, Edinburgh to Glasgow, vid Forth Bridge, Aberdeen, Inverness, and Caledonian Canal (49s. 6d.), go to Perth for half-day, and on to Dundee, vid Tay Bridge, in evening. Third day, Dundee half-day, and on to Aberdeen. Fourth day, Aberdeen half-day, and on to Elgin in afternoon. Fifth day, Elgin to Inverness, where spend afternoon. Sixth day, Inverness to Oban. Seventh day, Oban to Staffa and Iona (15s.). Eighth day, Sunday, Oban. Ninth day, Oban to Dunoon. Tenth day, Dunoon, by boat, to Ayr, for land of Burns' sights, and on to Glasgow (3s.) same night. Eleventh day, Glasgow. Twelfth day, Glasgow to Edinburgh, by Loch Lomond, Loch Katrine, Trossachs, and Stirling (22s. 6d.). Thirteenth day, Stirling morning, Edinburgh afternoon. Fourteenth day, Edinburgh forenoon, Melrose for Abbotsford, and Dryburgh afternoon. The following day, Sunday, may be spent in Carlisle, or, if the tourist wishes to be home by Sunday, he can go on to London, direct from Melrose, by night train. The railway fares (third-class) and steamboat (cabin) cost for the whole round £7, and allowing 15s. per day for hotel expenses, the bill for the whole trip amounts to £17. 10s., leaving a margin for indulging in first-class if the tourist so desires, though the third-class accommodation on all the lines is now excellent.—Harold.

Pay a visit to the English lakes—at their best in September and October. Make either Bowness or Ambleside your centre. There are excellent hotels close to the lake, with boating, fishing, and coaching at hand. Hotel expenses—say £8 for fortnight—will leave £12 for incidental touring expenses. When you reach Windermere from Euston, coaches will take you to any hotel in either place. Then study Milner's Local Penny Guide for the boating, coaching, and touring excursions available daily within the district. "Do" all the "circular tours," as they are called (with quiet days between); the cost is moderate, and they include railway, steam yacht, and coach rides through the loveliest and grandest scenery. Much coaching becomes expensive, but you should take a box-seat for Keswick through Rydal and Grasmere, and scheme another to Patterdale, over Kirkstone Pass. Fill up your quiet days with rambles in the woods, up the hills, or exploring the bays and islands of the lakes. Drinking in the pure ozone, and feasting your eyes on the beauties at every turn, you will find here the best restoratives for unstrung nerves, flagging energy, and overwork. The bracing, pure mountain air, clear atmosphere, and delightfully cool breezes will work wonders, and after a season like the present should suit a Londoner to a T. For an ideal walk, cross by the ferry at Bowness, and take the road over Tarn Hows to Coniston. Though only climbing 850 ft., you get some of the grandest views in the district (equal, in Ruskin's estimation, to Switzerland), and inhale the purest oxygen in England. From Ambleside there are equally exhilarating walks up Loughrigg, Wansfell, and Nabscar. If you are ambitious, you will go further afield to Helvellyn and Scawfell. The secret of getting enjoyment and reaping the full benefit of your visit is, however, not to attempt too much.—Calgarth.

"To the best advantage"; but, until we know what part or parts of England he already knows, and have some more information as to his tastes—whether, for instance, he prefers land or sea travelling, town or country, mountain, river, seaside, or otherwise—it is almost impossible to decide what is "to the best advantage." A visit to the offices of a tourist agent, with a little explanation on his part, would, however, enable him to choose a "trip" adapted to his tastes and his purse, and to make such arrangements as would save him a great deal of trouble afterwards.—Bushranger.

Take a trip to Norway, going viâ Newcastle-on-Tyne by the s.s. Midnight Sun, 3,020 tons, 2,860 h. p., sailing on September 9. No scenery in Europe can beat the Norwegian; you get the benefit of the sea-breezes, with the shortest passage across the North Sea in case you are a bad sailor, a liberal table, and good accommodation. The fares range from 12 gs.—say £15 spent on board the steamer, that would leave you £5 for incidental expenses. Take as little luggage as possible, and after getting on board ship you have no further anxiety or trouble.—Pero.

Place: Paramé, on the Bay of St. Malo; reached by L.S.W.R. from Southampton to St. Malo; fare, £2. 12s. return, first class from London to St. Malo. Hotel: The Hotel de la Plage, in the healthiest situation, directly facing the sea. Terms, 70 francs a week inclusive. English management. Cabs, &c., at both ends (London and St. Malo) covered by £1. This makes £9 spent in absolute necessities, leaving £11 to be spent in—(1.) Excursions from Paramé by boat up the Rance to Dinan, or to Granville, Cancale, or the Cap Fréhel, or by rail to the Mont St. Michel or Rennes. (2.) Bathing, tennis, casino (operettas, operas, and balls), and boating. Paramé is an exceedingly healthy place and a typical "Plage."—Guiatus.

Everything rests with "A Frequent Competitor" himself. It is a question of best adapting circumstances to his own physical and mental structure—to his "tastes," in fact. Should he be a student of the language of any foreign country, or of any art or trade of any foreign country, within reach, I should advise his passing his holiday abroad, so that, his studies not being interrupted, he may in a measure recuperate on one hand what his trip may cause him to lose on the other. For a young man in search of relaxation and company I have named, and the accommodation on board the steamers is very good. All information with regard to the Western Highland trip can be obtained from David MacBrayne & Co., Hope-street, the fare being, I believe, £4. 10s., including meals. The Claymore and Clansman start on Mondays and Thursdays.—Idler.

The best way that a fortnight and £20 can be spent (under the circumstances named). Take the first rail to Weston-super-Mare, Somersetshire. There you will find sea-air, plenty of innocent amusements, a grove full of trees and flowers, a free library, a magnificent band, seats in shady places, green grass, &c., &c. Heaps of refreshment rooms and hotels, and a large arcade full of shops. On the roads carriages and breaks, and any amount of the best donkey bath-chairs in the world; and last, though not least, in different parts of the town, places of worship of all denominations.—Ye Hermit.

To Scilly Isles.—Train to Penzance (3rd), £1. 6s.; return to Scilly (1st), 10s. 6d.; six days St. Mary's (Tregarthen's Hotel), £3; six days Tresco (canteen), £3; train back to town, £1. 6s.; boat hire, £5; cabs, tips, &c., £2; total, £16. 2s. 6d. Leave Paddington 9 p.m., leave Penzance 10 a.m. on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, or oftener in summer. Delightful fishing and boating. In lodgings, cheaper.—Rich Man.

With twenty pounds and a fortnight at his disposal your correspondent can "do" Ireland from the Giant's Causeway to the Lakes of Killarney, and he will have the satisfaction of visiting one of the most interesting countries in Europe at one of the most momentous crises of her national history. All needful information, thoroughly reliable, he can obtain by paying a short visit to Cook's.—Bobus.

To a young person who has not travelled to any extent, the following tour may be safely recommended, and thus some of the finest scenery in England can be viewed. Starting from Paddington, say on Saturday morning, first take the train to Oxford, where the various colleges may be viewed, &c., and a general idea of the student's life obtained. From thence to Warwick is a short journey, and may be made on Saturday evening. At Warwick there are many places to view. Sunday may be spent by a walk to Kenilworth and Stoneleigh, and a train ride to Leamington, with its Spa, in the evening. Monday should be devoted to inspecting Warwick Castle and the Leicester Hospital, and then on by road—a lovely ride—to Stratford, the home of Shakespeare, where the museum, birthplace, and theatre, are the principal sights. From Stratford, on Tuesday, to Worcester, viâ Evesham. Here, where were fought decisive battles, may now be found flourishing industries, comprising pottery, sauce and jam factories, the carpet and needle trades, &c. Wednesday to Gloucester, where the cathedral is the main feature, and the tourist may journey on the same evening to Bristol, where a short rest may be taken. Clifton, a delightful suburb, may be visited at leisure on Thursday. On Friday by boat to Ilfracombe, a charming trip down the Bristol Channel. Arrived at Ilfracombe, the holiday maker may please himself as to how he spends his time. I recommend this place as headquarters, for the air is delightful, the town clean, free from noise and bustle, but with just life enough to make a stay most enjoyable. There are many charming walks around by hill and dale, and it is difficult to say where finer may be obtained. Trips may be made to Clovelly, a spot it is impossible to describe, and Bideford, Barnstaple, Bude, so dear to readers of Kingsley, are all within easy distance. The return journey may be commenced on the following Thursday by taking either coach or boat to Lynmouth (the English Switzerland), and which is not touched by the railway. Here the Valley of the Rocks and the Waters meet. Doone Valley must, on no account, be missed. On Saturday morning a splendid coach ride is obtained viâ Porlock to Minehead, from whence the train can be taken back to Paddington. By this tour the traveller will have obtained many changes of charming scenery, and at the same time a good insight into modern country life. The hotels are invariably cheap and clean, and the visitors from towns are always welcome, and may always rely upon civility and courtesy being shown to them, while the whole cost of the railway and coaching journeys will not exceed £8. 10s., leaving over £1 a day for expenses, which will be found ample.—Goldfinch.

My suggestion is third-class single to Monte Carlo—put balance (? £10) on the tables. If absolutely cleared out, the authorities will pay journey back. Very pleasant holiday.—Extra Dry.

Take boat from London to Glasgow (Clyde Shipping Co.), calling at Belfast, where break journey and remain three days, picking up next boat for Glasgow. At Belfast spend the day seeing Belfast and neighbourhood, and two days visit Dublin and neighbourhood. The journey from London to Glasgow, five days, three days in Ireland, three days; stay one day in Glasgow, one day—total nine days. Take circular tour from Glasgow to Oban (by boat), Crianlarich, Loch Lomond, Inversnaid, Loch Katrine, Trossachs, Callander, to Edinburgh. Break journey at Oban for one night, Inversnaid one night, arriving at Edinburgh on the twelfth day. Spend two days in Edinburgh = fourteen days, and return to London by night train. Cost of trip: Boat, London to Glasgow (saloon), £1. 10s.; five days' food on board at 7s., £1. 15s.; drinks and sundries, do., 15s.; three days' hotel expenses, Ireland, at 15s., £2. 5s.; train, Belfast to Dublin and back, 15s. 10d.; sight-seeing in Belfast and Dublin, £1. 10s.; circular tour from Glasgow (saloon boat and third train), £1. 11s. 6d.; six days' hotel expenses, Scotland, at 15s., £4. 10s.; sight-seeing in Edinburgh, £1. 10s.; train fare, Edinburgh to London (3rd), £1. 12s. 8d.; porters, tips, and sundries (say), £1. 5s.—total £19.—Stanchion.

Swanage is a delightful, picturesque seaside place, and excursions can be easily made from there to the Isle of Wight, the New Forest, and many places of interest along the South Coast. Boarding at the small hotel there would not cost more than £2. 2s. a week, which would leave a good margin for excursions by boat and rail.—Cygnette.

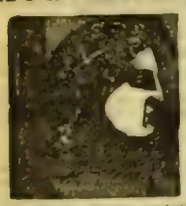
£20 judiciously spent ought to furnish a young man with a month's instead of a fortnight's holiday, especially if he is a cyclist. The writer's son started two years ago on an expedition provided with £20 and a safety bicycle. He cycled to Southampton from Liverpool, seeing Hereford, Gloucester, Salisbury, and Wells on his way. He took the boat to Havre and then went to Rouen, where he stayed a day; he then cycled leisurely through France seeing Evreux, Chartres, Troyes, and Dijon on his way to Neuchâtel. There he joined a party of friends at a pension in the Jura (four francs per diem). He stayed there fourteen days, making many excursions, and returned home by a different route, staying two days in Paris. He came home from Southampton by train, having just enough to pay his fare to Liverpool and his breakfast. Lunch he had to dispense with on that day. He was in splendid condition, having thoroughly recuperated both his mental and bodily faculties after six months' grind for an examination. I can but recommend any young man to go and do likewise. A tour through Holland is good for a non-cyclist, railway fares are so cheap, but a taste for pictures and architecture is necessary; Providence has provided little in the way of scenery.—Ivy Leaves.

Go to Lewes and stay two days, and take a walk of eight miles to Brighton one day, and to Eastbourne the next. Lewes is respectable and clean and inexpensive, and full of objects of interest and fine views from the Downs; then go to Newhaven, and steam to Dieppe by daylight. The sea is always more or less choppy half-way across. Do not sleep at Dieppe; it is exorbitant and full of English sharps, who will sell you the worst porter you ever tasted for 6d. a pint. Look at St. Remy's and St. Jacques' Churches and go on to Rouen, and stay there two days. It is cheap and clean, and free from English. Take your own tobacco with you and your own biscuits, if you want any. The French cannot make them, but import them from England, and sell them at 800 per cent. profit. Travel by day from Dieppe to Paris, as the scenery is superb; and by night from Paris to Boulogne on your way home. Stop at Abbeville and Amiens one day each, and one day at Boulogne, which is a good watering-place. You will have a week left to stay at Paris. Rue de Bac is a good place for private and hotel accommodation, half-way between the bridge from Place Concorde and Pont Neuf on the south side of the Seine. Do not have a lock to your bag, but a strap, and then you will not be searched at the custom-houses. Get your money changed in France both ways; you will see the rate of change in big figures at the post-office and banque. You can do all this very decently for £20.—Salvé.

September will be on us before our friend has the advantage of reading his TRUTH, but this will not be too late for Llandudno and North Wales, so let him hie himself to Llandudno. There are several good boarding-houses advertised in the "A B C Guide," any of which will answer his purpose. Here he may well exhaust North Wales. There are admirable sea trips along the coast east and west, but especially the trip through the Menai Straits to Carnarvon Castle and back. The train also to Bettws-y-Coed for Swallow Falls, Fairy Glen, and Roman Bridge, or, at a greater cost (but well within £20 for everything), the coach trip. There are also short journeys round the Great Orme, along the beautiful bay and Little Orme, and back by Gloddaeth Woods, while the niggers in the "happy valley" are unique and specially good; there's nothing like the entertainment in England, and their show is a good two hours' laugh, while in the evening, when most places are dull, and have nothing on, Rivière's concerts on the Pier are a thing to be remembered. Take Llandudno altogether it will compare favourably with any place in Great Britain.—Jam.

Answers have also been received from Mosel, Vlator, Comtesse Olga, The Hadji, Daisy, Goldfinch, Rho, Verbum Sap, Almaviva.

HOT MINERAL BATHS OF BATH.



Daily yield 507,600 gallons F. at 120.

FOUNDED BY THE ROMANS IN THE 1ST CENTURY.

ΑΡΙΣΤΟΝ ΜΕΝ ΥΔΩΡ.

BATHERS DURING 1890—97,299.

These Baths are unrivalled in Europe for luxury and extent, and contain all that modern improvements can provide for the comfort and relief of the invalid or the enjoyment of those in health.

Reclining, Deep, and Swimming Baths. Thermal Vapour Baths, for Painful conditions of Joints, &c. Douche, Inhalation, Aspiration, Pulverisation, &c., and Ear, Eye, Throat, &c. The Aix les Bains Massage System and Doucheurs and Douchenses.

The Medical profession sends patients who suffer from Gout, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Neuralgia, Paralysis, Dyspepsia, Eczema, and other skin affections.

Letters to the General Manager will receive every attention.

TAMAR INDIEN GRILLON

Very agreeable to take.
A LAXATIVE AND REFRESHING FRUIT LOZENGE FOR

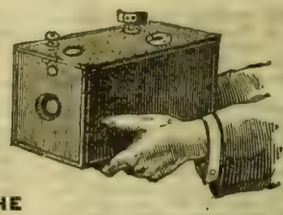
CONSTIPATION,

HÆMORRHOIDS,
BILE,
HEADACHE,
LOSS OF APPETITE,
GASTRIC AND INTESTINAL TROUBLES.

Box 2s. 6d., stamps included.
Sold by all Chemists and Druggists.

E. GRILLON,
69, Queen-street, Cheapside, London.

The Camera that takes the World!



THE

KODAK

No previous knowledge of Photography necessary.

"YOU PRESS THE BUTTON, WE DO THE REST,"

(Unless you prefer to do the rest yourself)

AND THE PICTURE IS FINISHED.

Price from £1 6s.

EASTMAN PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS CO. LD., 115-117 OXFORD-ST., LONDON, W.

SEND FOR PRETTY, ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, POST FREE.

AN AROMATIC FRAGRANCE

is imparted to the mouth by the use of Sozodont. It is beyond doubt the cleanest, purest, and best tooth wash ever offered to the public. No lady ever used Sozodont without approving of its cleansing and purifying properties, and the flattering testimonials that have been bestowed upon it by eminent Dentists speak volumes of praise for its merits.

SOZODONT

though efficient and powerful is absolutely harmless, for it contains neither mineral nor acid; it is wholly vegetable in its origin.

'Vinolia' Perfumes

DELICATE. CONCENTRATED. PURE.

"MAREQUIL"
"JEQUILLA"
"VINOLIA BOUQUET"
"LOSARIA"
WHITE HELIOTROPE
OPOPONAX
STEPHANOTIS

1/9, 3/-, 5/-, & 9/-
EACH.

MARÉCHAL NIEL
WOOD VIOLET
YLANG-YLANG
JOCKEY CLUB
WHITE ROSE
FRANGIPANNI
ESS. BOUQUET
MILLEFLEUR

1/9, 3/-, 5/-, & 9/-
EACH.

BLONDEAU ET CIE., Ryland-road, London, N.W.

THE GREAT SECRET.

How LIPTON'S TEAS have reached a pinnacle of Success NEVER BEFORE ATTAINED by ANY TEA in the WORLD.

LIPTON BRINGS HIS TEAS DIRECT FROM THE TEA GARDENS TO THE CONSUMER.

and is Sole Proprietor of the following celebrated TEA ESTATES, which cover thousands of acres of the best Tea Land in Ceylon, viz.:—Dambatenne, Laymastotte, Monerakande, Mahadambatenne, Mousakelle, Pooprassie, Hanagalla, and Gigranella. He has also extensive Export and Shipping Warehouses in Colombo and Calcutta, thereby

ABOLISHING ENTIRELY ALL MIDDLEMEN'S PROFITS.

WHY PAY MORE,

WHEN AT LIPTON'S YOU CAN BUY

THE FINEST TEA THE WORLD PRODUCES

NO HIGHER PRICE. At 1/7 per lb. NO HIGHER PRICE.

RICH, PURE, AND FRAGRANT,

1/- and 1/4 per lb.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Delivered carriage paid for an extra 1d. per lb. to any address in Great Britain on orders of 5 lbs. and upwards.
Samples sent free on application. A GUARANTEE.—Money returned in full if Tea does not give perfect satisfaction in every way.

LIPTON, Tea and Coffee Planter, Ceylon.
The Largest Tea, Coffee, and Provision Dealer in the World.

Ceylon Tea and Coffee Shipping Warehouses:—Maddema Mills, Cinnamon Gardens, Colombo. Ceylon Office:—Upper Chatham-street, Colombo.
Indian Tea Shipping Warehouses and Export Stores:—Hare-street, Strand, Calcutta. Indian Offices:—Dalhousie-square, Calcutta.
GENERAL OFFICES: BATH STREET, CITY ROAD, LONDON, E.C. Branches and Agencies throughout the World.

OVER ONE MILLION PACKETS LIPTON'S TEAS SOLD WEEKLY IN GREAT BRITAIN ALONE, AND THE SALE INCREASING BY LEAPS AND BOUNDS ALL THE TIME.

The CHANTRY TABLE, in antique carved oak, with under-tray; top measures 18 by 18 in., 27 in. high, £1 8 6

MAPLE & CO

LIMITED

TOTTENHAM COURT ROAD

LONDON W

THE LARGEST AND MOST CONVENIENT

Furnishing Establishment

IN THE WORLD

ESTABLISHED FIFTY YEARS.

The WENLOCK TABLE, in antique carved oak; top 20 by 20 in., 24 in. high, £1 4 6

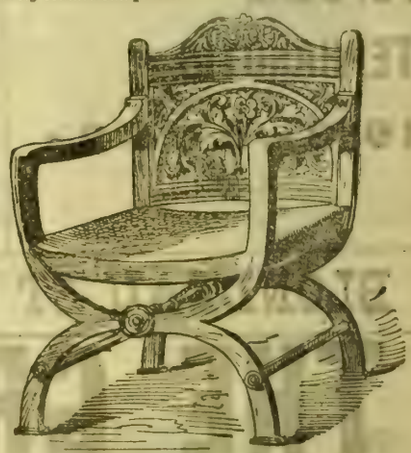
The MALMESBURY SIDEBOARD, in antique carved oak, fitted with cupboards and drawers, and cupboard enclosed by glass panelled door above; 6 ft. long, £8 8 0

SEVEN NEW SHOWROOMS

FOR

ANTIQUE FURNITURE

MAPLE & CO. are now exhibiting in the New Show-rooms a remarkably fine Collection of Antique Carved Oak Furniture, including numerous reproductions of fine old specimens collected from ancient Baronial Halls, Castles, Mansions, Priories, &c., all of which are marked at purely commercial prices.



The QUATFORD ELBOW CHAIR, in finely carved antique oak; seat 17½ in. high, £2 18 6

SEVEN NEW SHOWROOMS

FOR

ANTIQUE FURNITURE

MAPLE & CO.'S selection of Antique Carved Oak Furniture comprises unique and interesting specimens of Buffets, Dinner Wagons, Chimney Pieces, Book-cases Writing Tables, Flap Tables, Cists, Coffers, Friar Anselm Benches, Corner Cupboards, Flower Stands, Spinning Chairs, &c. A handsome piece of Carved Oak Furniture is always an acceptable present.

NEW DESIGN SHEETS of QUAINT OLD OAK FURNITURE POST FREE.

The YATTON CHAIR, in antique carved oak; seat 17½ in. high, £1 13 6

The CUMNOR SIDEBOARD, in antique carved oak, with cupboards and recess below; upper part fitted with cupboards enclosed by glass panelled doors and recesses; 5 ft 3 in. long, £15 15 0

Printed for the Proprietor by WYMAN & SONS, Limited, Great Queen-st. W.C. and published at 10, Bolt-ct. Fleet-st. E.C. in the Parish of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st. Queen Anne's-gate, S.W.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 872. Vol. XXXIV. Thursday, September 14, 1893. Price Sixpence.

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor should be sent direct to the Editorial Offices, Carteret-street, S.W., and not to the Publishing Offices in Bolt-court, Fleet-street.

No communication can be dealt with in the current issue of Truth if received later than the First Post on a Monday.

ENTRE NOUS.

THE Prince of Wales, who goes this week to Scotland to visit the Queen at Balmoral, and the Duke and Duchess of Fife at Braemar, will probably be the guest of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland at Dunrobin Castle for a few days before he returns south at the beginning of October.

The Duke and Duchess of York are to stay at Deeside until October 2, when they go to Edinburgh for one night; then to Wynyard Park on a visit to Lord and Lady Londonderry, also for one night; then to York for one night, when they will be the guests either of Mr. and Mrs. Vyner at Fairfield, or of the Archbishop and Mrs. Maclagan at Bishopthorpe Palace (where the Prince and Princess of Wales were splendidly entertained by Archbishop Thomson about thirty years ago); and on October 5 they will arrive in London for a stay of about ten days.

Princess Louise, who was announced by some of the papers to have gone to Aix-les-Bains, has been staying during the last ten days at Schwalbach, where she is taking a three weeks' course of the waters. Lord Lorne has accompanied the Princess to Schwalbach, and they are travelling, as usual, as Lord and Lady Sundridge, which, by the way, is the title (created 1766) by which the Duke of Argyll holds his seat in the House of Lords.

Princess Frederica of Hanover, who is staying at Gmunden with her mother, Queen Marie, has not visited England for more than two years, and I hear that she intends to give up her apartments at Hampton Court (which are the best set in the Palace), and that they will then be granted by the Queen to Princess Louise, who wants a country residence within easy distance of London.

The Hereditary Prince of Hohenlohe-Langenburg has been staying at Balmoral during the last few days, on a visit to the Queen, and he had previously been the guest of the Duke and Duchess of Fife at Braemar.

The papers have all stated that "much disappointment" was expressed at Braemar because the Duke and Duchess of York did not attend the "gathering" at New Mar Castle last Thursday, and the absence of the Duchess of Fife seems to have surprised and annoyed the Deeside public. It would have been very astonishing if these members of the Royal family had attended the gathering, considering that Prince William of Glucksburg, the favourite uncle of the Princess of Wales, was then lying dead and unburied at Fredensborg Castle.

In their accounts of the Braemar gathering, most of the papers mention the Duff "clansmen," of whom the Duke of Fife is alleged to be "The Chief." The fact is that there are no such "clansmen," and the Duke of Fife might just as well be described as an Emperor. His Highland pedigree reminds one of Thackeray's "Hogyn Mogyn of the hundred beeves." The present family of Duffs only appeared in Scotland during the reign of George II., and they never made any ridiculous pretence of antiquity until about forty years ago, when the late Lady Fife discovered that the affectation of Highland usages was an easy method of getting into favour at Court, and then the keepers, gillies, and estate servants and employés all developed into "clansmen," and every sort of fantasticality was introduced. The Balmoral "clansmen" are merely the Queen's servants and tenants masquerading as Highlanders. The Duke of Fife's Aberdeenshire domain was formerly the property of the Earls of Mar, who also owned the estates which now belong to the Queen. Of all the ancient Deeside families the only one still in the district is the Farquharsons of Invercauld, and they descend from the old stock through the female line.

Lord Belhaven, who died last week at Edinburgh, succeeded to the peerage in 1868, but seven years elapsed before he established his right to it, and it was only last year that he came into possession of the family estates in Lanarkshire, which his predecessor (who was for many years Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly) had left in the hands of trustees until all the encumbrances were paid off. Lord Belhaven was a strong Liberal, and a most devoted adherent of the Church of Scotland. He was very popular, and most highly respected at Edinburgh, where he passed the greater part of his life.

Mr. Crole, of Edinburgh, who died last week, was a very well known public man in Scotland. He was employed in the Inland Revenue Office at Edinburgh for sixty years, and was solicitor to that department for seventeen years. Mr. Crole was an eminent authority on all subjects connected with the revenue law, and he was regularly consulted by successive Chancellors of the Exchequer, and he himself drafted several important Exchequer Acts. He worked very hard, and discharged all his duties with conspicuous ability. Mr. Crole was exceedingly charitable, and in a quiet way he did an immense deal of good work among the poor of Edinburgh. He was a Liberal, and a devoted member of the Free Church, having been an elder of that sect ever since the disruption of 1843.

The only Royalties who patronised the Doncaster Meeting were the Duke of Cambridge, who came over on two days from York, where he was the guest of General Wilkinson; and Prince Francis of Teck, who was staying at Normanby Park with Lady Sheffield.

Doncaster was a failure from the social point of view. The closing of Welbeck, Wentworth Woodhouse, and Nostell Priory was a serious blow to the meeting, as the largest and smartest parties have usually come from these three houses. The final blow was the clashing with the Home Rule Debate in the House of Lords, which kept away a host of the "aristocratic patrons" of the meeting, both male and female, and caused several intended house parties to be given up. Lord Scarborough had a small party at Sandbeck, and so had Sir Tatton and Lady Sykes at Danum House, while Escrick and Tranby Croft proved to be veritable "refuges for the destitute," as those two houses received a number of personages who have usually stayed at Nostell or at Welbeck. Various causes have contributed to diminish the social prestige of "the Carnival of the North," and I hear that there will be no more Doncaster parties at Welbeck, Wentworth, or Wortley, while the hospitalities at Nostell Priory are likely to be considerably curtailed.

The Rev. Leonard Blomefield, who died at Bath last week, was one of the most eminent naturalists in England, and he had been a member of the Linnæan Society for seventy-one years. He was long a well-known and popular figure at Cambridge, and was an intimate friend of Whewell, Darwin, Julius Hare, Sedgwick, Bishop Thirlwall, and other literary and scientific celebrities of the period. Mr. Blomefield was at one time a copious writer on his favourite subject. He presented to the Bath Institution a very valuable Library of 2,000 volumes, and his unique "Herbarium of British Plants."

Lord and Lady Aberdeen have placed Dollis Hill, their villa near Willesden, at the disposal of Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone, who are to occupy it whenever it may suit them to do so.

The Sultan has sent to the President of the United States a superbly-engraved gold medal, set with splendid diamonds, in commemoration of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America. This medal is valued at £2,000, and it will be preserved as a State heirloom at the White House, as President Cleveland cannot accept it as his own private property.

I have to thank a Welsh reader for some interesting information concerning Dr. Johnson's visit to Wales, and more particularly to Gweynynog Hall, referred to in last week's TRUTH. It seems to be beyond question that on the occasion of his tour, in 1774, when he accompanied Mr. and Mrs. Thrale and their daughter (afterwards Lady Keith), Johnson twice visited Gweynynog, then in the occupation of a Mr. Myddleton, a descendant of Sir Hugh Myddleton of New River fame. On August 5 the party stayed a night at Gweynynog. They returned on August 29 and remained nine days, and to commemorate Johnson's visit Mr. Myddleton erected an urn in the park. The authority of these facts is Johnson's own diary of the tour, which escaped Boswell, but was published in 1816.

Colonel Dennistoun, of Golfhill, who died last week at Inchnacardoch Lodge, will be greatly missed in Dumbartonshire, where he was most deservedly popular. He had taken for many years a prominent part in county business, and represented the county on the Liberal side of the House of Commons for some time. Colonel Dennistoun took from the first a warm interest in the Volunteer movement, having received his commission in 1859, and commanded the Dumbartonshire Battalion for several years prior to his retirement in 1876. He married a daughter of the late Sir Charles Oakley.

The late Colonel Ireland-Blackburne, of Hale Hall, was the head of one of the oldest territorial families in Lancashire, and he owned large estates in that county, and was very popular indeed amongst his numerous tenants. Colonel Blackburne sat in the House of Commons for several years as Tory Member for South-West Lancashire, and his father represented Warrington in three Parliaments, while his grandfather was Member for the then undivided county of Lancaster for forty-eight years.

The Recordership of Salisbury, which is worth £105 a year, and is in the gift of the Home Secretary, has become vacant by the death of Mr. J. D. Chambers, who was appointed by Sir James Graham in 1844. The very light duties of the office have been discharged for several years past by Mr. Ravenhill, the Deputy Recorder.

Mr. James Jardine, who died last week, was one of the leading manufacturers of Lancashire, and he had been for some years Chairman of the Manchester Royal Exchange. He was the son of a small farmer, and commenced life as a clerk in the offices of Messrs. Christy, of the Fairfield Mills, in 1837. In 1851 Mr. Jardine was made a junior partner in the well-known firm of Hugh Shaw & Sons, of Ancoats, and he ultimately became the sole proprietor of that great business, which is one of the largest fine spinning and doubling concerns in England. Mr. Jardine considerably increased the profits of his firm by the introduction of the combing machine and self-acting mule into his manufactory. He was munificent in his charities and in his gifts to public institutions, and he added a wing for sick children to Ancoats Hospital, which he built and endowed at a cost of about £15,000.

The Town Council of Dumfries had very much desired to acquire the picturesque estate of Marchmount for a public park, and it was offered to the town for £6,500, which was regarded as too high a price. Last week the property was sold by auction, when it realised only £5,200. Directly any public body is known to be in the field to purchase a property, then an exorbitant price is certain to be demanded for it.

For the TRUTH HOTEL LIST, see page 559-560 in the present issue.
For AMUSEMENTS, see page 558.

Lord Sudeley is at present trying to let his two estates of Gregynog, in North Wales, and Toddington, in Gloucestershire. With the former there is shooting over 16,000 acres, and with the latter over some 6,000, and both estates are exceptionally well stocked with game of all kinds.

The well-known estate of Dunmore, in the Firth Valley, has just come into the market. The entire estate extends over about 6,000 acres, with several hundred acres of excellent timber; but the option will also be given of acquiring separately the fine mansion-house, with the home farm, and the village.

The creditors of Mr. John Heath, of Liddington, met at Swindon last week, and his statement of affairs showed how ruinous has been the recent depreciation of land in North Wilts. In 1872 Mr. Heath purchased his farm for £11,100, and he has since laid out about £1,500 in improvements. The agricultural depression embarrassed him, with the result that the mortgagees recently seized the farm and sold it for £3,300, which price included all the tillages and acts of husbandry.

One of my readers informs me that the price of 250 guineas paid for a ram at the sale of Mr. Graham's flock was not, as I supposed, a "record." It seems that at Messrs. Brunker's sale at Sydney, N.S.W., in 1890, over 700 guineas were paid for a merino ram bred by Mr. Gibson, of Tasmania, while several bids of 250 and 300 guineas were registered on the same occasion. There is more money in mutton than I have hitherto been aware of. I have been under the impression that a respectable, well-bred sheep could be purchased in Australia for a few shillings.

A good range of salmon-fishing is now the most profitable possession which a Scotch landowner can desire. The Duke of Roxburghe's Floors water in the Tweed is let at the rate of £1,400 a year, and £1,100 a year is the rent of Lord Ancaster's Stobhall stretch in the Tay, which has nearly trebled in value during the last ten years. One single cast in the Tweed now fetches £250 a year, the Duke of Roxburghe being the owner, and Lord Home the tenant.

The Tennis Tournament at Brighton last week was a far more successful affair than last year's meeting. Acting on the advice I ventured to offer them, the executive this year made arrangements for the Tournament to be held at the Hove Cricket Ground, instead of at the out-of-the-way College grounds, and the difference in the attendance must have convinced them of the desirability of the change.

Hôtel Burlington, Boscombe, Bournemouth. Perfectly unique!!! Over 200 rooms, practically designed, sumptuously appointed, and fitted throughout with all the comforts of a well-arranged country mansion. Acres of matured grounds sloping to the Pier. Most moderate tariff, forwarded by Manager, or obtainable at the Burlington and Buckingham Palace Hotels, London. Bournemouth East Station.

Taken all round, the play was of exceptional merit, and on the last day (Saturday) no better tennis could have been seen than the matches between Eaves, the holder, and W. Baddeley for the championship, and between the brothers Baddeley and the brothers Allen for the gentlemen's doubles. W. Baddeley outplayed Eaves at all points of the game, and scored a somewhat easy victory by three sets to one; and in the doubles, although the Allens made a plucky fight of it, they were not strong enough to vanquish their doughty opponents. In the match for the ladies' championship, Mrs. Hilliard easily defeated Miss Maud Shackle (the holder). The result might, I think, have been different had the latter lady used her head a little more and her arms a little less, for at the hard driving from the back of the court she is no match against Mrs. Hilliard. It is by the use of their heads and the excellent judgment they show that the Baddeleys have come so to the fore, and taken all round, I much doubt whether there are two better exponents of the game than these twin brothers.

Now that the gentlemen who manage the Brighton Tournament have shown a disposition to move with the times, I should like to make them one or two more suggestions. They should remember that many people who attend these Tournaments do so not from any love of tennis, but rather from love of seeing the people who are there and being themselves seen. Cater, then, for them as well as for the tennis players. Provide them, for instance, with a band, and arrange with some contractor to supply tea and light refreshment, not merely in a stuffy tent, but at tables dotted about the ground. The meeting will then soon become a Society function, and be the first step in finding some genuine amusement for visitors to the "Queen of Watering Places."

The following figures which have been sent to me will doubtless surprise and interest cricketers. They show that the Champion County of 1893 scored fewer runs by some hundreds than any other, and 1,720 less than Middlesex, who were six points behind them on the season's competition. That Yorkshire is at the bottom of the list, however, is obviously a mere accident, and the only possible moral from these figures is that mere run-making power has nothing to do one way or the other with match-winning, for the order in which the teams come out in this list bears simply no relation whatever to the results of the matches:—

County.	Total Runs.	Average per Match.
Middlesex	6,193	387
Sussex	5,907	369
Notts	5,866	366
Somerset	5,184	324
Lancashire	5,048	315
Kent	5,043	315
Gloucester	4,740	296
Surrey	4,700	294
Yorkshire	4,473	280

A visitor to Southport sends me some forcible remarks upon the offensiveness of the smells arising from the gratings over the drains in the roads of that town. Even on the promenade, he says, it is impossible to escape from these pestilential odours. Such a state of things points to strange blindness to their own interests on the part of the Southport people, and I would strongly advise them to study the recent history of Worthing.

Bournemouth.—"Royal Bath." "Hôtel de Luxe of the South." Sea frontage, 1,000 ft.; grounds, 5 acres. Due south. Moderate charges. Tariff on application. Comparison invited. Electric light throughout. Only Hotel on "East Cliff."

Addressed to those who Travel.
By One who Stays at Home.

And now you've completed your holiday plan,
Say, how did you like it, itinerant man?
The steamer you cross'd in, the mad rush to le'ward,
The agonised cry for the over-work'd steward;
The tallowy soup and the engine-oil fish,
The flavour of bilge that was found in each dish;
The cupboard-like berth, where, outstretched on the rack,
You'd the spin of the screw reproduced in your back;
The scuffle in landing—the touts—la douane—
Say, how did you like them, itinerant man?

The barrack-like chill of the foreign hotel,
That daily menu which you knew but too well:
That Poisson, concocted 'twould seem of fried paste,
That Bœuf, which the name of a bullock disgraced,
That burnt-umber Sauce which concealed many things,
That Poulet, all drumsticks and gizzard and strings;
That impudent fraud, the diurnal Dessert—
The apple of Sodom, the flavourless pear;
The wizened banana, the grapes speck'd with bran—
Say, how did you like them, itinerant man?

The underbred snobs, and the over-dressed sinners,
Who crowded you so at the table d'hôte dinners;
The Germans who scooped up their gravy with knives,
Their bolster-like, waistless, impossible wives;
The Yankees who blustered, and bragged of their dollars,
The 'Arries who travelled in celluloid collars;
The ancient campaigners, the fogies, the cads,
The monotonous life at diversified bads;
The landlords who fleeced you, that polyglot clan—
Say, how did you like them, itinerant man?

The presence of smells, and the absence of ease,
The scandalous sums that you paid for bougies;
The mouldy old churches you had to go through,
The musty museums they forced you to do;
The miles of Old Masters religiously done,
The fever you caught when you sat in the sun;
The slow, stuffy trains, where it seemed you would choke,
What with savour of sausage, and garlic, and smoke;
The extortionate charge for your bag in the van—
Say, how did you like it, itinerant man?

Come, are you not glad to get back to your lair?
To your own morning tub and your pet easy-chair?
Is it not a great joy, after weeks of sore dread,
To be sleeping again in your own cosy bed?
Do you not with a shudder look back to the time
When each day brought its penance—some stiff mountain-climb,
A rattle by train, or a journey by boat,
And a new, and a possibly worse, table d'hôte?
Come, tell us the truth and deny, if you can,
That travel 's a nuisance, itinerant man!

In justice to the Editor of the Fortnightly Review, Mr. Albert Vandam asks me to state that his article, so far from having been on hand for a year or two, as suggested in last week's Truth, was written at very short notice on Mr. Harris's own suggestion for publication this month. Mr. Vandam attributes to the haste with which the article was for this reason produced his oversight in regard to M. Rouvier's second marriage.

The Duke of Beaufort has presented his cousin, the Rev. Henry Somerset, who has been Vicar of Raglan during the last nineteen years, to the important living of Crickhowel, Brecknockshire, which is worth about £500 a year, with house, and which recently became vacant by the death of the Rev. Boscawen Somerset, who was a son of the Rev. Lord William Somerset, Canon and sub-Dean of Bristol Cathedral.

I find the following information in the Saffron Walden parish magazine, under the head of "Questions for the Children's Catechising":—

What is the 7th Commandment?—Thou shalt not commit adultery.
What is committing adultery?—Wishing to marry another person's husband or wife.

The fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil may be, as the Vicar of Saffron Walden evidently holds, a wholesome diet for babes and sucklings; but in that case there can be no question that the knowledge ought to be administered in an accurate form. Imperfect knowledge on such points is a kind of unsound fruit which may easily lead to an outbreak of moral cholera. The above definition would certainly not hold water in the Divorce Court. Possibly Saffron Walden is such an innocent spot that even the clergy do not know precisely what the sin is which the Seventh Commandment vetos. But that only seems an additional reason why they should refrain from offering instruction on this delicate point.

Some statements made in the Llangefni County Court last week show how parochial charities have been manipulated in the interests of the Church. In the parish of Penymynydd, Anglesey, there are certain almshouses which, according to a report made by the Charity Commissioners in 1832, were built "for the maintenance of ten poor men of honest conversation, and past the age of fifty years." No religious condition whatever was imposed by the founder of the charity. Under the rules made by the trustees, however, the occupants of the almshouses are bound to attend Divine Service at the parish church, being liable to a fine for neglect, and expulsion for continual neglect. Needless to say, the Vicar is one of the trustees. The reverend gentleman figured in this capacity in the County Court, and obtained an order for the ejectment of a pensioner, who had disobeyed the rules as to church attendance and residence.

Some four years ago it was decided, as the result of several public meetings held to consider the question, to erect a hospital at Broadford in the Isle of Skye, in memory of the late Rev. Dr. Mackinnon, who had officiated for upwards of forty years as Minister of the Established Church at Broadford, and had earned in that capacity the highest regard of all classes of his parishioners. For this purpose a sum of over £800 was subscribed, a large part of it being raised by a bazaar held at Broadford in 1889 on behalf of the "Broadford Cottage Hospital." Subsequently to the bazaar, a site at Broadford was selected; but, shortly afterwards, Lady Macdonald, who had taken a leading part in the movement, and assisted at the bazaar, suggested that the building should be placed on another site, close to her own residence at Armadale Castle, and ten miles from Broadford. This was objected to by others of the promoters, and, as a result of this split, the project came to a standstill, and the money collected remains to this moment locked up in a bank at Portree.

Such a result is in the highest degree discreditable to all concerned, but first and foremost to those who desired to expend the money which had been collected for a hospital at Broadford (where there was every reason for placing it) in building a hospital at another place ten miles distant. Unless Lady Macdonald and her party really mean to say that unless this unjustifiable project can be carried out they will prevent any hospital being built at all, I would suggest that it is now high time that the money was returned to the subscribers, or the obstructive attitude of the Macdonald party abandoned.

The Rev. Charles Heaven, Vicar of Horley with Hornton (Oxon), has addressed to the Birmingham Gazette a letter in reference to the disgraceful condition of Hornton Church, of which some account was given in TRUTH two or three weeks back. The reverend gentleman writes from Herne Bay, where, it may be surmised, he is recruiting after the fatigues incident to the arduous burden of his parish work. He informs the editor of the Birmingham Gazette that some of the statements respecting his church "are absolutely false, others are grossly exaggerated, and others are capable of satisfactory explanation." He omits, however, to point out what are the falsehoods or the exaggerations, or to offer any satisfactory explanation. At the same time he takes great pains to explain that he has raised and expended "a large sum of money on rebuilding the village schools," thereby saving the parish the expense of a Board School. As it is no part whatever of a vicar's duty to save his parish the expense of a Board School, while it is most unquestionably his duty to prevent the desecration of his parish church, this explanation is the reverse of satisfactory. From independent information which has reached me, I should say there is little doubt that Hornton Church is in precisely the state which the Birmingham Gazette described, and it behoves the Bishop of Oxford to take steps forthwith to abate the scandal.

I have received £2. 2s. from R. Horniman and £10 from Chelsea towards this year's Toy Fund. I have also received the following amounts towards Lady Jeune's Poor Children's Holiday Fund:—A., £2; A. W. B., £1; C. B., £2; R. Horniman, £1. 1s.; H. S. B., 10s.

I have just heard that the holidays at Charterhouse have been extended a week in honour of the Duke of York's wedding. A circular sent round to the parents explains that this has been done at the request of the Duke himself. Then, observes a parent, writing to me on the subject, surely the Duke himself ought to pay for the holiday. I agree; but if his Royal Highness declines to do so, the school authorities should be made to pay. The week's holiday represents a loss of £4 to the parents on each boy at the school, or in all about £2,400. What, therefore, the circular means is that, at the kind suggestion of the Duke of York, the school authorities have decided to pocket this sum in celebration of H.R.H.'s wedding.

If such holidays are to be granted at all, there can be no doubt about one point—namely, that ample notice of them ought to be given. The cadets of the Britannia were to have returned on September 2, and at the very last moment a notice that the holidays were to be extended a week was sprung upon the parents, by post-cards dated Dartmouth, August 30! By the time this notice was received, the relatives of all the cadets must have made their arrangements for sending them back, and doubtless many of them would be away from home and not receive the notice till after the time for despatching their boys. The amount of inconvenience and annoyance thus caused is incalculable, and is utterly without excuse of any kind.

I publish the following letter without abridgment because it not only confirms the views which I have recently expressed on two important matters connected with Public School education, but because it represents the opinions of a number of parents who have written to me on the subject:—

SIR,—I am glad to find that you have opened your columns to a discussion of the question of Extra Holidays at the Public Schools, for I am one of the many who heartily agree with the position you have taken up. It is, however, I fear, hopeless to expect any change while the masters look to the profits on their boarding-houses for the larger part of their income. At some at least of the older Public Schools, where a master succeeds to a house, his salary is largely reduced. What wonder, then, if he becomes a hotel proprietor first and an instructor afterwards?—if the consideration of the bonus of a week's fees, for which no expense is incurred and no consideration given, comes before the question of the interests of his pupils?

But are there not others higher in authority who are largely to blame for the present unsatisfactory condition of our Public Schools? A Departmental Committee is sitting at the War Office to consider—if report speaks truly—not how to adjust the Army Examinations so as to secure the best men for the Service, but (acting under the influence of certain Public School Masters) how once more to manipulate the subjects so as to give a better chance of success to the imperfectly-prepared candidates from these favoured institutions. That this course should have been adopted under the late Government is perhaps not so much to be wondered at. It remains to be seen whether a Radical Ministry and a Radical House of Commons—having abolished purchase and patronage—will allow the interests of the Services to be sacrificed that the present inefficient system of education may be retained at the Public Schools. If Public School men are wanted for the Army, instead of lowering the standard of the competition, let the Public Schools be reformed; let the duration of the holidays be fixed; let a periodical examination of the boys be held under Government supervision, making the masters suffer in pocket as well as in credit if a proper standard is not reached; and, what is at the root of the whole matter, let a large increase in the teaching staff be insisted upon, so that classes of from thirty to forty boys will no longer be possible. This is the real secret of the defect of Public School education, and, except under compulsion, no reform can be looked for, since an increase in the staff means a pro rata reduction in the income of the present highly-paid Assistant Masters. TRUTH has exposed so many abuses in the past, and not seldom obtained their reform, that I trust, having taken this question in hand, you will not look back till the Public Schools are reformed and controlled.—I am, yours faithfully, PATERFAMILIAS.

The question of extra holidays is one which primarily concerns parents, and they, as I have pointed out, have the remedy in their own hands. The relation between the Public Schools and Army Education, on the other hand, is a matter of national importance. The writer of the foregoing letter is, I think, wrong in representing the latest War Office Committee as the outcome of a new effort to manipulate the Army Examinations in the interest of the Public Schools. This manipulation has already been carried almost as far as it well could be, and I trust that the meeting of the Committee in question indicates the desire of the present Secretary of State to give the pendulum a swing in the opposite direction. At any rate, that is the direction in which it is everybody's interest — except, possibly, that of the Public Schools masters—to make the pendulum swing. The idea that the pedantic and antiquated intellectual training, which distinguishes English schools, is calculated to produce a race of military officers superior to those of Germany, France, Russia, and Italy, is, on the face of it, irrational, and ought to be exploded.

When referring last week to Mr. Walter Wren's excellent Memorandum on the Higher Education of Military Officers, I remarked, quite innocently, that "Mr. Wren has, of course, his own axe to grind in this matter, and he would probably be the last to deny it." In this I was altogether wrong. Mr. Wren does deny it, and he sends me a long letter to convince me that the contrary is the case. I had supposed that any reform breaking down the preference at present shown for the public schools would benefit private teachers like Mr. Wren. As, however, Mr. Wren assures me that this is not so, and that he has really been "working nearly all his life for his own abolition," I at once withdraw my remark, and, having done so, I hope that I may be excused for not publishing in full Mr. Wren's apologia pro vita suâ. This is, as I have said, and as Mr. Wren says, no question of the interest of this or that educational establishment, but of how the country is best to get a supply of competent officers. As a pithy contribution to the question in that form, I extract the following remarks, with which Mr. Wren concludes his letter:—

> Force the public schools to do their duty and use the public money they endowed with rightly. Insist on regulations which shall give the Services the officers that the military authorities say they must have. Force the Universities to do their duty and admit students of all branches of knowledge, without making any compulsory. Raise the age up to which candidates can compete so as to allow graduates to compete. Abolish military colleges. Pay your officers enough to enable them to live on their pay, which they cannot do now—so that "private means" are necessary. Always appoint competent examiners, and instruct them to "kill smatterings."

Mrs. Hewson, of Ennismore, Listowel, Co. Kerry, writes to me with reference to the remarks in the last two issues of Truth upon her efforts to collect money for impecunious Irish landlords and their families. She says:—

> For many years I have tried to help people, and do not know why notice should be taken. At every bazaar raffles are done, therefore I could see no harm. It's not pleasant to have remarks made or my name mentioned. Therefore I think it right to let you see enclosed two letters . . . . .

The remarks which Mrs. Hewson finds "unpleasant" had reference to lithographed appeals for money circulated by her in this country. In the last of these remarks it was pointed out that, whereas Mrs. Hewson offered to supply any further information desired, when applied to for such information she merely repeated what her circular said, and gave no information that could enable the genuineness of the appeal to be tested. These remarks from Truth, it appears, have been sent to her; but instead of giving particulars of the cases in question, she now writes to me about certain raffles which I have neither mentioned nor heard of, and encloses two letters with reference to the said raffles, from which the names and addresses have been eliminated. Mrs. Hewson, besides being a very benevolent lady, seems to be a very innocent one. It is therefore necessary to explain to her that people in England are pestered daily with fraudulent appeals for money. Consequently, when they receive from strangers circulars conveying such appeals, they desire to know who the stranger is, and to have some means of ascertaining the truth of the statements on which the appeal is based, and the trustworthiness of the party who makes it. If Mrs. Hewson objects to comply with these requirements, she would do well to desist from this form of charitable activity.

I find in my letter-box almost every week one or two letters which I am unable to understand. Here is one of them. Perhaps the Editor of the Broad Arrow can make it out:—

> I am sorry to see that you have not dealt this week with a ridiculous letter to which the Broad Arrow gives over a column of its precious space. It is signed "A Regimental Officer," and the burden of it is that the criticism of civilian journals generally, and Truth particularly, on military affairs, does more harm than good. Perhaps you will allow me as an old soldier to say that I would much rather see military affairs discussed by a civilian journalist of average intelligence, who lays no pretension to military knowledge, than see the Army insulted once a week by the oracular utterances of a military Editor whose knowledge of military life is derived from a few years' playing at soldiers with the Volunteers and Militia.—Yours, &c.,
>
> A Non-Regimental Officer.

As for the letter referred to by my correspondent, I was myself sorry not to deal with it, but the Broad Arrow made such extensive demands on my own space, that I was compelled to forego the pleasure. The "Regimental Officer" amused me a good deal, more especially when he complained that in discussing the Bodmin case I showed a bias in Wilson's favour. Considering the amount of bias shown in every direction against that unfortunate individual, I think it was about time some one showed a bias in his favour. It may interest the Broad Arrow's "Regimental Officer" to know that I rather pride myself on showing a bias in favour of every man whom I have reason to believe has been treated with gross injustice. However, on the whole, I thought it was rather a kindly thing of my contemporary to give so much prominence to a letter which was founded on the flattering assumption that Truth is one of the most widely-read journals of the day.

I see that this week the same journal makes a sort of bid for an autumn season debate on the merits of Truth as a critic of military affairs. I cannot do less than wish every success to these amiable efforts on my behalf. The only thing I regret is that I cannot, without fear of giving offence, return the compliment. My military correspondents frequently refer to the Broad Arrow, but when they do so it is invariably in this sort of strain:—

> Your contemporary the Broad Arrow states in a recent issue that the Staff Clerks are contented with the new Warrant. The Editor of the Broad Arrow assumes we are content because we have not written to him. We have not written to the Broad Arrow because we have no faith in that journal—believing that it is run by War Office clerks, &c.

However, here is a correspondent who has a good word for my contemporary, and to whom I feel a peculiar gratitude, as he writes on a postcard:—

> Re-Engagement of Colour-Sergeant ——, of the Black Watch.
>
> Please read article in Broad Arrow of September 9 on this subject. As the Editor truly remarks, "No C.O. in these times would willingly refuse to 'take on' a Colour-Sergeant; he would be only too glad to get him." As a matter of fact, I happen to know that the C.O.'s action, and its endorsement by the G.O.C. and Mr. Bannerman is cordially approved by practically the whole Regiment. The individual in question is a clever "lawyer," whom it has never been hitherto possible to bowl out.

C.O.M. Whisky.—This well-known Brand, 50s. per case, free to C.O.M. Whisky. every Railway Station.—Andrews & Co.,
C.O.M. Whisky. Dame-st., Dublin, Proprietors C.O.M. brand.

You do an immense deal of good by exposing abuses and scandals, such as Hythe, &c.; but why do you always, or nearly always, go on the principle that an officer must be an unscrupulous tyrant, and the private soldier an innocent and injured individual? It may pay, but it isn't fair.—Yours, X.

The author of this postcard, like the Editor of the Broad Arrow, answers not what I said, but something which I did not say. Knowing nothing of the merits of this particular case, I expressly refrained from discussing them. What I did say was that, "even if the man's conduct had been unsatisfactory, he ought to have had some hint or warning before he is summarily dismissed from the Service." After reading the above communication, however, I begin to doubt whether the man's conduct has been unsatisfactory. What is alleged against him? Here is an officer who writes to me as though he knew all the facts. What does he allege? That the man is a clever "lawyer." What that means in a military sense I am not clear; but I am quite clear of this, that it is no offence known to the Queen's Regulations. We are further told that it has "never hitherto been possible to bowl him out." So there has been a desire to bowl the man out. Why? Because he was a "clever lawyer?" And at last it would seem that the man has been bowled out. How, and why? As it is said that Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, in his capacity of umpire, has given the man out, I suggest that the solicitors who have had the case in hand should arrange to give Mr. Campbell-Bannerman an opportunity of explaining his decision in Parliament. If the Secretary of State can tell the House nothing more intelligible than that the N.C.O. in question was a "clever lawyer," that his superiors have been for a long time endeavouring to bowl him out, that at last they have succeeded, and that in consequence the man is turned out of the Army without warning, and forfeits the results of twelve years' creditable service, I have no fear what will be the general verdict on the case.

The suggestion put forward above that I "nearly always go on the principle that an officer must be an unscrupulous tyrant," &c., scarcely requires a disclaimer. In the course of my weekly experience I come across a good many instances in which the authority of officers of one rank or another is abused at the expense of their inferiors; and I expect that while human nature remains what it is this will continue to occur. But it very often happens that those who thus suffer are themselves officers. Were it necessary, I could call some weighty witnesses to prove that some of the toughest fights that TRUTH has ever fought have been on behalf of officers who have been the victims of "unscrupulous tryanny;" and in smaller matters there is hardly a week but what I do not have to take up the cudgels on behalf of somebody holding a Commission.

The Broad Arrow recently published, ostensibly for my benefit, a lengthy dissertation on khaki clothing. Unfortunately, I was quite unable to understand the drift of it, beyond the now familiar point that the subject was one which I had no business to express an opinion upon. There are some grievances, nevertheless, connected with khaki which it hardly seems beyond the power of an every-day intellect to comprehend. For instance, a detachment now in Burma had not received in the early part of August the khaki which should have been served out to them in April. It may or may not be presumption on my part, but I have no hesitation in saying that this points to disgraceful negligence, and that the official or contractor responsible ought to be punished.

In TRUTH of July 27 I published a statement which had been sent to me detailing the punishment at Gozo of a private of eighteen years' service who had objected to his wife doing washing for twenty men of the garrison on the order of the Acting Quartermaster. It appears that when the number of TRUTH containing this narrative reached Gozo, the Sergeant-Major read it in the Mess, and remarked in the hearing of several Sergeants that the information must have been supplied by a Sergeant named Rowan. Rowan was not present, but the accusation was reported to him, and he made a complaint on the subject to the Commanding Officer. One of the Sergeants supported his statement, the others—as might be expected—thought it prudent not to take any steps hostile to the Sergeant-Major. The result is highly instructive. The C.O. found that Rowan had made a false charge against the Sergeant-Major, and after having been placed under arrest he was severely reprimanded. I am informed that the C.O. further made some remark to the effect that if the Sergeant-Major had said anything in regard to Rowan's having been in communication with TRUTH, there was probably reason for it.

Now, here we have something in regard to Gozo garrison where I am on perfectly firm ground. Not only has this man Rowan never communicated with TRUTH, but I never heard of his name till the above information was forwarded to me by one of my correspondents in the Mediterranean. I therefore demand that there shall be a proper inquiry into the allegations which have undoubtedly been made in regard to this man by the Sergeant-Major and countenanced by the Commanding Officer. For the purpose of such an inquiry I will make an affidavit exonerating Rowan from the crime of communicating with TRUTH. If it be feasible, I shall be happy for the inquiry to take the form of a Court-Martial on me. But an inquiry of some sort there ought undoubtedly to be. Not only has the N.C.O. in question been punished in an arbitrary and vindictive way on a trumped up charge, but there is every probability that, unless his case is looked into, he will henceforth be a marked man, to be hunted down after the manner which has lately been exemplified in too many instances. Apart from this, there remains the much more serious case out of which this incident arose—the irregular and illegal punishment of a private because his wife would not or could not wash for the company. If there is any desire in higher military circles that the truth shall be ascertained and justice impartially administered where such abuses of authority occur, an inquiry into these allegations will be held forthwith. If there is not—well, it is only what I have always thought and several times hinted.

HOUSE DRAINAGE.—Sanitary work of every kind contracted for.—The Sanitary Engineering Co., 65, Victoria-street, Westminster.

STAR & GARTER HOTEL, Richmond Hill, S.W. High, dry, & healthy. Famed for its Guild and Corporation banquets, wedding breakfasts, balls, &c. Unrivalled winter residence.—CHAS. JAMES, Manager.

Apropos to the Wilson case at Bodmin, I have been inundated with accounts of instances in which men in one branch or another of the Service have fallen victims to the spite of those in authority over them, incurred mainly by the too-conscientious performance of duty. I must explain that it is utterly out of the question for me to investigate the facts of these cases or to deal with them in TRUTH without first investigating them. But there is one point which strikes me in regard to several of them—namely, that a man who has thus got into hot water in one regiment or berth goes elsewhere, and at once shows himself a competent and trustworthy officer. An N.C.O. in a line regiment takes a step which incurs the displeasure of a senior Officer in the regiment. Things are made unbearable for him. He shifts into a much more distinguished regiment as a private, and has gained his promotion there with almost unprecedented rapidity. I have a precisely parallel case, the hero of which was a dockyard official, who was transferred from one yard to another under similar circumstances, and with similar results. It would be interesting to know how many able and honest servants of one kind and another are lost to the country every year through the personal animosity of their superiors.

No sooner have I succeeded in ousting from Hamilton Depot the three N.C.O.'s of the Highland Light Infantry who had so long exceeded their regulation tour of Depot duty, than I discover another case of the same kind in the same Depot, but on the establishment of the Scottish Rifles. The man in question seems to have been promoted Corporal in December, 1889. I take it, therefore, that he completed his legitimate period of Depot duty in December last. Why is he still there?

Mr. Campbell-Bannerman made an alarming series of admissions the other night respecting the sanitary condition of the officers' quarters at Windsor Cavalry Barracks. The Sanitary Inspector's report, which he quoted, admitted the existence of offensive smells due to "the proximity of filthy latrines," and the necessity for reconstructing the drainage. The Secretary of State also, I observe, refrained from repudiating the suggestion that the building is drained by a cesspool. But he appeared to consider that this state of things was not one for serious anxiety, as "the evil smells complained of are only perceived in the officers' quarters." This is a view to which I must take exception. Democracy may have its faults, but it does not teach us to poison our fellow creatures with sewer-gas on the ground that they are "only officers."

By an error which I much regret, the recent case of saddle-cutting during the autumn manœuvres was stated in last week's TRUTH to have occurred in the "18th Hussars." The regiment concerned was the 8th Hussars. The 18th Hussars are at present in India.

I hear an account of the treatment of the survivors from H.M.S. Victoria, which is the reverse of creditable to the Admiralty. Their experiences on board the Orion at Malta, and the Triumph, which brought them home, seem to have been in some respects anything but agreeable; but the most serious matter is the inadequate compensation for the losses incurred by the sinking of the ship. The Admiralty compensate on a fixed scale, but for bare kit only, making no allowance for private belongings. These last were considerable, owing to the fact that the Victoria was newly commissioned, so that many of the men had just fitted themselves out for a three years' cruise. I understand that in many cases about £10 will be received where £30 would barely cover the loss actually sustained. I would suggest that such cases might very properly receive the consideration of the managers of the Victoria Relief Fund. A good deal more money must have been collected than was required to provide for the families of the deceased, for subscriptions continued to arrive at the Mansion House long after the fund was declared closed. If the facts were laid before them, it is not likely that the subscribers would object to the surviving petty officers and seamen being allowed to share in the benefits of the fund.

Attention ought to be directed to the extent to which flogging is practised on the training brigs. I say this on evidence with which I am perfectly satisfied, though for obvious reasons it cannot be more closely specified. On one of these craft in particular the fear of the lash seems to be the only incentive relied on to keep the boys up to the mark, and the lives of these youngsters while on board are consequently only to be compared to those of the niggers in the olden days on a Slave State plantation.

The evidence which has been laid before me is made up of statements such as these:—"The Captain had eight upper yard boys down from aloft and gave them six each . . . All hands were piped on deck. One boy had his clothes off when the pipe sounded, and, as he was last on deck, he got half a dozen." An ingenious mode of procedure in favour with the Captain of this ship is thus described:—

> The Captain will call out: "Those two boys not hauling there, fall out!" Naturally, most of the boys look up to see who is meant. The first two who look up get half a dozen each, on the principle that they are self-convicted of not hauling.

This is the mere brutality of an incompetent bully, and ought to be stopped. It is not by such means that boys are made smart, active, or willing, still less loyal to the Service and to their superior officers. As well might you expect accomplished scholars and well-mannered gentlemen from the educational system of Mr. Squeers.

It is high time that the attention of our naval officers in the Pacific was directed to the "blackbirding" raids that have lately been made upon the Gilbert Islands. "Blackbirding," I should perhaps explain, is the local euphemism for the form of slave-trading carried on in the present day under the British and American flags. Some three or four raids of this kind appear to have been made upon the Gilbert Islands within as many years by one American adventurer. The natives—men, women, and children—are decoyed on board by specious promises of the blessed prospect open to them. They are landed on the hospitable coast of Guatemala, and there, after a few months of virtual slavery, the bulk of them speedily die—from climatic or other causes. A Vancouver newspaper states that out of the last shipload thus transported, not more than 30 per cent. were alive at the end of the year. The enterprising mariner who has carried out the previous raids was reported a few weeks ago to be fitting out a fresh expedition at San Francisco. The Gilbert Islanders now enjoy the proud privilege of being British subjects, and we ought to protect them against this form of buccaneering.

THE IMPERIAL, EAST CLIFF, BOURNEMOUTH.—Position, appointments, and cuisine unsurpassed. 100 rooms. Luxuriously furnished. Electric light. Private omnibuses meet trains. Telegraphic address, Imperial, Bournemouth.—CHAS. A. REINGPACH, Manager.

There seems some reason to hope that the country may at last congratulate itself on having got a Postmaster-General who is disposed to listen to reason. I draw this inference from Mr. Arnold Morley having given permission for the publication of an official list of registered telegraphic addresses. Readers of TRUTH may remember that Mr. Sell has for years been pressing this step upon St. Martin's-le-Grand, and from time to time I have done what I could to back up his efforts. In at last granting the concession, Mr. Morley admits by implication that during all these years Mr. Sell and I have been right, and the Department wrong.

The Western Morning News urges the necessity for making Plymouth an Assize town, and points the moral by some figures showing the cost of conducting local prosecutions at Exeter—among others, the prosecution of a postman for stealing letters, which cost the Corporation of Plymouth the outrageous sum of £215s. 2s. 2d. I should like to know in connection with this last case what further costs were incurred by the Post Office Detective Department. Probably they would add another £100 or £150 to the total.

Some time ago a body known as the "Free Literature Society" obtained a great deal of applause because it was announced that the managers would present parcels of books to workhouses in return for a small annual subscription. The Kettering Union has just reported that the last consignment received for the inmates of the workhouse included such entertaining and instructive works as "A Chronology of the Soap Trade," "The Oil and Colourman," "The Manufacture of Bleaching Powder," an 1862 "Guide to London," "Improvements in Acid Manufacture," and a batch of German almanacks. I should hope that the subscription of the Kettering Union has been withdrawn, for it is evident that the literature which the managers of this egregious society regard as suitable for inmates of workhouses belongs exclusively to Landor's class of "books which are no books."

The question of pauper diet has been recently considered by the Chard Board of Guardians, and it was proposed that once or twice a week either jam or honey should be given to the inmates (or, at any rate, to those who are in delicate health, and to the children) instead of butter. Any rational being would suppose that such a matter might have been settled in five minutes, but the Chard Guardians do not decide the questions submitted to them with rash impetuosity, for they have determined to appoint a special committee who will report upon the advisability of making any change in the workhouse bill-of-fare. Certainly this procedure is a wonderful example of the most leather-headed red-tapeism.

PFUNGST FRÈRES' EXTRA QUALITY CHAMPAGNES.—This select brand can be supplied through any Wine Merchant, or by the Agents, J. L. PFUNGST & Co., 23, Crutched Friars, E.C.

An inquest was held at Londonderry the other day on an inmate of the Derry Asylum, whose body after death presented the too common phenomenon of a broken rib. Officials of the Asylum, including the attendant in charge of him, gave evidence that deceased had fallen down in a fit in the garden, and the Asylum doctor gave his opinion that death was due to an epileptic fit, accelerated by a broken rib, and that the fracture of the rib was due to a fall. A blow, the doctor asserted, would have caused quite a different sort of fracture. On the other hand, the only independent witness called, a man who was picking fruit in the garden, swore that he saw the attendant strike the deceased while the latter was on the ground. The jury found in their verdict that how the rib was fractured there was no evidence to show. I wonder that before arriving at this inconclusive result they did not insist on hearing independent medical evidence. It is in every way undesirable that no medical witness but the Asylum medical officer should be called in a case of this character.

I sympathise very deeply with my daily contemporaries in their ineffectual efforts to get the regulation quantity of "copy" out of the Ardlamont case. To the initiated, the struggles of some of them to make bricks without straw have been simply heroic, though the ordinary reader must have been rather puzzled to see column after column of irrelevant gossip or undisguised conjecture served up in place of genuine facts and sensational details. What most impresses me about the case, however, is the striking superiority of the Scotch criminal procedure over our own. There have been no elaborate preliminary investigations before Coroner and Magistrates to provide "copy" for the descriptive reporter. The police have obstinately held their tongues. But, nevertheless, all the authorities concerned have stuck sedulously to their duty, and so far from the interests of justice suffering by the absence of publicity, there seems every reason to expect precisely the opposite result.

That a competition in weather forecasts, at any rate in this country, is a matter of chance, not skill, was, I should have thought, a foregone conclusion. How Mr. Pearson could have expected that this could have been held legal, while the "Missing Word" game was illegal, I cannot understand. Now, however, that it has been judicially decided that weather prediction is a matter of chance, the last excuse for paying a salary to the gentleman who does the daily forecasts at the Meteorological Office is removed.

But I want to know why, if the strong arm of the law is to put down lotteries for journalistic purposes, lotteries are allowed for ecclesiastical purposes. One of them is now being promoted by the Rev. M. McAuliffe, of St. Richards, Holbeck, Leeds, in aid of the building fund of the new church of St. Francis of Assisi, Leeds. Although styled "A Grand Bazaar Prize Drawing," it is a lottery in the fullest sense of the word, and Father McAuliffe is sending out books of tickets wholesale, with an offer of a special prize to every one who will sell twenty such books for him. On the religious side of such proceedings I say nothing. In the Roman Church, I understand, the end justifies the means. But is that the Public Prosecutor's view? If so, where does he draw the line? May I get up a lottery for the Truth Toy Fund—a most deserving end? May Mr. Pearson have a weather competition for his Fresh Air Fund?

The most monstrous of Sunday trading prosecutions, to my mind, are those against barbers for Sunday shaving. Two men were fined for this offence the other day at Bilston. The prosecution was undertaken at the instance of a trade association, and, no doubt, it will be said that the object is to secure the trade a weekly holiday. This is, in itself, a laudable consideration, but there are considerations equally laudable on the other side. If a Sunday holiday is to be enforced by Act of Parliament, due provision must clearly be made for the performance of "works of necessity." Providence, which causes cows to yield milk as well on Sundays as on other days of the week, also causes beards to grow alike on all seven days. The law, therefore, which allows the milking of cows on Sunday, and the sale of the produce, ought also to allow the shaving of chins. We keep holy the Sabbath Day by putting on clean shirts and collars; a fortiori we ought to have clean faces. Shaving, moreover, has to be done the first thing in the morning. I would suggest, therefore, that it should be made legal up to, say, ten o'clock. That would enable both the barber and the customer to complete their toilettes in good time for church.

I have been asked by several correspondents to notice a recent outrageous decision of the Godstone Bench. It appears that a young woman named Hickley was charged with deserting her baby, and thereby making it chargeable to the Union. She alleges that a local cleric is the father of the child, and, a summons against him having been refused, she proceeded to his house and handed the baby to a servant while she went to speak to the reverend gentleman. The Bench declined to allow an adjournment in order that the alleged father might be summoned as a witness, and upon the foregoing evidence as to the so-called desertion they fined the poor girl £1 with 11s. costs. The names of the J.P.'s who gave this astonishing proof of their wisdom and mercy deserve to be recorded. They were Messrs. W. G. Leveson-Gower, W. G. Soper, A. S. Daniels, F. A. White, Major-General Sibley, and the Hon. Pascoe Glyn.

There was a very decided failure of justice at the Highgate Petty Sessions last week. A poor man named Smith was picking blackberries in Bishop's Wood when he was discovered by Thomas Wade, a keeper employed by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. Wade was accompanied by three auxiliaries; but not content with their support, he had armed himself with a gun, and on getting close to Smith he deliberately fired, with the result that a handkerchief containing blackberries was blown out of the man's hand for a distance of three or four yards. The handkerchief was secured by one of Wade's assistants, and Smith was, therefore, unable to say whether any holes were made in it. At the Petty Sessions the keeper was charged with shooting at Smith with intent to do grievous bodily harm, but Messrs. A. J. Reynolds and F. Reckitt, J.P.'s, dismissed the summons. They did so on the ground that Smith was unable to prove that the gun was loaded with anything more than powder. But surely the onus of proof on this point rested on the defendant. In any event Wade might have been convicted of an assault, and it is monstrous that the wanton outrage of which he was guilty should go absolutely unpunished.

A number of correspondents have drawn my attention to certain amazing sentences of the Birmingham Deputy Stipendiary, Mr. Alfred Hill. One day last week a man was charged with assaulting his wife. Attacking her from behind, he felled her to the ground and kicked her savagely about the head, inflicting a terrible gash on the jaw and knocking out two of her teeth. There were eight previous convictions against this ruffian—and Mr. Hill fined him 20s. and costs. In the same court, a few minutes later, a married woman pleaded guilty to stealing three pairs of boots, which she appeared to have pawned to obtain money, not for herself, but for her children. Her youngest child, it was stated, was so ill that if the mother went to prison the child would have to go also, or its life would be in danger. There was no previous conviction against this prisoner. She had, indeed, borne an exemplary character—and Mr. Hill committed her to gaol for six weeks with hard labour.

The Birmingham Deputy-Stipendiary, it will be seen, turns Justice upside down. When imprisonment is deserved, he imposes a fine; when, if any punishment at all is required, a small fine would be ample, he inflicts imprisonment. If necessary, other cases could be cited to show that the decisions mentioned above are not the outcome of some momentary aberration. By way of explanation one correspondent informs me that Mr. Hill is a gentleman of advanced years, and so deaf that not half the evidence ever reaches his ears. However this may be, it is obvious that Mr. Hill should relinquish his duties as Deputy-Stipendiary.

The familiar judicial dictum that a Court of Justice is not a theatre scarcely applies to the Ramsgate Police-court. There quite a lively entertainment is extracted from the most unpromising material. The other day a drunken woman, charged with neglecting her children, kept up a running fire of impertinent and occasionally obscene comments upon the evidence and the witnesses, refreshed herself at intervals by draughts from a bottle of brandy, and invited the gentlemen on the Bench to drink with her. Such weak remonstrances as the Bench ventured to make were ignored, and the defendant continued her conduct to the end of the case, "having," as a local paper says, "entertained the Court for two hours and a quarter." I am told that disgraceful scenes of this kind are by no means uncommon in the Ramsgate Police-court. But after the lamentable exhibition which the Justices made of themselves in the murder case two or three months ago, it is not surprising to find that they are treated with such scant respect.

In preparation for the sporting and travelling season, ladies and gentlemen should visit Ulster House, Conduit-st., W., where their orders for every kind of garment will have prompt and careful attention.

Borwick's Baking Powder. Pure & wholesome, assists digestion.
Borwick's Baking Powder. Guaranteed to be free from alum.
Borwick's Baking Powder. It has the largest sale in the world.

The following is my Legal Pillory for the week. The Wigton Magistrates have afforded, I think, the most monumental exhibition of incompetence. A lad behaved rudely to a married woman, who very sensibly beat him off with her umbrella. The young reprobate was brought up on a charge of indecent assault, but the prosecutrix herself did not wish to press the case, and the Magistrates were urged to deal with him as a first offender. If McNeill had been a grown-up man they would probably have heeded those appeals, reduced the charge to one of common assault, and let the defendant off with a fine. As he happens, however, to be only fourteen years of age, Sir Musgrave Brisco and the other wiseacres on the Bench considered it a suitable opportunity for the display of their severity, and sent the lad to an industrial school. It is simply monstrous that McNeill should be kept in an industrial school for two years upon such evidence, and I trust the Home Secretary will immediately give his attention to the case:—

Liverpool County Intermediate Sessions. Josiah Beaumont, charged with indecently assaulting Jane Preston. Four months.

Liverpool County Intermediate Sessions. Before Mr. Hugh Perkins and other Justices. William Ashton, convicted of stealing a pair of trousers. Nine months.

Cannock Petty Sessions. Before Lord Hatherton, Messrs. B. Gilpin and F. R. Bumsted. James Cooper, farmer; charged with cruelty to a cow. The animal was left in a field where there was practically no herbage, and one of its legs was "useless." It was in a shocking condition, but defendant objected to having it slaughtered. The Bench regarded it as a very bad case. Fined £2 and costs.

Cannock Petty Sessions. Before the same Magistrates. Henry Challenor and Charles Brough, miners, charged with poaching. Challenor four months; Brough two months; and a further term of six months each in default of finding sureties.

Bridgnorth Petty Sessions. Before the Rev. F. H. W. Whitmore, and Messrs. E. M. Wakeman, E. W. F. Acton, and W. P. Gordon. Jane Timmins; wife of a farmer, charged with assaulting Ann Gillson. Complainant was engaged as domestic servant, and because she refused to work on a rick, defendant seized her by her hair, dragged her some distance, beat her severely with a scouring-brush, and threw several buckets of water and pigwash over her. The girl had not since been able to work owing to her injuries. Fined £1. 9s., including costs.

Bridgnorth Petty Sessions. Before the same Bench. John Eveson and Frederick Luckless, charged with game trespass. Fined £1 and 15s. respectively.

Ironbridge Petty Sessions. John Owen, William Yorke, and Henry Trevis, charged with poaching. Fined £5 each and costs; in default, two months.

Swaffham Police-court. Before Mr. H. Lee Warner. Mary A. Cawthorne, charged with sleeping in an outhouse. Fourteen days.

Govan Police-court. William M'Lean, convicted of assaulting his wife by striking and kicking her. Fined 21s.

Govan Police-court. Before Bailie Conlon. Thomas Wilson, aged 13, charged with stealing a door-mat from his mother's house. Sent to a reformatory for three years.

West Riding Police-court, Pontefract. Enoch Price, Herbert Price, John Wood, and James Wood, charged under warrant with a murderous assault on William Nash, Chairman of a local Miners' Association. Defendants, who were wearing their pit clogs, kicked Nash as he lay on the ground. Three of his ribs were broken, and other injuries inflicted, and defendants again attacked him as he was being taken to a doctor. Two defendants were fined £1. 1s. 8d. each, the others £2. 2s. 1d. each, including costs.

Wigton Police-court. Before Sir Musgrave Brisco, Bart., Messrs. J. K. Parker, and W. Parkin-Moore. John McNeill, a boy of 14, charged with indecently assaulting a married woman, who said he got hold of her round the waist and conducted himself in an improper manner. She used her umbrella and got away, and did not wish to press the case. The Bench were asked to deal with the boy as a first offender. Sent to an industrial school until he is 16.

Before buying Gentlemen's Fur-lined Coats and Ladies' Sealskin Jackets, see Phillips's fine stock. Everything guaranteed one-half West-end price.—PHILLIPS & Co., 52 & 53, Newgate street, E.C. Sealskin Jackets re-modelled and re-dyed to latest fashion.

Alford Police court. Before Messrs. J. Higgins, J. C. Sewell, W. D. Gainsford, and Rev. F. A. Glover. Benjamin Driver pleaded guilty to committing an aggravated assault on hisson. He severely thrashed him with a sewing machine belt, and a large number of bruises and wheals were found on the boy's arms, back, and ribs. Fined 40s. and costs.

Tamworth County Petty Sessions. Susan Stevenson, charged with ill treating and neglecting her grand-daughter. The child who was illegitimate, was brutally ill-used, and defendant herself admitted to one witness that she had thrashed her till she was "black and blue," and broken a strap over her. Fined £2 and costs.

Leigh (Lancashire) Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. T. T. Hayes, F. W. D. Bouth, F. Burton, and J. Green. Thomas Higgins charged with assaulting his wife. He knocked her to the floor and kicked her shamefully, causing her head to bleed. The Bench granted a separation order. Fined 20s. and costs.

Oxford City Police-court. Before the Mayor (Mr. T. Lucas), Messrs. J. Sheard, W. Brain, C. T. Hawkins, F. Ryman Hall, and J. H. Salter. Henry Schwabe, convicted of assaulting his wife. The woman was in a very weak state, and was covered with bruises from defendant's blows and kicks. One black bruise measured 6 in. by 3 in. A separation order was granted. Ordered to pay the costs, and bound over.

Airdrie J.P. Court. Before Mr. D. M'Intosh and Mr. G. F. Livingston. Robert Morrison, charged with creating a disturbance and assaulting a constable, whom he threw down and kicked, besides biting him on both hands; also with assaulting and biting a man who went to the policeman's assistance. Fined 15s.

Brigg Police court. Before Mr. V. D. H. Cary-Elwes, Rev. T. Field, Messrs. W. H. Coates, R. Brooks, and G. H. Cary Elwes. John Henry Clark and his son, aged eight, charged with stealing twelve hen's eggs. The boy was discharged. The father pleaded guilty. One month.

Norwich Police-court. Before Mr. A. F. C. Bolingbroke, the Deputy-Mayor, and Mr. S. Newman. Four lads charged with playing at pitch and toss. Committed to gaol for three days each in default of paying a fine.

Peterborough Police-court. Before Lieut.-Col. C. I. Strong, the Mayor (J. Clifton), Messrs. J. H. Beeby, G. C. W. Fitzwilliam, and T. L. Barrett, Wm. Wyitt convicted of stealing a bottle of wine. Twenty-one days.

Faversham County Police-court. Before Mr. W. E. Rigden. George Fraser and William Benbow, charged with stealing four cabbages. Seven days each.

Rochford Petty Sessions. Before Mr. C. A. Tabor and Major A. C. Tawke. Thomas Green and William White, charged with playing banker on the highway on Sunday. Fined 10s. each.

Epworth Police-court. Before Messrs. J. F. Watson and J. Stephenson. John H. Scarcliffe, watchmaker, charged with acting as a pedlar without a licence. Committed for seven days.

Bow-street Police-court. Before Mr. Lushington. Conrad Wickenhoefer, charged with cruelty to a goat. He struck the animal a fearful blow with a heavy stick, as nearly as possible driving one of the horns from its socket. Fined £3 and costs.

Armagh Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. Townsend, R.M., McCrum, Anderson, and Hillock. Mary McGinnity, charged with vagrancy. She had been found wandering on Barrack-hill about one a.m. One month.

Southampton County Police-court. Before Admiral Martin and Mr. W. E. Darwin. George Thomas pleaded guilty to sleeping in the open air and being unable to give a satisfactory account of himself. Seven days.

The man Bradshaw, late of the East London Sea-side Home at Southend, has re-appeared in the character of the begging-letter writer. This man was convicted three years ago of touting for funds for a Sea-side Home which had actually ceased to exist. In consequence of the exposure of this swindle in TRUTH, he was prosecuted by a gentleman whom he had induced to subscribe, and sentenced to three months' hard labour. He now has the impudence to write to one of the former subscribers to his Home—that is to say, one of the persons whom he has cheated—and to ask him to pay his poor-rate, for the recovery of which he is threatened with proceedings. He states that he has had since last autumn a temporary appointment under the London School Board, and that he is now schoolmaster and organist of St. John's, London Docks. Heaven forbid that I should in any way impede his (or anybody's) efforts to get an honest living. If, however, the man's statements about himself are true—and they are on the face of them most improbable—there cannot be any valid reason why he should beg of strangers for the wherewithal to pay his poor-rates. I would, therefore, warn all benevolent persons against his appeals.

A country gentleman, forwarding me a circular just received from a "Turf Commission Agent" at Flushing, expresses the opinion that there ought to be some international agreement to prevent the circulation of these things. I do not see why the Governments more immediately concerned should not take concerted action in regard to them. Most of these circularising turf operators dare not show their faces in England. They were all, a few years back, summarily turned out of France. If the Governments of Holland and Belgium, and possibly Germany, could be induced to imitate this salutary action, there would be an end of the nuisance.

One of the fraternity of "Indian oculists," which is now (happily) engaging the attention of the police and the Metropolitan Magistracy, proclaims himself an "F.S.S." (Fellow of the Sturman Society—alias "The Society of Science, Letters, and Art, of London"). The individual in question is one "Mohammed Jeneid Shah," and in addition to his "F.S.S." he uses the decoration "M.D." This degree, needless to say, is derived from one of the American Universities which trade in such articles, and at Mohammed Jeneid's office, No. 363, City-road, is to be seen the diploma, side by side with Sturman's. It would not be surprising, therefore, if Sturman, who used to be an agent for bogus American degrees, sold Mohammed his "M.D." at the same time as his "F.S.S."

I am very glad to publish the following letter, as I am quite guiltless of the views which the writer—whoever he may be—attributes to me. Respecting the former letter, I said that it would show my lady readers what domestic servants are coming to; but I was far from implying that I personally see any harm in their advancing in that direction. As a matter of democratic principle, a servant has, of course, as much right to make inquiries about his or her employer, as the employer to make inquiries about him or her:—

Sir,—You have printed a letter from Mary —— to a lady, about getting a situation as nurse, and appear to be surprised that she should ask a few questions about the place she was taking. You seem to forget that a servant's home is what her mistress chooses to make it, so that it is important to her to know what prospect she has of being tolerably comfortable, and being able to stay; whereas, on the other hand, the mistress, who is entitled to, and generally does, ask as many questions as she pleases, and often more than are necessary, is not liable to be made to shift her quarters at any moment, or to have life made a burden to her by one of her servants. It is certainly better to ask for information from the mistress, than to try, as is often done, to obtain it from other sources (the servants, tradespeople, &c.), and although we may never get so far as you suggest, as to ask for testimonials to character from former servants, yet we may one day have a system of registration which will give us a chance of finding out what sort of quarters we are likely to get into, and with what sort of masters or mistresses.—I am, sir, yours obediently,

Only a Valet.

"Toilet Lanoline" softens, clears, and preserves the skin and should be used in every household. "Toilet Lanoline" protects the skin from the effects of exposure, and adds to the natural beauty. In collapsible tubes, 6d. and 1s.; in small boxes, 3d., from all chemists and druggists. Wholesale depôt, 67, Holborn-viaduct. The genuine bears the trade-mark, "Lanoline."

A system of trains which would bring Edinburgh within three hours of London, and whirl one from Victoria to Brighton in twenty or twenty-five minutes, might fairly be called a "Lightning Express Railway Service." This is the title of a pamphlet in which Mr. F. B. Behr, Associate of the Institution of Civil Engineers, explains his scheme for running trains at a speed of from 120 to 150 miles an hour. Such rapid transit on the existing lines is out of the question, but Mr. Behr holds that it can be accomplished by the use of electricity as the motive power, and the adoption of the Lartigue single-rail system. The Lartigue principle has been successfully employed in a short line from Listowel to Ballybunion, and it is claimed that for the purpose of the proposed high-speed trains it would give a maximum of stability and safety together with a minimum of cost in construction. In regard to the latter point, Mr. Behr suggests that to a great extent the slopes of existing main lines could be utilised for the lightning-express line, his idea being that the new service should be a complement of, and not a competitor to the present systems.

It is, of course, impossible to enter here into the technical details of Mr. Behr's plans, nor can I pretend to pass judgment upon them as an engineering expert. The whole thing, however, down to the smallest detail is most carefully and elaborately worked out and independent opinions which I have obtained confirm my own view that, far from being a mere chimerical project, it is one which ought, undoubtedly, to be submitted to some practical test. As I understand, Mr. Behr is anxious that this should be done, and it seems to me that there should not be much difficulty in raising the necessary capital.

The elation of the Unionists over the House of Lords division is to me incomprehensible. If Home Rule was to be rejected by a vote of the Peers, the larger the majority the better for our purpose, and the only matter for regret that I find in the Division List is that every Peer in the United Kingdom did not vote against the Bill. That would have been an object-lesson convincing even to the dullest of electors. However, the actual figures are near enough to that for all practical purposes. At the last General Election the principle of Home Rule was affirmed by 2,283,676 electors, while 2,038,372 voted against it. In the House of Lords the proportion is 419 against the principle to 41 in its favour. The Times and other Unionist journals are now engaged in proving, to their entire satisfaction, that the Peers are in the truest sense representatives of the people's opinions. Heaven help them!

I see that a question is to be asked whether one of the 419 was not brought out of a lunatic asylum to vote, and restored to that fitting seclusion after the division. I hear that, in view of this question, the Chancellor of the Exchequer has, up to the time of my going to press, received letters from 217 Peers accounting for their time for the week preceding the Division.

Mrs. S. A. Allen's World's Hair Restorer. Restores the colour. Renews the growth. Arrests the fall. Cleanses the scalp.

From the Latter-day Tragedy of "Home-Rulius Cæsar."

Scene.—The Forum. Enter G. O. Man-tony and a throng of Citizens with the mangled Bill of Home-Rulius.

G. O. M. Nay, press not so upon me; give me air!
1st Citizen. Room for our Chief! for noble G. O. Man-tony.
2nd Cit. Stand back! make space! and let our leader speak.
G. O. M. (mounting the rostrum). Friends! Britons!
Countrymen! lend me your ears.
If you have tears, prepare to shed them now;
If you have hearts, let them with anger burn;
Nay, if you've votes, prepare, I say, to use them!
[Holding up the paper vesture of Home-Rulius.
You all do know this mantle. I remember
The fateful night Home-Rulius wore it first.
'Twas on a winter evening, months ago,
And I myself helped place it on his shoulders.
Loud were the cheers that hailed the sight of it,
And now—come close and gaze upon it now.
Look! in this place ran Salisbury's dagger through;
See, here, the slash by Argyll's claymore made;
Through this, the heavy hand of Devonshire stabb'd,
And as he plucked his cursèd steel away,
He hoped each vital clause would follow it—
The very life-blood of Home-Rulius.
See, too, these dents, too weak to pierce the Bill
Though so ill-meant, made by the puny bodkins
Of Baring, Bartley, Bowles, and Parker-Smith,
Those pigmy bravos, mannikin assassins,
Eager to wound, yet all too weak to strike.
See, here, where Russell's poniard glanced away,
And how this seam was rent by Balfour's blade.
And look again, 'twas here that James struck home
(E'en the preamble was not safe from him);
Through here that bungling traitor, Jesse, aimed,
But failed, as ever, to make sure his blow;
And here—and here—and here—oh, shameful sight!—
See what deep gashes spiteful Joseph made—
These were the most unkindest cuts of all—
For Joseph, as you know, once loved Home-Rulius,
Until black envy turned his love to gall,
And changed his friendship into mad ambition.
Ah, now you hiss, and, I perceive, you feel
The dint of pity; these are precious signs,
Kind souls; but come e'en closer, look again
Upon this mantle, maimed and marr'd by traitors.
1st Cit. Oh, shameful sight!
2nd Cit. Oh, woeful day!
3rd Cit. Oh, traitors! villains!
Omnes. We will be revenged!
4th Cit. Down with false Joseph and the House of Lords!
5th Cit. About! seek! burn! let not a traitor live!
G. O. M. Stay, countrymen.
1st Cit. Peace, then, let's hear the Grand Old Man-Tony.
2nd Cit. We'll hear him, follow him, aye, die for him.
G. O. M. 'Tis true that traitors fell upon Home-Rulius,
And hacked his mantle as you see this day;
But though his paper vesture may be torn,
Take heart, my friends, for still Home-Rulius lives.
Malice and envy have essayed their worst,
But, countrymen, Home-Rulius lives, I say,
'Spite all that rage and treachery have wrought.
I pray you, then, let me not stir you up
To any sudden flood of mutiny.
They that have done this thing are "honourable,
They are rich and noble, barons, earls, and dukes.
I will not guess what private ends they had
That they should do it; but alas! 'tis done.
And as for me, a plain and blunt old man
Who love Home-Rulius, all I ask is this—
That they shall not repeat so base a deed.
Go to, then. You have votes! Employ them well
Strike home with them; and, for the love you bear
The wearer of this mantle, put a tongue
Into the mouth of every ballot-box,
Which, shouting with a voice to wake the dead,
Shall tell these traitor Unionists their fate.
Go to, my friends, and pass without delay
Those needed Bills, those much desired reforms,
Which shall be nails into the coffins driven
Of those who blindly would oppose your will.
Then, in good time, yet stronger than before,
Shall good Home Rulius hold the field all round,
And, 'midst your shouts, achieve a final victory.
Omnes. Let's to the fight!
G. O. M. Away then! Register!
And organise your forces. Go, I say,
And let the traitors 'ware the Ides of March!
[Exeunt Omnes

Why I am not particularly enthusiastic for the Home Rule Bill is because I am a Home Ruler, for the Bill seems to me to leave almost everything on which self-government is based in suspense, whilst it does not secure to us even that limited amount of Home Rule that would be involved in our being allowed to legislate on British measures without the intervention of Irishmen. This is, I gather from a perusal of German and Austrian newspapers, the view taken by them. I read, a day or two ago, the following remarks in a well-written article. There is a good deal of point in them:—

When it is asserted that the Bill gives self-government to Ireland it seems to be forgotten that almost everything which we Germans had been under the impression constitutes self-government, is left in suspense. The main cause of all the agitation that has existed for so many years in Ireland is the laws regulating the tenure of land. The Irish are dissatisfied with them. They insist that the rents that are exacted are still excessive, and that, although the tenants have given to their holdings all their value, yet they can be evicted from them if they fail to pay these excessive rents. No attempt is made in the Bill to secure a settlement. All that is laid down is that the Irish Legislature is to be powerless to effect any change in the present laws for a term of years. The first duty of a Legislature and of an Executive is to maintain order. But neither Irish Legislature nor Executive is to have any voice on Police and Constabulary. They are to be paid for a term of years from the Imperial Treasury, and, so far as we understand the Bill, they are to remain under the control of the English Minister for Home Affairs. Taxes are to be imposed, levied, and paid into the Imperial Treasury, and one-third of this amount is to be handed over to the Irish Treasury, in order to defray its expenses. With land, Constabulary, and taxation beyond Irish control, with what are the Legislature and the Executive to occupy themselves? In name they rule, in reality they do not. Their power hardly goes beyond that of a Municipality. Everything seems to have been sacrificed to a desire to pass a Bill with Home Rule printed on the back. We have often expressed our opinion that real Irish Home Rule would be of advantage to the United Kingdom, as well as of Ireland. But we very much question whether the measure which has passed the Under House, granting sham self-government to Ireland, and leaving the Imperial Government under the obligation to discuss Irish local affairs, will command a majority when an appeal is made to the electors.

In another German journal I read:—

It will always remain a matter of surprise to us why Mr. Gladstone, with an obedient, not to say a subservient, majority ready to obey his behests, compromised with his own opinions in respect to the measure of Home Rule to be granted to Ireland. In his former Bill he dealt with the subject in a statesmanlike manner. That Bill settled everything definitely; his present Bill leaves everything in a state of suspense. The English have been so long accustomed to regard themselves as a sacred race, to which every other race ought to be glad to be subordinated, that they in their hearts preferred to rule Ireland than to allow that island to rule itself. But it became every day more clear that eighty or ninety Irish members, banded together to insist upon self-government being granted to their country, able to make and destroy Ministries, and determined that so long as they did not attain their end no other business should be transacted in the Parliament in which they had seats, were in a position to reduce Parliamentary Government to impotence. The English, therefore, being a practical people, were prepared to accept the inevitable. But their readiness to grant to Ireland Home Rule was not so much due to their abstract approval of the concession as to their regarding this as a choice of evils, in which case it is wise to choose the lesser. The contest between the Home Rulers and the Unionists has now raged for seven years. In 1886 it secured to the Conservatives six years of office, although, probably, there is a majority of Liberals amongst the electors. At the General Election of last year this verdict was reversed, and the Liberals came into power with a small majority. It would seem to have been sound Party tactics on the part of Mr. Gladstone to have sought by his Home Rule Bill to remove this bone of contention by passing a measure which would have fully satisfied the Irish, and which would have given effect to the desire of many to allow the British members to legislate, without either being perpetually dragged into Irish debates, and without the presence of Irish Members in the Imperial Parliament. Mr. Gladstone's Bill does neither, and he thus deprives himself of the leverage which might very possibly have given him the victory in the constituencies when it is—as it must be, owing to the action of the Upper House—referred to the constituencies. It may be that Mr. Gladstone is not so much master in his Cabinet as is supposed, and that he encountered resistance amongst some of his colleagues. He is an old man, and although his vitality is wonderful for his age, it cannot be supposed that he can exercise over them the same influence as when their future fate depended upon him. Some of them, it is well known, are not so much given over to the idea for which he has said he alone lives. If this be so, it seems evident to us that he would have done better to have dismissed them, if necessary, rather than to have yielded himself up to their councils. It is as though a General on the field of battle were to submit his opinion of the right manœuvres to his lieutenants, or to allow each one of them to modify them according to his own opinion. Such a Commander invites defeat, and if Mr. Gladstone and Home Rule are defeated, it will be due to want of determination on his part, and tenacity in his own views.

SCRUTATOR.

THE NEXT PLACE FOR LORD ROBERTS.

WHERE and how Lord Roberts shall next be employed is becoming a question of urgent national importance. The appointment of Sir Henry Norman as Viceroy of India has finally disposed of the idea that the late Commander-in-Chief should return to India in that capacity, and, looking solely at this particular appointment, nobody need regret the result. The Governor-Generalship is essentially a civil post, and Sir Henry Norman, despite his military experience, is essentially a civilian—by all accounts, one of the best who could have been found. Lord Roberts, on the other hand, is before all things a soldier. As a soldier he has completed his work in India; and as Viceroy he would have been a square peg in a round hole. His unrivalled military experience, and his proved abilities as an organiser and a commander, are at the disposal of the country for service at home. The question now is, whether the Army and the country are to have the benefit of these qualities, or whether one of the ablest soldiers of the day is to be ignominiously shelved in order to gratify personal and professional jealousies.

That there is serious reason to fear this last result is shown by what has already happened. As stated in Truth many weeks ago, Lord Roberts was personally willing to accept the Aldershot command—where he would have had opportunities of rendering invaluable service to the Army. It cannot be said that Royal influence excluded him, for up till a recent date it was doubtful whether the Duke of Connaught cared for the post, and it might have been offered to Lord Roberts many months ago. That Lord Roberts never had a chance of going to Aldershot Mr. Campbell-Bannerman has admitted in Parliament. The Secretary for War defends his action in that matter by the amazing contention, that to offer him the Aldershot command would have been an insult to an Officer who had held the post of Commander-in-Chief in India. This strange pretext is not worth discussing, for almost as soon as he had spoken, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman had to admit that (as already stated in Truth) Lord Roberts had been offered and had refused the commands at Malta and Gibraltar, notwithstanding that it was considered impossible to insult him by offering him the infinitely superior appointment now filled by the Duke of Connaught. From these shameless efforts to relegate the late Indian Commander-in-Chief to the convenient obscurity of one or other of the Mediterranean fortresses; from the evident determination to give him no chance of going to Aldershot; and from the characteristic official shuffling when it came to explaining these transactions in Parliament, it may be judged easily enough what ground there is for anticipating that Lord Roberts will be shelved, if it is in the power of the dominant military ring to shelve him.

Public opinion will resent this iniquity vehemently and unanimously; but if such resentment is to produce any tangible result it requires adequate expression without loss of time. Already the first point in the game has been scored against Lord Roberts. The vacancy for which he was most conspicuously fitted has been filled up, and to any complaints that no employment is found for the Indian General the official reply will be that there does not happen to be another suitable vacancy occurring just at present. That, indeed, was almost said by Mr. Campbell-Bannerman on Monday night. Lord Roberts, said he, had got very early to the top of the tree, and "the worst of it was that when an officer got to the top of the tree, there was no further tree to go up." If that is the difficulty, I shall be very happy to help Mr. Campbell-Bannerman and his colleagues out of it by finding them another tree. When vacancies are not occurring in the ordinary course of nature they can always be created artificially. What we have to consider, then, is, how a vacancy can be artificially created, to fill which would not, as Mr. Campbell-Bannerman ingenuously puts it, be derogatory to the dignity of one who has held the high office of Commander-in-Chief in India. When once the question is put in that form, the answer will at once suggest itself to everybody. The post for which Lord Roberts is most obviously fitted, alike by his personal qualifications and the exalted dignity of the appointment which he last filled, is that of Commander-in-Chief of the British Army. I say this in no spirit of unfriendliness to H.R.H. the present Commander-in-Chief. Far from it. No one appreciates more cordially than I do the valuable services which his Royal Highness has rendered in his present capacity. When, however, Sir Peter Teazle reminded his spouse of the obligation which he had conferred upon her by making her his wife, her ladyship replied that only one thing was required to complete the obligation, namely, that he should make her his widow. Somewhat in Lady Teazle's spirit do I view the obligations which the country is under to the Duke of Cambridge. Great as his past services have been, none among them would compare with the service which he would render by stepping aside at this juncture in order to secure to the country the ablest successor who could be found to supply his place. If anything could mitigate the grief which must eventually be experienced by the Army and the nation at the prospect of parting with the Duke, I venture to think it would be this. Other arguments might be urged without difficulty in the same direction. It would be easy to point to the fact that

H.R.H. the Commander-in Chief is no longer as young as he was, and that in these days of rapid transition new blood and new ideas are essential to the efficient administration of military and all other affairs; easy to demonstrate the necessity of putting Lord Roberts in a position where he will be superior to all prevailing prejudices and traditions of Whitehall and Pall Mall; easy to show that the dignity of the office of Commander-in-Chief in India is very much higher than that of, let us say, Commander-in-Chief in Ireland, so that, on Mr. Campbell-Bannerman's theory, the officers who have held these posts must be provided for accordingly. Then, again, there is the Constitutional question, in regard to which it might be pointed out that, now that the Duke of Connaught has been fitted with a post for which (teste Mr. Campbell-Bannerman) he possesses better qualifications than any other officer available, including Lord Roberts, a matchless opportunity presents itself of making away with the shoddy doctrine that the command of the Army must always be vested in a Royal personage. Finally, there is the supreme consideration that a Royal Commission has formally advised that the office of Commander-in-Chief should, at the first opportunity, be placed on an entirely new footing—a recommendation on which, I rejoice to see, the Secretary for War announces that Ministers intend to act. In view of this important announcement, it becomes manifest that by remaining at his present post the Duke of Cambridge is simply obstructing a Departmental reform, the necessity for which has been decided by a Royal Commission. But to multiply arguments of this character seems to me out of place. The situation is simplicity itself. Here is Lord Roberts. There is the Duke of Cambridge. Hitherto, the Duke has always seen his duty and done it. Is there any reason to suppose that he will fail to see and do it now?

BRUTALITY AT SEA.

The fact that the Captain of a ship has been sentenced at Quarter Sessions to four months' hard labour for ill-treating one of his crew is a pretty conclusive proof of his unfitness for the command of a British vessel. It is not the custom at Quarter Sessions to inflict such punishment for mere personal violence, unless it be of a very gross nature; and when a man has been thus dealt with it is surely nothing less than scandalous that he should be again permitted to assume the practically autocratic control over the lives and liberties of those on board which the Captain of a ship necessarily possesses. This, I have no doubt, will be the opinion of most men of ordinary intelligence and humane feeling. The Board of Trade thinks otherwise. It holds, apparently, that the guilty skipper completely expiates his offence by imprisonment, and should have a chance of practising his brutality on some fresh victim. That this is no exaggeration of the attitude of the Department is clearly shown by a case brought under my notice by the Seamen's Friendly Society—an organisation which, while seeking the sailor's spiritual advancement, does not disdain to exert itself to secure his material comfort and welfare. The facts of the case are as follows.

At the Cardiff Quarter Sessions, in April last, William McMurtrey, Master of the British barque Carmoney, was charged with unlawfully wounding Frank Campbell, a coloured man. Campbell was the ship's steward. His story was that the prisoner first struck him in the mouth, splitting his lip, and then pummelled him in the face for ten or fifteen minutes, knocked him down, and kicked him on the forehead. Campbell was next put in irons, and made to stand on the edge of a board with his arms uplifted, and in this position he was chained up for three days and nights. For ten days after that he was kept at work from 5.30 a.m. till 6 p.m. holystoning the deck with a 40 lb. stone. Five members of the crew gave evidence which corroborated Campbell's statement in various details. All of them testified to the shocking signs of ill-usage which his face bore when he came on deck three days after the assault. Of the score or so persons on board at the time only three were called for the defence—the first mate, the second mate, and an apprentice. The main object of their testimony was to show that the prisoner received provocation. As I will explain below, however, this branch of the evidence could not have made much impression upon the Recorder and jury, or the Captain would probably have escaped the four months' imprisonment to which he was condemned.

Such were the circumstances under which McMurtrey was convicted. People who hold that sailors ought not to be placed at the mercy of savage ruffians of this type, naturally expected to hear that McMurtrey would be deprived of the opportunity of doing further mischief—at least, in the capacity of a Captain. The Merchant Shipping Acts enable the Board of Trade to accomplish this by suspending or cancelling the certificate of a Master convicted of any offence. Here, one would have imagined, was a case in which the Board could have no hesitation about exercising its power. But the ways of officialism are past the comprehension of the outside world. The Rev. Father Hopkins, of the Seamen's Friendly Society, having written to the Board respecting McMurtrey, received the following reply:—

> Board of Trade (Marine Department), London, S.W.,
> August 10, 1893.
>
> Sir,—In reply to your letter to the President of the 2nd inst., calling attention to the case of W. McMurtrey, late Master of the ship Carmoney, who was convicted in April last on charges of ill-treatment and assault, I am directed by the Board of Trade to inform you that McMurtrey's certificate has not been dealt with.
>
> The Board of Trade gave very careful consideration to all the circumstances of the case which were brought under their notice, and, having regard to the strong recommendation to mercy made by the jury, and to the fact that McMurtrey had apparently received strong provocation, the Board decided to take no further action in the case.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
>
> Cosmo Monkhouse.

If the Board plainly said that McMurtrey was an injured innocent, wrongfully punished by a misguided Court, its refusal to interfere could be understood. But the Board modestly shrank from openly setting its judgment above that of the Recorder and jury who tried the case. As justification for the refusal to deal with McMurtrey's certificate, the Board puts forward the jury's recommendation to mercy and its own assertion that the man "had, apparently, received strong provocation." The jury recommended McMurtrey to mercy on account of his previous good character, which was testified to by the owner of the ship and the broker. These gentlemen were, of course, competent to speak of the Captain's character as it was exhibited in their relations with him on shore, but their evidence could not throw much light upon his conduct at sea. It is not at all uncommon for a Captain who is a perfect brute and tyrant at sea, where his authority is supreme, to become the most mild-mannered man on shore, where he cannot do exactly as he likes. Then as to the alleged provocation, the prosecution denied that any was given. The first mate, on the other hand, alleged that Campbell threatened the Captain with a knife. The Recorder advised the jury that if they believed this, it was their duty to acquit the prisoner, as in such circumstances he would be justified in taking the most extreme measures against Campbell. As the jury did not acquit the prisoner, it would seem that they believed the evidence for the prosecution rather than that for the defence. What right then has the Board of Trade to assume that McMurtrey "received strong provocation?" And supposing for an instant this assumption was correct, does the Department consider that a Captain who meets such provocation in the barbarous manner adopted by McMurtrey is a fit person to be entrusted with the command of a ship?

The course adopted by the Board of Trade will be condemned by all who have at heart the interests of our seamen. It is practically certain that for every case of cruelty on merchant ships that comes into Court a dozen occur in which proceedings are never taken. There is, therefore, all the more reason why offenders who are brought to justice should be punished in an exemplary fashion, and, above all, be shorn of the position of authority which they have abused. In this instance the Board has declined to use its powers, and it goes forth to the seafaring population that a man may undergo four months' imprisonment for ill-treating a ship's steward and still be deemed worthy, in Whitehall, to hold a Captain's certificate. It seems to me that such a gross scandal demands the immediate attention of Mr. Mundella.

"TAKASHIMA'S SWEETHEART."

I have already mentioned that in consequence of the appearance of the article with the above title in TRUTH of August 17 I had received a communication from the Japanese Minister, Viscount Kawase, and that the Minister expressed his desire to make all due reparation to the girl, "Helena D.," for the wrong which she was alleged to have suffered from one of the servants of the Legation. Before doing so, however, he naturally required that the narrative should be fully authenticated. For this purpose certain inquiries have been made by a firm of solicitors acting on behalf of the Legation and by myself, and I am sorry to have to say that the result does not reveal the young lady concerned in altogether as satisfactory a light as could be desired. For the sake of the girl herself I wish to avoid saying any more on this point than is absolutely necessary; but in justice to the Japanese Minister I feel bound, after the appeal which was made to him in TRUTH, to state clearly that in view of what has now transpired, I do not think he can be expected to give the girl further assistance of any kind. As I have mentioned that the facts, as represented in my article, were laid before me by Mr. Arthur Newton, it is also due to that gentleman to state that the further information which has now come to light was as new to him as it was to me. So far as Mr. Newton's share in the matter goes, the history of the case was precisely as it was narrated in TRUTH—the narrative, in fact, being mainly founded on Mr. Newton's correspondence. From this it also follows that Takashima's part in the drama, therefore, was essentially that described in the original story. What has since transpired shows that the girl did not treat Mr. Newton straightforwardly in regard to the circumstances attending the birth of her child, and that implicit reliance cannot be placed upon all her statements. Under these circumstances, she has only herself to blame that those who were at first disposed to help her decline to do so now. In some respects she is far more deserving of pity now than she was when attention was first called to the case. The one great fact in her existence—the baby—unfortunately cannot be explained away; and she has now lost not only her character but her friends. It too often happens, however, in these cases that the more pity a girl deserves the less she gets, and so, I fear, it will prove with Takashima's sweetheart.

"THE OTHER FELLOW."

The new dramatic season has started with a round of laughter at the little Court Theatre. Actors, artists, and critics were all back from the holidays, and apparently in good working trim. Mr. John Hare, fresh from the mountain Engadine air, looked in at what was once his own, or on the site of his own, first theatre, on his way to the provinces with "Diplomacy." Mr. Marcus Stone and Mr. Perugini, indefatigable playgoers, were both in their old seats, and soon all settled down at the banquet of fun at which Charles Groves, Weedon Grossmith, Charles Brookfield, and Patter Browne were to preside. The humour of the raw recruit is a good subject for farcical treatment. Years and years ago John Leech handled it in his admirable fashion by the sketches of the "Brook-green Volunteer" in Punch. But, as a rule, Tommy Atkins and Fuzzy Wuzzy are banished from the stage. Mulvaney and Ortheris have their humorous as well as grave side, as Rudyard Kipling has taught us. Perhaps ere long Mr. Pinero will take them in hand seriously or farcically, for he can do both. The comical recruit is, in this instance, a Frenchman, for Mr. Horner has been wise enough to translate and not to adapt "Champignol Malgré Lui," one of those conventional French farces that as a rule tickle the innate childishness of the French nature more than they do the stolidity and phlegm of ours.

There was only one thing to be done with this particular French farce, and that was to entrust its life and future to the very cleverest comedians that could be conveniently secured. We all know the true and the false Champignols by heart. They have danced through the comedies of the world from the days of Thespis and his cart. The husband goes out and leaves the sorrowing wife. She receives a call from an old lover, who is discovered in a compromising situation. She is forced against her will to confess that the persistent lover is her actual husband, and then the dramatic dance begins. The false Champignol is arrested as a deserter and bundled off to do his military duty with the reserves. The true Champignol turns up at the barracks, and is surprised to find that his very existence is ignored. The false Champignol, who wears his hair long, is committed to the barber's shears; but the true Champignol is clipped and sheared like a patient sheep. The false Champignol, who cannot draw a straight line or a curve either, is commanded to paint his Captain's portrait. The true Champignol, who is a celebrated artist, stands over the impostor, and roars at his discomfiture. These Dioscuri of farce get as completely mixed as the celebrated twins of Harry Leigh.

> In form and feature, face and limb,
> I grew so like my brother,
> That folks got taking me for him
> And each for one another.
>
> * * * * *
>
> In fact, year after year the same
> Absurd mistakes went on,
> And when I died the neighbours came
> And buried Brother John.

Well, it was not quite so bad as that with the Champignols, but, though temporarily deprived of the services of his pretty wife in the gay and animated personality of Miss Aïda Jenoure, still Mr. Charles Groves, the hearty and boisterous, manages in the end to get the laugh over poor little careworn and humorously discontented Weedon Grossmith. The contrast of type is here very direct and admirable, for Mr. Groves is remarkable for his old-fashioned British pugnacity, and Mr Grossmith for his fin de siècle pessimistic selfishness. True comedy is the result. Mr. Brookfield and Mr. H. de Lange have both caught the French military manner exactly. It would never have done to represent Gallic barrack life with the air and tone of the modern military Aldershot masher. Miss Aïda Jenoure, a clever and accomplished young lady, has abandoned the tambourine, the short skirts, and the "penny-in-the-slot" business of comic opera for the outskirts of comedy. She does well now; she will do better still hereafter. Miss Ellaline Terriss, with her male companions, Charles Burleigh and Seymour Hicks, joined the "pretty-pretty" brigade, and kissed and fondled like young doves all the evening, much to their mutual pleasure, no doubt. With such a good stock company as this, why should not Mr. Arthur Chudleigh give us a few more good farces? "The Other Fellow," funny as he is, may not be able to last out a whole season without support, but he might well be alternated with other merry plays on occasional nights. The Court Theatre ought to be recognised as one of the accepted playhouses where you can always be sure of an honest laugh after dinner, and can be considered safe from the boredom of pessimistic twaddle, new views, new schools, and the tiresome exercise known as an "epoch-making play," whatever that may be.

RATIONAL DOG FEEDING.—Give wholesome and nutritious food (Spratt's Patent Meat Fibrine Dog Cakes). Do not give tit-bits and dainties because your dog, like a spoilt child, prefers what suits his palate. See that the Dog Cakes are stamped "Spratt's Patent" and a "×," as cheap and innutritious imitations are often substituted for extra profit. Pamphlet on Canine Diseases post free. SPRATT'S PATENT, Limited, Bermondsey, London.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

AIX LES BAINS.

I DID not find Aix les Bains what I remembered it before it had been long annexed as part of Savoy to France. It used to be in former times a great resort of first class literary people, and Madame Rattazzi was the muse of the place. Her châlet is still there, but she has deserted it. She was supposed to be an exile in Savoy before 1860, and technically was so. But express trains used to come from Paris filled with her guests, and Italian statesmen, poets, and artists often crossed Mont Cenis at her bidding. The Casino is now too crowded to be pleasant. I should speak of it as being made up of samples of every class or category that can pay its way. Carolus Duran and Severine were to be daily seen in the conversation-room, but not always together. The King of Greece had just gone. He passed his evening at the Casino, but did not himself try his luck at the roulette-table. As the French say, il fasait jouer, that is to say, he asked a Secretary or Aide-de-Camp to stake for him, and walked about while this was being done. The King is now in the habit of passing a "season" at Aix in the month of August. He is said by the people there to be un peu ficelle, a phrase which my sentiment of reverence for his caste prevents me from translating, and the meaning of which it will be hard to find in printed vocabularies. But he has also won the reputation of being aimable, and his gentlemanly patience under the peculiar persecution to which he is often subjected is admired. Not bringing the Queen or any of his children with him, he is supposed to be in search of amusement as well as health. This idea emboldens numbers of enterprising and experienced ladies to pursue him. They crowd into the vacant rooms in the hotel where he puts up; or, if they cannot get any there, try to secure lodgings near it. Their pianos are resonant with the Greek hymn—which he hates—and those few Greek airs which have found their way into France. He had arranged to visit M. Carnot at Fontainebleau, but suddenly altered his plans, and, instead of going by Paris and Cologne to Fredenborg to join the family party there, went viâ Geneva, Basle, and Cassel.

A feud is now going on at Aix between the doctors and the management of the Casino. The former are no longer on the free list, and are working with all their might and main to get the gaming-table prohibited. Not long ago they went to Chambéry and got the Prefect to prevent it being kept going after midnight. As from that hour to two or three in the morning was the time gamblers were most reckless, the consequences have been severely felt in the Casino dividends. Men who had soaked liqueurs and beer after dinner did not mind losing, or were more easily led on by the hope of winning back what they had lost. The doctors are actuated by loss of fees. It was found by London physicians—on whom they most depend for patients—that those whom they sent to Aix in search of health did not recover. Gambling excitement and losses overtaxed their nervous vitality, and, stirring their bile, sent it through their blood. Hence the petitions to the Prefect. It is true that gambling does not help a medical treatment, but it is untrue that it has chased away all the rich people and brought a mere mob of adventurers and blacklegs. Certainly the company is mixed, but that is a good deal due to railways. Without the gambling, however, the blacklegs would not come—unless for the horse races, to which the doctors do not seem to object, but which really are as objectionable as the tables. I don't know any viler scum than a race-course attracts, or any more stupid kind of excitement than is to be found in betting upon horses—unless when knavery largely enters into it. That it does enter often is certain, and it is also certain that arch-millionaires are not above the temptation of betting against their own horses when the odds are heavy in their favour, and of secretly instructing their jockeys to "pull" them.

I should recommend the doctors to get up a rival Casino and attract Bishops to it. Their British patients could not, unless they were Dissenters, resist the inducement to find themselves in such good company. A boycott might be got up against those black sheep who wandered into the other Casino. American ladies of the right sort would understand the social advantages of having Bishops at their command whenever they might go to London. But I am afraid that Doctors as a body are not resourceful, and that the Casino will be more than a match for them. An instance was given of how the gambling drove away the richest patroness Aix ever had. She went there with a daughter and a favourite son-in-law who, after losing pretty heavily, tried to recoup by staying at the tables until the small hours of the morning. Loss followed loss, and the wife had to go to her mother to ask her to make them good. The two ladies, who were literally showering down gold, left Aix in high dudgeon, and do not intend ever to go back there while there are gaming-tables at the Casino.

I wandered to and fro among the Savoy valleys and watering-places, and went to the Italian side of the Cenis range. It is the more agreeable. But the heat was fearful. Only a native or a lizard could stand it. Brides looked lovely with its glacier in the background. But what an oven it was! There was hot water under the earth, warm steam made the air heavy, and the sun beat mercilessly on the mountain sides. One could not get a level spot anywhere to walk on. If one wanted to take exercise, one had either to climb laboriously or to descend. This, I dare say, is why Brides is said to stop the course of fatty degeneration. In the Piedmontese valleys there were nicer-mannered people and better food than in the Savoy valleys, unless one paid a very high price. The rooms were more spacious, and altogether there was a higher tone of civilisation. A drawback apart from the heat was the difficulty of getting to the railway. I had to, in returning to Modam on the French side of the Mont Cenis Tunnel, go round from Torre Pellice by Turin, where I halted for a night. One felt there in a vapour bath, and at the same time as if a fan were moving over one in iced air. It is no wonder that so many people die at Turin of malignant fever under this simultaneous action of the most relaxing heat and the most bitter cold.

The Marquis Visconti Venosta, who sat in the Behring Sea Arbitral Court as a Judge, returned to Piedmont when I was there. He is very much a prophet in his own country. Being married to a great niece of Cavour, née Alfieri, some of the prestige of that statesman is extended to him. The family estates of the Alfieri suffer from the tariff war between France and Italy. Their owners are anxious to bring about a cordial understanding between the two countries. The German Emperor is alive to this fact, and insisted on the Prince of Naples not backing out of his engagement to swell the Imperial triumph at the reviews which are to be held this week outside of Metz. I think, however, that he would not have gone to figure in Alsace-Lorraine as a satellite of the Emperor were it not for the riots at Aigues Mortes, and the conduct of the French authorities. These riots got up the blood of Italy in an extraordinary way. Before they took place, every one was hoping that Visconti Venosta, who is one of the shrewdest of living statesmen, would do something to bring France and Italy nearer to each other. After the news of the trifling punishments meted out by French Judges to French rioters, the King of Italy was obliged by public feeling to send his son to Metz.

The Princess Clotilde stays winter and summer at Monte Calieri. It is magnificent, and looks monastic The Po sweeps grandly at the foot of the rising ground on which it stands. There is a grandiose Alpine background, and such a splendid expanse of sky and smiling country in front. Vines forming festoons between the poplars which they are trained to run up give an impression of gladness as one looks towards Lombardy. The Princess is reverenced as a saint by the Piedmontais. Her only daughter, whom they call La Superba, is staying with her. She is said to be in no humour for a second marriage, and does not see where she could find a husband to suit her. The Italians would like her for their coming Queen; but the Prince of Naples feels her to be too much la maîtresse femme not to shrink from the idea of marrying her. In blood relationship to him she stands on the footing of first cousin, and is the widow of his uncle. This is close consanguinity and connection. She is Catholic enough for the position of Queen of Italy, and not too much so to be with the Pope against the House of Savoy.

The Prince of Naples was directed not to make himself cheap in Germany, and to use his eyes more than his tongue. He was to go to Metz as a member of a nation allied to the German Empire, and not to irritate the French by showing himself on all occasions with his host. The arrival was timed to be too late for the grand military-religious function on the review ground of Ban Saint Martin, outside of Metz. The anniversary of Sedan was there kept holy in a rather impressive manner. I should fancy all Germans sing, and in tune. They excel in hymn-singing and chorals. Eight thousand picked troops formed three sides of a hollow square, and the Imperial pavilion filled in the fourth side. An altar was placed in the middle of the square, a pastor read the liturgy, and the soldiers sang the hymns. William was at the door of the tent as Episcopus of the Prussian Church, and surrounded with the confederate Protestant Princes of the Fatherland. The King of Würtemberg was on his right and the Grand Duke of Baden on his left. His Saxon Majesty, who is a Catholic, found a good excuse for delaying his arrival three hours, and so did the Regent of Bavaria. The Prince of Naples only came the next day—the anniversary of the birth of the third French Republic. I saw him in Italy on his way to Metz with a following of two officers. It was said that he was offered a sister of the Empress, but thought her too tall to match with his height. He is small, seemingly delicate, like his mother, and speaks English and German with ease, but his French is "broken." He took his own carriages and horses to Metz, where it was arranged he was to stay at a hotel and only go to the Château d'Urville to dine. He could thus be often free to lay aside the uniform of a Hessian colonel with which he was provided.

Prince William of Holstein died as much of old age—he being seventy-seven—as of the disease for which he was operated upon. It was the same disease as the one the late Emperor of the French died of. He was a year older than the King of Denmark; but he had against him when a successor to the late King Frederick was being chosen at the Conference of London—his having served on the German side in the first Schleswig-Holstein campaign—the Emperor Nicholas, who preferred the husband of the Princess Louise of Hesse-Cassel, the sister-in-law of his eldest daughter, the Grand Duchess Alexandra. The Princess Louise was a daughter of a Danish Princess, and was competent to succeed to the throne of Denmark, where she lived in the expectation of being some day Queen of that country—in honourable poverty. The Duchess of Cambridge helped her in London before the Conference met and when it was sitting. She contradicted the report that Prince Christian of Holstein would, if raised to the Danish throne, be a docile tool of Russia—an idea that was strongly in the head of the late King of the Belgians. The King of Greece was called after Prince William, and bore his name as a Danish Midshipman. But when it was arranged to send him under the tutelage of his uncle, Prince Hans, to reign at Athens, he dropped the William and became George, it sounding better to Greek ears. King Christian and his brothers lived in affectionate friendship, just as his children do with each other. William died at Fredenborg with the illustrious family party now there gathered round him.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

HAVING spent twenty years in London, dear Lady Betty, and two weeks in the country, I am qualified, I imagine, to present an original and intelligent opinion upon this great City and upon the character and the customs of the people who inhabit this kingdom. London, for all practical purposes, is Piccadilly surrounded by a bewildering network of slums. The population is distributed as follows: The successful thieves live in the west, the unsuccessful thieves in the east, the upper middle-class inhabits the north, and the lower middle-class the south. There is for the Englishman but one God—that God is money, and the Blessed Trinity of commerce is composed of pounds, shillings, and pence. The Englishman carries his soul in his breeches-pocket, and his real recording angel is the obscure clerk who tots up his daily balance in a ledger in some distant and dismal bank. There are more churches, chapels, religious sects and denominations in Great Britain than in any other two countries combined. But the religion of this people is the religion of the restless. They are eager to convert everything and everybody—but the Three per Cents. To sell something to somebody at a profit is the one great purpose of the Englishman's existence. Everything upon the earth or beneath it, in the waters, and in the air above, he considers has been created either to be killed or to be sold—for when an Englishman is not selling he is killing, and when he is not killing he is selling. Frequently, however, he combines the two operations, and then he is indescribably happy.

The English are the money-lenders of the world. They do not realise it, but they are. There is not a nation, there is scarcely even a community that is not indebted to England, and no loan is required by any country, be it ever so trifling, but what it is brought to London to be floated. With characteristic ingenious hypocrisy, they, however, disguise these transactions under the more dignified terms of business, enterprise, investment, speculation, stocks, shares, and scrip. To die rich here is to die happy. The English idolise success—they are utterly unable to appreciate brilliant failure. Everything in England is stern, solid, and stolid. There is no lightness, no elasticity, no breeziness. The prototype of England is John Bull, a ponderous, prosperous provincial, with much money securely invested in the Three per Cents.

The English confuse the two terms principle and prejudice. Half the principles for which they are prepared to die, are merely prejudices in disguise. Their chief dread is to cause scandal, and their chief delight is to discuss it. The day of rest is to them neither a day of devotion nor a day for recreation. It is simply a day of truce upon which they can retire to calculate how successfully they have outwitted their neighbours in the past week, and can plan how they shall equally successfully outwit them in the week to come. Instinct, inspiration, imagination, sentiment—the electric properties of the soul they are utterly devoid of. Having little or no taste, they have substituted "tone" in its stead. So long as this "tone" is deliberate, dispassionate, and dignified they care little what atrocity it may conceal. They are perpetually in a hurry. The English, it is true, seldom gesticulate in conversation. This is not to be wondered at, for they otherwise exhaust their energy with their legs.

* * * * *

According to our neighbours, the French, we English are a perfidious race. Whether this opinion with regard to us is justified or not in the main, the American colony has some ground now to reproach us for being capricious. It is only a year ago that it seemed sufficient to claim American citizenship for a section of London society to offer effusive welcome to even the most outrageous adventurers from the United States. The tide has turned, and the American colony appears to be in as much disfavour at present as it was the reverse only a little while ago. It was noticed last season that the American colony was no longer so prominent as it was formerly. The short season which ended at Homburg on Saturday last has brought this change out into even bolder relief. As they say in the Money Market, there has been a "great fall in Americans." At Homburg this year these democratic idolaters of Royalty have been left severely alone.

The Prince of Wales left Homburg on Sunday. During his stay there it was remarked that he looked unusually well and that he was in excellent spirits, notwithstanding the contretemps which befell a certain high officer of State about which he was appealed to, and as to which he succeeded in preventing a serious breach of the peace. Barring this incident the Homburg season has this year been exceptionally dull, and the English visitors have been far less numerous than hitherto.

SANITARY SURVEYS.—Fee for inspection and Report in London, 2Gs.—The Sanitary Engineering Co., 65, Victoria-st., Westminster.

Lord Rowton, who had come up to London to vote upon the Home Rule Bill in the House of Lords, was called away before the division in consequence of the sudden illness in Scotland of his eldest brother, Mr. Armar Corry. It is with regret that I record the death of Mr. Armar Corry, who died on Saturday from congestion of the lungs. For some time the late Mr. Corry had been suffering from ill-health, and no doubt his weakened constitution rendered him an easier victim to this attack than he would have been otherwise, for he was a strongly-built man. The late Mr. Armar Corry was a very familiar figure in London and one of the best-known men about town. By his death many lose an amiable and hospitable friend, and more a cheerful companion. Mr. and Mrs. Corry were about to entertain a large party for shooting and for the forthcoming Inverness games.

The absence of the Prince of Wales from Doncaster, the recent death of the Duke of Portland's step-mother, the late Lady Bolsover; the Home Rule debate in the House of Lords, and other causes materially affected the success of the Doncaster Meeting last week. The heat upon the course appears to have been intense, whilst, if report is to be trusted, the losses were exceptionally severe. To add to the general discomfort, the reports of the riots, only some ten miles away, in connection with the coal strike, alarmed many, especially amongst the ladies.

The hurried visit paid on Saturday by Sir Henry Ponsonby, Private Secretary to the Queen, to Mr. Gladstone at Blackcraig Castle by her Majesty's commands, immediately after the division of the House of Lords upon the Home Rule Bill, has excited general curiosity. All kinds of guesses have been hazarded as to the object of this visit, but as yet the secret does not appear to have been solved. There can have been no question either of Mr. Gladstone resigning or of his dissolving Parliament, for the action of the House of Lords had been foreseen from the very first. In all probability the interview merely related to the then approaching discussion in the House of Commons upon the recent promotion of the Duke of Connaught, a matter with regard to which the Queen has naturally taken great interest.

Mr. Henry Le Poer Trench, the newly-appointed British Minister to Mexico, leaves England to-day (Wednesday), on board the Teutonic, to assume his duties at his new post.

The vacancy at Teheran caused by the death of the late Mr. Henry Cadogan will, in all likelihood, be filled up by the appointment of Mr. William Conyngham Green to this post. There is also some probability that Mr. Charles Conway Thornton, at present Second Secretary of Embassy at Berlin, will be appointed to succeed Mr. William Goschen as First Secretary of Legation at Lisbon.

By the way, it may possibly gratify Lord Rosebery to learn that his control over the Foreign Office has secured for him the greatest popularity throughout the Diplomatic Service. Lord Rosebery has, from the very first, taken personal interest in the welfare and the progress of those serving under him, and the contrast in this respect between him and Lord Salisbury has won for Lord Rosebery their extreme goodwill. Lord Salisbury ignored the majority of these, and promoted his protégés, utterly regardless of the claims of those who had been longer in the service, or who had done better work. He may have been a good Foreign Minister, but he was an uncommonly bad chief.

Many will regret to hear that M. Raymond Lecomte has been transferred from the French Embassy in London to Rome. M. Lecomte, who has acquired great popularity during his long stay in England, will leave for his new post shortly. It is only to be hoped that, like others who have gone before him, he will be returned to us again before very long.

The remains of the late Mrs. Rich, the wife of General George Rich and sister to Lady Erroll, who died at Homburg from a rapid attack of peritonitis on the second of the present month, were buried at Brompton Cemetery on Friday last. Her Majesty sent a white wreath as also a wreath of heather to be placed upon the grave. The late Mrs. Rich was a general favourite. Always sympathetic, always cheerful, and eminently unworldly, Mrs. Rich possessed an exceptionally large number of devoted friends, and to these the news of her death will come as a real sorrow.

Sir Roger Goldsworthy, K.C.M.G., Governor of the Falkland Islands, leaves England on the 15th instant to resume his official duties in that Colony.—Believe me to be, very truly yours, MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

THE result of the Leger was precisely in accordance with my expectations, as I have always maintained ever since the Derby that this race was merely a question of health for Isinglass, who, moreover, is now in very much better condition than he was at Epsom, as he has latterly been galloped on the turf, whereas in the spring it was necessary to keep him on the tan. It is lamentable that many worthy people should have been misled by the idiotic fairy tales about it being "all out" of Isinglass at Epsom, and how he would have come back to Ravensbury in another hundred yards, as he was stopping fast, and similar gibberish. The fact is that Isinglass has won all his races very easily indeed; but he is a lazy horse, and requires to be thoroughly roused and kept going, or he would make a close finish with a donkey. Isinglass has more than once appeared to be really "in trouble" when at some distance from home, but he is nevertheless always well to the fore at the finish.

Ravensbury is a most unlucky creature, for if Isinglass had never been foaled, or if (like Meddler) he had been disqualified for his engagements, then every one would now have been indulging in paroxysms of enthusiasm about the superlative merits of Mr. Rose's horse. Ravensbury's races had better be so arranged in the future that he will avoid any more encounters with Isinglass.

Phocion evidently was not suited by the course, for not only did he run very badly indeed in the Leger, but he made a miserable exhibition of himself on Thursday in the Scarborough Stakes. He appears to be decidedly deficient in stamina, and Lord Ellesmere would act wisely now to throw him up for the season, and keep him for Ascot next year, as a horse which has once run well over that course usually distinguishes himself there again.

The third place gained by Le Nicham does not seem to indicate a sufficient degree of merit to justify his being regarded as a good thing for the Cambridgeshire with 8 st. 1 lb., and I would certainly back Isinglass to beat him at 13 lb. Self Sacrifice, having won the Park Hill Stakes after her defeat in the Leger, is much fancied for the Cesarewitch, but I expect that it will turn out that the mare is really deficient in stamina, for she certainly ran like a non-stayer on Wednesday. It does not look like winning the Cesarewitch when an animal palpably stops to nothing for lack of stamina in the Leger, and is beaten by an acknowledged non-stayer like Baron Rothschild's horse for the place which she had been so heavily backed to gain. I suspect that Newcourt will turn out to be the best from Malton on October 10, and he is certainly very well in; but both the Newmarket handicaps had better be left alone entirely for some time to come.

One remarkable feature in the history of Isinglass is that his dam, Deadlock, was "weeded" by Lord Alington out of his stud for £19, she being regarded as practically worthless. Isinglass looks like a "chance" horse, seeing that his half-sister, by Satiety (Strike), has run several times this season without winning, and she is evidently very moderate. Mr. McCalmont has a half-sister to Isinglass, by Crafton, in his stud at Cheveley, which has a colt foal by Timothy. Deadlock died a few months ago, leaving a colt by Satiety.

It is a pity that the Stewards of the Doncaster Meeting did not express an opinion that the objection to Le Nicham ought to have been made before the race, and it would be a good thing if a rule was passed by the Jockey Club making it impossible for technical objections of this kind to be lodged after a race has been run, except in a case where fraud is alleged. The horse has been always entered in France as Le Nicham II., because there had been another animal of that name running there; but in England the numeral was dropped as being superfluous. It is certainly desirable that a horse should have precisely the same name in England as he has in any other country.

The ignominious collapse of the Champagne Stakes shows that it is high time for the conditions of that race to be revised. A winner of £1,000 should carry 9 lb. extra, and twice of £1,000, 12 lb.; while a winner of £500 should have a penalty of 6 lb. It is foolish and ridiculous in these days to have a stake of this kind in September with no penalties for previous winnings. When forfeit was declared early in June, forty-three animals were left in, on each of which an additional payment of £15 had to be made, and yet there were only two starters, because, obviously, owners did not care for their horses to meet the Illuminata colt and Sempronius at even weights. The Champagne Stakes was formerly the most important two-year-old race of the autumn, but the establishment of the Middle Park Plate deprived it of its old prestige, and the managers of the meeting have been content to puddle along with obsolete conditions in one respect, and with an absurdly inadequate pecuniary endowment. Let the sweepstakes be £50, £30 ft., with an entrance of £5 to be the only liability if declared by the first Tuesday in May. The added money should be increased to £1,000. Last week £500 was nominally given; but as the minor forfeit goes to the fund, the amount really contributed was only £285.

Lord Rosebery has named the Illuminata colt Ladas, after the first race-horse which he ever owned. The original Ladas cost a large sum when Lord Rosebery (who was then at Christ Church) purchased him, and he was fancied for the Derby of 1869, which was won by Pretender; but, so far as I remember, he never achieved any remarkable success on the turf.

The new Ladas won the Champagne Stakes very easily indeed, but Sempronius had evidently been indulged, for he seemed decidedly big. It is now quite certain that Bullingdon's running at Stockbridge must have been all wrong, and it is to be regretted that the Duke of Westminster's colt will not meet Ladas before the Derby. Ladas now seems tolerably sure to win the Middle Park Plate, unless St. Florian or Jack the Dandy turns out to be a flyer, nor is there anything to stop him in the Dewhurst Plate, unless we are then to have a resurrection of Galloping Dick in his Richmond Stakes form; but I do not fancy that Mr. Baird's uncertain beast could stay the course. Sempronius is not likely again to oppose Ladas as a two-year-old, but next season they will, of course, meet in the Two Thousand, all being well, as that race is the only important spring engagement of Mr. Baird's horse, who is not entered for the Derby; but he is in the Epsom Grand Prize and in the Prince of Wales's Stakes at Ascot.

After the Champagne Stakes running, the principal feature in the two-year-old racing was the collapse of Stowmarket and Wedding Bell in the Rous Plate, and the latter filly was very lucky in winning so rich a race as the New Stakes at Ascot—a piece of good fortune for which she was indebted, not to her own merits, but to the execrable temper of Galloping Dick. El Guacho, who beat the favourite cleverly, was mentioned by me after he ran at Newmarket in July as certain to win a good race when he was more forward in condition.

The form exhibited last week by Stirrup Cup was calculated considerably to exasperate the legion who fancied her for the Oaks, but who has enormously improved in appearance since Epsom, and is now quite a different mare altogether. It is rather surprising that Stirrup Cup was not kept for the Cambridgeshire, in which she seemed to be very well handicapped with 6 st. 9 lb., and she was still better in for the Duke of York Handicap, but she has been withdrawn from both races, the stable being represented in the Newmarket event by Simon Fraser.

After Ladas—longo intervallo—the best two-year-old which ran at Doncaster was Letterewe, who cantered away with the Tattersall Sale Stakes, and if she goes on all right she will win the Oaks, which is her only engagement next year except the Leger.

Prisoner's victory in the Doncaster Cup has made him a hot favourite for the Cesarewitch. He won with extreme ease on Friday, but I do not fancy that the form bears investigation, for Lady Rosebery was dreadfully handicapped by having to make her own running, and if there had been a strong pace throughout the result would probably have been very different. The fact of Simonian being second is quite enough to make one sceptical as to the form. A two-mile race run "from end to end" would be a first-rate Cesarewitch trial, but in the Doncaster Cup they merely cantered for quite a mile and a quarter, and it is all nonsense and rubbish for crack-brained people to be screeching that the Cesarewitch "is over." It will not surprise me if Lord Cadogan runs Prisoner for the Duke of York Handicap at Kempton Park, and if he won that race easily he might take his chance afterwards at Newmarket with 7 st. 7 lb.

Ascot is a two-year-old which was a great deal talked about in the spring, but I fancy that he then went wrong. Ascot, however, won a good trial at Newmarket the other day, and he must not be forgotten, for he is sure to carry off a race before long.

La Flèche has accepted for both the Cesarewitch and the Cambridgeshire, but no rational creature will think for a moment of backing her for either race, as, apart from her engagement at Manchester next week, she will probably be sent to France to start for the Prix du Conseil Municipal of £4,000 on October 8, in which case she is not likely to run at Newmarket.

The removals of Sir Hugo from the Cesarewitch and of Marcion from the Cambridgeshire were grievous blows to the speculative public; but even more calamitous was the altogether unexpected withdrawal of Ragimunde from the long race. He had been backed for a very great deal of money, and was a general fancy. I understand that Ragimunde did not accept, for the excellent reason that there is no chance of his standing a preparation for such a race, and he is another victim of the hard ground at Ascot. Ragimunde was decidedly well in, but I now very much doubt whether he would have won, even if he had been in his very best form.

I had expected that Orme would be withdrawn from the Cambridgeshire, but he seemed to be so very well in for the Duke of York Handicap that his non-acceptance makes me think that there is probably a screw loose with the Duke of Westminster's horse, for one cannot suppose that his owner is afraid to run him for any mile race whatever. Given Orme at the post fit and well, and I do not see how he was to be beaten at Kempton Park. Suspender (4 yrs., 9 st. 9 lb.) is now the top weight, but this horse is not likely to stand a preparation, and he has probably been left in the race to serve Haut Brion (3 yrs., 7 st. 5 lb.), who may possibly go for this race instead of waiting for the Cambridgeshire. Nobleman is remarkably well in for this race, and also for both the Newmarket Handicaps. Orvieto (5 yrs., 9 st. 6 lb.) would be near winning if the ground were hard, but it is more likely to be a swamp.

There will be racing next week at Leicester on two days, and at Manchester on the three following days. The sport at Leicester is not likely to be of any general interest now that the Royal Handicap has disappeared from the programme. It is very improbable that there will be large fields at Manchester, with the Newmarket October Meetings coming on so soon, and in this respect the Nurseries will most likely be the most successful events.

There is a large entry for the Breeders' Foal Stakes of

Why not cultivate your hair? Encourage it and strengthen it or, if your hair is grey or white, the natural colour can be restored by a few applications of Mrs. S. A. Allen's World's Hair Restorer.

£1,500, but I need not discuss it at any length, for the race seems almost certain to be won by Mr. D. Baird, who may run either Sainpoonins or St. Florian, and although the former will have considerably the worst of the weights with numbers, yet he certainly ought to win if he starts. If Mr. Baird prefers to rely upon St. Florian, then that colt should be successful if he is all right.

Nearly fifty horses are left in for the Lancashire Plate of £8,000 (one mile), but of these only La Flèche (10 st. 3 lb.), Isinglass (9 st. 11 lb.), Raeburn (9 st. 1 lb.), and Ladas (7 st. 7 lb.) appear to have any chance on public form. It is quite certain that three-fourths of the animals in the list must have been left in by mistake, notably Gouverneur, who has gone to the stud, and Lady Hermit, who would meet La Flèche at 3 lb., and she would have to give Isinglass 3 lb.! I mentioned last week that Lord Rosebery has very wisely decided to reserve Ladas for the Middle Park Plate instead of running the risk of ruining him by starting him for a mile race in which he would meet older horses of such high calibre as La Flèche and Isinglass. La Flèche has been kept for this race, which she won so easily last year, but although she is said to have "come on" considerably of late yet I expect that she will be beaten by Isinglass. It is believed that Raeburn is a smart horse over a mile, but I do not know that there are any conclusive reasons for thus regarding him. He ran badly in the Two Thousand, and in my opinion Isinglass would defeat him over any course without any trouble whatever. I shall give an unhesitating plumper for Isinglass.

MAMMON.

THE ROYAL NIGER COMPANY.

I AM not sorry to see that the French Government have entered a protest against certain proceedings of the Royal Niger Company. The little difficulty which has thus arisen may have the effect of attracting public attention in this country to the position and general conduct of this chartered body and of forcing the Foreign Office to keep a tighter hand over it. During the past week I have received several further communications on the subject. More than one of my correspondents give vent to their indignation at the continued apathy of the Foreign Office in the matter. The aggrieved parties had become resigned to the cynical indifference with which Lord Salisbury treated their complaints, but hoped that under his successor something might be done to check the excesses of the Chartered Company. The Foreign Office, however, maintains its old attitude. It professes to be in blissful ignorance, officially, of the misdeeds of the Company, and in this state of darkness it clearly prefers to remain. The other day the Under-Secretary was interrogated in Parliament respecting various charges which have been brought against the Company. It is alleged that natives have been summarily shot for attempting to cross the Company's territory. The reply was to the effect that there was no "definite evidence" in support of the charge. What the official idea of "definite evidence" may be I cannot say, but I should have thought that the evidence already given was quite sufficiently definite to justify some inquiry. Another question was whether the Company had not increased the export duty on palm kernels from 2d. per hundredweight to 2s. (1,100 per cent.), in order to prevent competition from Brass River merchants, and whether exports of palm-oil from that district had not, in consequence, dropped from 2,500 tons to 1,000 tons per year. The answer was an admission that the duty had been raised, but the Under-Secretary was "not aware" that the Company had any such motive, and he had "no information" as to the disastrous result to rival traders. In view of the spirit in which the Foreign Office meets all accusations against the Company, the Liverpool Daily Post has opportunely published the following extract from an agreement between the Company and one of its servants:—

> Mr. —— agrees that he will not, either during the currency of this agreement, or for a period of ten years after its determination, from any cause whatever, without the assent of the Company, communicate to the newspapers of Great Britain or other countries, or to any outside persons, official or private, any facts, whether commercial, industrial, scientific, or political, in connection with the business or administration of the Company, or the district occupied by the Company, or with those who shall have visited, or become acquainted with, it during his employment in the Company's service, and that he will not publish or distribute privately any pamphlet, book, or other paper disclosing any such facts, nor in any way knowingly induce any person or persons to carry on any occupation of profit within such districts.

For each and every breach of this clause £1,000 is to be forfeited, and it is provided that this sum shall be "by way of liquidated damages, and not by way of penalty," and "any such payment shall not prejudice the right of the Company to restrain a continuance of such breach." When the Company binds its own officials to secrecy in this extraordinary manner the difficulty of obtaining "definite evidence" as to what transpires within its territory must be apparent. Unfortunately the Foreign Office deliberately backs up the Company's policy of concealment. Four years ago, on the urgent representation of the West African merchants of Liverpool, Sir Claude Macdonald was sent out to investigate the charges made against the Company. In one memorial addressed to the Commissioners by the leading traders and residents of Lagos reference was made to "the gross atrocities which from time to time have been perpetrated by the Company's servants upon their negro employés," and attention was especially directed to the case of "the poor unfortunates who were recently disarmed, enclosed in a compound, and ruthlessly shot down in cold blood at Lokaja for no other reason than refusing to continue a dangerous journey in which they had already suffered the greatest privations, and which in all probability was contrary to the terms of their engagement." Sir Claude Macdonald's report upon his investigation has been persistently withheld on the ground that it is a confidential document. The report may, of course, be favourable to the Company, but its suppression has not unnaturally given rise to a belief that it is unfavourable. As it cannot be produced, my Liverpool contemporary suggests the appointment of a new Commissioner, whose report shall be public property. It appears to me that a strong case can be made out for such a step. From Sir Edward Grey's reply to Mr. Dodd in the House on Monday evening, it appears that there is no official in her Majesty's service resident in the territory under the control of the Company. In other words, the Government is entirely dependent upon the Company itself for all information regarding the administration of vast regions, estimated to cover 500,000 square miles and with a population of over 20,000,000. The irony of the Under-Secretary's statement that aggrieved British subjects should look "for advice or assistance" to the Company's officials will be appreciated by everybody familiar with the policy of the Company. What is needed is an impartial and searching inquiry both as to the dealings of the Company with the natives and its efforts to crush out the independent traders. One aspect of the question is pithily put in a letter which I have received from Mr. G. A. Moore, of Liverpool. "The grievances of which we complain," he writes, "can never be rectified so long as an arbitrary line is drawn across ancient trade routes and the natives are prevented from passing without conforming to impossible conditions, for it is hardly reasonable to expect a negro in aboriginal garb, with perhaps £2 or £3 worth of merchandise in his canoe, to be fully equipped with invoices, certificates of origin, &c., &c., as required by the minions of the Niger Government." Over and over again the Company has been charged with unscrupulously abusing the powers conferred upon it by the charter. Such an inquiry as that advocated would show whether it has or has not done so.

Family Washing Only. Collection and delivery twice daily. For families leaving Town, work delivered day following collection, and with three days' clear notice, household work collected and delivered prior to families arriving in Town. Under new management.—Belgrave Steam Laundry, 196, Ebury-st., Belgravia, S.W.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

My Dear Ben, Although a moderate reaction set in during the week, influenced chiefly by the temporary weakness of the Yankee market, a recovery has since made its appearance, and a considerable advance has been established for the week in prices nearly all round, the Mining department almost alone hanging fire, notwithstanding bumper crushings for August of the Witwatersrand Mines. With the intrinsic position improving in so marked a manner, however, the Kaffir Circus will, no doubt, soon revive again, especially as some of the magnates, who are now disporting themselves on the Continent, will shortly appear on the scene again.

The Position on the Stock Exchange.

Yankee Rails, of course, continue to strike the keynote of the position, and they have gone exactly the way which I expected them to go, advancing again sharply after a moderate and healthy reaction. The big operators on both sides of the Atlantic did their very best to help the downward movement in order to be able to pick up stock, but it is doubtful if they succeeded in laying hold of much, as the recovery came about very suddenly. My readers who took to heart my remarks of last week, will, however, have been able to buy at comparatively moderate prices on the relapse, and here I may as well once again point out how important it is to buy in the American market, not when it is booming, but when it is flat, and, if possible, on reactions. The latter will, of course, follow again on a further upward movement, but depend upon it, in the long run the tendency will be distinctly towards higher prices. I said a week ago that a strong improvement in the South American department was not far off, and the first advance has since been made under the lead of Argentine Government stocks. Prices are, however, still at a low level, and the opportunity is favourable for investment purchases. Home Rails have kept up remarkably well, considering the acute stage at which the coal strikes have arrived. The easier tendency of the money market tends, of course, to support quotations of Home securities, although, much to the disappointment of various sapient City editors, the Bank rate has remained at 5 per cent. I am sure that the Directors of the Bank of England were right in not making a reduction, and as it is even now difficult to gauge the extent of future American requirements of gold, apart from probable Indian borrowing, it seems a pity that rates in the open market have fallen away so completely that a reduction in the official minimum will hardly be avoidable this week. As to the immediate future of the Stock Markets, I say again that it depends upon the course of events in the States, but that is shaping itself very favourably, and confidence is thus gradually returning in financial circles at home and abroad. Under these circumstances, while I do not look for a boom, I yet anticipate greater activity and a general uplifting of prices of depreciated securities.

Home Rails.

The havoc which the continuance of the coal strikes is making in the traffics of the Heavy lines has not prevented a moderate recovery, especially in Midlands and North-Western, due, perhaps, chiefly to fears that stock may prove in short supply on the carry-over day. Holders, moreover, appear to be inclined to put up with the temporary reduction in dividends, which must result for the present half-year, even if the strikes were to terminate very soon, especially as so many industries are hampered by the dearth of fuel. The Board of Trade return was by no means unfavourable considering the weakening influence of the strikes, and it is, therefore, all the more to be regretted that the incipient improvement should thus have been stifled. The traffic decreases of the leading lines since July 1 now stand as follows:—Midland, £233,622; North-Western, £160,526; Great Western, £107,410; Great Northern, £73,033; North-Eastern, £7,223. The latter line has been spared heavy losses through the prudent decision of the Northumberland miners not to join the strike movement, and North Eastern at 153, with a chance of the same distribution as for the second half of 1892, viz., at the rate of 6¼ per cent. per annum, looks cheaper than North Western at 163, with the chance of a considerable inroad in the 1892 dividend at the rate of 7½ per cent., or Midlands at 142, with no chance of anything like last year's distribution of 6¾ per cent., or even Great Western at 153, which received 7 per cent. per annum for the second half of 1892, but cannot hope to retain this in view of the strikes, although the movement in South Wales is now all but ended. Caledonian Ordinary have improved 1¾, the Deferred Ordinary (Coras) 2¼ on the announcement of the maintenance of last year's dividend at the rate of 4 per cent., which was better than had been anticipated. This gives 1 per cent. to "Coras," which even at 33⅛ are not dear in view of future possibilities. It now remains to be seen how the North British dividend will turn out, and both the Preferred and Deferred have improved in the meantime about 1½ on hopes of a favourable result. There is a distinct disposition to buy low-priced stocks, such as North British Deferred, Coras, Saras (Sheffield Deferred), now standing at 24¾, and especially Metropolitan Districts, which have risen 1 to 25. All these stocks are much lower than they were last year, although prospects are comparatively better now, and there is every chance of an improvement as soon as the Stock Exchange generally revives. Brighton "A" have reacted but fractionally, notwithstanding another unfavourable traffic return. The comparison is henceforth with smaller traffics last year, and, if the decreases should still continue, the outlook would not be very bright. This is how the corresponding traffics of 1892 compare with 1891:—

	1892.	1891.
Week ending September 10...	... £55,514	... £56,756
,, ,, 17...	... 57,100	... 57,322
,, ,, 24...	... 53,915	... 54,523
,, October 1 ...	... 56,488	... 57,352
,, ,, 8 ...	... 48,471	... 49,294

The so-called London Bridge brigade appear to be still on the "Bear" tack, but there is a very considerable "Bear" account open now, and very little stock about, investors gradually clearing away the floating supply, as it still yields the best return in the Home Railway market, and even in the worst case—viz., on the basis of only 6¾ per cent. per annum—would yield about 4⅝ per cent., with all the prospects of improvement which the progressive Brighton Line undoubtedly possesses. To-day's price of 147 compares with 160 last year. Dover "A" relapsed temporarily, but are up again to 73, and may be expected to feel the effect of any revival in the markets generally at once. The decline in Great Eastern has not made any further progress, and little Chathams have been very steady.

Financial Position in the States.

The course of Yankee Rails during the past week has again been upwards, although interrupted by a temporary reaction due to the efforts of big operators to cause a setback in prices. They were assisted in their disinterested action by the obstructionist tactics adopted by the silver senators with respect to the Repeal Bill and by a variety of less important rumours, set about, apparently, for "Bear" purposes. But the reaction did not last long. Wall-street very soon turned a buyer again, and prices advanced sharply above the prices which ruled a week ago, and even above the prices of September 4, which I used for the purposes of comparison in my table of a week ago. The more immediate cause of the recovery was the emphatic declaration issued by President Cleveland and the Secretary of the Treasury that no compromise would be accepted, and that nothing but unconditional repeal would do, all other financial measures being postponed until repeal had been obtained. There are also other favourable features, such as the growing confidence and ease of money in the United States, and another favourable New York Bank statement. There is no doubt that, apart from the imports of gold from this side, the cessation of the hoarding of currency is now taking effect in Wall-street, in addition to which the purchases of American stocks for European account are beginning to tell. The first of the notices of withdrawal from the savings banks of New York expired in the past week, and although many had been cancelled beforehand, there remained naturally a certain nervous tension and anxiety until it was definitely known what depositors would do. Of course, the banks had fortified themselves, so as to be able to meet all demands without sacrificing any of their securities. They had also received new deposits, though, naturally, not so many as usual. Now, however, that the scare is over, the depositors do not want their deposits. The boot is, on the contrary, on the other leg, as the banks are availing themselves of the opportunity to get rid of undesirable depositors by refusing to take their money back. In fact, the Savings Banks are again in the market with investment purchases, and the large amount of cash which they have been holding against possible contingencies is now being released. A similar movement is going on elsewhere, and this is one of the chief reasons of the returning ease in the money market in the States. The money hoarded by private persons will also, no doubt, soon return to the old channels, and there is not really any question about there being enough money in the country, if it be only employed. One other result of the recent disturbance of money relations, I think, will be that the scope of banking methods will be broadened to take in a greater number of small transactions than formerly. The use of the bank cheque will be enlarged in the States generally, and some of the devices brought out to economise the use of money will be retained. Some will, in fact, be found to be so useful that they will stick, and ever after make the use of actual cash to a greater or less degree unnecessary. Thus it is reported that the Minneapolis millers and elevator-men had agreed to move the wheat crop by paying for the grain in cheques. The gold imported from London was also at first hoarded, and that was the reason why so little of the millions of gold coin imported since the crisis began had hitherto gone into the banks. In the first place, to put it there would have involved the loss of whatever premium gold coin commanded, and in the next, the importers in most cases wanted to use the gold as money themselves in transactions requiring the payment of currency, including wages. Where the importers did not need the gold coin for their own use, they sold it, either before or after arrival, for the sake of the premium, and the premium, which caused its importation, kept it out of the banks. Not, therefore, till the premium disappeared was it likely that much of this hoarded gold would be put into the banks as an ordinary deposit, and in the meantime it did service unobtrusively in supplying the wants of those who held it, and who were thus constituting themselves their own bankers. Thus the situation is improving in every direction, and there is now less fear of large gold shipments being required from Europe than there has been, unless President Cleveland's financial measures, which are to be adopted after the repeal has passed the Senate, should introduce fresh features.

Yankee Rails.

It may now be considered as certain that repeal will be carried, and well-informed people expect it to pass the Senate this week. Should this anticipation prove correct, very considerable activity will, no doubt, result in the market. Reactions must, of course, be looked for occasionally, but this is not a market in which operators can expect to make money on the "bear" tack, and the sooner the jobbers in the Yankee department realise this, the better will it be for them. There has been large buying during the past week for account of Continental investors, Amsterdam especially having been a strong purchaser. Country orders have also come forward; but the American public have yet to enter the market, and they will undoubtedly do so as soon as money gets more plentiful in the States. Atchison stocks have been conspicuously strong, and the shares have risen to 22, while the Second Mortgage "A" bonds, after a temporary reaction, are recovering again, a significant feature being a demand for these bonds for Boston. By the way, I have received several inquiries concerning the Atchison Guarantee Fund Six per Cent. Mortgage Notes, which I mentioned last week as obtainable at 95, and as yielding little short of 8 per cent. to the investor. How, my correspondents ask, is this yield obtained? Of course, by the profit on the redemption at 103 at the end of the five years. I may add that these Notes carry interest from May 1 to November 1, and that whoever buys them now would have to pay four months' interest to the seller—say, 2 per cent.—but would get the whole of the 3 per cent. dividend on November 1. An illustration of the improved credit which the Atchison now enjoys is that St. Louis and San Francisco Fours, which stood at 48 in Amsterdam a fortnight ago, have since risen to 58. In fact, from all I hear the Atchison Company will stand in an almost unique position before the year is out. It has provided for 5,000,000 dols. of its floating debt in Amsterdam, and for 2,000,000 dols. here, and is now financially quite safe, which cannot yet be said of all the other Yankee lines. The Milwaukee statement for the year ended June 30 last is satisfactory enough, as far as the net receipts go, and it is considered probable that the 2 per cent. half-yearly dividend will be duly announced on Thursday. The "Bear" attack which has just been executed on this side on the idea that the floating debt was too large, has failed signally, New York putting up the quotation all the more. Louisville shares are still hanging fire, a big block being every now and then offered from New York. Whether these sales are due to the marketing of shares by the Company, whether they are only intended to depress the rest of the market, or whether they are due to apprehensions of a reduction in the dividend I do not profess to know, but I consider that some official statement ought at once to be made by the Board. Traffics have, of course, shown large decreases, but mail advices from the States represent the conditions in the South as better than in the West. Failures south of Louisville have been comparatively few, and there has been no such widespread financial depression as in the West and North-west. Considering the shutting down of so many iron furnaces the Southern roads are doing fairly well, and with a fair cotton crop there does not seem to be any great anxiety to move it all at once. The conditions therefore seem proportionately more favourable to the roads in the South and South-west than those in any other section of the States just now. Further developments should, however, be carefully watched, and if I wanted to invest in Yankee Rails I should not do so in one particular stock, but I should spread my purchase over, say, New York Central, Lake Shores, Illinois Central, Milwaukees, Atchison "A" bonds, Louisville, Erie Second Mortgage bonds, Reading First Income bonds, and, amongst the low-priced stocks, over Reading shares, Erie shares, Central Pacifics, Atlantic Firsts, Norfolk Prefs., Ohios, &c. Another advance has taken place in Canadian Pacifics and Grand Trunks, as I expected, chiefly in sympathy with the Yankee market, and any further improvement in the latter will no doubt act as a support to these Canadian Railway stocks.

The South American Market.

The Continental Bourses have, on the whole, shown greater strength during the week, and a partial recovery has taken place in the various Foreign fancies, Spanish putting on as much as two points. Yet the financial position of these countries is by no means improved. Greeks are also better, although the gold premium in Athens, like that in Rome, refuses to be controlled. While it would be wise to give Old World securities a wide berth, it is more than probable that many of the leading South American securities will continue their upward course, the level of prices being still very moderate. The Argentine position is, as I explained last week, distinctly better, and the rise of some 3 points which has taken place in the Funding and 1886 Loans appears to be fully justified. Cable advices from Buenos Ayres state that Congress has at present the Budget, including the settlement of the National Debt before it, and that an arrangement concerning the Railway guarantees is also being negotiated. It is probable that in the case of the arrears of the guarantees, which amount to some £700,000, a further issue of Funding bonds will exceptionally be made, as it would be manifestly impossible to pay this sum in cash. The payment in Funding bonds would entail a charge of only some £35,000 per annum, and could, therefore, easily be accomplished. Then, as to the question of the settlement of the guarantees for the future, it is probable that the Argentine Government will offer, against a reduction in the amount, to give the Companies a free hand with the tariffs, and it is hoped that some arrangement will be come to which will, by settling once for all the doubtful points, and by ensuring punctual payments, prove of great advantage to the Companies. An improvement has already taken place in some of the guaranteed stocks, but these are still very cheap, and should be picked up, especially Cordoba Central (Central Northern Section) Five per Cent. Debenture stock, now standing at 35. Amongst the non-guaranteed stocks, Central Argentine Ordinary are again better at 57, and there has also been an improvement in Buenos Ayres, Great Southern, Western, and Rosario. I am glad to see that the absurd composition offered to the holders of Cordova Provincial bonds has been refused by these, and I really am surprised that Messrs. Morton, Rose, & Co., the issuing house, were not ashamed to submit it. I hope that not a single bondholder will accept the disgraceful proposal of this dishonest Province, in which case better terms will no doubt eventually be obtained. Chilians have also hardened, although the Valparaiso exchange moves but slowly up, and indulges in occasional relapses. Guatemala and Costa Rica bonds have advanced, as there seems to be little or no doubt about the payment of the next coupons. The cheapest amongst these are Costa Rica "B" at 44. Mexican Sixes have risen 2, to 58, and a semi-official announcement is made that the financial conditions of Mexico are far better than had been supposed, and that a sum of from £500,000 to £600,000 was untouched to the account of Mexico in the bonds of the name of Bleichroeder, apart from the full amount of the next coupon, which is in the hands of the Banco Nacional. If this be so, it may fairly be asked why Messrs. Bleichroeder have, some time ago, given currency to such extremely unfavourable views? Peruvian Corporation stocks have advanced on an increase in the railway traffics, but the Six per Cent. Debentures at 66, which are quite sure of their next coupon, are undoubtedly cheap, as are the Prefs. at 22, as a speculative stock. The one dark spot on the South American horizon is Brazil, where political ferment has caused a revolt in the fleet. Although I never had any doubt in the matter, I am glad to see the announcement that the funds for the payment of the Coupon due October 1 next on the bonds of the City of Mexico Five per Cent. Sterling Loan of 1889 have been punctually remitted by the Municipality and received by the Trustees and Executors Corporation in the usual course. These bonds have risen 5 per cent. during the week.

Ulsters, Overcoats, and Capes are kept ready for immediate use at Ulster House, Conduit-street, W.

The Kaffir Circus.

The South African department is, curiously enough, the one market which has not felt the stimulating influence of the marked advance in American Railroad stocks. This was, perhaps, again due in part to a fresh set-back in Chartered British of South Africa shares, which dropped again temporarily to 18s. on the alarming news from Matabeleland which is causing Mr. Cecil Rhodes to hurry to the front. Things do not look well for his favourite Chartered Company, especially since the President of the Transvaal has forbidden the Boers to join in the fray. It will be an expensive job to import fighting men from Europe, and the Chartered Company's funds are low as it is. In the current issue of the Johannesburg Standard I find some very appropriate remarks upon the conduct of the Chartered officials. My contemporary objects very much to the disposition which is shown to underrate the danger which has been provoked. Had ordinary wisdom been shown the Standard thinks that the present difficulty would not have arisen, Lobengula having strictly commanded his warriors not to molest the white men upon any account. This is how my Johannesburg contemporary winds up:—

> And here, also, it may be said, we find in the case for the defence already expressed that a formal command to quit must have been submitted for your consent. Matabele, they must have told them to their King, to be peaceably, and in all probability there would have been no strife, no painful predicament for the feeble whites, but enclosed, with 7,000 of the Empire continent marching down upon them; and the great Chartered undertaking might have been carried to a successful issue without strife of any kind and by the peaceful process of time and persuasion. But your Chartered official and your Chartered shareholder have become impatient with the peaceful process, and now desire that the Colonial youth and Imperial Red jackets shall supply an impetus towards realisation of that yellow tinted dream of plunder that fills the imagination of the Imperial shareholder. Accordingly he courts a crisis, and asks the Imperial taxpayer to die that that crisis may be controlled, and that he may have dividends. It is a pretty programme, but South Africa is bound to spoil it.

The outlook for the Chartered exchequer is, in the meantime, very gloomy, for even if the trouble be avoided for the moment, it will have to be faced at no distant date. But what I cannot understand is that the weakness of these shares should still extend to the market for Transvaal Mining and Land shares, which have absolutely nothing in common with Mashonaland, while President Kruger has now even gone so far as to decree the strictest non-interference. Why should Randt shares be weak because the Chartered Company pick a quarrel with Lobengula? Look at the excellent work which is at present being done in the Witwatersrandt Mines, the total crushings of which during the month of August have reached 136,069 oz., beating the record (July, 126,169 oz.) by 10,000 oz. When some years ago prices were unduly inflated, I had occasion to sound a serious warning. Then came the inevitable collapse which proved a blessing in disguise, as instead of the mere starting and working of mines for the public to sink its money in, and of rigging the market in order to foist the shares upon the investor, systematic and honest work was undertaken with the object of obtaining regular and increasing returns. Crushings have increased steadily, the reef has been proved at depth, the McArthur-Forrest process is being applied to the tailings, thus increasing the productive power of the mines very largely, yet prices are at comparatively a low level. Time was when Durban Roodepoort shares stood at 11; they are now down to 4¾. Crown Reefs were quoted at 10½, against their present price of 7; Ferreira, 25¾, against present price of 7½; Jubilee, 10½, against present price of 6⅝; Jumpers, 20⅜, against present price of 2¼; Meyer & Charlton, 14, again present price of 5¾; Simmer & Jack, 11⅜, against present price of 3¾, &c. All these mines are now paying large dividends, and yield a handsome return on present prices. Investors should therefore take time by the forelock and buy while the present level of prices prevails, instead of finally rushing in when quotations have advanced two or three points. Some of the crushings call for special reference. The Geldenhuis has had an excellent crushing of 5,105 oz. of gold in August, with a profit of £9,400, against 3,998 oz. and £6,400 profit in July. An interim dividend of 15 per cent. is also declared. The Salisbury crushing in August yielded 2,409 oz., against 2,100 oz. in July, the Nigel obtaining 4,556 oz. in August, against 4,072 oz. in July. The Glencairn obtained 2,111 oz. in August, with fifty stamps running twenty-nine days, but the September output is expected to show a considerable increase. Dealings have taken place in South Simmer and Jack at from 1 to 1⅛. Estimates from Johannesberg foreshadow a total output for the current year of 1,500,000 oz., which would be an advance of 25 per cent. on 1892, while that year showed an advance of 66 per cent. over 1891. Afrikander shares have again been dealt in at 1⅜, but a sharp rise is expected shortly in view of the growing output. It is also stated that the mine looks very well at the fourth level. Oceana and Oceana Development shares have been firm, and may at any moment take a jump. A crushing of the Silati River Gold Mining Company, from August 14 to August 31, of 220 tons for 452 oz. of gold was most satisfactory. De Beers Diamond shares have improved, but New Jagersfontein are dull.

China and Glass. — Messrs. Goode, Artists and Designers solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

INDIAN, AMERICAN, AND AUSTRALIAN MINES.

The speculation in Mysore Reefs has been overdone, and, after a further rise, they are back again at 9s. With regard to Mysore Gold, which are easier, the falling off in the output in the past month was foreshadowed in the fortnightly reports, which stated that the quartz had become poorer. The value of the Reef fluctuates, but the manager looks forward to the stone being richer again a short time hence. In the meantime, the Ooregum is to the fore, with an output of 6,512 oz. for August. Amongst American Mines, Colombian Hydraulics are 2s. 6d. higher, and St. John Del Rey have recovered slightly. The decease of Mr. John Hockin, who has, as Chairman and Managing Director, been connected with this Mine for forty years, means, of course, a serious loss to this Company. The Palmarejo Mine appears to be in an unpleasant position, and it may be hoped that the shareholders' committee will find a way out of it. Don Pedro have improved, but Tolima are down, notwithstanding a satisfactory return. The following cablegram has been received at the office of the Springdale Gold Mining Company from Denver, Colorado:—"We are making rapid progress, expect shipments will commence about September 20." This, of course, means that shipments of ore are about to be made to the reduction works, and that, consequently, the Company will be in early receipt of returns. The shares are firmer at 3s. 3d. to 3s. 9d. The following letter, which has been received from the Secretary of the Caratal Mining Company, fully confirms my previous remarks with regard to the general value of this property:—

57, Moorgate-street, September 11, 1893.

I am instructed to inform you that a very exhaustive report upon the tailings and mine was received from Mr. Skertchly by the last mail, confirming his cable advices. After testing the tailings by upwards of 300 assays he recommends their treatment by cyanide, and the Directors are now in communication with him by cable to ascertain if he will undertake the superintendence of this and be prepared to commence immediately. He has no doubt as to the richness and value of the mine, and thinks it can be worked simultaneously with the tailings.

Dealings in Australian mines remain restricted, and there are few upward movements. Broken Hill Proprietary are the turn lower, although there is no fresh development. Amongst Queensland mines, Bonnie Dundee are firmer. Prospects of the Brilliant Gold Mine are improving, as better ore has been reached in the lower levels. The Cravens Caledonia is doing well, and there is every prospect of the 3d. dividends continuing.

WIDOWS' FINANCE.

I referred last week to offers which had been received by some of my correspondents of ten Founders' shares (£10, fully paid) in the Alliance Financial Corporation, Limited, at £10. 10s., from Mr. H. Norman Wilson, of 30, Regent's Park-road, N.W., and Mrs. A. Stampe, of 7, Lambourne-road, Clapham, S.W. I have now received from two other correspondents letters with which they have been favoured by a Mrs. A. Gordon Edwardes, also of 30, Regent's Park-road, which, curiously enough, are exactly identical with the letter indited by Mrs. Stampe, the only difference being in the address and signature. The following are copies of the epistles of the two widows:—

MRS. STAMPE'S LETTER.

7, Lambourne-road,
Clapham, S.W.
August 25, 1893.

DEAR SIR,—In consequence of the unfortunate death of my husband three months since, I am compelled to dispose of my ten Founders' shares in the Alliance Financial Company. They are £10-shares, fully paid up. I bought them some twelve months ago, paying £130 for them. My husband not having made proper provision for me, I am forced to sell these shares. Dividends of 30 and 35 per cent. were paid on these shares for the last two years. As I am in urgent need of the money, I would accept £115 for the whole of them to realise quickly, having some pressing liabilities to meet. The Secretary of the Company, at 19 and 21, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C., would forward you any further particulars you might require. I am informed that these shares are worth about £20 each, but the difficulty is to find a private purchaser just at the present time. To those who have the money available, this would prove an excellent investment. The favour of a reply by return will greatly oblige.—Yours truly,

A. STAMPE.

P.S.—A friend gave me your name, in confidence, as an investor.

MRS. EDWARDES' LETTER.

Avondale,
30, Regent's Park-road, N.W.
September 5, 1893.

DEAR SIR,—In consequence of the unfortunate death of my husband, three months ago, I am compelled to dispose of my twelve Founders' shares in the Alliance Financial Company, Limited. They are £10 shares, fully paid up. I bought them about twelve months ago, paying £150 for them. My husband not having made proper provision for me, I am forced to sell these shares. Dividends of 30 and 35 per cent. were paid on these shares for the last two years. As I am in urgent need of the money, I would accept £125 for the whole of them to realise quickly, having some pressing liabilities to meet. The Secretary of the Company, 19 and 21, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., would forward you any further particulars you might require. I am informed that these shares are worth £20 each, but the difficulty is to find a private purchaser just at present. To those who have the money available, this would prove an excellent investment. The favour of a reply by return will greatly oblige.—Yours truly,

A. GORDON EDWARDES.

P.S.—A friend gave me your name in confidence as an investor.

It is, indeed, a strange coincidence that there should exist two widows who lost their husbands three months ago and who are compelled to dispose of ten or twelve Founders' shares respectively in the Alliance Financial Corporation. I asked last week if Mr. H. Norman Wilson, who also offered ten of these shares, knew Mrs. Stampe. I now ask if Mrs. Stampe knows Mrs. Gordon Edwardes, and I am more than curious to know what may be the real value of Alliance Financial Corporation Founders' shares.

MY LETTER BOX.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

GOVERNMENT, &c., BONDS.

Z. X. Y.—Yes, the funds for the payment of the October coupon of the City of Mexico bonds have been remitted, and its payment will, as usual, be advised in the middle of September. Camberley.—No, I do not advise purchase of these bonds, least of all the Lottery bonds. The return is very small. Delta.—I cannot undertake to reply by letter, and I do not accept any fee. I thought my remark would sufficiently explain itself. The late Governor of Entre Rios stated some time ago that it would be impossible for the Province to resume cash payments at the end of the Funding arrangement. This throws a doubt upon the whole settlement, and that is why I advised you to defer a further purchase; but if you like to run the risk, you can, of course, buy at once. Matters in Argentina are looking up, and there seems to be a more honest spirit abroad. Beta.—You have too large a proportion of New South Wales stock amongst your Colonial investments. I consider New Zealand and Queensland the best Australian stocks. The rest of the Colonial investments are all right. I do not like Australian Land Companies. The Canadian Pacific Land Grant bonds are first rate, and so are, of course, Great Western Prefs. There is no fault to find with the Rupee investment or the Chilian Railway Debenture stock, and Argentine Great Western are, I think, on the eve of a marked improvement, in common with other Argentine guaranteed railways.

BANKS, TRUSTS, AND FINANCIAL.

T. L.—Although the authorised capital is £1,000,000, only £139,420 has been subscribed, and £69,710 or £5 per share called up. This should, under ordinary circumstances, be sufficient to make a start, but I cannot see how the Company can prove remunerative. You should, of course, insist upon obtaining a policy. H. S., Fraserburgh.—I cannot reply by letter. If you run a speculative account, you are answerable for the differences, and I should be the last to encourage the repudiation of justly

"TRUTH" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for the Continent, America, and the Colonies (India and China excepted) is 3 months, 7s. 7d.; 6 months, 15s. 2d.; 12 months, £1. 10s. 4d.; and to India and China, 3 months, 8s. 2d.; 6 months, 16s. 4d.; and 12 months, £1. 12s. 6d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the MANAGER, "Truth" Buildings, Carrier-street, S.W.

incurred debts. Dishonest speculators plead the Gambling Act, but even then success is very doubtful. The question is, of course, if the amount is pretty safe. Scotsman.—No, I do not consider the outside firm named reliable. You should deal with a member of the Stock Exchange. Verax.—I have a very poor opinion of the scope of this Insurance Company, and should advise you to sell the shares if you can. T. J. O.—Depend upon it, whatever money you stake with outside brokers of this sort, will, in the long run, not come back to you. At the same time the firm in question meets, at present, all its engagements. B. C. D.—The fall appears to be due to some inside selling, but I have not been able to ascertain the reason. Green Boys.—I should say that such a call is not likely at present, but the Company's last circular gave information on this point. Should business generally improve these shares will no doubt recover. B. B.—After the heavy fall the Trust stocks, Nos. 1 to 5, had better be held, as there seems to be a fair chance of a recovery. B. H. S., County Cork.—I do not reply by letter. I advise you not to deal with the concern in question. Blast Furnace.—I do not like the system of these people, and should advise you to give them a wide berth. J. S.—I have already expressed my view of the syndicates of Harvey, Macdonald, & Co, of Dublin. Have nothing to do with them. Stone Bro.—1. I cannot advise you about the investment of the £1,200 Trust money before knowing the terms of the Trust. 2. Yes, you had better hold after the heavy fall. 3. You might buy a few Afrikander Gold, Caistal Gold, and South Simmer and Jack Gold Mining shares for the little speculation you intend to enter into. S. S. G. M.—You do not give the broker's full address. A member of the Stock Exchange of this name has offices in that street, but if the firm deals in syndicates, it must be an outside concern, to which you should give a wide berth. You should send me their circular.

Home Rails.

T. O.—I really could not undertake to say that the time to buy low-priced Railway stocks has come, but I think that some revival will take place before the end of the year. Dora.—Dover "A" are cheap at the reduction, but, unless traffics improve, there will be no sustained upward movement in Brighton "A," but there is a large "bear" account, which may cause a sharp, if temporary, rise.

American and Foreign Rails.

Clancy, Cork.—The Goschen stamp having been charged to you, you should insist that it be affixed by your broker. J. J.—You had better hold your Denvers, they will improve again in the long run, and it is doubtful whether you would get in lower again if you should sell now. J. H.—Certainly hold your Denver Four per Cent. First Mortgage bonds after the sharp fall, the interest is safe. P. A. M.—1. I should not advise you, in case you want to make the investment, to buy only one particular stock, but to spread it over, say, Louisville, Milwaukee, Atchison Second Mortgage "A" bonds, &c. Nothing has transpired concerning any sale of Louisville shares by the Company, but you will have seen that I asked the question last week. 2. The day of declaration of the Milwaukee dividend is September 14, but I cannot predict if it will be paid or not. 3. Impossible to say. Highfield.—Respecting Nitrate Rails there is a great deal of irresponsible talk. I do not attribute much importance to the other concessions, and I should hold. Thanks for your remark. S. I. H.—You should hold your Erie Second Mortgage bonds. There may be some rearrangement, but the bonds should recover again. F. H.—The Harbour bonds and Debentures are fair investments, but no catch. I should prefer sound United States Railroad bonds. C. R., Uppingham.—1 and 2. Hold your Louisville, but spread your further investment purchase over Milwaukees and Atchison Second Mortgage "A" bonds. 3. No; I should say that you had better await the course of affairs in Mexico, which depends so largely upon the future of silver. J. N., Plymouth.—There is no reason why you should not buy on the present reaction Louisville, Reading Fours, and First Incomes. Austin.—Mobile and Birmingham bonds should be held now, as the general position is improving. Old Salt.—1. Rumours of a falling off in the dividend and of competition from new concessions have been about, but there seems to be little in them. Yes, the Mortgage bonds are a very fair investment. 2. You should keep the Nigel shares. 3. No reason to sell Mysore Gold shares. See remarks in to-day's letter. A. M. C.—You have too heavy a stake in Canadian Railway stocks, and should take an opportunity to reduce this—not now, however, as they are on the up grade. This applies to Nos. 6, 7, and 9. No. 4 was a very bad investment; I have always warned my readers of these small Canadian lines. Hold Nos. 1 (it is a pity you did not sell when I advised this) and 2 for a recovery. I cannot advise a sale of No. 3 now. No. 8 is a first-class bond. I do not like Australian Land Companies, and should advise you to get out of No. 10 when an opportunity offers. No reason to sell Nos. 11 or 13 now. You must take your own decision about Colliery property like No. 12, but it would, no doubt, be a bad time to sell now.

Mining Shares.

Cromer.—Both the Mines mentioned are promising; in fact, you cannot go far wrong in buying sound Witwatersrand Mines at present price, although coming Mines, like Afrikander, Buffelsdoorn, or South Simmer and Jack might be a better purchase. See under "The Kaffir Circus." Scotus.—Hold your Mozambique Land shares, but do not buy more to average until I tell you to do so. W. E.—Prospects of the Silati River Gold Mine are decidedly encouraging, in view of the crushing for August, reference to which is made under "The Kaffir Circus." Hard Hit.—The consolidation of the North East Rand Gold Mining Company is highly desirable, and the collapse, after all the puffing, still stranger. I have never recommended the concern, and I quite agree with you that the position and management should be investigated by the shareholders. Ira L.—You have been quite right to buy Caistals, and you should keep them. The position of Broken Hill Proprietary is not unpromising, but all must, of course, depend upon the price of silver in the future. I should say that the Queensland Mines will recover again. E. K.—The position of both these low-priced Mining shares is promising, but I should prefer Caistals to the others. Twice Sold.—All the shares mentioned by you are a promising position and should be held for a recovery. The engineer referred to is the same. Poormans are a fair speculation for a small amount. Although the Trust undertaking mentioned by you has weathered recent troubles very satisfactorily, I do not recommend the investment. Midland, Derby.—A reply to you was inserted at the time. These Mining shares should be held as some better development are on the cards. The matter is now pending. You may rest assured that I am watching it very carefully. Gloster A.—Yes; the brokerage on the New York Central is far too heavy. Certainly hold the mining shares, B, C, and D. Whenever the next revival comes, they will advance. I have so frequently expressed my views on British Chartered shares (E) and the Allied stocks (F), that I am surprised you have not sold out when they were at much higher prices. D. C. D.—The annual report of the African Gold Recovery Company is about to be issued, and will give you the information you require. Stanhopes are a fair purchase, but no catch. Zouts.—1. The shares should be held, as they are certain of a recovery. What you refer to is absurd talk. 2. Both the Companies referred to have been reconstructed, and are supposed to be doing well. There is, unfortunately, nothing for it but to await results. 3. This Company has been grossly mismanaged, and is in liquidation. Yet the undertaking in itself was good, and the process valuable. M. T., Ryde.—If I were a holder of St. John del Rey, I should not sell at present, but I should not buy more. E. S., Leeds.—The Tesoro Mine seems to be in a hopeless condition. In many quarters the Loma Mine is thought to be valuable, but the Company's funds will soon be exhausted. M. K. V.—The address of the New Moss Rose Company is at 1, Crosby-square, E.C.

Industrial Companies.

Lucas.—I am not very keen as to advising investment in Australian Industrial investments yet, but the two stocks named are substantial and cheap. Willesden.—I am afraid the outlook for the shareholders in Sykes' Brewery Company, Limited, is very bad; but I have always warned my readers of this concern. The liquidators, Messrs. L. H. Elkington & Co., Birmingham, should, however, be able to give you fuller information. Militia.—If you place money into Industrial stocks you must, of course, run the risk of further declines through the trade depression. Of the seven investments mentioned, I do not like No. 1, as its occupation seems to be going, nor No. 5. The rest are fair value at the price. R. J. P., Paisley—These Oil shares are not dealt in on the London Stock Exchange, and I am sorry not to be able to advise you. In the Dark.—You should write to the assistant-secretary at 100, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., for information. I must confess that I do not like the concern much, and I do not think that it was well subscribed for here.

Mixed Investments.

Mac.—If you must sell, you had better realise A, but, if possible, keep both, as they will recover. City of Mexico bonds (B) are a good investment, and the October coupon will be paid. L. P. C.—1. The Union Bank of Australia is one of the best Australian Banks, and has safely passed through the crisis. 2. Why have you disregarded my repeated warning about these American Mortgage Companies, which I emphatically repeated last week? Now it is the turn of the Jarvis-Conklin Mortgage Trust Company to make default in interest payments. 3. Western of Buenos Ayres Five per Cent. Debentures are an excellent investment. Ink-pot.—The French Company is said to be doing well, and the shares will probably obtain a return in time. Hold African Gold Recovery shares. The position is excellent, and no other process has the ghost of a chance in South Africa. See remarks under "The Kaffir Circus." June.—No, policy-holders have no liability. Yes, Transvaal Government Five per Cent. bonds (1) are a good investment. The bonds Nos. 2 and 3 are all right, but No. 3 is not exactly a catch. Nos. 5 and 6 are good bonds, and the Insurance Company No. 7 is one of the wealthiest American offices. Revisesco.—1. The reason of the depression of Nitrate rails was chiefly the spreading of rumours concerning rival concessions, which are not, however, considered to be of any importance. 2. Yes, Mexican Central Four per Cent. Gold bonds are advancing again. 3. Yes, quite safe. 4. No reason to sell Mysore now. See remarks under "Indian, American, and Australian Mines." 5. The outlook for the Northern Pacific Company is more favourable. You must have patience. 6. Yes, hold. 7. Hold these also; prospects are by no means bad. 8. Hold, they will improve. No reason to sell Nos. 9 and 10 now.

To Overcome Weakness.—Pepper's Quinine and Iron Tonic gives New Life, Appetite, Health, Strength, Energy. Cures Neuralgia, Indigestion, Nerve Debility. Pepper's Tonic. Kepteverywhere.

Various Investments.

Rupee paper has hardened again to 66 on the impression that something will be done by the Indian Government to raise the value of the rupee, and a loan is again being talked of. Silver has recovered to 34½d., notwithstanding the certainty that the Repeal Bill will be passed in the United States Senate, and it now remains to be seen if the actual fact that the purchases of silver are discontinued by the United States Government will affect the value of the white metal. The "Bear" squeeze in Mexican rails made further progress on the receipt of a satisfactory traffic return, but prices are now below the highest. The chief dealings are in the First Prefs., which are quoted 67½, and in these alone an active market can be looked for. Mr. Mackusick's Second Prefs. are a dead market at 40, which is, by the way, a great deal too high for them. In a prospectus recently issued by the National Investment and Guarantee Corporation, Limited, of Broad-street House, Old Broad-street, E.C., offering £500,000 Six per Cent. First Mortgage Debentures at 97½ per cent., the statement is made prominently in red ink that, "These debentures form an exceptionally safe security, inasmuch as they are absolutely guaranteed as to payment of the principal by the Norwich Union Life Insurance Society." One of my correspondents thereupon applied to that society for information, and received the following reply:—

> Referring to your reply, I beg to say that the reference to us in the recently-issued Debenture Prospectus of this Corporation is entirely unauthorised as well as misleading, as we had merely been in correspondence as to terms, &c., for a capital redemption insurance, and their proposal to effect one had not even been before the Board. Their suggestion throughout the prospectus is that we "are guaranteeing the Debentures, and consequently are in some way mixed up with the undertaking and responsible for it. I need hardly say that we do not transact "guarantee business," and could not have given the "unconditional guarantee" which was suggested. We have insisted on the withdrawal of the prospectus, and the issue to every one who has received a copy of a circular fully explaining the matter.

The whole matter has an ugly look, and it is strange that such a statement should ever have appeared in the prospectus. Being a suggestio falsi, it, of course, invalidates the prospectus, and every subscriber would have the right to withdraw his application. That is what I should do at once had I applied for these Debentures. A slight recovery has taken place in American Brewery shares, on orders from Chicago, which seems to regain some of its purchasing power. The Denver United Brewery announces a dividend at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum for the half-year ended June 30, with a large carry forward. The following communication touches a point of Company law, which undoubtedly requires the serious consideration of our legislators:—

> Can nothing be done to alter the Companies Act, so that the Public Prosecutor or some Government Official might be appointed to investigate the conduct of Directors of ruined Companies? Directors, so soon as they have made away with the capital of their fellow shareholders, have a facility for slipping out of harness and vanishing without a stain on their character or respectability, leaving a liquidator to sell the skin and pick the bones of the carcase so long as anything remains to remunerate him. By the way, do liquidators ever have to render an account of their intromissions? I should imagine not, for I am reminded of the Dry Dock Corporation of London, Limited, which was started in January, 1886, and when the capital was all called up it was placed in the hands of a liquidator the same year, and although seven years have elapsed, the unfortunate shareholders have never been favoured with any information as to what became of their capital. Possibly the liquidator, in deference to the feelings of the Directors, is waiting till they are all defunct and buried in docks along with the shareholders' funds.—Yours respectfully, Scotus.
>
> September 6, 1893.

The above is one of many inquiries which I have recently received respecting the unfortunate Dry Dock Corporation of London, Limited. Will the liquidator himself state how the liquidation has proceeded?—Your affectionate uncle, MOSES.

Minton's (Limited). Minton's China.—A visit to Messrs. Mortlock's extensive collection in Oxford-st. and Orchard-st. will conclusively prove the superiority of taste and lowness of price for which this house has been so celebrated during the last century.

All Rights Reserved.]

QUEER STORY;

THE MUGGLETON LAWN TENNIS TOURNAMENT.

"WELL, Pushington, what do you think of the news? Have you ever seen or heard of this fellow Smasher before?"

"No, Gus, I have never seen him play. I have seen his name in the papers once or twice, but that is all I know of him. I never thought of him for a moment as likely to give us all such a surprise as this."

"Well, I am jolly glad he has done it. It does these chaps who have had it all their own way for so long no end of good to have the conceit taken out of them at last."

This conversation took place on the day after that exciting day at Wimbledon, so memorable to all interested in lawn tennis, when the mighty champion of six years' standing had been thoroughly and fairly beaten by a youthful and comparatively unknown player, after a long and exciting struggle. Full reports had, of course, appeared in the papers, and the news had just reached the remote country town of Muggleton, whose inhabitants, or, at any rate, whose tennis players, are quite as much, if not more, excited the day after the event than those thousands who witnessed the struggle on the All England Championship Court at Wimbledon.

Arthur Pushington was the Secretary of the Lawn Tennis Club at Muggleton, and Augustus Howisthat was the Muggleton champion. Everybody agrees that it is entirely owing to the indomitable energy of Mr Pushington that the Muggleton Lawn Tennis Club is as successful as it is—and if there is one thing Muggleton prides itself on, it is its tennis club. The club has its enemies, of course, like everything truly great, whether an institution or an individual; enemies such as the clubs of the neighbouring towns and villages round about, which cannot produce a player who comes within challenging distance of the Muggleton champion. The members of these ill-natured clubs may talk as they like and say that the reason for the pre-eminence of the Muggletonians in tennis is owing to there being nothing else for the inhabitants to do, and that if it were not for the annual lawn tennis tournament held there the Muggletonians would never be more than half awake. But no one heeds malevolent slanders of this character, and each member of the Muggleton club, and especially the Honorary Secretary himself, thinks he is engaged in promoting the interests of and raising the standard of play in the great national game.

For some years past, Muggleton has annually held a grand tennis tournament, open to all amateur lawn tennis players, with special events for local players; but, up to the time of our story, the entries for the open and district events had been wofully similar. In spite of circulars and programmes being sent yearly to all the known players in the world, it is a remarkable fact that none of the illustrious cracks had ever thought it worth their while to compete with Mr. Howisthat for the Diamond Championship Badge, presented to the Muggleton Tennis Club by Sir Henry Portliman, M.P., the Squire of Portly Hall.

"My dearest Bertha, have you heard the news?"

The questioner was Miss Amelia Jones, who had dashed breathless and excited, into her friend Miss Marshall's drawing-room, some few weeks after the Wimbledon meeting.

"The news, my dear? What news?" asked Miss Marshall.

"About the new champion."

"Do you mean Smasher, the All-England champion Of course, I know he won the match at Wimbledon."

"Yes; but do you know he has entered for the tournament—our tournament—at Muggleton? They are holding a Committee meeting now. Get on your things, my dear, and let us go. I am longing to hear all about it."

Such a temptation was not to be resisted, and Miss Marshall was not long in arranging her outdoor costume nd the two young ladies hurried to the ground, just in time o hear the Secretary read the champion's letter for the wentieth time. It ran :—

I have heard often of your Open Tournament, and of the dmirable way in which it is managed. [Pushington coughed ightly here.] I shall be in your neighbourhood at the time for hich your meeting is advertised, and should esteem it a favour if ou would enter me for all the open events, and find me partners r the doubles. Would you mind letting me know about the otels? Which is the best to put up at?

It was unanimously agreed that this was the most elightful letter ever written, and there are some who say hat when the letter was passed round for inspection, Miss Jones furtively raised it to her lips; but she was lways impulsive and passionate, and in the general xcitement nothing was said about it.

The question for consideration was what was to be done nder the circumstances? To allow the illustrious masher to go to the "Dog and Duck," Muggleton's ne inn, was out of the question.

"Somebody must put him up," said the Secretary; and who so likely to do it as the President, Sir Henry ortliman? Is he not always eager to entertain any llustrious stranger who visits the neighbourhood? I ropose that a deputation be appointed to call on Sir lenry, and ask him to entertain the great champion, who as done the club so great an honour."

This proposition was received with loud cheers, and arried nem. con.

Sir Henry, who was M.P. for the district, was only too elighted to do anything which promised a little éclat nd popularity, and an invitation was accordingly sent, nd graciously accepted by the great Smasher. Time ent on with leaden steps to the excited Muggletonians, ut at last the day before the great tournament arrived. he champion was expected at noon, having signi- ed his wish to see something of the picturesque part f Muggleton before settling down to the serious business f the hour. Once more Miss Jones had the delightful ask of telling her bosom friend the latest news.

"I have just seen him driving up to the Hall. He is ntrancingly handsome, and looks so strong and active I ould have told he was a player, and a great player, if I ad not known it was he."

"What luck you have!" exclaimed her friend. "Is he t all like his portraits in the illustrated papers? They re often mere vile caricatures."

"The portraits do him no justice at all, my dear. He s perfectly delightful, and I am to play with him in the oubles. They are to be drawn this afternoon. I nly hope he won't look at me much with those ovely dark eyes, or I shall never be able to play."

Next morning the local papers were full of the great vent. The thoughtful Secretary had not forgotten to end a detailed account of the draw to the county papers nd others of wider circulation, so that all the world night know, and envy, the good fortune of the Muggleton lub in securing the presence of the player of the day. t would seem, in fact, as though every member of the lub had read all the accounts in all the papers, for they ppeared to be swelling with pride and importance as they ssembled on the ground very early, arrayed in all the lory of spotless flannels on the part of the men, and n that of the ladies the smartest costumes that emale ingenuity could devise. It had been raining hard luring the night, but the hot sun and a stiff breeze had ucceeded in drying the courts, apparently for the very pur- ose (as Miss Jones observed to Mr. Augustus Howisthat) f showing to the best advantage the terrific hard-hitting f Smasher, the redoubtable champion. There had been dinner-party at the Hall the previous night.

"Ah, Mr. Howisthat," said Miss Jones, with much nodesty, "you cannot tell how I trembled with fear and delight when I found it was my lot to sit next to him at linner. I felt that all the burden of the conversation would fall upon me, for Lady Portliman could not be expected to know much about tennis; indeed, I overheard ner make a dreadful remark about a bisque, which he either did not hear, or pretended not to, for which I was very thankful."

"Well, I could not hear much of his conversation seeing I was right at the other end of the table," rejoined her companion in rather an aggrieved tone. "But I was told he did not talk much about tennis."

"No, I think he imagined we should have enough tennis during the week, so he turned the conversation into another channel, and talked most delightfully on every subject. Ah, there he is!"

It was rather a shock to the Muggleton tennis players when the mighty champion appeared on the ground, for he was arrayed in a faultless cool grey suit, carrying his gloves and a stick, and with no suggestion about his costume of playing tennis. He, however, talked very affably with his acquaintances of the night before, especially with Miss Jones, and displayed great interest in the "draw," from which he learned that he was to play Mr. Howisthat in the first round this afternoon. Mr. Pushington suggested that 3.30 would be a convenient time for the match, when all the élite of the neighbourhood will have assembled on the ground. Smasher consented without demur, and then proceeded to discuss with Miss Jones the merits of the local players who were contending for the district events.

"Ah, my dear Bertha," said Miss Jones to her friend, when Mr. Smasher had left the ground and gone up to the Hall for lunch, "he is the most perfect gentleman I ever met. Did you notice how grave and polite he looked when we were watching that dreadful Mrs. Knockabout making such an idiot of herself on the court? How a married woman of her age and size can play in tournaments, as she does, I cannot think. She is a disgrace to our club, and I am sure any one with a smaller mind than Mr. Smasher would have laughed outright when she fell down and went right through the net—one of our new nets, too, just bought for the tournament."

"Well," remarked the Muggleton champion, who had just joined them, and was beginning to get rather sick of the new hero, "I wish he would wake up and show us a little of his form. We have not even seen him touch a racquet yet, and however much of a champion he may be, he certainly does not look like a player at all in my estimation. What do you think, Miss Marshall?"

"One never can tell from outside appearances what a man can do," responded Miss Marshall, discreetly. "Wait till this afternoon, at half-past three, and then, no doubt, Mr. Howisthat will find out to his cost whether the champion can play or not."

The afternoon's play at last commenced in earnest. The wind, which had troubled all the players a good deal in the morning, and more particularly the energetic Mrs. Knockabout, dropped completely, and left the blazing sun in full possession. It was perfect tennis weather, and Mr. Pushington congratulated himself, as he saw the ground filling rapidly, on the greatest success ever achieved by the Muggleton Club. In spite of the short notice, the news of the champion's arrival had spread round the country side, and all the country squires with their wives and families assembled in force, totally ignorant though, as most of them were, about the game. Some came to view their friends, some to display or criticise new costumes, some because everybody else was coming; but most of the people who filled the Grand Stand (specially erected at an enormous cost for the occasion), and the standing places round the nets, had come to see the All-England champion, and they were assured by those who knew that they would not be disappointed.

About three o'clock, the carriage from the Hall arrived, and Sir Henry and Lady Portliman got out. The spectators looked in vain for the interesting guest, but the Secretary learned from Sir Henry that Mr. Smasher had gone for a stroll after lunch, and had promised to turn up at the ground in time to play his match at 3.30. The President took his seat, and hoped that the Muggleton Club would play pluckily and make a good game against the illustrious stranger. Mr. Augustus Howisthat was observed to be growing considerably paler as the time goes on and the hour of his certain annihilation approached. A quarter past three chimed from the church clock, and there was not a seat to be had round the championship court. Those spectators who had an inch or two of height above their fellow-enthusiasts were envied as lucky individuals, who will see, over the people's heads, something of the game.

Half-past three struck, and still the champion tarried. The little Secretary, true to his energetic character, had been doing abnormal feats of agility in the way of being in several places at once, and was much hotter than the hardest pressed player, not even excluding Mrs. Knockabout. He was extremely harassed by the incessant inquiries after the champion, and was just wondering whether the game he was playing was worth all the trouble he was giving it, when a telegram was placed in his hands. It purported to come from "D. Smasher," and inquired why that individual's name had appeared in the papers as having entered for the Muggleton Tournament. Poor little Mr. Pushington wiped the perspiration from his brow and gazed at the clock. It was past four, and there were still no signs of the champion.

With a horrible foreboding, the little Secretary took the telegram which he had received to Sir Henry Portliman, and suggested that some one should be sent up to the Hall to inquire after Mr. Smasher. Sir Henry insisted on driving off for the purpose himself. Ten minutes later he was standing in the guest-chamber lately occupied by Mr. Smasher, reading a letter he had found on the dressing-table. It ran thus:—

> If every one enjoys the Muggleton Tournament as much as I have done, and gets as much profit out of the meeting, it will be an unqualified success. I have taken the diamond badge, as well as her Ladyship's jewels, partly because I admired it so much last night when it was handed round for inspection, and partly because I thought it a pity that the Champion should lose the prize because he had to leave earlier than was expected.

On inspection it was found that Lady Portliman's jewel-case had been rifled, and that the diamond championship badge had also disappeared. Although everything possible was done, the thief got clear away, and was never seen again. It was a crushing blow to the Muggleton Club, for Sir Henry Portliman withdrew his important patronage and support, and Miss Amelia Jones, who was one of its most enthusiastic players, was not at home to any callers for a week after the great tournament, and was never seen on the Muggleton lawn tennis ground again.

MUSIC.

THE WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

THE Worcester Festival, which is being held this week, provides an agreeable outing for some of the county families, while on "Messiah" day the city is literally invaded by the clergy of the district. A few enthusiasts, who know by experience the imposing effect of the great oratorios when performed in these venerable Cathedrals, also come from Oxford, London, Birmingham, and elsewhere, but otherwise the Festival, bare as it is of any sort of novelty, is of no general musical interest whatever, and of so little account do the local people deem it that they do not even take the trouble to form a choir of their own, preferring the lazy expedient of importing the best choristers from Leeds. The Festival is again, of course, given for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the local Anglican clergy, as the unfortunate choir singers were robbed of their share by the Church party rather more than 140 years ago. The Three Choir Festivals were founded early in the seventeenth century by the choir singers and musical amateurs of three Cathedral cities solely for their mutual improvement in music. The profit was not for their own benefit, but to advance the art and to assist the poorer musicians. Well-paid Bishops, Deans, and other clerical bigwigs, however, soon hankered after a share in the money thus earned. They gravely suggested that the meetings should be supplemented by services and sermons, and that the two parties should divide the swag. The singers, who were under the control of the Cathedral authorities, could not very well help themselves. The contract was solemnly committed to writing, and in the original prospectus of the reconstituted Musical Festival, issued by the Chancellor of Hereford in 1724, it was expressly stated that the proceeds were for the widows and orphans of the clergy, "and of the members of the three respective choirs." Having thus coolly bagged half the cash, the clerical authorities blithely set about the task of annexing the remainder. It took them twenty-eight years to do it, but although the musicians made a stout fight, they were at last beaten. Indeed, the poor choristers were hopelessly outmatched from the first, because if they resisted, Dean and Chapter could have made it remarkably warm for them. However, they succeeded in staving the matter off until 1751, when under the ridiculous plea that the choirmen were paid for singing (it never occurred to the clergy that they also were paid, and well paid, for preaching), the widows and orphans of the musicians were for ever deprived of all share in the funds, the whole of which were now seized for the clerical charities. Emboldened by success, an attempt was, a few years later, even made to secure a portion of the money for the parsons themselves, but this was too much of a good thing, and the purses of the poorer clergy are now refreshed only by special donations and bequests. The proceeds of the Festivals average £1,000 a year, derived solely from contributions; as, owing mainly to faulty management there is only upon the rarest occasions a profit upon the performances themselves, and the stewards are usually called upon to make up a deficit. It is now perhaps too late in the day for the musicians to recover the share of which they have been so unjustly deprived, while it may safely be said that, with the maw of the Established Church upon it, not a penny of the money is ever likely to escape to a Roman Catholic or Dissenting charity, although musicians of all religious denominations take part in the performances. But the experiment is, nevertheless, worth a trial by musicians of organising a musical festival on their own account. The proceeds of a musical festival earning £1,000 a year might be usefully employed in the foundation of travelling or other musical scholarships, or in the production of unfamiliar works, or the relief of necessitous musicians. Hitherto the boot has been altogether upon one leg. Music has drawn many thousands of pounds to the clerical charities of Worcester; although it never seems to have occurred to the authorities to organise a performance or a service for the benefit—say, of the Royal Society of Musicians.

If it were advisable to revive at the Gaiety one of the Henderson-Farnie operas at all, the choice could hardly have fallen upon a better work than M. Audran's "Mascotte." M. Planquette's "Rip Van Winkle" may, perhaps, possess a more dramatic story, but the part of the venerable sleeper seems somehow sacred to the memory of Fred Leslie. The "Mascotte," on the other hand, is a very fair example of the absurdities which amused some of us a dozen years since, and, at any rate, it boasts a good deal more fun and freshness of melody than any of the (botched or unbotched) French importations of recent years. Moreover, it is an old favourite, and the experience of the "Bohemian Girl" has amply proved that an average after-dinner British opera-goer loves the tunes he knows best. Doubtless, if it had been produced as a new opera in the present day the "Mascotte" would not have stood much chance. Audiences would not appreciate the young turkey-keeper who sings "Glou-glou," with an accent that would deceive no real bird, and whose fame as an animated porte-bonheur suffices to transfer her from the poultry-farm to the Palace. They also might resent the intrusion of the bald-headed monarch of comic opera, who leers at the girls and violently assaults his Prime Minister, and they would assuredly laugh to scorn the army of twelve which invades the Palace of Piombino, and, thanks mainly to the military experience of a shepherd, totally defeats the defending force. In the old form of comic opera all this nonsense was taken for granted, and even now, thanks to the vivacity of Miss St. John and Miss Phyllis Broughton, and to the attractiveness of a crowd of pretty girls clad in the scantiest of tunics and with the amplest display of tights, the "Mascotte" on Saturday again went merrily enough. The introduction of political allusions into a light after-dinner piece of this character is, however, a mistake. I am bound to say that the applause drowned the "hoo-ings" when the King remarked to his dependent, "Don't you think you ought to change your name from Jonah to Joseph now you are my Chamberlain?" But we have quite enough of the tedder sort of political wit on the platform and in Parliament, and do not want it in the theatre.

Mr. Sims Reeves, after solemnly taking leave of the public at the Albert Hall in 1891, came out again at the Promenade Concerts on Monday. He is announced once more for next Monday, after which he will probably again retire into private life. The truth is there is but the smallest excuse for his reappearance. If he had suddenly become rejuvenated, or the long rest had revived his vocal powers to the standard of even twenty years ago, it might have been another matter. But the voice, further injured, it seems, by a cold caught in crossing the Channel, is (as might reasonably be expected from a veteran of seventy-four) now a mere wreck, and "Tom Bowling" on Monday sounded much as though it came from a tenor through a telephone. For the younger generation Sims Reeves has a great reputation. These extra farewell appearances are not the best way to preserve it.

That unfortunate "Peterkin" died on Friday, after a run of exactly five nights. Its demise was expected and unregretted. There is, however, another point connected with the collapse, which is part of a question that must before long be tackled in earnest. It is stated on behalf of the unfortunate employés that, besides being suddenly thrown out of work, they have not been paid their salaries. Poor chorus girls, supers, and others were rehearsing four or five weeks, hoping, even in the present depressed state of matters theatrical, for a short run; but on Friday the ghost absolutely declined to walk, and on Saturday the postponed "Treasury" was further postponed, apparently sine die. A benefit is being talked of, but, although I hope it will take place, it clearly will only relieve present distress, and will not put a stop to such fiascos in the future. Of course, the management of the Royalty, whoever they may be, cannot pay salaries out of empty purses; but there have within the past year been quite half a dozen of similar catastrophes, and, if only for the credit of the profession, they must be prevented.

The Lord Chamberlain has the remedy quite in his hands. He has autocratic power to license or to refuse to license any London manager or theatre on any terms he pleases. In Russia the manager is bound to lodge a certain sum with the Government authorities (in St. Petersburg the Police) as a guarantee for the salaries of artists and the money paid for seats in advance by the public. If the Lord Chamberlain were to insist before granting a London licence that £250 should be deposited in consols by way of guarantee, a four weeks' rehearsal, a five nights' run, and no treasury would become impossible. The higher-class managers would for many reasons not object to it. So small a sum would be a fleabite to any serious enterprise, and, of course, the managers would receive the dividends on the stock.

The Queen, I learn, proposes this winter to considerably increase the number of musical performances at Windsor and Osborne, and in all probability the Royal College students will then pay their deferred visit to the Castle. Her Majesty has also resolved upon some private operatic representations, in which the Princess Beatrice and other members of the Royal family will take part, and Signor Tosti has been commissioned to write an operetta expressly for this purpose.

Mr. John Bridge, who died a few days since, was the father of Professor Bridge, of Westminster Abbey, and another son is organist of Chester Cathedral, and conductor of the local festivals. Ten years ago, while attending the Chester festival, old Mr. Bridge was seized with paralysis, but it has wrongly been stated that he never recovered, as he certainly sang in the choir at Westminster Abbey during the Jubilee service, in which his son took part as organist, and his grandson as a choir boy. Mr. Bridge sang in every Handel Festival except the last, and he now lies buried at Rochester Cathedral, his body being deposited on the night before his funeral on a bench within half a dozen yards of the choir stall which he had occupied for upwards of forty years

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—What a pity it is that so fine an edition and fairly competent a translation of Heine (1) as that of Mr. Charles Godfrey Leland should have almost every page disfigured with comments as fatuous as those of Polonius on the play in "Hamlet." Here is a sample, and I assure you that the vast majority of the notes are up to sample. "His pictures," writes Heine, "seemed to be like a many-coloured echo of the voice of my own heart, or far more as if the naturally allied tones of colour in my heart re-echoed wondrous strange." Heine's metaphors here, I admit, are not happy, though their incongruity would strike you less in the original than in this clumsy translation. But Mr. Leland, not content with gibetting his author in such a translation, adds the following fatuous note:—

> "Coloured echoes," and "elective voices of colour on the heart," seem to remind us uncomfortably of feverish, silly dreams, in which a cat persists in being a Bible in which we read all that which we are actually doing, yet are not quite certain from time to time that a chimney-sweep Mollah is not singing it from a mosque-chimney. But this delirious confusion of ideas, which is deeply pitied when it occurs in the human brain in relation to other subjects, is, as I have effectively remarked, cultivated to excess in art by the æsthetic imitators of Heine."

But the fatuity of the annotator's "effective remarks" are endurable compared with their spitefulness whenever a fault, folly, or foible of Heine's comes up for judgment. Mr. Leland seems to have adopted Heine as Mrs. Joe Gargery adopted Pip, "to bring up by hand," in the disciplinary sense, but it is an exceeding heavy hand. And this clumsy cudgelling in the notes is in such coarse contrast with the exquisitely light and bright sword-play of the text that your disgust is deepened. Can you imagine anything more exasperating than to be dragged down from the light, bright blue sky of the text into such a mud-puddle of a note as this? Upon Heine's incidental remark, "I battled against the bravest of the time," the comment in a note is, "All this tremendous fighting of which Heine boasts so much . . . . recalls what was said of a New York journalist, 'that he was the bravest man who ever lived, because nobody ever beat him in blackguarding.'" What a choice gem to exhume from a New York journal as an appropriate adornment for Heine! A pretty and even pathetic passage in this volume (commented upon in a note of even more foolish Philistinism than usual) helps to bridge for me the chasm separating Heine from the peasant-singers of "The Love-Songs of Connaught" (2). Heine in this passage describes the overpowering effect upon him of a kind of passion-play acted by children with all the single-hearted sincerity and intensity of childhood; and similar in its cause and in its effect upon you is the power of these ingenuous "Love Songs." Is there not something delicate, subtle, and exquisite as the hue and scent of the wild-rose in such poems as this:—

> I call on thee, O little one over there,
> Of the undulating tresses of the colour of gold;
> And every lock of them long and languid,
> That almost stretch to the top of the grass;
> Of the grey eyes, of the slow looks;
> Of the brows thin, like the stroke of a pen;
> Of the white cheeks, but scarlet through them:
> Ochone! It is through them I am ill.
> The tasteful mouth of the hue of a berry;
> And the small chalk-white teeth;
> The pretty nose; the chin not large;
> And the white throat appearance of the swan.
> The bosom like lime, of the rounded breasts,
> That never yet any touched.
> The gentle, tender body, the blossom-like side—
> I sing ye not half an account of my swan.

(1) "The Works of Heinrich Heine." Vol. IV. "The Salon," or Letters on Art, Music, Popular Life, and Politics. Translated from the German by Charles Godfrey Leland (Hans Breitmann). (London: William Heinemann.)

(2) "Love Songs of Connacht." Being the Fourth Chapter on the "Songs of Connacht." Now for the first time Collected, Edited, and Translated by Douglas Hyde, LL.D., M.R.I.A., President of the Irish National Literary Society. (London: T. Fisher Unwin.)

(3) "On English Lagoons." Being an Account of the Voyage of Two Amateur Wherrymen on the Norfolk and Suffolk Rivers and Broads. By P. H. Emerson. Illustrated by Eighteen Views from Photographs taken by the Author. (London: David Nutt.)

(4) "Birds in a Village." By W. H. Hudson, C.M.Z.S. (London: Chapman & Hall.)

(5) "Book Plates." By W. J. Hardy, F.S.A. ("Books About Books." Edited by Alfred Pollard.) (London: Kegan Paul, Trench, & Co.)

These love-songs Dr. Douglas Hyde, whose accomplishments as a linguist extend to a knowledge even of the language of his own country, has translated from MSS. or taken down direct from the lips of the peasantry, and has published with the Irish on one page and on the opposite an English version rhymed or in rythmical prose. His own style catches the infection, and "is subdued to what it works in, like the dyer's hand." It is itself characteristic of the man and of his devotion of his brilliant and versatile talents to the unprofitable service of his own country; but even more characteristic is his knowledge of the Gaelic nature, since only a man who loved his own people to the very heart could read them to the very heart as he shows that he has done in his preface and notes. I could not help contrasting the poetry Dr. Hyde's sympathy extracted from the poorest Connaught peasant with the grossness, stupidity, and sensuality of the sentiments which Mr. P. H. Emerson extracted from such English rustics as he encountered in his voyage "On English Lagoons" (3). As, however, Coleridge's "Lady, we receive but what we give" has a wider application than that intended by the poet, it is possible that Mr. Emerson did not go the right way about finding anything but earth, and sometimes ill-smelling earth, in the nature of the English peasant. A passage like the following at least suggests such an explanation:—

> I found Jim sitting in his cabin, looking miserably at the water.
> "What is the matter?" I asked.
> "My wife ain't writ to me lately."
> A hen reed-bird alighted near the boat as I said, "Oh, she've taken up with some other chap."
> The reed bird began to pick up crumbs.
> "I don't care," said Jim; "I shan't write to her again."

Note here the airy grace of the delicate comfort casually flung to Jim between these two profound observations on the movements of the reed-bird. There is "an infinite deal of nothing" dished up for you in this way as profound observation in the book; but it is often relieved by picturesque descriptions of scenery as well as by much more notable, if microscopic, observations of wild creatures. Far more to your taste, however, will be the really charming "Birds in a Village" (4), by the author of a book which I remember delighted you, "Idle Days in Patagonia." No one will be more pleased than you, also, to find that Mr. Hudson disbelieves what I have long ceased to fear myself, that wild animals suffer as much as they seem sympathetically to us to suffer.

> In whatever way the animal perishes—whether by violence, or excessive cold, or decay—his death is a comparatively easy one. So long as he is fighting with or struggling to escape from an enemy, wounds are not felt as wounds, and scarcely hurt him, as we know from our own experience; and when overcome, if death be not practically instantaneous, as in the case of a small bird seized by a cat, the disabling grip or blow is itself a kind of anodyne, producing insensibility to pain. This, too, is a matter of human experience. Men who have been struck down and horribly lacerated by lions, tigers, jaguars, &c., and afterwards rescued, have testified that, while they saw and knew that the animal was rending their flesh, they seemed not to feel it, and were at the time indifferent to the fate that had overtaken them.

This from Mr. Hudson, the most earnest of all advocates of Michelet's "tender alliance of souls between us and our winged brothers, between man and the universal living nature," is as convincing as it is comforting. I find I omitted from the most interesting series of books about books noticed in my last letter, Mr. W. J. Hardy's excellent and admirably-illustrated "Book Plates" (5). You probably have seen before these two happy epigrams I find in it upon George I. sending simultaneously to Cambridge a batch of books and to Oxford a squadron of horse:—

> The King to [illegible] with [illegible] eyes,
> [illegible]
> To one he sends a regiment. For why?
> That learned body wanted loyalty;
> To th' other books he gave, as well discerning
> How much that loyal body wanted learning.

Thus Oxford; to which Cambridge makes the retort:—

> The King to Oxford sent his troops of horse,
> For Tories own no argument but force;
> With equal care to Cambridge books he sent,
> For Whigs allow no force but argument.

—Believe me, dear Mr. Wyndham, very sincerely yours,
DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—Have you ever tried to analyse that indefinable something that is called "style," and that makes some men and women look more distinguished in dowdy garments than others do in smart clothes? It is a gift indeed, and is especially valuable in circumstances that oblige one to make a good appearance upon a small outlay. But what is it? It cannot be merely figure and carriage, though these form part of it, as a rule. Nor does it consist solely of the air of high-breeding conferred by the habit of mingling with good society. There is, beyond all these things, something intangible, elusive, that is occasionally to be seen in a housemaid, and which not many of our Duchesses possess, if any of them does. I could mention the names of at least a dozen Duchesses who do not. One of them, however, has in its highest development the air of grande dame, but this is totally apart from style. Is it not?

There is no doubt that well-made clothes are not only valuable in securing consideration and respect for those who, in shabby raiment, would command neither, but they are a wonderful addition to the appearance of even the best-favoured in this respect. Tennyson says:—

> Let never maiden think, however fair,
> She is not fairer in new clothes than old.

Few of us can afford to be unfashionable, and most of us need all that smartness can do for us. The longer I live, too, the more firmly do I believe that the average husband sees his wife reflected from the opinions of other men and from those of the women of his immediate circle, more especially his mother and sisters. He rarely sees her as she really is, whether from a half-acknowledged distrust of his own judgment, or from that curiously subtle influence that the opinions of others exercise over all of us. If a young wife makes a good impression upon her husband's circle, he is enraptured with her; but if she fails to make her way with them, she finds herself in his black books as well, even though she may have been prevented by shyness or a want of self-confidence from showing herself at her best to persons whom she would naturally be anxious to please.

So far as mere dress is concerned, it is the men friends to whom the husband looks for material on which to form his own opinion of his wife, and this being so, she cannot be too careful to be on every occasion well turned-out and never by any chance to allow herself to slip, even momentarily, into carelessness about chiffons. How troublesome it is to be always well dressed only a woman can tell; and for proper appreciation of the difficulty it must be a woman who cannot command the luxury of a maid. It is fortunate that we are dowered by Nature with sufficient self-esteem (I need not call it vanity, if it is only enough for that!) to give us energy for the task, for it is really a never-ending one. There is always some little trivial detail to be attended to, and this is not surprising when one takes into consideration the enormous number of articles that go to a woman's wardrobe, from bonnets to boots, and from veils to shoe-laces. There is always a gown or two on which the braid is getting shabby and needs renewing (horrid job!) or a blouse that wants a fresh waistband, or boots that have lost a button, or a veil that has to be gathered up in the centre, or a pocket that has developed an inconvenient weakness in one corner, or sleeves that threaten to cast off their moorings from the mainland of the bodice. I could extend this list indefinitely, and you could probably add on to it a score of things more that I should omit; and then, in addition, there are brooches to be supplied with new pins, trinkets to be kept in order, well brushed and in full glitter, furs to be beaten and regularly brushed, hats to be seen to, and sent to be re-trimmed, gowns to be despatched to Perth to be cleaned or dyed, laces to be mended and washed (Maud and I always do our own), ribbons, ties, belts, and bows to be looked after, and an endless number of such little frittering minutiæ to be seen to. The wonder is that the majority of us are generally so beautifully neat and tidy. However, the game is well worth the candle, for, quite apart from vanity, it pays well to look one's best and keep abreast of the current modes. It gives one a sort of value even in the home circle to be always a pleasant object for the eyes, so far as Nature's gifts or denials will admit, and in the world at large no one with any observation can deny the usefulness of it.

Major Howell & Co.'s fashionable Boots and Shoes (ready made or to measure) for Ladies, Girls, and Gentlemen.—16, Coventry-st., W.; 490, Strand, W.C.; 81, Gracechurch-st., City; 13, Queen Victoria-street (Mansion House), London. (Klenrusha, Polish.)

Costumes for Scotland, &c.—Messrs. Redfern beg to announce that they have designed some very practical Gowns for ladies visiting Scotland, either for Shooting, Travelling, Golfing, &c., to which they invite an inspection.—27, New Bond-street, W.

A curious instance of a wife endeavouring to "please her husband," as St. Paul puts it, came to our ears the other day. An old-fashioned friend of a smart young woman remonstrated with her upon always going about with a "tame cat," as the slang of the day calls the troisième dans le ménage, and one of the elder lady's arguments was that it was unfair to the husband. "My husband!" said the rebuked one. "Why, it is chiefly on his account that I keep on with Mr. So-and-so, though I am rather tired of him. My husband would begin to think me quite plain and dowdy—quite out of it, in fact—if I had not some one to run about for me and take me to the play or to a dance now and then. Every one of the women of our set has some one. Why should not I?"

Another little anecdote on the same subject may amuse you. A very wealthy little lady had a difference of opinion with her cavaliere servente, and quarrelled with him irretrievably. Missing his services very much, and not knowing any one in her circle who could act as his successor, she positively advertised for a gentleman of good birth residing in her neighbourhood who would be willing to act as her private secretary and to make himself useful. However, the applicants, as might have been expected, were such horrors that the unfortunate advertiser was perfectly dismayed, and, after interviewing one or two, would see no more of them. One applicant recommended himself by saying that he had acted as private secretary to a literary lady who does editorial work. His experiences with her would have been of little use in training him for buying bouquets to match certain gowns, in replacing dear lost dogs with the nearest match to the departed pet that could be found in London, in tracing some interesting bit of scandal to its originator and discovering how much or how little of it was true, in getting stalls at the opera or theatre, or in finding out all about trains, boats, passports, and hotels when the lady whom he serves is about to try a change of air. Nor in the most difficult part of the duties to be performed, that of administering the most delicate and discriminating flattery in the subtlest and most insidious manner, would the literary lady have been at all likely to have successfully trained the aspirant to the vacant place. The "tame cat" system is a curious one, but there is no doubt that it is a recognised institution in certain sets.

I should like to direct the attention of drapers who send out patterns of dress materials to people who make a business of selling these patterns to the public by advertising them for patchwork. Mrs. Fourstars' little girl is making a crazy-work quilt for her doll, and answered an advertisement about "lovely pieces," which, on receipt, proved to be pieces of tweed, homespun, and cloth, utterly unsuitable for patchwork as understood by the word. Who makes woollen crazy-work? Surely nobody. And yet these bits of cloth are advertised for this purpose.

I think the new autumn coats are very smart and pretty. They have a zouave top and a "double skirt" basque. That is, the full basque has all the effect of a double skirt when the bodice and gown are alike. In black hopsacking, the revers turned back with moire or satin, this makes a very useful costume, and any colour can be worn in the blouse. I saw a very neat get up of this kind the other day. The blouse was in surah, of that peculiar tone of grey-blue that has been so much in favour this season, and a poppy red tie finished it at the neck. With this was worn a black transparent fancy straw hat, with a few red poppies and black lace wings for trimming. The effect was very good, the tone of grey-blue in the blouse being Nature's complementary colour for poppy red. If we were to study natural effects a little more, we should secure artistic successes in our dress oftener than we do. It is said that it was by this means that Mr. Worth, the great man-milliner, first effected those colour triumphs that made his brilliant reputation.

We were in town for a few hours the other day, and were quite struck by the desolate expression of the West-End streets. There were hardly any carriages to be seen, and the pedestrians were apparently, like ourselves, in town for only a passing visit, for they wore tweeds, serges, low hats, brown boots, and all the details of a country toilet. Frock-coats and silk hats were quite scarce, even in Piccadilly and Pall Mall. Everybody is shooting in Scotland or fishing in Norway, and London is a desert indeed. Among the signs of the times we observed a notice in a Regent-street restaurant, "Oatmeal Porridge, a Penny." This struck us as being quite a new departure.

The recent very hot weather has brought to the front some novel stands for lemon-squashes. One of these we saw in our peregrinations that day. The centre of the oak tray was occupied by a lemon-squeezer, and there were wire stands for the bottles, and every possible detail that could expedite the composition of that delicious beverage.

Clare sends me the following from Ireland:—

DEAREST MADGE,—The soundest practical philosophy of life is to make the best of whatever situation we happen to find ourselves in, always supposing it to be one which no one else has forced upon us. In this latter case, it is, of course, quite a different thing. For when another is responsible for the situation, which of us can lightly forfeit the privileges of grumbling and fault-finding, that—to judge by the eager readiness with which they are universally exercised on every possible occasion—seem so dear to humanity in general? As circumstances have given me no loophole for fastening the responsibility of my present position in the peace and retirement of the country on any one else, I have devoted myself during the past few weeks to seeking out such mitigations as my lot may possibly afford. The ways of "making the best of it" vary, of course, according to one's own particular views regarding the "best." To be correctly "moderne" must not one seek good in evil and happiness in morbid misery? One's creed must be doubt of everything except pain and woe, the only living realities; one's eyes must fix themselves exclusively on the shadowy side of life. In fact, one is not "in it" intellectually without morbidness. What is to be done, however, when a mind has an unconquerable bent to cheerfulness, when it persists in being hopelessly—or, rather, hopefully—old-fashioned, instead of sadly new-fashioned? And this is my deplorable case. Do what I may, I cannot keep in the van of progress, like the old people—who, poor things! know no better. I cannot help seeing the lights in the picture, finding infinite subject of rejoicing, and much that is worth living for in life. After this ignominious confession, you will hardly be surprised to hear that we have been enjoying—literally and really enjoying—for the past few weeks the simple pleasures of the country. "Simple, indeed! You may well say so." Cousin Jane made the remark, and with such cruel emphasis on the first word, when I had so far forgotten myself as to give way to an outburst of enthusiasm about the delights of mushroom and blackberry gathering. The unusually fine season has afforded us these delights in great profusion. Such harvests of mushrooms as we have gathered; great basketsful both morning and evening. How delightful the wandering through dewy fields in quest of these palatable fungi; a really gentle sport, innocent of bloodshed. The rapture of coming on the dainty snow-white clusters, nestling in the grass. The delicious aroma, full of savoury forecast, as we gather them. That odour always recalls the days of early childhood, as the scent of a spring wood does the days of youth. Which of us has not enjoyed the stolen joys of mushroom-cooking on the school-room fire? Can any of the thousand and one ways of cooking mushrooms compare with it either—that is with what it appeared to be at the time? I have never risked disillusionment—with perhaps other risks included—by making a trial of it since these early days. Nor, indeed, would the setting of the mushroom, plain on the blackleaded bars of the grate, now seem to me unattended with the risk of a flavour of blacklead—a danger which even the intervention of the shovel would not prevent. Of one thing, however, I am quite certain, viz., that the most inspired cordon bleu could not invent a more savoury sauce, one more exquisitely delicate in flavour, than the juice, with a pinch of salt and butter, if the latter were procurable—which used to fill the cup of the mushroom. How irresistible it was! One always consumed it the very moment it appeared, in case of accidents, to which stolen joys are specially liable.

The most beautiful of Winter Garments are those of Nature's own production—FURS. For an elegant fit, genuine and best furs, go to NICHOLAY'S, Manufacturing Furriers, by Royal Appointment, 170, Oxford-st., London. Seal Jackets re-made to fashionable shapes.

Blackberrying is much more eventful than mushroom-gathering: more fraught with peril, if not to life and limb, at least to the outer skin and raiment. What scratches and rents we suffered in the cause. The wild brambles were bad enough, but the barbed wire of advanced civilisation was far worse. From extensive personal experience, I can now confidently state that the latter is unrivalled in taking pieces out of one's skin as well as one's garments.

In the midst of our leisure and "simple" pastimes, we have turned our eyes with deep pity on the busy world, which seems so far away. Above all, we have pitied the faithful Commons, and this week even the Lords. One shudders to think of what the future of the former will be. If all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy, what will it be with Jack grown to manhood, and without the recuperative powers of his earlier days? I am almost inclined to change my views about women in politics, and to think that we are sadly wanted to teach the men sense. Don't you think so, too? Fancy Parliament sitting all through the hottest summer we have had for years and years!

Lord Houghton is away from Ireland on a holiday, which will probably last for some time, as, up to this, he has spent most of the year in this country. Lord Wolseley—his womenkind being still abroad—has been staying in the West, with the Lord Chancellor, who has rented Kylemore for the season from Mr. M. Henry. Lord Roberts has been revisiting his native county Waterford, and receiving an enthusiastic welcome there. To think of the Duke of Connaught, instead of Lord Roberts, getting the Aldershot command! Is it not dreadful? Princes are so distinctly meant for ornament, and not for use.—Yours ever,

CLARE.

You asked me for a recipe for candying peaches for garnishing ice. Here it is:—

Choose the required number of large peaches, before they are too ripe, rub off the fur or lint with a clean cloth, and score each one, skin deep, with a needle down the seam. Lay them in a jar, cover with brandy, and tie a bladder over the neck of the vessel. Put them in a cool place for a week; then make a thick syrup for them, see that it boils, and is well skimmed. Take the fruit from the jar and boil in the syrup until it becomes soft and looks clear, then remove it and put into a glass jar. Mix the syrup with the brandy, and, when cold, pour it over the peaches. Tie them closely down, and cover with a skin or bladder so that the air cannot enter, or the fruit will become black. Keep them in a cold place till required.

These savoury shrimp-sippets are lovely:—

First skin one pint of fresh shrimps, then warm them in a gill of good rich white gravy, seasoned with pepper, salt, and a dash of nutmeg. Thicken the whole with a lump of butter rolled in flour; allow the gravy to give three bubbles, then draw the saucepan aside and stir in by degrees half a gill of cream. Let all be thoroughly heated, then spread the mixture on sippets of toasted bread. Have ready some grated Parmesan cheese, with this screen each one. Over these dust lightly a little coralline pepper, and on every one quickly lay a shelled prawn, leaving the head intact.

This is rather a nice way of serving cold rice-pudding:—

Make a stiff rice-pudding with two tablespoonfuls of rice, a pint of milk, and sugar to taste. Let it cook in a moderate oven for four hours. When cold cut it into neat blocks 1½ in. square, on each of which place half a preserved apricot. At each corner put a strip of angelica and a preserved cherry, also arrange one on each apricot. Send it to table cold on a glass dish.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin,

MADGE.

MARIANI WINE

This inimitable COCA WINE is an aid to intellectual exertion, and is indispensable to brain-workers and others who suffer from Debility, Exhaustion, Mental Depression, Dyspepsia, Sleeplessness, Voice Fatigue; also to promote Convalescence. Written Testimonials from over 2,000 Physicians. "A powerful rejuvenator and renovator of the vital forces." Sold by Chemists, Grocers, and Stores, or delivered free by Importers, WILCOX & CO., 239, Oxford-street, London. 4s. per bottle, or 45s. dozen.

MOURNING FOR IMMEDIATE WEAR.

Messrs. JAY'S

Large and well-assorted STOCK includes a choice and varied selection of COSTUMES, MANTLES, and MILLINERY, suitable for any degree of Mourning, and ready for IMMEDIATE WEAR. Orders to special instructions are executed in a few hours, and Ladies are Waited Upon in any part of the country without any extra charge whatever.

JAY'S,
REGENT STREET, LONDON.

THE MANUFACTURING
GOLDSMITHS' & SILVERSMITHS' COMPANY.
Show Rooms—112, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. (Adjoining Stereoscopic Company.)
Supply the Public Direct at Manufacturers' Cash Prices, saving Purchasers from 25 to 50 per cent

Fine Diamond Half-hoop Rings from £15 to £200.

Fine Pearl and Diamond Brooch, £8.

SPECIAL NOTICE.
THE
GOLDSMITHS' ALLIANCE LTD.
(A. B. Savory & Sons), late of 11 and 12, Cornhill, E.C., is sold to this Company, and the business is transferred to the above address.

Fine Diamond Brooch, £5.

Fine Pearl and Diamond Ring, £18 10s.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE POST FREE.

The Largest and Choicest Stock in the World of Novelties specially prepared for WEDDING & COMPLIMENTARY PRESENTS.

Goods forwarded to the Country on approval.

Fine Pearl and Diamond Border Ring, £25.

Fine Pearl and Diamond Brooch, £5.

Fine Pearl and Diamond Bracelet, £35.

REGISTERED DESIGN
Fine Pearl and Diamond Brooch, £5.

Fine Diamond Cluster Ring, £25

CRITERION GRAND HALL.
THIS WEEK
Miss ALICE NICHOLSON, Violinist,
Signor DABIERO, Mandolinist, &c.
RECHERCHE DINNERS AND SUPPERS
AT 5/- & 7/- 6 to 9.30.
AT 4/- 11 to 12.30.
No Charge for Attendance. Separate Tables. Lift from Grand Vestibule to Grand Hall. Constantly Varied Programme and Musical Novelties.

LORD BYRON'S HEROINE

"Nothing earthly could surpass her,
Save thine incomparable oil, Macassar."
("Don Juan," Canto I.)

A splendid testimony this of the Poet's high appreciation of the merits of

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL.

His Lordship preserved his fine head of hair by the use of this Oil, and recommended it to all his acquaintances as being the best and safest preserver and beautifier of the Hair. Sold also in a Golden Colour for fair hair. Bottles, 3/6, 7/-, 10/6, equal to four small.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO

Is the best and most fragrant preparation for the Teeth. All dentists allow that neither washes nor pastes are as efficacious for polishing the Teeth and keeping them sound and white as a pure and non-gritty tooth-powder; such Rowlands' Odonto has always proved itself.

—— ASK ANYWHERE FOR ROWLANDS' ARTICLES. ——

HOWARD & SONS'

MACHINE-MADE

FURNITURE & FITTINGS

A new BOOK of DESIGNS for

HOUSE DECORATION

Free on Application.

THE ORIGINAL
PARQUET
MANUFACTURERS ARE
HOWARD & SONS,
25, 26, 27, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.;
and Cleveland Works, W.
MAKERS of FURNITURE. DESIGNERS
OF
ATTRACTIVE HOMES.
Specimens at WAREROOMS.

25, 26, and 27, Berners Street, W.

THE NEW PATENT
TRIPLE SPLICED INSTEP HOSE.
NO. 20,778.
For Ladies and Children.

These goods are spliced at the instep, where, in the case of lace-up boots and shoes, stockings first show signs of wear. In the heels and feet there is also a splicing thread more than is found in ordinary goods. Thereby the wearing power is doubled without the slightest clumsiness or discomfort. The improvement is particularly advantageous in the thinnest summer makes of stocking, where the extreme fineness of the yarn makes the ordinary goods very apt to wear out almost immediately.

Made in Cotton, Lisle Thread, Summer and Winter Cashmere, Spun and Pure Silk.

See Reg. Trade Mark "MUSA DYE" on each pair.

To be obtained of all the best Hosiers and Outfitters in the United Kingdom, and

Wholesale only of the Patentees:

DEBENHAM & FREEBODY,
FLETCHER GATE, NOTTINGHAM.

The CLARET of the SEASON.

CHÂTEAU LA MARNIÈRE

(VINTAGE 1888, BLANQUEFORT.)

21s. Cash, delivered. Sample bottle, 2s. by post.

Order through your Wine Merchant or Grocer.

SOLE PROPRIETORS:

ARNOLD, PERRETT, & CO., LIMITED,
WINE MERCHANTS,
7a, Lower Belgrave Street, S.W. & Country Branches.
PRICE LIST OF CHOICE WINES AND SPIRITS POST FREE.

MR. HELBRONNER, LTD.
300 & 302, OXFORD STREET, W.
ECCLESIASTICAL AND DOMESTIC EMBROIDERERS.
Weavers of Dress Silks,
Decorators, Upholsterers, &c.

PAINTERS. MORANT & CO. DECORATORS.
91, NEW BOND STREET.

SPECIAL DESIGNS REGISTERED IN	Genoa Velvets, Brocades, Wall Papers, Furniture, Decoration. FOUR DOORS FROM OXFORD-ST.	NOT TO BE SEEN ELSEWHERE

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

WALTER BESANT'S New Novel, "THE REBEL QUEEN," will be ready, in 3 vols, at every Library, on FRIDAY NEXT.

GRANT ALLEN'S NEW NOVEL.

The Scallywag. By GRANT ALLEN, Author of "The Tents of Shem." 3 vols. At every library.

Ropes of Sand. By R. E. FRANCILLON, Author of "King or Knave?" &c. A New Edition, with 31 Illustrations by Hal Ludlow and F. Waddy. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"A very capable and admirable romance—a book which will please the ordinary devourer of fiction, and satisfy the elect reader who demands something more substantial than a mere sequence of thrilling incidents. The story is full of strong dramatic situations, and those who know Mr. Francillon's work—which, we may say in passing, is much less well known than it deserves to be—will expect to find, and will not be disappointed in finding, some genuine humour of the good old English kind."—Spectator.

Suspicion Aroused. By DICK DONOVAN, Author of "From Information Received," &c. Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

"The adventures of a successful thief-catcher, well told by himself, have a bizarre fascination of their own, and certainly Dick Donovan's exploits lose none of their glory in his deft handling."—Whitehall Review.

"To Let," &c. By B. M. CROKER, Author of "Pretty Miss Neville," "Diana Barrington," &c. Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s.; cloth limp, 2s. 6d.

"Smart little stories. . . very amusing."—Evening News.

A Trying Patient, &c. By JAMES PAYN, Author of "By Proxy" &c. With a Frontispiece by Stanley L. Wood. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"We always look to Mr. Payn for some genuine amusement, and he very seldom disappoints us; certainly he does not in the short stories which he has collected in this volume."—Westminster Gazette.

The Gun-Runner. By BERTRAM MITFORD. With a Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"A book which we can heartily commend to all who like rattling stories."—St. James's Gazette.

Dr. Pascal. By ÉMILE ZOLA, Author of "The Downfall," "The Dream," &c. Translated by ERNEST A. VIZETELLY. With an Etched Portrait of the Author. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"In this powerful story M. Zola has surpassed himself in intensity of pathos and in sublime horror. Once commenced, the fascination of the tale is extraordinary."—Publishers' Circular.

Also, uniform in size and price.

THE DOWNFALL. By É. ZOLA. | THE DREAM. By É. ZOLA.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, Piccadilly, W.

NEW NOVELS IN ONE VOLUME.

From the Five Rivers.
By FLORA ANNIE STEEL. Price 6s.

The Tower of Taddeo.
With Illustrations by HOLLAND TRINGHAM.
By OUIDA. Price 6s.

Ideala: A Study from Life.
By SARAH GRAND. Price 6s.

The Premier and the Painter.
By I. ZANGWILL and LOUIS COWEN. Price 6s.

Children of the Ghetto.
By I. ZANGWILL. Price 6s.

Wreckers and Methodists.
(On the 13th inst.) By H. D. LOWRY. Price 3s. 6d.

Kitty's Father.
By FRANK BARRETT. Price 3s. 6d.

Donald Marcy.
By ELIZABETH S. PHELPS. Price 3s. 6d.

The Jew.
From the Polish of J. I. KRASZEWSKI.
Cloth 3s. 6d., paper cover 2s.
(Heinemann's International Library.)
LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THIRD EDITION READY IMMEDIATELY.

The Two Lancrofts.
By C. F. KEARY. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"One of the most striking and original novels which have appeared for a very long time."—Saturday Review.

"It is by work like this that we English are fain to admit the continued supremacy of Paris amid all her vagaries as the artistic centre of Europe and of the world."—Athenæum.

"The studio chapters in the Paris section of the novel are excellent, with much more of real knowledge than the similar chapters in 'David Grieve.'"—Spectator.

"Mr. Keary does not deal with young persons; his people are real men and women of unmistakeable flesh and blood."—St. James's Gazette.

NOW READY.

The Prince of India;
or, WHY CONSTANTINOPLE FELL.
2 vols., crown 8vo.

By General LEW WALLACE, Author of "Ben-Hur."

NOTE.—The sales of "Ben-Hur" exceed 250,000.

"Written with a verve and glow that enchain the attention and carry the reader eagerly through to the end."—Christian World.

SECOND EDITION, NOW READY.

THE CRIME OF MAUNSELL GRANGE.
By FREDERIC BRETON. 3 vols., crown 8vo

"Has the supreme virtue of being readable from first to last; a really excellent example of what we rather shamefacedly regard as railway reading."—Academy.

"A finely-told tale of feminine loyalty and devotion. Few recent novels have deserved such praise."—The Daily Telegraph.

"The Scotsman's part in the drama is the one thing to which objection may be taken in an otherwise good story."—Scotsman.

OSGOOD, McILVAINE & CO., 45, Albemarle-street, London.

Messrs. HUTCHINSON'S NEW BOOKS

THIS DAY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

FITZGERALD MOLLOY'S NEW NOVEL

AN EXCELLENT KNAVE
In 3 vols.

By the Author of "By Order of the Czar."

THIRD AND CHEAP EDITION.

UNDER THE GREAT SEAL.
By JOSEPH HATTON. In crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [This day.

FIFTH EDITION NEARLY EXHAUSTED; A SIXTH EDITION IN THE PRESS.

I FORBID THE BANNS.
The Story of a Comedy which was played seriously. By FRANKFORT MOORE. CHEAP EDITION. In cloth, gilt, 6s.

The "Athenæum" says:—"So racy and brilliant a novel."

NEW VOLUME OF THE

POETS AND THE POETRY OF THE CENTURY.
Edited by ALFRED H. MILES.

ROBERT BRIDGES AND CONTEMPORARY POETS.
In buckram, gilt, 6s.; in cloth, gilt top, 4s.

B. L. FARJEON'S NEW NOVEL.

THE LAST TENANT.
In crown 8vo, gilt, 5s.

The "Manchester Guardian" says:—"Those who like a good Detective Story for the holidays will find what they want in 'The Last Tenant.'"

DICK DONOVAN'S NEW BOOK.

FROM CLUE TO CAPTURE.
A Series of Thrilling Detective Stories. With numerous Illustrations by Paul Hardy. In cloth, gilt, 3s. 6d.

HUTCHINSON & CO., Paternoster-row.

STERILITY IN WOMEN: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. By J. B. RYLEY, M.D., M.R.C.S., London.—A New Illustrated Edition of this work is Now Ready. Price 3s. 6d.; post-free, 3s. 8d. London: HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand.

NO STABLE IS COMPLETE WITHOUT

ELLIMAN'S ROYAL EMBROCATION

WHERE ELLIMAN'S COMES IN USEFUL.

From Lord Haddington,
Tyningham, Prestonkirk, N.B.
December 27th, 1885.
SIRS,—Elliman's Royal Embrocation is used in my stables, and I consider it indispensable in any stable, but especially in the stable of a Master of Hounds.
HADDINGTON,
Master of the Berwickshire Hounds.

From the Earl of Harrington.
January 9th, 1889.
SIRS,—Elliman's Royal Embrocation is used in my stables, and I consider it the best that I can obtain.
HARRINGTON.
Master of South Wilts Hounds.

From Major M. J. Balfe, South Park.
June 16th, 1892.
SIRS,—Elliman's Royal Embrocation is used in my stables, and I can highly recommend it.
M. J. BALFE.
Master of the Roscommon County Staghounds.

From The Marquis of Anglesey,
Plasnewydd, Anglesey.
June 18th, 1892.
SIRS,—Elliman's Royal Embrocation is used in my stables, and I consider it a most excellent Embrocation.
Marquis of ANGLESEY.
Master of the Marquis of Anglesey's Harriers.

PREPARED ONLY BY

ELLIMAN, SONS, & CO.

SLOUGH, ENG.

1s., 2s., 2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d. Of all Chemists.

From Lieut. J. H. Tremayne,
13th Hussars, Ballincollig.
July 17th, 1892.
SIRS,—Elliman's Royal Embrocation is used in my stables, and I find it most useful.
J. H. TREMAYNE.
Master of the 13th Hussars Fox Hounds.

From W. G. Robinson, Esq.,
Beech Hill, Armagh.
June 27th, 1892.
SIRS,—Elliman's Royal Embrocation is used in my stables, and I find it to be a most useful remedy for sprains, sore throats, &c. W. G. ROBINSON.
Hon. Secretary to the Armagh Harriers.

From John W. J. M. Paterson, Esq.,
Terrona, Langholm, N.B.
June 27th, 1892.
SIRS,—Elliman's Royal Embrocation is used in my stables, and has been for very many years, with most satisfactory results. J. W. J. M. PATERSON.
Master of the Eskdaill Foxhounds.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

(TO BE OBTAINED IN TOWN OR COUNTRY.)

By John Strange Winter.—THE SOUL OF THE BISHOP. 2 vols. [Immediately.

By Mrs. Edward Kennard.—THE HUNTING GIRL. 3 vols. At all Libraries.

By Mrs. Robert Jocelyn.—FOR ONE SEASON ONLY; A Sporting Novel. 3 vols. At all Libraries.

AND

Mrs. Alexander's New Novel—FOUND WANTING. 3 vols At all Libraries.

F. V. WHITE & CO., 14, Bedford-street, Strand, W.C.

Hatchards, Booksellers, 187, Piccadilly, London.

ALL THE NEW AND STANDARD BOOKS.

Post Orders Promptly Executed. Usual Cash Discounts.

TWO NEW NOVELS.

NOW READY.

THE TRANSGRESSION OF TERENCE CLANCY.

By HAROLD VALLINGS. Author of "The Quality of Mercy." In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

PERDITA. By Mary E. Mann.

Author of "A Lost Estate," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. PARR.

CAN THIS BE LOVE?

BY MRS. PARR,

Author of "Adam and Eve," &c.

1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO

REMINGTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS' AND BOOKSTALLS.

A NEW NOVEL BY MRS. ARTHUR KENNARD.

Diogenes' Sandals.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

TIMES says:—"We cannot but praise 'Diogenes Sandals' for the observation, the enthusiasm, the susceptibility to poetic influences which it evinces in its author."

WORLD says:—"An incident of love, a temporary disappointment which turns a society bachelor into a cynic, a sojourn in an old railway carriage, some smart original sayings and well-chosen quotations, and some charming descriptions of an interesting country—all these things go to the making of her story. The writing is sensible and shrewd—like a man's, but a light brilliancy of touch proclaims it to be the work of a clever, cultured woman."

NEW WORK by FREDERICK WICKS, Author of "The Veiled Hand."

The Broadmoor Patient and the Poor Clerk.

Two Stories in Psychological Contrast. By FREDERICK WICKS. Abundantly Illustrated by A. MORROW. Demy 8vo, paper covers, 1s.; cloth boards, 2s.

THE SCOTSMAN says: "Mr. Wicks made such a brilliant hit with 'The Veiled Hand' that his new stories, 'The Broadmoor Patient' and 'The Poor Clerk,' have a high standard to sustain. . . . Both stories are well and dramatically told. . . . They are effectively illustrated by Mr. A. Morrow. . . . . The stories are capital ones for the seaside."

Second Edition. Just ready. A new book by HÉLÈNE E. A. GINGOLD, Author of "Steyneville," "Denyse," &c.

SEVEN STORIES.

Crown 8vo, cloth, handsomely bound. Price 3s. 6d.

VANITY FAIR says:—"Miss Gingold here faces the public in a new character, telling us seven delightful stories. The art of writing a good short story is given to few, but Miss Gingold has proved seven times that it is her's."

REMINGTON & CO., Ltd., London and Sydney.

PHONOGRAPHS.—The Edison-Bell Phonograph Corporation, Limited, give Notice that they are the owners of the British Patents for the Edison-Bell Phonographs; and that Legal Proceedings will be taken against all persons selling, using, or exhibiting Phonographs not obtained from them.

By order,
W. M. CROWE,
Secretary.

Edison House,
Northumberland-avenue,
London, April, 1893.

THE Edison-Bell Phonograph Corporation, Limited, of London, have the Sole Right to Sell and Use Edison-Bell Phonographs in the United Kingdom, and all other persons claiming such rights, either as representing me or the North American Phonograph Company, do so without authority.

THOMAS. A. EDISON.

"The Cup of the Prince, the Peer, and the Peasant."
"The most popular and healthful Beverage of the Century."

By Her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent.

"MERSANO"

A SPARKLING NON-ALCOHOLIC WINE.

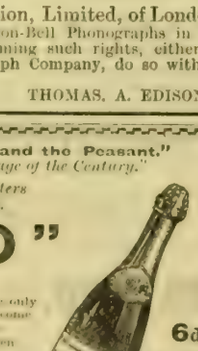
Recommended by all the leading medical faculty as the only perfect and health giver a table drink. The most welcome social necessity each room and indispensable on every table.

CERTIFICATES OF HONOUR and GOLD MEDAL have been awarded for the special excellence of "Mersano."

Wholesale from Local Agents in all parts of the Kingdom. Any difficulty with local supply, communicate with the Patentees:—

Forbes, Maxwell, & Co., Ltd., Aberdeen

SAMPLE BOTTLE POST FREE NINE STAMPS



6d. per Bottle.

To be had Everywhere.

AMUSEMENTS.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker-street Station, in connection with all railways. Through booking at all Metropolitan stations.—Portrait Model of Duke Alfred of Saxe Coburg Gotha. Magnificent Group containing Portraits of T.R.H. the Duke and Duchess of York. Royal Tiger Hunt. H.R.H. the Prince of Wales in the howdah; Juno, the famous war elephant, charging a tiger. Political Celebrities. Cabinet Ministers past and present. Recent Paris. Grand scenes and Tableaux. Music all day. Refreshments, &c. Chamber of Horrors. Portrait Models of Thomas Scott, Frederick Deering, Mrs. Pearcey, &c. Admission, 1s.; Children under twelve, 6d. Chamber of Horrors, 6d. Open from 10 to 10.

NIAGARA FALLS in WINTER.
Finest Sight and Coolest Place in London.
NIAGARA HALLS, St. James's Park Station.
DAILY, 10 to 10. Admission 1s. Children 6d.
Tickets, including admission, at all Dist. and Met. Ry. Stations.

ELOCUTION, EXTEMPORE SPEAKING, ORATORY.—Professor HAYSACK, whose Pupils are among the first clergymen, doctors, barristers, solicitors, public personages, and nobility, GIVES INSTRUCTION. Voice strengthened, defects corrected. 79, Talbot-road, Bayswater.

AMUSEMENTS.

THEATRE ROYAL COVENT GARDEN.
Musical Agent, Mr. R. Newman. Secretary, Mr. C. W. Sinkins. Brilliant Success of FARLEY SINKINS'S PROMENADE CONCERTS, Every Evening at 7.45. The Grand Orchestra of 100 Performers, with the Coldstream Guards, is pronounced by the entire Press the Finest in London, and the best that has ever played at the Promenade Concerts. Stedman's Choir of Boys and Girls. The most Eminent Vocal and Instrumental Artists. Conductor, Mr. Frederic H. Cowen. Conductor of Second Part, Mr. G. H. Betjemann. Admission One Shilling. Reserved Seats, 2s. 6d., 2s. Boxes from 10s. 6d.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.
Mr. TREE has the honour to announce that this Theatre will be RE-OPENED on WEDNESDAY Next, SEPTEMBER 20, when will be produced a New Poetical Play, in Four Acts, entitled
THE TEMPTER,
By Henry Arthur Jones.
Seats may now be booked one month in advance.

GAIETY THEATRE.—Lessee and Manager, GEORGE EDWARDES.—Every Evening, at 8, Audran's charming Comic Opera, LA MASCOTTE. English adaptation by H. B. Farnie and R. Reece. Misses Phyllis Broughton, Katie Seymour, Violet Monckton, and Florence St. John; Messrs. Wallace Brownlow, Charles Conyers, George Mudie, and Robert Pateman. Box-office open 10 to 6 daily.

ADELPHI THEATRE.—A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers.—A New Drama of Real Life, by Henry Pettitt, entitled A WOMAN'S REVENGE, Every Evening, at 8. Messrs. Charles Warner, Charles Cartwright, Herbert Flemming, Rudge Harding, John Carter, and E. W. Gardiner; Misses Elizabeth Robins, Alma Stanley, F. L. Forster, and Agnes Thomas. Box plan at theatre. Telephone 2,645. Open at 7.30.

COURT THEATRE.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. ARTHUR CHUDLEIGH.—Every Evening at 8.45, a Three Act Farce, being an English version of the great Parisian success "Champignol Malgré Lui," entitled, THE OTHER FELLOW, by Fred Horner. Messrs. Charles Groves, C. H. Brookfield, Weedon Grossmith, Wilfred Draycott, H. De Lange, W. Wyes, Compton Coutts, R. Nainby, Charles Burleigh, Seymour Hicks, Sydney Warden, E. Bertram, &c. Misses Pattie Brown, Ellaline Terriss, McIntosh, Aida Jenoure. Preceded at 8 by HIS LAST CHANCE. Mr. Seymour Hicks and Miss Ellaline Terriss. Doors open at 7.30. Box Office now open.

DALY'S THEATRE, Leicester-square.—Opening Night, Tuesday, September 19.—AUGUSTIN DALY'S COMPANY of COMEDIANS (Miss Ada Rehan, Mrs. Gilbert, James Lewis, Geo. Clarke, Arthur Bourchier, &c.) in DOLLARS AND SENSE (for Twelve Nights and Two Matinées). Tuesday, October 3, THE FORESTERS, by the late Lord Tennyson, music by Sir Arthur Sullivan. Box-office daily, 9 to 5. Seats also at all Libraries.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.—Manager, F. J. HARRIS.—Every Evening, at 8.15, MOROCCO BOUND. John L. Shine and Charles Danby; Misses Lilian Redfern and Letty Lind. Preceded, at 7.45, by Rex Harley, the inimitable Mimic of Popular Actors. Box-office 10 to 10. Doors open 7.30. Matinée Saturday Next, at 2.30.

ALHAMBRA THEATRE.—Open 7.45.—Two BALLETS, Operatic Music, and Varieties. At 8.40, the New Grand Romantic Ballet, in Four Tableaux, entitled FIDELIA. At 10.30, CHICAGO, and Grand Ballet of Nations. Frequent Change of Programme. Telephone 35,065.

THE EMPIRE.—Last Nights of ROUND THE TOWN. At 8, KATRINA, supported by Signorina Savigny, Miss Katie Seymour, Mr. John Ridley, F. Flexmore, Signora Vincenti, and Signorina Cavalazzi. Varieties by Marie Lloyd, Dutch Daly, Paul Cinquevalli, Tom Browne, Belloni, Brothers Webb, Avolo Boys, Charles Tilbury, R. G. Knowles, &c. &c. The new entrance from Leicester-street is now open. Doors open at 7.30.

PALACE THEATRE.—SCARAMOUCHE, Pantomime Ballet, at 10, and A PAL O' ARCHIE'S, To-night, 8.15.—The HANDSOMEST THEATRE in EUROPE. The finest Variety Entertainment in London. Prices from 6d. EVERY EVENING at 8. Manager, Mr. CHARLES MORTON.

LONDON PAVILION.—Grand and Unsurpassed Programme. George Lockhart's wonderful Performing Elephants, Marie Leyton, James Fawn, Charles Godfrey, Kate James, Leo Stormont, Little Chip, Harry Pleon, Minnie Cunningham, G. W. Kenway, Florrie Gallimore, Tom Leamore, Jennie Valmore, Charles Bignell, Nellie Navette, Harry Atkinson, Tiny Websters, Evans and Luxmore, Sam Redfern, Flo Hastings, Ada Lundberg, Fred Mason, Arthur Rigby, Brothers Horn.—EVERY EVENING. Doors open at 7.30. Admission from 1s.—Manager, Mr. EDWARD SWANBOROUGH.

TIVOLI, Strand, London.—Cool and Well Ventilated.—Open EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, and SATURDAY MATINÉE, at 2.30, with a STAR PROGRAMME, embracing every Artiste of note now in London.—Manager, Mr. VERNON DOWSETT.

EARL'S COURT EXHIBITION
OF
GARDENING AND FORESTRY.
THE GARDEN OF LONDON.

OPEN DAILY, 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.
ALL ROADS LEAD TO EARL'S COURT.

BANDS of H.M. GRENADIER GUARDS and SCOTS GUARDS. The EXHIBITION MILITARY BAND, GRAND ORGAN, STRING BAND.

Tens of Thousands of Electric, Gas, and Vauxhall Lights, arranged with regard to colour.

FERNERIES, FOUNTAINS, WATERFALLS.

ADMISSION ONE SHILLING to the Main Building, Exhibition of Gardening and Forestry, Central and Western Gardens, and to one of 2,000 Free Seats at Captain Boyton's World's Water Show.

CAPTAIN BOYTON'S WORLD'S WATER SHOW, EARL'S COURT.
Do not hesitate to SHOOT the "CHUTES."—You can do so now for SIXPENCE.
TWICE DAILY at 3.30 and 8, RAIN or SHINE.
Admission to Grand Stand 6d. to 5s., and 2,000 free seats.

"TRUTH" HOTEL LIST.

BATH.—LANSDOWN GROVE HOTEL. Desirable residence, in beautifully wooded grounds, 600 feet above sea level, facing south, and protected from north and east. Air dry and bracing. A sensibly and Pump Rooms within easy distance. Omnibus free to and from Hot Mineral Baths. Billiards. Tennis Lawn.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HÔTEL METROPOLE.—On the East Cliff, facing the sea, three minutes from East Station. The largest, and most magnificent Hotel in Bournemouth. Now open to receive visitors. Inclusive terms from 10s. 6d. per day.
GEORGE ALEXANDER, Manager.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HOTEL MONT DORE. "The finest Hotel on the South Coast." L. & S.W. Railway Guide. Adjoining the hotel is a large Winter Garden, containing a covered tennis court, lounge and a unique Bath Establishment, comprising Turkish, sea-water, pine, and other Baths. For tariff and full particulars, address THE MANAGER.

BOURNEMOUTH.—NEWLYN'S ROYAL EXETER HOTEL. In a beautifully sheltered position and its own private grounds. Only 100 yards from the lovely Pavilion Gardens, and two minutes from the Pier. Accommodation, appointments, and views unsurpassed. Excellent cuisine. Table d'hôte at 7 p.m. Omnibus at East Station.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.
Splendid position facing the sea.
BOARDING TERMS
from 10s. 6d. per day.
According to the position of rooms selected.

BUXTON.—The PEAK THERMAL ESTABLISHMENT. A High-class Hydropathic Hotel. Mineral water and other baths. Resident physician. Electric light. Passenger lift. Magnificent public rooms. Excellent cuisine. Table d'hôte 7 p.m., separate tables. Terms moderate.—Telegrams, "Thermal, Buxton."

CALLANDER & TROSSACHS HYDROPATHIC.—
Splendid Drives. Good Fishing. Lawn Tennis. Golf.
Terms from £2 12s. 6d. per week.
Apply to the MANAGER.

CHESTER.—QUEEN RAILWAY HOTEL, connected with the General Station by covered way. Porters in scarlet livery on the platforms attending trains day and night. Billiards. Lifts to all floors. Telegraph office in the Hotel. Telegraphic address, "Queen, Chester." Telephone, No. 27, Chester Exchange. H. T. GOULD, Manager.

EDINBURGH.—CLARENDON HOTEL.—The finest site in Princes-street, opposite the Castle. Perfect sanitation. Table d'hôte, separate tables. English management. "The most economical first-class Hotel in Scotland." Strongly recommended. Boarding terms. Apply for tariff.

FOLKESTONE.—ROYAL PAVILION HOTEL, facing Sea. 200 Apartments. Near landing-stage for Continent. Large winter garden. Table d'hote at 7 p.m.
G. SPURGEN, Proprietor.

FOLKESTONE.—BATES' HOTEL, West Cliff Gardens, and LONGFORD PRIVATE HOTEL, The Lees. Oldest established and most select Family Hotels in Folkestone. Reduced terms during Winter and Spring months. Pension (new Coffee-room) at Bates' Hotel.—G. L. HART, Proprietor. Sanitation Certified.

FOLKESTONE.—THE LEAS HOTEL, situated in private grounds, adjoining fashionable promenade. Sea views. Redecorated and newly-furnished throughout. Passengers' lift. Certified sanitation. Excellent cuisine. Moderate tariff.

GAIRLOCH HOTEL, LOCH MAREE, ROSS-SHIRE.—This magnificent hotel is situated amidst the finest Highland scenery in the West coast of Scotland. Accommodation for over 200. Good Fishing. Large petting establishment. Swift steamer from Oban every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

GRAND CANARY.—THE METROPOLE.
Newest and best Hotel
Delightful position, fronting the sea.
Terms most moderate.

LONDON.—QUEEN'S-GATE MANSIONS, South Kensington, S.W. (close to Hyde Park, Albert Hall, and Imperial Institute), with all the advantages of a first-class residential hotel; public dining, drawing, billiard, and smoking rooms; hydraulic lift to every floor; electric light throughout.—Tariff on application to MANAGER.

LONDON.—The COVENT GARDEN HOTEL, Covent-garden.—Most central FAMILY HOTEL, within five minutes of Law Courts and Somerset House. Hydraulic lift. Quiet rooms. Electric light. Table d'hôte, 6.0 to 8.30 (open to non-residents). Moderate charges. Night porter. Telegrams, "Replete, London," Telephone 780.—M. A. S. BROWNE, Proprietor.

MALVERN.—The Most Charming Luft-Kuhr Ort in England. THE IMPERIAL HOTEL offers every modern comfort, is surrounded by its own grounds, and commands splendid views. Prince of Wales Baths now open for the season. Very convenient for visitors to the Worcester Festival, September 10 to 15.—For tariff, apply to the Lessee and Manager, F. MOERSCHELL.

MATLOCK BATH.—ROYAL HOTEL.—Hydropathic Baths of every description. Medical Man. Healthful situation; extensive grounds, greatly admired. Large swimming bath. Billiards. Dairy farm. Splendid fishing.—Also NEW BATH HOTEL, with extensive grounds, fishing, &c. &c. Terms very moderate. 'Bus meets all trains.—T. TYACK, Proprietor.

NEWQUAY, Cornwall, The Biarritz of England.—ATLANTIC HOTEL, "the finest Hotel in the county." Splendidly situated. Full view of the Atlantic from Trevose Head to St. Ives. Ocean view from every window. Beaches, caverns, and cliff scenery unrivalled. Bracing climate. Bathing, yachting, fishing. Delightful excursions. Magnificent rooms. Strictly moderate charges.

PORT OROTAVA, Teneriffe.—HOTEL MARTIANEZ (late GRAND).—First-class, standing in a beautiful garden. Shady verandahs, large public and private rooms. Billiards, tennis. Good cooking, good wines, excellent spring water.
Manager, J. R. EGGER.

PORTRUSH (Giant's Causeway), co. Antrim.—NORTHERN COUNTIES HOTEL. Facing the Atlantic. Bracing air, magnificent scenery; tennis; Golf links, the finest in Ireland; surf and deep sea bathing, sea-water baths. Table d'hôte dinner, from 6 to 8 p.m. French cuisine. Charges very moderate. The HOTEL is UNDER RAILWAY MANAGEMENT.

SALISBURY.—The WHITE HART FAMILY HOTEL, nearly opposite the Cathedral. The largest and principal Hotel in the City. Table d'hôte (two hours each meal) at separate tables daily. Carriages for Stonehenge and other places of interest in the neighbourhood at fixed inclusive charges. Tariff on application to H. T. BOWES, Manager.

ST. LEONARD'S-ON-SEA.—The ALEXANDRA HOTEL, Eversfield-place, due south, facing the sea. Hydraulic lift to all floors. Billiard-room. Conservatory. Electric light in all public rooms. Table d'hote at separate tables, at 7.—Under the Management of Mr. and Mrs. PERCY BEER (Late of Bailey's Hotels, London).

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WELLINGTON HOTEL, Mount Ephraim. Under the distinguished patronage of his Grace the late Duke of Wellington, K.G., the leading nobility and gentry, &c. 422 ft. above sea level, south aspect; elegantly furnished; piano in every sitting-room. Cuisine, English and French; Table d'hote, large Dairy Farm.—BRABY, Proprietor.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—ROYAL KENTISH HOTEL.—Largest, best appointed, facing the Common, close to Chalybeate Springs and Parade. Table d'hôte (separate tables). Inclusive terms, 12s. per day. Tariff of MANAGER.

THE GROSVENOR HOTEL
BELGRAVIA, LONDON, S.W.
Well known for Wedding Breakfasts and Dinner Parties.
TABLE D'HÔTE OPEN TO NON-RESIDENTS.
Covered Communication to three Railway Stations.
The only Terminus Hotel of the Brighton Railway Company in London.
Electric Light throughout.

BRISTOL HOTEL,
Burlington Gardens, London, W.
(Between Bond-street and Regent-street, and close to Piccadilly).
Lighted by Electricity throughout. New Hydraulic Lift to all floors.
THE CHOICEST OF WINES. FRENCH CUISINE OF HIGHEST CHARACTER.
SEPARATE ENTRANCE TO RESTAURANT IN CORK STREET, OPEN TO NON-RESIDENTS.
Luncheons at fixed price of 4s.; Dinners at 10s. 6d. or à la carte.
Private Rooms for Parties of Four or more.
NO SUPPERS.
TELEPHONE No. 3,507.

LANGHAM HOTEL,
PORTLAND-PLACE, LONDON, W.
Situated in the most fashionable, convenient, and healthy locality. Artesian Well Water. Electric Light throughout. Moderate Tariff.
Table d'Hote 6.30 until 8.15.
Under the Management of WALTER GOSDEN.

ST. JAMES'S PARK, S.W.
QUEEN ANNE'S MANSIONS.
(QUEEN ANNE'S GATE, OPPOSITE ST. JAMES'S PARK STATION).
Finest view. Most central position. Near Houses of Parliament, Victoria, and Charing Cross. Suites of Rooms, Furnished or Unfurnished, having all comforts and privacy of home, at moderate outlay compared with expense of keeping house. All servants supplied and catering done by the Management. Rents include attendance, electric light, lifts, hot and cold water, &c.
Address, MANAGER.

BUXTON, DERBYSHIRE.
THE PALACE HOTEL.
This large and elegantly-appointed high-class Hotel contains upwards of 200 rooms. The hotel occupies the finest position in Buxton, and is surrounded by its own grounds of six acres. Ground-floor sitting-rooms and bed-rooms. Magnificent public rooms. American elevator. Table d'hôte at separate tables.
A. CROSS, Manager.

ALBANY HOTEL (ROBERTSON TERRACE), HASTINGS.
Finest position on the whole sea front. Enlarged and superbly furnished. Only Hotel with Electric Light in every room. Passenger Lift. Dining, Drawing, Reading, Writing, Smoking, and Billiard Rooms. Table d'Hote 7 p.m. Moderate Tariff. No charge for attendance.
C. A. SCHWABE, Manager.

GRAND HOTEL, JERSEY.
LARGEST AND BEST APPOINTED HOTEL IN CHANNEL ISLES, AND THE FINEST SITUATION IN JERSEY.
Directly facing the Channel. Best Sands and Safest Sea Bathing opposite the Hotel. Magnificent Public Rooms. Swimming Bath. Tennis Courts, &c.
TABLE D'HÔTE DINNER at 7 p.m. (separate tables) "best in Jersey."
Terms Moderate (inclusive or à la carte).
Telegrams—"Grand, Jersey." SYDNEY ROGERS, Manager & Secretary

HOTELS, &c.

Perfect Quietude. Perfect Rest. Perfect Peace.

The WALTON PARK HOTEL,

Clevedon, Somerset.

(Four Hours from London.)

BILLIARDS. TENNIS.

A City Solicitor writes as follows:—

"When I feel jaded and worn out with the hard work and worries of London life, when the intellect seems clouded, and the temper ruffled at trifles, I run down to Clevedon; there, lying on the rocks by the water side, I can enjoy perfect quietude, perfect rest, and perfect peace; there I can forget the petty worries of everyday life, and believe that life is worth living. With exhilarating air, a cosy hotel, an excellent table, a good bottle of wine, and a kind hostess, I can enjoy what few City men enjoy—the pleasure of existence. I return to London in a few days, a new man, to the wonder of my friends, who know not the secret of my elixir of life."

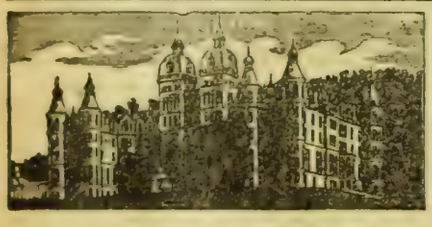
— Terms Moderate. —

WALTON PARK HOTEL, CLEVEDON.

THE MANAGER, IMPERIAL HOTEL, ABERDEEN (patronised by the Royal Family), begs to call the attention of old customers and intending visitors to the fact that it is through no fault of his that their Porter or Boots is not visible on the arrival of the trains, but because the Palace or Station Hotel Company have monopolised the right to have their porters within the barriers at the station to the exclusion of those of the other hotels in town.

ILFRACOMBE.—The RUNNACLEAVE Private HOTEL. 120 beautifully-appointed rooms. Recreation-hall, to seat 500, with fitted stage; carriage, yacht, tennis, photographic dark room, billiards, and in-door skating rink, free of charge until August. Chef de cuisine. Moderate tariff.

ILFRACOMBE.—ILFRACOMBE HOTEL.—Unrivalled sea frontage and open surroundings. Seven lawn-tennis courts. Large swimming bath. New lounge hall. 250 rooms.—Tariff of MANAGER.



Peebles Hydropathic.

Largest & Finest Hydropathic in Scotland.

Beautifully situated on the River Tweed, 20 miles south of Edinburgh. Over 30 acres of Pleasure Grounds, including Lawn Tennis and Bowling Greens, Golf Course, large Conservatory. Bedrooms are very large and airy. Magnificent scenery. Splendid drives. Terms from £3. 3s. per week.—For rooms apply to the MANAGER.

ESTATES, AUCTIONS, &c.

ALDRIDGE'S.

THE OLD TIMES.—Virginia Water and London. 30 COACH HORSES, the property of Mr. T. HARVEYSON, will be SOLD on WEDNESDAY NEXT, 20th SEPTEMBER.
Catalogue forwarded. On view Monday. W. & S. FREEMAN.

ALDRIDGE'S.

THE RELIANCE.—Boxhill and Teddington. 20 COACH HORSES, the property of A. E. GATCOMBE, Esq., will be SOLD NEXT WEDNESDAY, 20th SEPTEMBER.
Catalogue forwarded. On view Monday. W. & S. FREEMAN.

HYDE PARK AND PORTMAN ESTATES.—Messrs. FREDERICK A. MULLETT, BOOKER, & CO.'S Registers of the Select Furnished and Unfurnished Residences, TO BE LET and SOLD, may be inspected daily at their Auction and Estate Agency Offices, Albion House, Hyde Park-square (the corner of Albion-street), W.

HOMBURG. — VILLA QUELLENHOF, 91, Kaiser Friedrich Promenade, opposite Park, and close to Springs and new Bath House. With or without board. Terms moderate. Good English references. English spoken.—Address, A. SAUERBREI, Proprietor.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent Gratis. The List includes Private Asylums, &c.—Address, Mr. G. B. STOCKER, 8, Lancaster-place, Strand, W.C.

THE EARLSWOOD ASYLUM for IDIOTS.
Nearly 600 afflicted cases are receiving special care and education.
FUNDS urgently REQUIRED.
Special provision is made for the reception of Private Cases on payment.
H. GERARD HOARE, Esq., J.P., Treasurer.
JAMES DOWNING, Secretary.
Cheques or Postal Orders may be crossed Messrs. Hoare, Bankers, 37, Fleet-street, E.C.
Offices, 36, King William-street, London Bridge, E.C.

ORIENT COMPANY'S YACHTING CRUISES.
The Steamship "GARONNE," 3,876 tons register, 3,000 h.p. will leave London on the 22nd November, for a 65 days' Cruise,
To MADEIRA, TENERIFFE, WEST INDIES, AZORES, &c.,
Fitted with Electric Light, Electric Bells, Hot and Cold Baths, &c.
Managers { F. Green & Co. / Anderson, Anderson, & Co. } Head Offices, Fenchurch-avenue, London.
For particulars apply to the latter firm, at 5, Fenchurch-avenue, E.C.; or to the West-end Branch Office, 16, Cockspur-street, London, S.W.

"JAP" CARPETS

We have just received a shipment of Carpets and Rugs of Japanese Manufacture from our Agents in Hiogo, and as we are able to sell them at a very low price, we offer them to our Customers in preference to submitting them to the Wholesale Trade. They are novel and artistic in design and colouring, and of thick pile.

CARPETS.

8	feet long	by 6	feet wide	... ...	28/- each.
10	,,	9	,,	... ...	50/- ,,
12	,,	9	,,	... ...	63/- ,,

RUGS.

3	feet long	by 1 ft. 6 in.	wide	...	2/6 each.
4	,,	2	feet wide	... ...	5/- ,,
6	,,	3	,,	... ...	8/6 ,,

A FEW MIRZAPORE CARPETS, 9 ft. by 6 ft. ... 27/6 each.
KURD RUGS, 5 ft. by 3 ft. ... 5/9 ,,
BANGALORE RUGS, 6 ft. by 3ft. ... 5/- each.
KURD CARPETS, 9 ft. by 4 ft. 6 in. ... 21/- ,,

Catalogues of all the best Floor Coverings free.

TRELOAR & SONS

LUDGATE HILL, LONDON, E.C.

DREW & SONS, PICCADILLY CIRCUS, LONDON, W.

PATENT "EN ROUTE" TEA BASKET

Two-person size, complete, as sketch, with Silver Plated Kettle Round Spring Screw Cap, £2. 17s. 6d., or all fittings Silver Plated, £4. 10s.

Four-person size, Plain Metal £4. 14s., in all Silver Plated, £6. 10s.

N.B.—Either of these "En Routes" fitted with Drews' Patent Railway Attachment, lid and fall tray. Two-person size, 7 6; Four-person size, 10 6 extra to above prices.

NOTE.—All "En Routes" are now fitted with Drews' new patent sponge-packed lamp, with entirely new system of burner, specially adapted for travelling purposes, being superior in every way to the old lamp and boiling kettle more quickly. These lamps fit all Drews' baskets and can be had separately. Polished Brass, 5 -, Polished Nickel, 7 6.

CAMEO CIGARETTES

A PHOTOGRAPH IN EVERY PACKET.

A SEPARATE MOUTHPIECE FOR EACH CIGARETTE.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

SCOTTADIE

THE ROYAL SCOTCH WAREHOUSE

115 & 115A REGENT STREET LONDON W.

For:—
Coats & Ulsters.
Travelling Cloaks.
Carriage Rugs.
Travelling Wraps.
Shawls. Mauds.
Shetland Shawls.
Shooting Stockings.
Scotch Tweeds & Homespuns for Suits & Gowns

Telegraphic Address—Scott Adie, London.

CARPET CLEANING.

CARPETS and TAPESTRIES Cleansed from dust by PURE AIR.

Impossible to damage the most delicate fabric.

Collection and Delivery free.

Send for Prices and Particulars to your Upholsterer, or

The Compressed Air Carpet & Tapestry Cleaning Co.

Brook Green, W. Office: 94, Victoria-st., Westminster.

N.B.—The Trade and Public are invited to visit our Works, and convince themselves of the bona fides of our process.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER

Prevents the Hair from falling off.
Restores Grey or White Hair to its ORIGINAL COLOUR.
Being delicately perfumed it leaves no unpleasant odour.
IS NOT a dye, and therefore does not stain the skin or even white linen.
Should be in every house where a HAIR RENEWER is needed.
Ask your Chemist or Hairdresser for

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

Price 3s. 6d. per large Bottle.

Prepared only by the

ANGLO-AMERICAN DRUG COMPANY, Ltd.,

33, FARRINGDON ROAD, LONDON, E.C.

FLORILINE

FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH.

IS THE BEST LIQUID DENTIFRICE IN THE WORLD.

Prevents the Decay of Teeth.
Renders the Teeth Pearly White.
Is perfectly Harmless and Delicious to the Taste.

Of all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the World.
2s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE TOOTH POWDER.

Put up in Glass Jars, price 1s.

ARTISTIC HOMES.

"ABOUT OUR HOMES."

MAPLE & CO. "ABOUT OUR HOMES." (Hazell, 1s.). Maple & Co. will be happy to SEND a COPY of this little BOOK, which contains much interesting information upon DECORATION and other matters in connection with modern furnishing, free of charge, upon application.

BEDROOM SUITES

1000 BEDROOM SUITES

1000 BEDROOM SUITES at from 70s. to £300, forming a selection without parallel in the world, in every conceivable variety of style and design, and every description of woods at prices ranging from £3 10s. to £300, thus readily suiting every class of residence. Every one about to furnish should visit the Exhibition of Bedroom Furniture.

MAPLE & CO LTD

TOTTENHAM COURT RD. LONDON

The Largest and most Convenient

FURNISHING ESTABLISHMENT IN THE WORLD

EASY CHAIRS

FIVE HUNDRED TO SELECT FROM

MAPLE & CO. have always on show an immense assortment of their world-famous, luxuriously comfortable Easy Chairs, Lounges, and Settees, in various shapes and coverings, all ready for immediate delivery, and at most moderate prices. A Comfortable Easy Chair is always an acceptable present.

TURKEY CARPETS

FINE QUALITIES

MAPLE & CO wish to direct special attention to some very choice Turkey Carpets now on show, remarkable both for their exceptionally fine quality and purity of colouring—many being exact reproductions of the most beautiful specimens of XVII. century art.

NEZOOM CARPETS

NEZOOM CARPETS

MAPLE & CO.'s NEZOOM CARPETS (Registered) are now on show, in all the new patterns and colourings. These carpets, being of the finest quality, and made entirely without seam or join, will wear admirably, and all waste in matching is avoided. List of Sizes post-free

FARADAYS'
FITTINGS

Electric Light Works

3 BERNERS ST. W

SPÉCIALITÉ:—THICK LEGS & THIN FEET.
A Want Long Felt, met at Last.
GOLF, SHOOTING, and CYCLING

STOCKINGS!

HOMEKNIT.
Free from all Seams.

Made of pure long staple Scotch Wool, full length, broad ribs, double heels and toes, most comfortable in wear, guaranteed to give satisfaction.

Colours: Navy Blue, Black, Light and Dark Grey, Heathers, and Fancy Mixtures.

ALL SIZES—1/9, 2/3, 3/6.

Specialite:
THICK LEGS and THIN FEET, 2/6, 3/6.

THE HIGHLAND CHECK,
(As Illustration.)
Hand-Knitted, for Cycling, Golf, or Shooting, 3/6 & 4/6
Thick legs and thin feet 5/6
Postage, 3d. per pair; 2 pairs, 4½d.
Terms: Strictly Cash with Order.

A. W. GAMAGE,
126, 127, 128, 129, HOLBORN, E.C.

The Best is the Cheapest!
Fixed, moderate prices for first quality.

TRADE MARK ON EACH GARMENT

Dr. Jaeger's "Health Culture," and Jaeger Price List, sent free on application.

WEST-END JAEGER DEPOTS—
3 & 4, Princes-street, Cavendish-square (near Regent Circus)
30, Piccadilly (near St. James's Hall);
30, Sloane-street (adjoining McPherson's Gymnasium);
456, Strand (near Trafalgar-square).

CITY JAEGER DEPOTS—
85 & 86, Cheapside (near King-street);
158, Fenchurch-street (near Lime-street);
42 & 43, Fore-street (near Moorgate-street Station).

ILLUSTRATED PRICE LIST POST FREE.
CARTER 6A, NEW CAVENDISH ST.
PORTLAND PLACE, LONDON, W.

LITERARY MACHINE
For holding lamp, meals, &c. in any position over an easy chair, bed or sofa. Deliciously luxurious. A most useful gift. PRICES from £1.1s.

INVALID COMFORTS
Walking Machine for the lame
Adjustable Couches and Beds, £2.
Exercising Chairs £5. 5s.
Reclining Boards £1.1s.
Commodes £1. Leg Rests 10s. 6d.
Carrying Chairs, £1.
Bed Tables 7s. 6d.
Crutches 10s. 6d.
Folding Couch Chairs 10s. Bed Rests 10s.
Easy Chairs £2. 10s.
Commode Chairs £2. 10s.

BATH CHAIRS
From £1. 5s.

SELF-PROPELLING CHAIRS
£2. 2s.
Invalid Carriages
Perambulators
Rubber Tyres
From £1. 10s.

JOHN CARTER, 6a, New Cavendish St., Portland Place, London, W.
Telgrams—BATH CHAIR, LONDON. ILLUSTRATED PRICE LISTS POST FREE.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT

PURELY VEGETABLE, Perfectly Harmless. Will reduce from two to five pounds per week: acts on the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into Fat. Sold by Chemists. Send stamp for pamphlet.
Botanic Medicine Co., 3, New Oxford-street, London, W.C.

MAPPIN & WEBB'S
PATENT TABLE KNIVES.

SAMPLES & PRICES FREE.

"UNEQUALLED FOR HARD WEAR."

Only London Addresses, 158, OXFORD ST. W.
2, QUEEN VICTORIA ST. E.C.
(FACING THE MANSION HOUSE.)

MANUFACTORY—NORFOLK STREET, SHEFFIELD.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

MEMBERS OF THE STOCK EXCHANGE are NOT ALLOWED to ADVERTISE for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than their own principals.

Brokers or Agents who advertise are not in any way connected with the Stock Exchange, or under the control of the Committee.

List of Members of the Stock Exchange who act as Stock and Share Brokers may be obtained on application to

FRANCIS LEVIEN,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.

Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

LONDON AND COUNTY ADVANCE AND DISCOUNT COMPANY, Limited.—Cash advanced from £10 to £500, without preliminary fees or deductions for interest, for short or long periods, repayable by easy instalments, at moderate rates, upon approved security. Bills Discounted. Forms free. Offices, 57 and 58, Chancery-lane, W.C.—JOHN STONE, Secretary.

TOO FAT. Dr. GORDON'S Elegant Pills cure STOUTNESS, rapidly and certainly. State height, weight, and send 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., or 11s. to DR. GORDON, 24, Hart-street, Bloomsbury, London.

PUREST IN ENGLAND. SODA, SELTZER, LITHIA, POTASH, LEMONADE, GINGER ALE, ETC.

BOURNE TABLE WATERS

Supplied in 6 Dozen Cases Carriage Paid by

Analysis, &c., on Application.

R. M. MILLS & CO., BOURNE, LINCOLNSHIRE.

West-End Agent, D. WHEATLEY, 16A, North Audley-st., W. City Agents, ALEX. D. RAE & CO. (late Hardy & Co.), Chemists, 23, Fenchurch-street, and 6, Railway-place, E.C.; And of all CHEMISTS, WINE MERCHANTS, &c.

THE GREAT QUESTION OF HEALTH. WHAT TO DRINK?

PITKEATHLY TABLE WATER.

As a remedial agent in cases of sluggish liver, plethoric states of the system, chronic affections of the organs of respiration and circulation, gastric derangement and biliousness, it has been pronounced by medical men of high authority as most efficacious.

"I use the Aërated Pitkeathly largely, and value it."—Dr. MATTHEWS DUNCAN.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

London: INGRAM & ROYLE, 52, Farringdon-st., E.C., and at Liverpool.
" WM. BEST & SONS, 22, Henrietta-street, Cavendish-square, W.

Sole Proprietors, REID & DONALD, Perth.

THE LATE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD,
SIR MORELL MACKENZIE,
OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,
MISS EMILY FAITHFUL,
THE LATE GEN. W. T. SHERMAN,

and many other persons of distinction, have testified to the remarkable efficacy of Himrod's Cure for Asthma.

Established nearly a Quarter of a Century.

Prescribed by the Medical Faculty throughout the world. It is used as an Inhalation and without any after bad effects. A free Sample and detailed testimonials free by post. In tins, 4s. 3d. British Depôt—46, Holborn Viaduct, London; also of NEWBERY & SONS, BARCLAY & SONS, LYNCH & CO., J. SANGER & SONS, W. EDWARDS & SON, JOHN THOMPSON, Liverpool, and all wholesale Houses.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE".

CLARKE'S WORLD-FAMED BLOOD MIXTURE

"CLARKE'S BLOOD MIXTURE is entirely "free from any poison "or metallic impregnation, does not contain any injurious "ingredient, and is a "good, safe, and useful "medicine."

ALFRED SWAINE TAYLOR M.D., F.R.S., Lecturer on Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology.

Warranted to cleanse the Blood from all impurities from WHATEVER cause arising. For Scrofula, Scurvy, Eczema, Skin and Blood Diseases, and Sores of all kinds, its effects are marvellous. It is the only real specific for Gout and Rheumatic Pains, for it removes the CAUSE from the blood and bones. Thousands of testimonials. In bottles, 2s. 9d. and 11s. each, of all Chemists. Sent for 33 or 132 Stamps, by the Proprietors—THE LINCOLN AND MIDLAND COUNTIES DRUG CO., LINCOLN.

BEWARE OF WORTHLESS IMITATIONS.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.—Holborn Bars, London.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF LIFE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITY BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
REVERSIONS PURCHASED.

Invested Funds, £16,000,000.

The last Annual Report can be obtained on application to the Secretary.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE COMPANY, Limited,
No. 10, ST. SWITHIN'S LANE, LONDON, E.C.
General Accidents. | Personal Injuries
Railway Accidents. | Death by Accident.
C. HARDING, Manager.

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES TO PRIVATE INSURERS.

THE IMPERIAL INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED. FIRE. Est. 1803, 1, Old Broad st., E.C., & 22, Pall Mall, S.W. Subd. Capital, £1,200,000. Paid up, £300,000. Total funds, £1,600,000. E. COZENS-SMITH, Gen. Man.

THE EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY OF THE UNITED STATES.

LONDON OFFICE: 81, CHEAPSIDE, E.C.
ASSETS OVER .. .. £21,800,000.
SURPLUS EXCEEDS .. .. £6,400,000.

This Society originated the Tontine System of Life Assurance, under which the premiums paid form a lucrative investment, and not an expense, affording provision for old age as well as immediate family provision in the event of death.
ABSOLUTE SECURITY. LOW PREMIUMS. LARGE PROFITS.
Before assuring elsewhere, send for Prospectus and Illustrative Pamphlets.
A. MUNKITTRICK, Manager for Great Britain and Ireland.

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE
63, Threadneedle-street, London, E.C.
FOUNDED 1710.
THE OLDEST PURELY FIRE OFFICE IN THE WORLD.
SUM INSURED IN 1892,
£391,800,000.
(FIRE.)

BIRKBECK BANK.—(Estab. 1851). Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane. Two and a-half per cent. interest allowed on deposits, repayable on demand. Two per cent. on current accounts, calculated on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £100.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, can be obtained, post free, on application to FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

CASH ADVANCED PRIVATELY.
UNION DEPOSIT BANK.
No. 17, KING WILLIAM ST., Charing Cross, London, W.C.
[ESTABLISHED 1867.]
ADVANCES MADE in TOWN or COUNTRY at a FEW HOURS' NOTICE, Without Public Enquiries, for Short or Long Periods, From £30 to £5,000,
To Ladies and Gentlemen, Merchants, Farmers, Traders, or any responsible persons upon their NOTE OF HAND ALONE.
ALL TRANSACTIONS STRICTLY PRIVATE.
Also upon security of Furniture, Stock-in-Trade, Reversions, Deeds, Leases, Life Policies, Legacies, Jewellery, Silver Plate, Farm Stock, &c., without mortgage expenses, from one to 15 years, repayable by easy instalments, or so long as the interest is paid, the capital may remain.
NO SURETIES REQUIRED.
Distance no object. No delay, and no unnecessary expenses charged.
FIRST LETTER OF APPLICATION IMMEDIATELY ATTENDED TO.
A Gentleman sent direct from the Bank to carry out all advances.
Current accounts opened in accordance with the usual practice of other London Banks.
Prospectus gratis, or post free on application. Personal visit preferred.
Interest allowed on deposits, 4½, 5, and 6 per cent.
Apply to the SECRETARY.

JOHN SHAW, STOCK & SHARE DEALER.

HEAD OFFICE:—
WARDROBE CHAMBERS, DOCTORS' COMMONS, LONDON, E.C.

BANKERS:—
CAPITAL AND COUNTIES, Ludgate-hill, Long Acre, Piccadilly, and Brighton Branches.
LONDON AND MIDLAND, Newgate-street and Tooley-street Branches.

DIRECT PRIVATE TELEGRAPH WIRE between LONDON and BRIGHTON Offices.

FULL PARTICULARS of SPECIAL ARRANGEMENTS for DEALING sent post free on application.

COVER SYSTEM.—The loss is limited, the profits are unlimited, and there is such an independence in acting that the principle must and does recommend itself to business men—indeed, it is the only method on which they deal—for speculative accounts.

£5 COMMANDS £500 STOCK.
£10 COMMANDS £1,000 STOCK.
£50 COMMANDS £5,000 STOCK.
£500 COMMANDS £50,000 STOCK, and so on in proportion.

NO OTHER LIABILITY WHATEVER.

JOHN SHAW, STOCK AND SHARE DEALER,
LONDON, BRIGHTON, MANCHESTER, AND DUBLIN.

THE

GRESHAM

LIFE OFFICE,

ST. MILDRED'S HOUSE POULTRY, LONDON, E.C.

THOMAS G. ACKLAND, F.I.A., F.S.S., Actuary and Manager. JAMES H. SCOTT, Secretary.

WEST-END BRANCH—2, WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.

Sir FRANCIS OSBORNE, Bart., Local Secretary.

FUNDS.

Assets	Exceed	£5,000,00
Annual Income (1892)		£913,60
Total Payments under Policies		£11,000,00

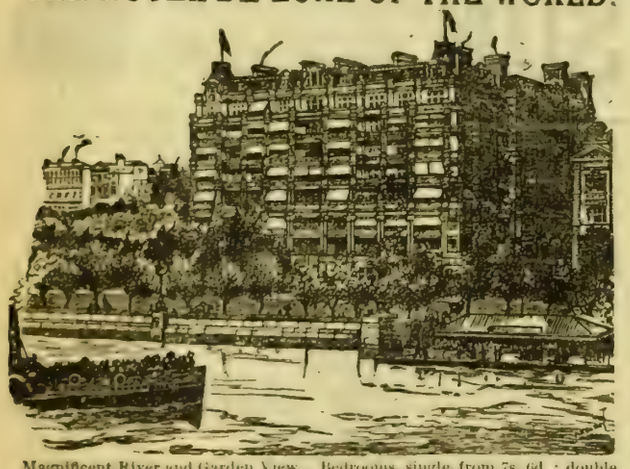
Moderate Rates of Premium. Liberal Scale of Annuities. Loans granted upon Security of Freehold, Copyhold, and Leasehold Property, Life Interests, and Reversions. Also to Corporate and other Public Bodies, upon Security of Rates, &c.

PROPOSAL FORMS, &c., to be obtained on application to the Society's Agents, or to the Head Office as above.

SAVOY HOTEL & RESTAURANT.

Victoria Embankment, LONDON.

'THE HOTEL DE LUXE OF THE WORLD.'



Magnificent River and Garden View Bedrooms, single, from 7s. 6d.; double, from 10s. 6d. Small and large suites, with bathrooms, &c., attached, from 25s. No charge for Light, Baths, and Attendance. Shaded Electric Light everywhere. No gas. The building is absolutely fireproof.

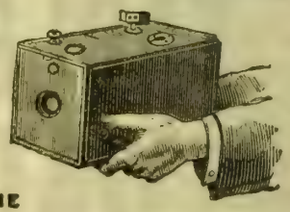
SAVOY RESTAURANT, with large terrace. The finest and only Open Air Restaurant in London. Private Rooms for Dinner Parties, &c.

THE VICTORIA ROOMS. Specially adapted for Balls, Banquets, Masonic and Regimental Dinners.

Chef de Cuisine, M. ESCOFFIER. Manager, L. ECHENARD.

General Manager, C. RITZ, Proprietor of the Hotel de Provence, Cannes.

The Camera that takes the World!



THE

KODAK

No previous knowledge of Photography necessary.

"YOU PRESS THE BUTTON, WE DO THE REST,"

(Unless you prefer to do the rest yourself)

AND THE PICTURE IS FINISHED.

Price from £1 6s.

EASTMAN PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS CO. LD., 115-117 OXFORD-ST., LONDON, W.

SEND FOR PRETTY, ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, POST FREE.

LIQUEUR OF THE GRAND CHARTREUSE.

This most excellent Liqueur, the great preventive of Indigestion, and almost certain remedy for sea-sickness, can now be had of all Wine Merchants, and at prices much lower than formerly.

Sole Consignee, W. DOYLE, 35, Crutched Friars, London, E.C.

DO CHIRA OIDE NISHAIMAS-KA.

JAPAN, CHINA, AUSTRALASIA.—Varied, picturesque, and fastest route is via Vancouver.

CANADA AND UNITED STATES.—Through tickets to all points; luxurious dining cars, sleeping cars, mountain hotels.

ROUND THE WORLD.—By arrangement with the P. & O. Company, and all Atlantic Lines via Japan or Australia, price £125.

FREE FARMS. With Cash Bonus to Settlers in the North-West.—For berths and descriptive pamphlets, apply PASSENGER DEPARTMENT, Canadian Pacific Railway, 67 and 68, King William-street, E.C.; 7, James-street, Liverpool; 106, Market-street, Manchester; 67, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow.

TAMAR INDIEN GRILLON

Very agreeable to take.

A LAXATIVE AND REFRESHING FRUIT LOZENGE FOR

CONSTIPATION,

HÆMORRHOIDS,
BILE,
HEADACHE,
LOSS OF APPETITE,
GASTRIC AND INTESTINAL TROUBLES.

Box 2s. 6d., stamps included.

Sold by all Chemists and Druggists.

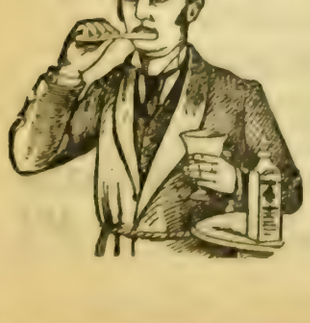
E. GRILLON,

69, Queen-street, Cheapside, London.

MILD INDIAN CIGARS. OBTAINABLE EVERYWHERE.

BAHADUR

COALS.—The Marquis of Londonderry supplies SEA-BORNE COAL from his DURHAM COLLIERIES Londonderry Wallsend, 29s.; Pittington Wallsend, 28s.; Primrose, 27s. 6d.; Seaton Wallsend, 26s. per ton. Cash on delivery.—Seaham Wharf, Nine Elms-lane, Vauxhall.



PERSONAL LOVELINESS

is greatly enhanced by a fine set of teeth. On the other hand, nothing so detracts from the effect of pleasing features as yellow or decayed teeth. Don't lose sight of this fact, and remember to cleanse your teeth every morning with that supremely delightful and effectual dentifrice

FRAGRANT

SOZODONT

which imparts whiteness to them, without the least injury to the enamel. The gums are made healthy by its use, and that mortifying defect, a repulsive breath, is completely remedied by it. Sozodont is in high favour with the fair sex, because it lends an added charm to their pretty mouths.

OUR PUZZLES.

RULES.

1. The sum of £2 2s. will be given every week for the best EPIGRAM, CONUNDRUM, LIPOGRAM, BOUTS-RIMÉS, or whatever the announced subject of the competition for the week may be.

2. The Puzzle Editor reserves the right, however, of dividing the above sum between two or more competitors, or of withholding the prize, should exceptional circumstances render such a course desirable.

3. The decision and award of the Puzzle Editor must be considered final and irrevocable, and, for obvious reasons, no appeal from his critical judgment can be entertained.

4. In every instance the prize will be given in money, subject to no conditions whatever, except the publication of the winner's real name and address in this journal.

5. Competitors will be allowed eleven days for the composition and despatch of their efforts; but all such communications must, at the latest, be received at the TRUTH OFFICE by the first post on the morning of the second Monday succeeding the publication of the subject for competition.

6. Not more than one Prize will be given a Quarter to the same competitor.

7. ALL NEW CONTRIBUTORS ARE REQUIRED TO FORWARD WITH THEIR FIRST ANSWERS THEIR REAL NAMES AND ADDRESSES FOR REGISTRATION; such names and addresses will not be published except in the case of Prize-winners.

8. The nom-de-plume chosen by competitors should not exceed 12, and must under no circumstances consist of more than 14, letters.

9. COMPETITORS MUST ON NO ACCOUNT CHANGE THEIR NOMS-DE-PLUME THEY HAVE ONCE ASSUMED.

10. On the announcement of the Prize-winner's nom-de-plume, the successful competitor must write and make formal application for the Prize, stating the address to which the cheque must be sent. Any competitor failing to do so within three months of winning the prize must forfeit all claim to the same.

11. No communications can be received on post-cards, by telegraph, or by hand. They must all be sent by the time named above, and post letters addressed—

PUZZLE EDITOR OF "TRUTH," CARTERET-STREET, QUEEN ANNE'S-GATE, S.W.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 752.

After prolonged consideration, it has been decided to divide this Prize between OLIVASTRO and OAR CROSS.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 759.

The opportunity for publishing a further selection of "Wasp" stanzas has not yet occurred. Should there be no space available for the purpose next week I will then, without keeping competitors in suspense any longer, announce the result of the competition.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 760.

It is quite true that the conditions under which this Competition was given were rather vague. "To the best advantage" was a phrase which evidently admitted of very varied interpretations. After consideration, I determined to submit all the answers received to the correspondent at whose request this competition was decided upon, and to ask him which one he himself deemed most useful. In reply he tells me that he intends to act upon SALVE's suggestion, and thus see something of England as well as of France. To SALVE, therefore, the Prize will be awarded.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 764.

There is a game which I daresay is well known to many readers, and the name of which, I believe, is "Planting." Well-known men or women are supposed to be planted, and then the players are required to state what plant or tree is likely to come up. For instance, let us suppose Sir Isaac Newton is "planted," the resulting crop would surely be "Sage." If Doctor Stubbs, the well-known historian, were "planted," we might fairly expect a "Date-" tree to come up. And, again, the "planting" of Doctor Nansen would doubtless result in the germination of an Ice-plant. But I need not give further examples, but will at once state that the usual prize of Two Guineas will be given to the competitor who, in the above manner, best answers the questions:—

WHAT WOULD BE MOST LIKELY TO "COME UP" IN CASE OF THE "PLANTING" OF (1) MR. GLADSTONE, (2) LORD SALISBURY, (3) LORD R. CHURCHILL, (4) MR. H. IRVING, (5) LORD ROBERTS, (6) MR. A. C. SWINBURNE, (7) MR. JOHN BURNS, (8) MR. JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN, AND (9) SIR FREDERICK LEIGHTON.

All answers must be received by me at the latest by the morning of Monday September 25.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

QU'APPELLE.—I will not forget your request for another "Quotation" puzzle.

RHO.—Your answer to Puzzle No. 760 reached me safely.

OMBRA.—The omission of your name was unintentional.

THE PUZZLE EDITOR

"TRUTH PUZZLE No. 000 ASSORTED SPECIMENS.—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

RHYMED DESCRIPTIONS OF BRITISH AND FOREIGN WATERING-PLACES.

 Thinking it would be of more general interest to publish accounts of places not very widely known, the following selection does not include any notices relating to such popular resorts as Brighton, Margate, Eastbourne, &c.—THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

CROMER.

You may have been to scores of lovely places,
Within our Isle—and foreign countries, too;
But if some tire of even pretty faces,
Perhaps you're longing now for "pastures new!"
If so it is, and you would be a roamer,
Caring not only to be "toujours gai,"
Go, where the little Norfolk sea-queen Cromer
Sits high, enthroned, above her smiling bay.
And on the jetty, when the band is playing,
And watch the sun sink 'neath the Western wave,
The last faint rays over the church tower straying,
A fairer scene no artist's eye could crave.
The splendid sea; high cliffs; health-giving breezes;
Most charming walks, and drives, the coast around;
Are stones to be pick'd up by him who pleases,
And wild flow'rs in profusion to be found.
The famous "Cromer sands" should claim attention,
Stretching for miles, so dry, and firm, and white;
Here you may ride, or tennis play, I'd mention,
And some amusement find from morn till night.
Hotels are good, and there is first-rate fishing;
The bathing, too, can nowhere be surpass'd;
And oh! for "Cromer crabs" I now am wishing,
And lobsters also, not the least, tho' last.

Cæsar's Corner.

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

How varied are thy charms, Boulogne-sur-mer!
Though foul thine odours, yet so pure thine air!
Thy balls, casino, theatres, and sands,
Where strangers congregate from neighbouring lands;
Thy stony streets, thy gardens flowery bright,
Thy favoured haunt of revelry by night;
Thy ever clanging bells, the crowded mart,
Thy gilded hall for gamblers set apart;
Thy tongues of scandal, that are never still,
Rife thy gossip, and the lies that kill;
Thy churches, priests, withal thy life sans soul,
And high Cathedral dome to crown the whole!
Upon the sands the merry children play,
And scores of bathers "dip" in garments gay;
No "niggers" here, no "Punch and Judy" show,
In truth we're most exclusive, as we go!
But there upon the hill's high crest, close by,
The "Calvaire" stands against the bright blue sky,
To add a blessing for a favouring breeze,
As sail the fishing boats to further seas;
Or else, reprove with looks of strangest woe,
The reckless folly of the crowds below!
For health or pleasure, none need yet despair,
When these are all thy charms, Boulogne-sur-mer!

W. M.

SCARBOROUGH.

Flambro' bids bold defiance to the sea,
While Filey less intrusive seeks to be;
But Scarborough beyond, more modest still,
Faintheartedly throws out her Castle Hill;
Whereon I stand; whereon I may not stand
Soon, when the sea conquers the yielding land.
As though an amphitheatre in twain,
Teeming with life upon the watery plain,
Had backward wheeled, divided from the sea;
So Scarborough in beauty seems to me.
Bristling with masts of many a sort and size,
Beneath the hill the nestling haven lies.
Thence, rounding to the south, the shore extends
To where the South Cliff from the Spa ascends—
Where, for man's pleasure, art with nature blends.
Few wander on beyond, the many stay
And let soft music wile the hours away,
Which, mingling with the murmurs of the sea,
Devoured by distance, is unheard by me.
Far to the north the crescent-shapened shore,
Peopled the less, by me is loved the more;
Though where I am, I am content to lie,
To look upon the ocean and the sky,
And happy feel, because I now not why.

Post Office.

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

I really think my only valid chance
Is to describe a little town in France,
With yellow sands stretching towards the sea,
And the warm sunshine flooding o'er the lea.
The fish-girl's step, so full of innate grace,
Her cap, like a white halo round her face,
You note, as towards Nôtre Dame she goes,
To smile her secret joy, or weep her woes.
The lower town, all laughing, gay, and new,
Is the first point to meet the stranger's view;
But on the left, high up, the fishing town
Seems on its decked-out idleness to frown.
And on the right, perched on another hill,
Which panting tourists clamber with a will,
The old town, prison-like, still stands its ground,
With thirteenth-century ramparts around,
And belfry-tower, seen from every gate,
All grey and moss-covered, of the same date,
Where every night the good old curfew-bell,
At ten, rings forth, "Bed-time, lights out," to tell
I have but space to write you one more thing
About this town to-day. Be sure and bring
A bottle of the best eau-de-Cologne,
If, alas! low tide lands you at Boulogne!

Mad.

KILKEE, A FAVOURITE WATERING-PLACE ON THE WEST COAST OF CLARE.

Remote from scenes of bustle, wealth, or trade,
From pop'lous town, green wood, or fertile glade;
Far backed and flanked by denudation sheer,
On th' wild Atlantic doth Kilkee appear,
Like an oasis on some desert plain,
Or fairy spot 'mid desolation's reign.
In crescent shape, a picturesque array
Of white-washed villas, cots, and "lodges" gay,
Converging round a circling broad expanse
Of bay, o'er whose smooth sands the billows prance,
Where bathers flounder, flop, or swim about,
And youngsters gambol when the tide is out.
Ozone, so pure, blent with the ocean gale,
Here on the esplanade the crowds inhale,
Contiguous, and for long leagues around,
Dame Nature's most impressive scenes abound;
The towering cliffs, the dented, giant rocks,
Which e'er repel bold Neptune's thundering shocks;
The deafening boom of surge and rock at play,
While mountain-high leap up the foam and spray
Sublime and awe-inspiring, here, the sight
Of elemental war, from headland height—
Fantastic cliffs and clefts mark miles of shore,
While mammoth caves by boat you may explore.

Shamrock.

FELIXSTOWE.

If one resort upon our English coast
Can of the proud name, "Imperial," boast,
Where Empress Princesses, and Princes go,
'Tis quiet, unassuming Felixstowe!
No "Arry's, with their "Arriets," on the beach,
No horrid negro minstrels within reach;
No "Jim," "Jim," ringing in your ear,
No brazen band is playing on the pier.
Here you can sit at peace upon the shore,
And over your favourite author you can pore;
Without annoyance, at your own sweet will,
Adopt your favourite way the time to kill:
And if to sports and pastimes you're inclined,
For cricket, rowing, swimming, have a mind,
At each and all of these you can enjoy
Some very pleasant hours without alloy.
But, ah, I have omitted, me bethinks,
That recreation—Golfing on the Links!
Where statesmen and philosophers combine
To let things slide, and not give sharp or sign.
In short, let tourists at this season know,
That health and strength are found at Felixstowe;
And if the houses are all let—ah, well,
There's one last grand resource—the Bath Hotel!
East Anglia.

Now Hemma, what d'ye think of my old guv.
In givin' me a fortnight's leave, my luv.?
'E came down 'andsome with a fiver, too,
Let's go and bust it down at Margit, do.
Yes 'Arry, Margit's just the place for me,
So orf we'll go and hev a good old spree:
Them sands, oh my! 'ow luvly now they be!
So smooth and flat, we'll sit and watch the sea.
The hair it is so fine, and bracin', too,
It gives yer such a happetite, it do,
Yer feels like walkin' twenty miles or so,
And never feelin' fagg'd a bit, oh no!
Then there's the jetty, where we'll take a stroll,
I like it so, because there ain't no toll
To pay; and then the 'Usbands' Boat will come
And land its passengers, half-ill and glum.
We'll go out in a rowin' boat as well,
And take some lines and bait, for who can tell,
We may be able lots o' fish to 'ook,
Which afterwards we'll carry 'ome and cook.
The bathin', too, it is so jolly fine,
The water's shallow; don't the sun just shine;
Consid'rin' all, I think we'll hit the target,
If we just take a few days' trip to Margit.
Stanchion.

BATH.

Hail, Bath! thou fairest city of the West,
Who givest to the weary Indian rest;
Where after coral strands and parchèd air
He seeks chalybeate waters in a chair.
From Bladud's pigs to Kings—whoever sickens
Drinks at that spring, to Cæsar known and Dickens.
Avaunt foul fiends of rheumatism and gout,
That taste of "flat irons" shall drive you out;
But while the "iron" gives invigoration,
The "flats" retard it in the Corporation.
Try, try, when Nature gives you such a start,
To help her and your city, too, by art.
You've made a step in baths and Pump Room bands—
Learn life and gaiety from foreign lands,
And Mr. Mayor "ex mente quam profundâ,"
Do try to enliven Bath's too British Sunday.
Unrivalled in thy buildings and position,
Too few amusements and too much physician,
Too full of lodging girls and Sandhurst brothers—
A sorry hunting-ground for anxious mothers;
A Bath and Country Club too full of scandal,
Too much respect for names that bear a handle.
But though no doubt I'm candid in my greeting,
Thy charms, dear Bath, will take a deal of beating.
Limp.

NORTH BERWICK.

If, at your call, I strive to praise aright
The seaboard home in which I most delight,
I pray you, reader, that you don't insist
That all its charms are told in ordered list.
That list will never end if I begin it;
Far better tell you what there isn't in it.
There's no Marine Parade along the strand,
No troupes of nigger minstrels, and no band;
No sheltered seat with glass and iron screen.
You bathe, but cannot bathe from a machine.
No Pier pavilion, thrust where breakers fail,
Breathes echoes of the London music-hall.
For such delights you here shall seek in vain
Amidst our wild, black rocks and wilder main.
The keen north wind on upland wastes we brave,
Or plunge and battle with the tossing wave,
Like hail its salt spray in our faces blown;
Or on some jutting reef we muse alone.
If such delights too dull and tame appear,
Oh, child of pleasure, seek not pleasure here!
If by mischance you came, you need not stay—
And if you have not come, oh, stop away.
Warwick.

MALVERN.

A town there is which nestles 'mong the hills,
And with a sense of joy one's spirit fills;
Its name is Malvern. There, in olden days,
The Benedictine monks did chant their lays,
The while the water from a limpid rill
Suffered their thirst to quench and pitchers fill:
They watched the Beacon Hill, whose lofty head
Spoke eloquently of the ages sped;
But now the "trippist" haunts that Beacon's sides,
And on the patient donkey up them rides,
While laugh and joke, and scream and lusty shout,
All sweet poetic thought completely rout.
Where once the herbage fed the convent ass,
The giddy girls toboggan on the grass,
Or lovers 'neath a spread umbrella lie,
And fondly deem they're hid from mortal eye.
The limpid rills, which flowed in wooded dells,
Are now enclosed, and bear the name of Wells;
The waters, in a house, from brickwork burst,
And in a glass the pilgrim slakes his thirst.
The times are changed, but not the scene or air,
For those nor years can harm nor age impair,
And modern Malvern yields more mirth and fun
Than when 'twas ruled by friar, monk, and nun.
Almaviva.

ROBIN HOOD'S TOWN.

Queen of the North, nor of the north alone,
A wider realm is thine, a statelier throne.
Search England as you may from coast to coast,
No fairer spot the sea-girt isle can boast.
Let Scarboro' flourish! lasting be her reign—
Decked by a brilliant Court and glitt'ring train.
Yet is the theme too high for me, be mine
To lay my offerings at a lowlier shrine.
Nor far to seek is it—it lies hard by,
Where breezy uplands seem to fringe the sky;
A noble bay, a valley passing fair,
A healing gift in every breath of air,
It stands a relic of the olden time,
When English rural life was in its prime,
Unvexed by clamour of Teutonic bands;
Oh! spare it, Fashion, from the builders' hands!
Sweet Robin Hood's town, blessèd be the day
That led my footsteps to thy vale and bay.
Wert Eden half so fair, the Serpent's guile
Had failed our luckless parents to exile.
Slave of the counter, helot of the mart,
Whate'er in life's fierce struggle be thy part,
Shake off the city dust, take heart again,
And to old Robin Hood's town take the train.
Baritone.

HUNTER'S QUAY, ON THE CLYDE.

With sparkling lochs the sea divides the land;
The giant mountains rise on either hand
Beclad with flaming brake and glowing heath;
Their forms are mirrored in the waves beneath.
Towards the north, in bold relief, is seen
Argyll's grotesque and rugged Bowling Green;
Whilst southwards, in a tremulous azure haze,
Old Arran 'gainst a bluer sky displays
The bold and jagged outline of Goatfell;
The rounded slopes of Bute more gently swell,
And 'twixt those islands and the Cumbrae-head
Lone Ailsa rises from its ocean-bed.
Far hence the waters of the storied Clyde
Already have been wedded to the tide;
Far hence the winds upon their angry way
The turbid billows shake to brackish spray;
But o'er the Firth the stately vessel plies
From mart to mart with costly merchandise,
And here, with tapering mast and swelling sail,
The slender yacht defies the fiercest gale.
For here—no longer brackish 'tis the sea,
Limpid as amber, briny, buoyant, free,
In which its breast the snowy sea-bird cools—
The sea which Britons love and Britain rules.
Violet Grove.

LYME REGIS.

Lyme Regis, dear secluded little place,
Left far behind in this great century's race.
Situate on fair Dorset's southern coast,
That Monmouth landed there is still your boast.
You have no railway, no electric light,
No "cheap excursions to the Isle of Wight."
You have no theatre, no park, no pier,
No coster songs, you've never heard "Wot Cher."
No strolling niggers haunt your spacious sands,
No travelling pianettes, no German bands.
Quaint little town, so straggling and so steep,
You look as though you're tumbling in the deep,
The rippling waters of your lovely bay
Remind one of fair Naples far away.
The cliffs which skirt the bay both east and west
Are to their very brink with verdure dress't.
Beyond the cliffs, and westward of the town,
Lies the great "Landslip," of such wide renown.
The lovely views, with which the cliffs abound,
The charming walks and drives for miles around
Invite the weary traveller there to stay,
And many a pleasant week to while away.
All those who seek a restful, quiet time,
Would certainly do well to visit Lyme.
Possum.

TARBERT, LOCH FYNE, ARGYLLSHIRE.

Out of "the World," and from its follies free,
Fair Tarbert nestles in an arm of sea;
Loch Fyne's blue waters wash the rocky shore,
Which Bruce's clansmen trod in days of yore;
High on a cliff, his castle still is seen,
Memorial pillar of the great "Has been."
Tarbert at morn! A swim, a sail, and then
A ramble by the waves, or through "The Glen";
The children paddle on the pebbly strand,
And artists limn a landscape wide and grand:
At twelve o'clock! A scamper to the pier,
As round the Head "Columba's" masts draw near:
Tarbert at eve! Can prettier sight be found
Than her vast herring-fleet when outward-bound;
Slowly it sweeps adown productive Fyne,
Or southward steers for Arran's shadowy line;
Tossed in a skiff, 'tis then I love to lie,
And watch the sepia-coloured sails go by.
O, beauteous Tarbert! Long may you remain
Free from the horrors of excursion train!
Long may the heathery hills on either hand
Be spared the groaning of a German band;
And still in silent, dreamy grandeur stay
Ideal spot for peaceful holiday!
Nibs.

NEWCASTLE, CO. DOWN.

Where the deep sea and mighty mountains meet,
The wild waves surging in, to kiss the feet
Of those old monarchs, rearing towards the sky
Their rugged sides and cloud-capped summits high,
Newcastle nestles, lovely as a dream,
Fit inspiration for a poet's theme,
Or painter's vivid fancy to inspire
With a pure spark of Heav'n's divinest fire.
For those who still love legendary lore,
The fisher-folk have tragic tales in store;
Legends of "Maggie's Leap" and "Armor's Hole,"
Of fray on "Bloody Bridge"—weird tale of dole.
And cheery souls, who love their human kind,
On promenade, with band, may pleasure find.
Here golfers seek their paradise on earth,
Where, having tied, a hazard proves their worth.
Close by the Links lies shining strand for miles,
Where horse and rider swiftly time beguiles.
For picnic parties and for gipsy teas,
Dundrum's old ruined castle all must please;
Or Castlewellan, whose lake, gem-like, shines;
Or Tullamore, with dark, majestic pines.
In sooth, with all its varied charms, I ween,
Newcastle reigns o'er seaside haunts as queen.
Bel Demonio.

Rhymed descriptions have also been receive from Singelet, Beta, Countess Olga, Gobo, Thistle down, Limp, Lichfield, Llandudno, Our Cross, Ka tabos, Moonlighter, Tracey Tupman, Sol, Georgie Kangaroo, Gurt Jan Kidd, Jefsey, Jo, V.B., S.M.I E.K., Boiled Rice, E.N.S., Gil, Ivy Leaves, Victo Goldfinch, Guznant, J.F.A., E. Culverhous Quappelle, Esperance, Ozone, Rugeley, Al doubleu, Snowdrop, Dorothea, Lady Betty, a Awful Warrior.

The ONLY Antiseptic Saline.

SALT REGAL

FOR ALL

Bilious and Nervous Disorders,

SUCH AS

Sick Headache, Constipation,
Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion,
Disordered Liver.

At all Chemists throughout the world, in bottles, 1/6 and 2/9.

Office: 49, ISLINGTON, LIVERPOOL.

ALL FAT PEOPLE

can safely Reduce Weight and cure Corpulency permanently by taking TRILENE TABLETS (Regd.) for a few weeks. They are small, agreeable, harmless, and never fail to IMPROVE both HEALTH and FIGURE without change of Diet. An English Countess writes: "Your Trilene Tablets act admirably." Send 2s. 6d. to THE TRILENE Co., Sole Proprietors, 70, FINSBURY PAVEMENT, LONDON.

BENGER'S FOOD.

For Infants, Children, and Invalids.

"Humanly speaking, 'Benger's Food' entirely saved baby's life. He could digest nothing until we began the 'Benger.' He is now rosy and fattening rapidly."—Extract from Private Letter.

GOLD MEDAL AWARDED
INTERNATIONAL HEALTH EXHIBITION.

TINS, 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., 5s., and 10s., OF ALL CHEMISTS, &c.

Vinolia (SOOTHING)

(SOLUBLE) Powder

REDNESS
REDNESS
REDNESS
REDNESS
REDNESS
REDNESS

ROUGHNESS
ROUGHNESS
ROUGHNESS
ROUGHNESS
ROUGHNESS
ROUGHNESS

"Superseding the old toilet powders, which are apt to cause acne spots on the face, by blocking up the pores of the skin."—LADY'S PICTORIAL.

1/-, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per box, in white, pink, and cream tints.

'NEW GUINEA' Spring Bedstead.
rs 1-in. Sides 1½-in. strong Tubes, Double ven Wire Mattress, Patent 'Reliance' Side enings. All Iron and Steel, no Wood-work. Bedstead in 3 parts only.
Easy to fix up and take down.

PLEASE MENTION THIS PAPER.
rs executed same day as received for this bed.

be had only direct from—
ARLES RILEY,
Freeman-street,
BIRMINGHAM.
Illustrated Price Lists Post Free.

ALL GOODS GUARANTEED FOR 5 YEARS.

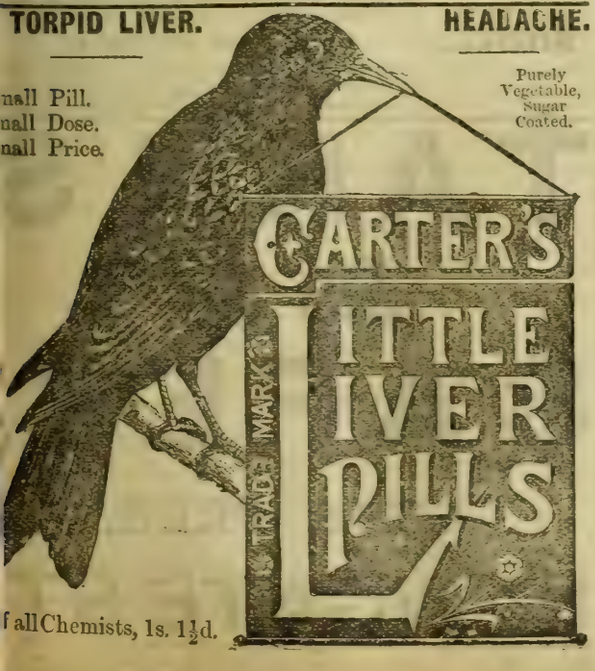
EVERY DESCRIPTION —OF— Bedsteads, Bedding, Spring Mattresses, Bedroom Furniture, &c. direct from the Manufacturer.

TORPID LIVER.

nall Pill.
nall Dose.
nall Price.

HEADACHE.

Purely Vegetable, Sugar Coated.



f all Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

THE ROYAL WEDDING PERFUME.

H.R.H. The Duchess of York has graciously accepted a supply of "ATKINSON'S WHITE ROSE," describing it as a "Charming Scent."

It is the "sweetest of sweet odours." Atkinson's is the only genuine.

Of all Chemists, Perfumers, and Dealers, and of the Manufacturers, 24, Old Bond Street, London.

"THE NEW WIRE MAT."

FELTEN & GUILLEAUME'S GALVANISED PATENT 'SPIRALIUM' WIRE MAT.

Practically indestructible

Write for Prices of this and their 'CONVOLVULUS' Wire Matting

Sole Agents, W. F. DENNIS & Co., 11 Billiter St., London, E.C.

£20 TOBACCONISTS COMMENCING. Illd. guide, post-free, "How to open respectably £20 to £1,000. Tobacconists Outfitting Co., 186A, Euston-rd., Ldn. Mngr. H. MYERS. Est. 1886.

BROWN & POLSON'S

HAS 35 YEARS' WORLD-WIDE REPUTATION.

CORN FLOUR

"IS STILL THE BEST COCOA."

SCHWEITZER'S NOURISHING, STRENGTHENING

Cocoatina

Reduced Prices: ¼ lbs., 11d.; ½ lbs., 1/9; 1 lbs., 3/4.

PIANOS ON THE THREE YEARS' HIRE SYSTEM.

This system is carried out extensively, liberally, and equitably by CHARLES STILES & CO., 40 and 42, Southampton-row, Holborn, W.C. The pianoforte becomes the absolute property of the hirer at the expiration of three years, or may be returned at any time, at the option of the hirer. The rates charged are the same as for ordinary hire, and no addition is made to the price. PIANOS, GRAND and UPRIGHT, new and second-hand, by BORD, BECHSTEIN, and other high-class Makers, at from 10s. 6d. to 100s. per month. Lists and all particulars will be forwarded post-free on application to STILES & CO., 40 and 42, Southampton-row, Holborn, London, W.C.

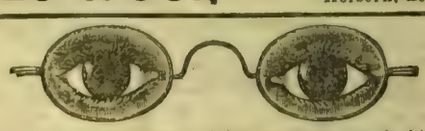
— PURGATIVE WATER. —

LLORACH RUBINAT.

Intestinal Complaints, Obesity, and Clears Complexion.

E. GALLAIS & CO., 90, PICCADILLY, W.



SHORT SIGHT.

This form of defective vision is, no doubt, alarmingly increasing, but many kinds of defective vision are constantly mistaken for short sight, merely because clearer vision is obtained by bringing an object closer to the eye. If such cases are treated with ordinary short-sighted spectacles, the mischief is greatly aggravated, and serious and permanent injury is done to the sight.

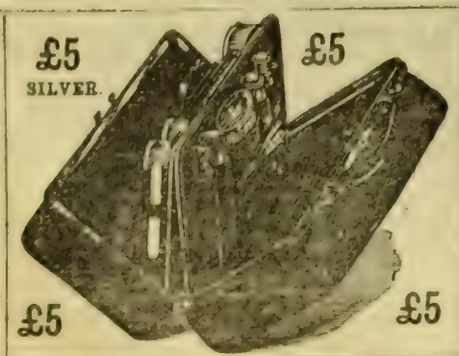
MR. JOHN BROWNING,

Ophthalmic Optician (Author of "Our Eyes," now in Its Fourteenth Edition), may be consulted, free of charge, in all cases of defective vision, at 63, Strand, W.C.

FISHER'S BEATRICE BAG

LIFT-OUT CENTRE.

£5 SILVER. FITTED COMPLETE.



£5 SILVER. FITTED COMPLETE.

CATALOGUES FREE. FISHER, 188, STRAND.

TANN'S

£5 5s.

SAFES.

LISTS FREE.

NEWGATE ST.

Printed for the Proprietor by WYMAN & SONS, Limited, Great Queen-st. W.C. and published at 10, Bolt-ct. Fleet-st. E.C. in the Parish of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st. Queen Anne's-gate, S.W.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 873. Vol. XXXIV. Thursday, September 21, 1893. Price Sixpence.

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor should be sent direct to the Editorial Offices, Carteret-street, S.W., and not to the Publishing Offices in Bolt-court, Fleet-street.

No communication can be dealt with in the current issue of Truth if received later than the First Post on a Monday.

ENTRE NOUS.

I AM sorry to say that the small dolls have not yet arrived. All that can be done to hurry up the manufacturers I am doing; but, so far, with no successful result. Will the ladies who have written for dolls be good enough, therefore, to understand how I am situated, and to excuse the delay? Meanwhile, I should be glad to receive further applications from those who are willing to assist, for the delivery of the dolls cannot be much longer delayed, and when once they have reached this office it will be a great convenience if I am in a position to send them all off forthwith to be dressed.

The papers appear to be labouring under the delusion that the Queen is going to build the new church at Crathie, of which she laid the foundation-stone last week, and which is to cost about £6,000. This is quite a mistake, for the church is to be paid for by the heritors (i.e., landowners) of the parish and by the members of the congregation. The Queen, who is one of the largest heritors, has subscribed £500 towards the building fund. Crathie is one of the largest parishes in Aberdeenshire. The new church is to be arranged strictly on the old-fashioned "exclusive" system. One whole transept is set apart for the Royal pews, and another for the seats of the heritors. The centre will be fitted up with pews for the ordinary congregation, and the only accommodation available for the public (apart from seat-holders) will be afforded by a gallery over the west door, which will contain sixty persons. There is a separate entrance to the Royal pews, which is approached by a private drive.

Her Majesty only goes to Crathie Church on the last Sunday in October, when the half-yearly dispensation of the Sacrament takes place. It is not generally known that Archbishop Longley protested against the Queen's practice of taking the Sacrament in a Presbyterian Church, and his views on the subject were entirely shared by Archbishop Tait, Bishop Wilberforce, and Dean Wellesley; all of whom maintained that inasmuch as the Anglican Holy Communion is an essential part of the Coronation Service, therefore the Sovereign ought not to receive the Sacrament in any other Church. The Queen, however, goes upon the principle of being strictly Anglican in England and exclusively Presbyterian in Scotland; and the eminent Divines who have at various times attempted to induce her to alter her practice have been smartly snubbed for their pains.

The Queen might surely have given the commission for the picture of the Duke of York's wedding to an English artist, instead of going to Herr Tuxen, of Copenhagen, whose selection, however, was urged by the Princess of Wales. The Queen has now an immense collection of pictures of this class, most of which are hung in the private apartments at Windsor Castle; and as a rule they are of very little interest, and have no value as historical pieces. The really celebrated personages are usually excluded from the pictures in order to make room for Court nonentities. Whenever a picture of this kind is being painted for the Queen, the artist is always overwhelmed with applications from vain and silly people who desire to appear in it.

Consternation was excited at Balmoral when the news reached the Castle that Princess Alice of Albany was "down with" chicken-pox on board the Victoria and Albert, and that it had been deemed advisable to send away her brother from the yacht. The Queen is never very ready at lending the Victoria and Albert, and after this experience children will probably be strictly excluded from that vessel in future, as her Majesty and all the Royal family have a horror of infection, and a very thorough fumigating will be indispensable before the Queen again uses her favourite yacht. The Duchess of Albany cut short her cruise in consequence of her daughter's illness, and her intended visit to Deeside has been abandoned. The Victoria and Albert left Tobermory at daybreak on Saturday for Pembroke, on her way back to Portsmouth.

The Royal yacht Osborne is now at Copenhagen, where she is to stay until the Princess of Wales and her daughters leave Denmark. H.R.H. is to be conveyed in the Osborne direct to Aberdeen, and she will stay at New Mar Lodge with the Duke and Duchess of Fife for about a month before going to Sandringham, where she is expected to arrive on October 28.

The Prince of Wales, who arrived at Balmoral last Wednesday on a visit to the Queen, went grouse-shooting at Morven with Sir Algernon Borthwick on Thursday, and on Friday H.R.H. had a few hours' deer-stalking in Whitemount Forest. The Prince, who is now at New Mar

Lodge, will be the guest of the Duke and Duchess of Fife until October 4 or 5, when he is coming to London; and on the 10th he goes to Newmarket for a few days, and at the end of the month to Sandringham.

I learn that the arrangements for the visit of the Duke and Duchess of York to Edinburgh are exciting much dissatisfaction in that city. It was expected that the Duke and Duchess would stay at Edinburgh for at least one whole day, but it seems that they are to arrive there from Balmoral at 9.20 on the night of Monday, October 2, and they are to leave on Tuesday afternoon at 2.30, travelling by the East Coast "dining-car" express to Darlington, and proceeding thence by special train to Thorpe, and from that station they will drive to Wynyard Park, where they are to be the guests of Lord and Lady Londonderry, on Tuesday night. The Duke and Duchess are to arrive at St. James's Palace, on the evening of Friday, October 6, from York, and on Saturday, the 14th, they will go to Sandringham for the winter.

The Duchess of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha (Duchess of Edinburgh) has left Coburg for Bucharest, on a visit to her daughter, the Crown Princess of Roumania, whose accouchement is expected to take place in a few weeks. The Duchess is to pay a visit to the Emperor and Empress of Russia at St. Petersburg before she returns to Coburg.

It is expected that the Duke of Connaught will return to Balmoral next Tuesday morning from Hungary. H.R.H. will stay in Scotland until he goes to Portsmouth on October 6 to make over the command of the Southern District to his successor. The Duchess of Connaught, who travelled to Frankfort with the Duke, is staying at Wiesbaden, and she will pay some visits in Germany before she returns to England.

The Duke and Duchess of Teck are to return to Richmond on Monday week from the Continent, and about the middle of October they will go to Sandringham on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of York. The Duchess is now in the Engadine, and the Duke is at Gmunden.

Lord Drumlanrig is to go to Balmoral as Lord-in-Waiting on the Queen when the session is over, and while he is at Court Lord Rosebery will also be there as Minister in attendance on her Majesty.

The Daily News is indignant because the Duke of Fife, when on his way to London for the division on the Home Rule Bill, travelled from Ballater to Aberdeen by the Queen's Messenger's special train, "which is paid for by the Treasury for special public service." The Daily News is mistaken in supposing that this is a private train, as for several years past it has conveyed any passengers who desired to travel by it, and during the summer it is the most popular train on the Deeside Railway, as it is the only express on the line, and it is always punctual, and runs in correspondence with the best trains to and from the South. On Sundays, indeed, the Messenger trains are the only ones which run on the Deeside line.

The Royal family have been made exceedingly indignant by Mr. Campbell-Bannerman's very plain intimation that the Duke of Cambridge will be the last Commander-in-Chief on the present system. Of course, the Duke of Connaught has always been intended to fill that place. The Duke of Wellington took pains to impress upon the Queen that it was in the highest degree desirable that the command of the Army should invariably be kept in the hands of a Prince, whenever there was one available. Prince Albert took the same view, which he expounded and enforced in an elaborate memorandum.

It is not generally known that during the last two years of Lord Salisbury's Administration there was an intrigue in exalted quarters to procure the immediate resignation of the Duke of Cambridge, in order that the Duke of Connaught might be quietly appointed to succeed him, while the complacent Tories were in power; but the Duke was not disposed to be thus made a cat's-paw, and his refusal to retire caused his relations with the Court to become seriously strained.

The question is, "Will the Duke of Cambridge resign his post?"—Daily Paper.

When British war-ships do not sink,
And London rates don't rise;
When Vestrymen begin to think,
Or Bumbles to be wise;
When German Princes stay at home,
In Fatherland to shine,
Nor care to cross the Channel's foam—
The Duke may p'rhaps resign.

When titles are no longer bought,
And brides no longer sold;
When rank is reckoned less than naught,
And honour more than gold;
When Capital in league of peace
With Labour shall combine;
When wars in Argentina cease—
The Duke may p'rhaps resign.

When Bishops practise what they preach;
When Counsel earn their fees;
When we've no swindlers to impeach,
Nor rascals left to seize;
When trains no longer come in late
On any London line;
When worth alone has any weight—
The Duke may p'rhaps resign.

When Merit makes the surest claim,
And jobs no more are done;
When Law and Justice are the same,
And Might and Right are one;
When Tories take to talking sense,
Within St. Stephen's shrine;
When Fortune does not aid Pretence—
The Duke may p'rhaps resign.

When the Divorce Court does not sit,
And Prisons do not stand;
When Birth confers no benefit
Throughout our British land;
When Nepotism gross shall meet
With punishment condign;
Then—let us once again repeat—
The Duke may p'rhaps resign.

For the Truth Hotel List, see pages 610-611 in the present issue.
For Amusements, see page 609.

Extensive improvements are being carried out at Frogmore, both in the house and in the grounds. The lake has been drained, and will probably be filled up and converted into a shrubbery, which would make the place very much more healthy than it is at present.

A Commissionership of Woods and Forests has become vacant by the death of Mr. George Culley, who was a most eminent arboriculturist. The post is worth £1,200 a year, and is in the gift of Mr. Gladstone.

Mr. Gladstone is not expected to leave Blackcraig Castle until Monday next, when he goes to Dalmeny Park on a visit to Lord Rosebery, and afterwards to Hawarden. Lord Acton, Lord Justice Bowen, Sir Algernon and Lady West, and several members of the Gladstone family, are staying at Blackcraig.

One of my readers reminds me of the fact, which I ought not to have forgotten, that the Duke of Argyll was elevated to the dignity of a Dukedom of the United Kingdom by the Unionist Government, of which he is so warm an admirer. He no longer, therefore, sits in the House of Lords as Lord Sundridge.

By the way, I am surprised that the Duke of Argyll has never thought it necessary to notice the charge of wholesale plagiarism brought against him in TRUTH of July 6 by Mr. Bain in connection with "The Unseen Foundations of Society." Although the matter was one on which I did not feel at liberty to express an opinion, the charge was a serious one, and was supported by substantial evidence, as could be seen from the few sample passages which I published. Either the Duke of Argyll had seen and read Mr. Bain's book before he compiled his own, or he had not. His word one way or the other would be generally accepted, and it is a pity that it should not be given.

A person at Marienbad is naturally attracted to the question of fat, because he finds himself in a place where fat people—anxious to grow lean—congregate. The talk is of fat, just as the talk is of politics in the House of Commons. In the windows of the booksellers essays on fat, and systems to get rid of fat, replace light literature. The essays, being German, are lengthy; the systems are practically much the same. I have arrived at the following conclusions:—(1) There is no drug which can reduce fat except by making the patient ill; (2) it is doubtful whether the Marienbad or the Carlsbad waters effect of themselves any reduction; (3) the whole question is one of diet. Starch and sugar are fattening; fat, butter, cream, &c., are not. But if a person adds to the fatty substances that he eats anything beyond the smallest amount of starch or sugar, this acts upon the fat taken directly, and converts it into body-fat. Any one therefore, inclined to corpulence, and anxious to be of reasonable girth, may take for his breakfast any sort of meat, café au lait, or milk with cream, butter, and one piece of toast; at lunch and at dinner he must confine himself to meat, and to such vegetables as contain neither sugar nor starch in appreciable quantities; in the afternoon he can, if he pleases, take tea and toast and butter; the less that he drinks at lunch and dinner the better, but wine has no fattening effect, provided that it be not a sweet wine such as champagne. If he be not accustomed to this diet, its adoption will speedily reduce his fat; when the diet has become a habit, he will find that he remains stationary. Exercise aids in the reduction of fat, but it is not necessary for its reduction. No person in sound health would suffer by adopting this diet, although, probably, if he were to consult a medical man, he would be told that all sorts of unpleasant consequences would be the result. What I want to bring home to the fat is that they may gorge themselves with fat meats, butter, and cream, without adding to their bulk.

Although I keep on announcing my resolution not to discuss hotel bills in TRUTH, travellers keep on sending them to me. I am almost tempted to rescind my resolution by a budget of bills from the Hôtel de la Plage, Ostend. In one of these 40 francs per night is the price charged for a double-bedded room on the second floor (exclusive of "bougies" and "service"), and 30 francs per night for a similar apartment on the third floor. I have heard a good deal about Ostend, but I did not know that it was quite as bad as this.

As a rule, I also rather set myself against chronicling small beer of the "big gooseberry" and "first nightingale" order. But I feel bound to make an exception in favour of the following poetical description of one of the curiosities of this wonderful season, which a lady reader sends me from Worcestershire:—

> While wandering around the beautiful Lickey Hills, I came upon an interesting autumn curiosity. It is this:—A sweetly-scented wild white rose, beside which nestles a baby bud, slightly tinged with pink. Guarding the tender flowers like scarlet sentinels, stand two well-developed "hips." Thus spring, summer, and autumn are plainly personified on the same spray. I believe this is as unusual as it is a beautiful sight, and it may perhaps interest your readers.

It was rather startling to observe in the papers last week the notification of the death of "a contemporary of Byron." I suppose it was one of the aberrations of the silly season thus to describe the daughter of the gardener of Lady Byron's father, and nothing could be more fatuous than to state that "she was only a girl when the poet visited Seaham, but she remembered the talk which the eccentricities of his lordship provoked among the villagers," considering that this person is announced as having died in her seventy-eighth year, so that she can have been only a few months old when Bryon visited Seaham for the first and last time.

The Duke and Duchess of Leinster, with their family, are staying at Carton, the family residence in the County of Kildare. On Thursday they entertained a large luncheon party, on the occasion of an archæological meeting in the neighbourhood. Unlike many of the Irish nobility, the Fitzgeralds have always been residents in Ireland, which fact gives unusual historic interest to Carton. A pleasing tradition of the family is the happy terms on which the inhabitants of Carton have lived with their near neighbours at the Catholic College of Maynooth, ever since the foundation of that College nearly one hundred years ago. The Leinster, like the Inchiquin family, have given a patriot, or otherwise a rebel, to Irish history, Lord Edward Fitzgerald of '98 fame being the present Duke's great uncle.

HÔTEL BURLINGTON, Boscombe, Bournemouth. Perfectly unique!!! Over 200 rooms, practically designed, sumptuously appointed, and fitted throughout with all the comforts of a well-arranged country mansion. Acres of matured grounds sloping to the Pier. Most moderate tariff, forwarded by Manager, or obtainable at the Burlington and Buckingham Palace Hotels, London. Bournemouth EAST Station.

The Duke and Duchess of Devonshire, who are residing at Bolton Priory, Yorkshire, where they have been entertaining a succession of visitors, will proceed next Monday to Newmarket, and on the 30th they are going to Hardwicke Hall, Derbyshire.

The late Mr. Muspratt, of Heytesbury, was one of the most zealous Liberals in North Wilts, and for half a century he had worked hard in the district to promote the interests of his party. He was always a most advanced Radical, and made no secret of his views, although living in a place where all the local magnates were Tories.

Mr. Humphrey Wickham, the eminent Kentish lawyer who died last week at Strood, was one of the most distinguished antiquarians in England, and in the course of his long life he collected many very curious and interesting objects. His private museum at Strood is quite unique, as it fully illustrates the customs of the Saxon and Roman inhabitants of the Medway valley.

The papers are utterly wrong in describing the late Mr. James Jardine (whose personalty amounts to £332,000) as being "one of the greatest landlords in Scotland," and as having spent "enormous sums" in buying estates. Mr. Jardine owned a large estate in Dumfriesshire, which was made up by the purchase at various times of four properties of moderate size, but he was not even the "greatest landlord" in that county. His principal transaction in the way of buying land was the purchase of the Applegirth property, near Lockerbie, from the late Sir Alexander Jardine for £140,000.

Lord Kenmare has at last sold the Hengrave Estate in Suffolk, which has been in the market for the last three years, and it has several times been offered by auction. Mr. John Lysaght, of Bristol, is the purchaser, and he may be congratulated upon having acquired a most attractive domain, with one of the finest Tudor manor-houses in England. The property extends to nearly 5,000 acres, with large woods and heaths, and the shooting is first rate. Hengrave was left to Lord Kenmare by the late Lady Rokewood-Sage, whose family had owned the property since the reign of Charles I.

House property in the centre of Berlin has risen enormously in value during the last twenty years. Last week a dwelling-house which cost £42,750 in 1863 was sold for £76,250, in order that it might be pulled down to make room for a large warehouse.

There was a serious riot a few days ago at Roydon, Suffolk, in consequence of Mr. Frere, the owner of the extensive common in that parish, having rendered himself obnoxious in the neighbourhood. For many years it was the custom for the inhabitants to graze ponies and geese on the common, but Mr. Frere objected to it, and he has impounded a number of animals, and sent them to the market town for sale. The other day a crowd of indignant people assembled, and marched to the house of Mr. Frere's agent, where they smashed the windows, and so violent was their conduct that the police had to charge them with their staves. Seven men were charged last week at Diss Sessions with riotous conduct, the result being that they were required to enter into recognisances to appear again to-day. Mr. Frere was one of the Magistrates who heard the case, and he was hooted and yelled at by a large crowd as he drove away. It seems to me that it was scandalously wrong for Mr. Frere, who is apparently the cause of the whole trouble, to sit on the Bench while a case is being heard in which he is the de facto prosecutor. After all, the defendants were only maintaining the common rights of themselves and their neighbours.

A gentleman residing in Park-street, Grosvenor-square, was highly gratified the other day by the receipt of a letter from a house-agent inquiring whether he would be disposed to let the ground-floor or whole of his house "for the purpose of a private tailor's business." In this way does trade push its way even into the most select residential quarters. The agent in question cannot be very fully informed about such matters, or he would know that on the Duke of Westminster's estate no dwelling-house could possibly be converted into business premises without the permission of the ground-landlord. Possibly an exception might be made in favour of "a private tailor's business," but not knowing the difference between a private and a public tailor, I cannot speak on this point.

The agricultural depression in Essex has become very much more severe. In one parish near Chelmsford twenty-four farms are either vacant or held by their owners because tenants cannot be obtained. A few years ago a large number of Scotch farmers migrated to Essex, tempted by the very low rents for which good farms could be obtained, but they have latterly been feeling the depression so much that many of them will shortly be leaving the county.

Another Success. The Old Bushmills Distillery Co. have added another to their long list of successes by obtaining the only Medal and Highest Award, against all competitors, for Irish Whisky, at the World's Columbian Exposition, Chicago, 1893.

C.O.M. Whisky.—This well-known Brand, 50s. per case, free to C.O.M. Whisky. every Railway Station.—Andrews & Co., C.O.M. Whisky. Dame-st., Dublin, Proprietors C.O.M. brand.

The whole of Mr. Guy Bethell's valuable thoroughbred stock is to be sold at Tattersall's on Monday, October 9. Amongst the number are mares by Isonomy, the dams of Bel Demonio, Ordinance, and Mamia, and yearlings and foals by Merry Hampton, Kilwarlin, Harvester, and other well-known sires.

The Tweed salmon-fisheries closed on Thursday night, after one of the worst seasons that has ever been experienced, and the tacksmen must have lost heavily. The grilse-fishing has been a hopeless failure all over Scotland, and salmon have been dreadfully scarce as a rule. The Tweed has been running very low for the last five months, and there will be no angling until a flood has taken place.

The Lochleven angling season, which has just closed, has been the best on record. No fewer than 22,825 trout, weighing 19,168 lb., have been caught in five months, of which 7,034 were taken during May. Last year only 12,735 trout were captured. Lochleven, which belongs to Sir Graham Montgomery, is in the hands of an angling association, and it is very well managed, boats being let to the public on reasonable terms.

Forty head from the renowned Ballindalloch herd of Aberdeen-Angus cattle, which belongs to Sir George Macpherson Grant, were sold on Thursday, and there was a large attendance of breeders from all parts of the country. The sale was quite a success, the average being upwards of £56. The highest-priced cow (300 guineas) was purchased for the Queen's herd at Balmoral, and her Majesty's agent also secured the best yearling at 130 guineas.

By the kindness of several correspondents I have been picking up a good deal of information lately about Australian sheep. I now find that even the price of 700 guineas which I mentioned last week as having been given for a Tasmanian merino ram was far from being a "record." I am told that about fifteen years ago over £1,000 was paid in Victoria by a Mr. Philip Russell for a ram bred in the Colony.

It may interest some of my readers to know—I am sure it did me, when an expert in these matters was good enough to write and enlighten me—that what breeders in Australia have to contend with is the degeneration of the wool. In three or four generations, the outer covering of a sheep loses its woolly character and becomes hairy. A somewhat similar change is observed in rabbits. Whether negroes are affected in the same way I have not heard. To check this tendency, sheep-breeders import thoroughbred rams from Tasmania, Vermont, Saxony, and elsewhere, paying the large prices which I have mentioned. I remarked last week that I had no idea how much money there was in mutton; but to be strictly accurate it seems that the money is on the mutton rather than in it. For wool, says my informant, there is nothing that can touch a Tasmanian merino. He adds that as mutton the merino is inferior to both Welsh and Southdown, but that is a question of taste on which I should be sorry to incite a discussion.

Pigs, however, seem to be an article deserving just now more attention from agriculturists than sheep, or even cattle. Mr. Sanders Spencer, to whose extraordinary success in pig breeding I have several times called attention, has just shipped a number of representatives of Holywell Manor to Buenos Ayres and Port Natal. This means that farmers in South America and South Africa, like those in Northern Europe, appreciate the necessity of improving their breeds. The British farmer alone seems to think that the propagation of swine may be left to chance. So far as I can see, if we took as much trouble in improving our pigs as we do in improving our racehorses, we should be a richer and a happier nation.

The Scotsman the other day, in publishing what purported to be a report of a sitting of the Deer Forests Commission, gave a long statement by Mr. Turner, the Duke of Portland's factor, tending to the honour and glory of the Duke as a landlord, but it made no mention at all of evidence which was given respecting some scores, if not hundreds, of cases of evictions, and it dismissed in a few lines all the other business of the Court except Mr. Turner's oration. This is a journal which once professed and called itself "Liberal." Thank Heaven, the addition of the qualification, "Unionist," has now for ever disposed of that empty pretence!

By the way, an amusing story is current of an encounter between the Duke of Portland, who was out deer-stalking, and a supposed trespasser in Caithness Forest. On coming across this intruder the Duke harangued him in no very flattering terms, and on the man stammering out that he had as much right there as the Duke, his Grace forthwith went in search of a gillie and ordered him to deal with this profaner of landed rights. It then turned out that this individual was on the Geological Survey, and was lawfully authorised to go wherever his business took him. He was, in fact, the son of Hugh Miller.

As I recently referred to the subject of aluminium boats, it may interest some of my readers to know that the launch that has been despatched to the African Lakes was built by Messrs. Escher, Wyss, & Co., of Zurich. The boats of this firm are mostly constructed for use with naphtha-engines, but they are equally suitable for steam or electricity, and I suppose that rowing-boats could equally well be made of the same material.

One evening last week I dined at the Grand Hotel, and having fared much more sumptuously, and probably more economically, than I could have done at home, I was struck with wonder that the custom of dining at hotels and restaurants should be so much less in favour with the English middle classes than it is in France. Twenty years ago the inducements for so doing were small; but this is no longer the case, when dinners which leave nothing to be desired, are served in the best style in palatial apartments, and can be obtained at prices which vary sufficiently to suit all purses. A representative of the Gordon Hotels Company told me that since the rush to town for the Royal Wedding, this has been an exceptionally dull season for hotel-keepers—largely owing to the dearth of American visitors. In the absence of Americans, I would suggest that hotels like the Grand should offer special terms to family parties, and see whether they cannot tempt the London paterfamilias to take out his wife and daughters to dinner more frequently than he does.

I think it only fair, on the "Audi alteram partem" principle, to publish the following lines:—

TO THE MAN WHO STAYS AT HOME:

FROM THE "ITINERANT MAN."*

To remain in one's home is, you say, the best plan
But, how do you like it, O stay-at-home man?
The dull repetition that marks every day;
The changeless surroundings you always survey;
Your chair ever set to an inch in one spot,
Your breakfast menus never varied one jot;
Your dull little walk to the nine-forty train,
Your dull shilling ride in a cab, if it rain;
Your hours in the City, all part of your plan—
Say, how do you like them, O Stay-at-Home Man?

Your lunch at the Club, with no varying point,
That methodical cut every day from the joint,
With the rusks and the cheese—meal depressingly safe—
And that daily half-bottle of (say) St. Estèphe;
That same lot of men in the smoking-room chairs,
That same set at whist in the card-room upstairs;
The same button-holing by just the same bores,
The same man who sits on the papers and snores;
The same strident talk by the same partisan—
Say, how do you like it, O Stay-at-Home Man?

And then your return, when your work is despatched,
To your villa suburban and semi-detached;
Your same little run up the steps, if expert,
That same little pause whilst your key you insert;
The same little wife—yes, of course she's the same—
With the same tale of worries your notice to claim;
The same tea and toast, and, no doubt for your sin,
The same vapid people by chance dropping in.
Come, come, when this programme diurnal you scan,
Say, how do you like it, O Stay-at-Home Man?

And that hour before dinner, abnormally slow,
When dyspeptic and nervous you feel yourself grow,
And your dinner itself every day of the week,
And the nightly and somnolent game of Bézique,
That tendency, daily increasing, to dose
Ere those long tête-à-têtes with your wife reach their close;
Or those terrible nights when—oh, merciful Heaven!—
You're "at home,"—and with music!—from "eight till eleven."
Come, face these inflictions as straight as you can,
And say how you like them, O Stay-at-Home Man.

In short, are you sure there is anything wise
In the cynical way that you travel despise?
There are risks, it is true, to be run if we roam,
But are there not hazards still greater at home?
For life without change of thought, habit, or scene,
Must tend in the end vegetation to mean;
And the stone that for rolling feels never a zest
Can become but a moss-covered fossil at best.
So just think again, ere all travel you ban,
And do try one outing, O Stay-at-Home Man!

* See TRUTH for September 14.

There is a grievance of railway servants which I wonder has never been ventilated. It arises from the enormous size and weight of modern travelling trunks. Ladies—and more especially American ladies—are the chief culprits. The size of their boxes has increased, is increasing, and ought to be diminished; and I think that if, when they are on their travels, ladies would observe the strain to which porters are put in handling these bulky packages, the more humane among them would see this for themselves and voluntarily abate the evil. Failing that, Railway Companies would be justified in putting a limit to the size and weight of boxes which may be carried as passengers' luggage, and their employés would be justified in agitating for the purpose. Serious permanent injuries are constantly received by railway and hotel porters in lifting weights beyond their strength.

I am asked to mention that the Artists' Guild's annual exhibition of amateur art work will be opened at the Royal School of Art Needlework, Exhibition-road, on November 1, remaining open till November 25. The permanent address of the Artists' Guild is now at the School of Art Needlework, instead of Berkeley-gardens, Campden-hill, as heretofore.

Coloman Mikszath, an Hungarian author, who is not without considerable honour in his own country, has just been introduced in very handsome fashion to the people of this country by Messrs. Dean & Son, Limited. The English edition of his collection of short stories, called "The Good People of Pawlocz," is, in fact, an édition de luxe, rendered all the more valuable by the inclusion in it of exact reproductions of the chromo-lithographic illustrations of the original volume. There is just now a boom in short stories, and the surfeited novel readers who prefer to take their fiction in "snacks" will, I think, find their jaded palates agreeably tickled by the strange though characteristic savour of the plât provided by this Hungarian literary chef.

A friend just returned from America writes me the following letter upon a recent incident. I suppose that "Jack-in-office" is a character equally well known in every country. I have met him in all parts of the world. My present correspondent, who has had a wide experience, seems inclined to give the palm to the American variety. To my mind some of the finest specimens are grown in France; but I think most people will agree that, on the whole, the manners of public functionaries—notably policemen—in England compare favourably with those found in any other country:—

I wonder if the American gentleman who complains of the "insolence of the Jacks-in-office" at Westminster Abbey has ever enjoyed the occasionally necessary process of what is called "looking at home"? For instance: did this excellent citizen who grumbles at English manners ever happen to visit the World's Fair at Chicago and sample the young gentlemen who wore blue uniforms and called themselves "Columbian Guards"? Was he present at the opening of the Exposition by President Cleveland, and did he see how these raw, ill-trained, hectoring lads feebly tried to manage a crowd? Was he ever drawn off in the "patrol wagon" for the awful offence of smoking a cigar in the open air of the thousands of acres of park and lake promenade? Was he ever run in, like Mr. Fred Villiers, the war correspondent, for using a "Kodak" when he was officially permitted to do so? Did he ever ask a civil question in Chicago, and expect to receive a civil answer? Has he studied the sublimated self satisfaction of the coloured bell-boy at an American hotel? Has he ever travelled from San Francisco to New York under the tutelage of the coloured car conductor, who thinks the universe too small in which to swell himself and expand his chest? Has he ever asked for information on tramcar, railway carriage, railway station, or street corner in America? And, according to the travelled American, the typically insolent Jack in office in England is a poor old verger in Westminster Abbey. This is the pot calling the kettle black with a vengeance!

There seems to be good reason, however, for complaint against the vergers at Westminster, if an experience of which I have just received an account may be accepted as typical of the ordinary course of procedure. An Army Officer of high rank went with a lady to the Sunday-afternoon service a short time ago. They were in very good time, but they were at once accosted by a verger, who said: "Do you want a seat? Well, if you'd square me, I'd square you." If all the seats in the Abbey are thus disposed of, it must, indeed, be a good thing to be a doorkeeper in the house of the Lord.

A feeling of deep disgust and indignation has been provoked in Southport by the announcement of the appointment of the Rev. George Everard, Vicar of Christ Church, Dover, to the living of St. Andrew's, Stockport, vacant by the death of the late Canon Cross. Canon Cross, who enjoyed exceptional popularity, and had a large and devoted congregation, was a moderate High Churchman, opposed to extremes of all kinds; but Mr. Everard is a pronounced and extreme Evangelical, of a school which is happily all but extinct. Such an appointment would, at the best, be unfortunate enough, but in this case it is the more ill-advised, as the congregation of St. Andrew's had petitioned the trustees of the living in favour of the appointment of the Rev. J. F. Horter, who had been for some time acting as locum tenens during the late vicar's absence. The trustees include the Bishop of Liverpool, the Bishop of Carlisle, and the Archdeacon of Liverpool.

Canon Scott-Holland's notice of Dr. Liddon, in the last volume of the "National Dictionary of Biography," ought for ever to consign to oblivion the ridiculous and persistently circulated tale that the Queen had more than once positively vetoed Dr. Liddon's promotion to the Episcopal bench. It seems that both Mr. Gladstone and Lord Salisbury privately sounded Dr. Liddon as to his willingness to accept a Bishopric, and they discovered that he was not disposed to undertake such a charge. If Dr. Liddon had lived he would certainly have succeeded his friend, Dr. Church, in the Deanery of St. Paul's.

In one of my weekly batch of letters from clergymen of the Established Church I came across the following remark:—

> That you personally dislike the clergy of the Church of England we know, but I submit that your personal feelings should not be allowed to overcome your editorial sense of justice.

As regards the matter in which my personal feelings are alleged to have overcome my editorial sense of justice, it is unnecessary to say more now, it having been dealt with in two successive issues of TRUTH. I should also have thought it unnecessary for me to again disclaim any personal animosity towards the clergy; but it seems that I cannot do this often enough to satisfy the clergy themselves. Professionally speaking, I have the very warmest regard for the clergy of the Church of England, for they are the most liberal supporters of TRUTH, and, with the exception of Tommy Atkins, no other class of readers are so fond of taking me into their confidence. Personally speaking, I find among my clerical acquaintances some of the most genial and entertaining of men. If it occasionally happens that Anglican clerics come in for some hard knocks in TRUTH, that is not my fault, and not altogether the clerics' fault, but the fault of the system of religious establishments, which in certain cases exercises a sadly demoralising effect upon clerical character.

For a long time past feeling has been growing stronger and stronger in Church circles at Sheffield against the arrant jobbery systematically carried on by Archdeacon Blakeney. Only two or three months back the Archdeacon appointed a friend and former Curate of his to a Sheffield living worth £500 a year; and he has followed this up within the last month by appointing his own nephew and his senior Curate to two other local vacancies. At the present moment a brother-in-law of the Archdeacon, two of his nephews, six of his former Curates, and several personal friends, brought into the town by him, hold Sheffield livings; and this list does not include several of his protégés who have in times past been jobbed into livings, but have since gone elsewhere. On the other hand, although there are in all about fifty curates employed in the various Sheffield churches, there is no instance on record of the Archdeacon having given any preferment to a cleric unconnected with himself. Such a state of things is not only very discreditable to the Archdeacon personally, but prejudicial to the interests of the Church at large.

At the beginning of last week considerable interest was excited in Church circles by an announcement, in the provincial papers, that the Rector of Falmouth having resigned his living, the senior curate of the parish church of a popular Somersetshire watering-place had been presented to it by the patron. Falmouth is not only a very important living, but it is the most valuable benefice in the West of England, the net income being about £1,200 a year. The Guardian published the curate's appointment in its weekly official list of presentations. It has since turned out, however, that the whole story is a fiction; for the rector has not resigned, nor has he any intention of resigning. It would be interesting to learn how this fine example of "the lie circumstantial" originated. The curate, who was announced as the future rector of Falmouth, deserves sympathy, for he has doubtless been overwhelmed with congratulations on his imaginary preferment.

The language of prayers officially drawn up for public occasions often leaves a good deal to be desired. This seems to be the case in regard to the following supplication, which was offered up on the dedication of a new organ at St. John's Church, Meerut. I doubt if any worshipper could explain how an organ is to become an "eternal treasure," nor how it is to be stored up in the manner here indicated:—

